START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

June 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-042

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library
(August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks
(Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK: Kodak

IMAGELINK™ HQ

MICROFILM

35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft

Sp 425

DEVELOP BEFORE 05/1996

1461 - 0341 - 012 - 06

CAT 840 3594

04 - 08

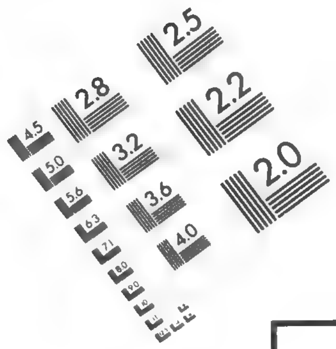
Kodak

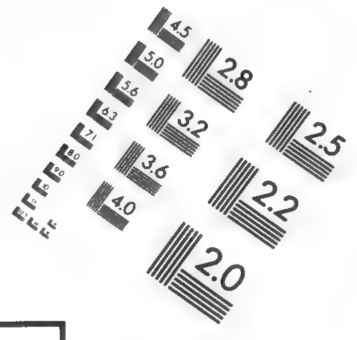
REEL 42

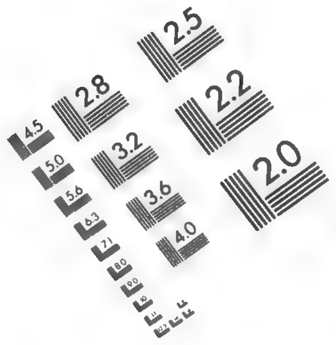
Volume 77

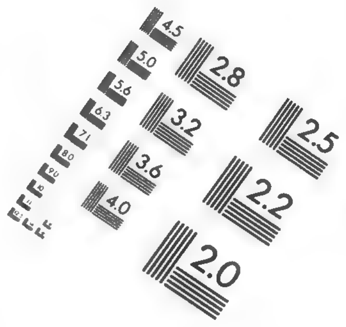
Tanglewood
1947-1948

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





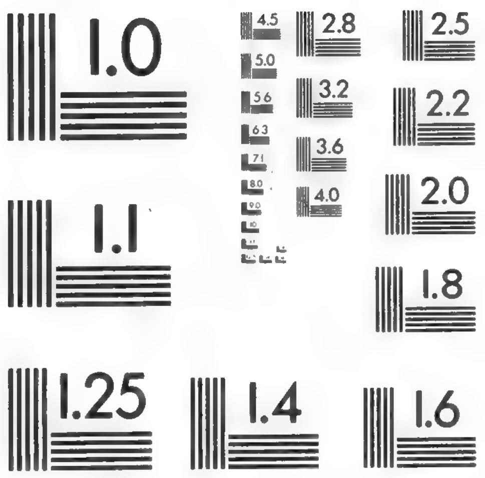




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
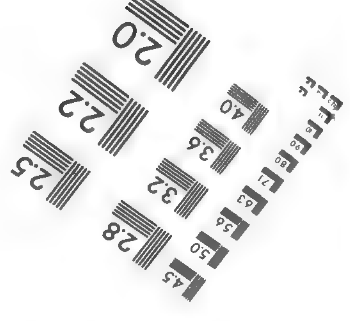
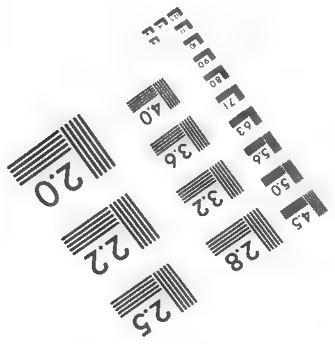
2.5 mm

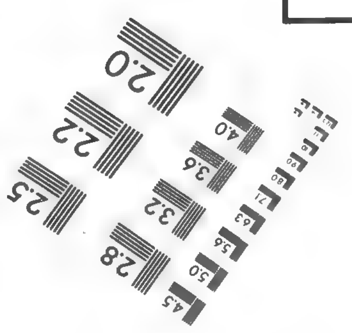
A5

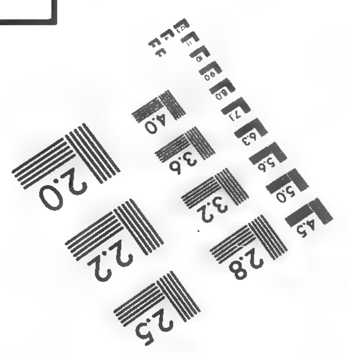




A4

A3





PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES
DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 77

Tanglewood

1947-1948

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
1032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
1033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
1034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
1036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
·1041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
1042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
2/13/47

Guest Conductors Invited To Lead At Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next summer. Dr. Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the greater part of the festival of 12 concerts, announces music to be included in the programs. Mr. Bernstein and Mr. Shaw will be members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session at the orchestra's summer home in July and early August.

The opening concert on July 13, by an orchestra of chamber music proportions, will be devoted to the works of Bach, and the second concert on July 20 to Mozart.

In the first series of concerts (July 24, 26 and 27) by the full orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh, Copland's Third, Rachmaninoff's Third, Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Barbert's Overture, "School for Scandal", Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso. Miss Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for the Hindemith Concerto and William Primrose for the Berlioz Symphony.

The second week-end, July 31 and August 2 and 3, will be devoted to a Beethoven cycle, and will be followed on August 5 by a performance of the Ninth Symphony in an extra concert.

In the final series, August 7, 9 and 10, will be played a Haydn Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second, Tchaikovsky's Fourth, Debussy's "The Sea", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem, with chorus and soloists.

Information and subscriptions may be obtained from the Festival Office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

BROWNWOOD, TEXAS
BULLETIN

MAR 23 194

Koussevitzky has commissioned Marc Blitzstein to write the music for an opera version of Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes." . . .The Gerhardt Eisler appeal will be heard within two weeks, as a result of a stipulation between his attorney and the Federal prosecutor. An appeal such as this usually takes 30 days .

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 5 - 1947

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS SET

Members of Student Orchestra to Be Selected Next Week

New York members of the faculty will hold final auditions next week for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, which will have a six-week session, June 30-Aug. 10, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. All auditions, except those for tympanists, will be held at Carnegie Chamber Music Hall.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hear players of orchestral instruments, Thursday, when auditions for violists and soloists are scheduled at 9 A. M., for 'cellists and contrabassists, 10 A. M.; for woodwinds and harp, 11 A. M., and for brass and other instruments, at noon. Tympanists will be heard backstage at Carnegie Hall, tomorrow at 6:30. Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes will conduct auditions for the Opera Department, from 9 A. M. to noon, April 12.

Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston, before April 10. Application for admission to the Music Center also should be made to Mr. Perry.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

1947

Tanglewood Ticket Sale Ahead of '46

Demand for Season Tickets for 1947 Berkshire Festival Running 50 Per Cent Over Last Year's.

The demand for season tickets for the 1947 Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, is running about 50 per cent ahead of last year's, it was revealed today.

Sale of tickets started only last month but already all seats in the front section of the big music shed and most of the boxes have been taken for the three regular series of three concerts each, starting July 24. For the three extra concerts, scheduled for July 13, July 20 and Aug 5, the demand has not been so large, it was stated.

George E Judd, Berkshire Symphony orchestra manager, said yesterday he believed the increased advance registration meant only that people were applying earlier, not that there would be a larger over-all attendance.

FALLS, N. Y.
T STAR

APR 4 - 1947

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the program for next Summer's Berkshire's Festival concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest-conductors. Both men will be faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session during July and early August. The opening concert which will be given July 13 by an orchestra of chamber music proportions will be devoted to the music of Bach. On July 20 music of Mozart will be played.

In the concerts of July 24, 26 and 27 Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include the Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh Symphony, Copland's Third Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Third Symphony, Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony with William Primrose as viola soloist, Hindemith's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, Barber's Overture to "School for Scandal" Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso.

A Beethoven cycle will be given during the second week-end, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3; and on July 5 an extra concert will feature the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

The final series on Aug. 7, 9 and 10 will include a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohns "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "The Sea," Stravinsky's "La Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem with chorus and soloists.

Chicago, Ill.
Diapason
4/1/47

THE RKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, establish 40 to provide an opportunity fo study in connection with the Berks tival concerts, will hold a six-wee sion June 30 to Aug. 10 under th n of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, r Biggs will be a member of th ty. The organ in the Tanglewo is an Aeolian-Skinner, built in 1 designed by G. Donald Harrison.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 6 - 1947

Final Auditions Here For Berkshire Center

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra and opera department in this summer's session will be held here this week. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold auditions for instrumentalists at the Cargenie Chamber Hall next Thursday morning as follows: Nine o'clock, violin and viola; 10, cello and double-bass; 11, woodwind and harp; noon, brass and other instruments. Auditions for tympanists will be held backstage at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday afternoon at 6:30.

Auditions for the opera department will be held by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes next Saturday morning from 9 o'clock to noon in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall. An accompanist will be provided. Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notificat ions have not been received by April 10 will not be heard. The Center's six weeks' session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opens June 30.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

APR 5 - 1947

ALONG... THE WHITE WAY

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be held next week in Boston by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Mus ic center, Tanglewood. The music center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director and Stanley Chapple as dean. The music center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to Aug. 10.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 5 - 1947

Berkshire Music Center Auditions Held Next Week

Applicants for Instrumental, Orchestra Departments Will Be Heard at Boston

It has been announced that the final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be next week in Boston, by members of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

The Music Center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director, and Stanley Chapple as dean. The Music Center will be held in Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to August 10.

The auditions will be held on the following schedule:-

Orchestral instruments, Monday, at stage entrance Symphony Hall, Boston; violin and viola, 2 p.m.; violincello and contrabass, 3 p.m.; woodwinds, 3.30 p.m.; brass and other instruments, 4 p.m.

Opera department auditions will be held on Tuesday from 2 to 5 p.m. at Brown Hall, Boston Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave.

Applicants who wish to audition for the opera department, should notify Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The Symphony announces that "those whose notifications have not been received by April 7, cannot be heard."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 8 - 1947

Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will hear the final auditions for admission to the student orchestra and for the opera department in New York this week. Applications for admission to the music center should be made to Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notifications have not been received by April 10 can not be heard.

The auditions will be held in Carnegie Chamber Music hall, New York. Orchestral instruments auditions will be held Thursday for violin and viola at 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass, 10 a.m.; woodwinds and harp, 11 a.m.; brass and other instruments, 12 m. Tympani auditions will be held Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. back stage at Carnegie hall.

Auditions for the opera department will be held Saturday from 9 a.m. to 12 m. The opera auditions will be conducted by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes. An accomapnist will be provided.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

APR 6 - 1947

Auditions Listed

Stanley Chappel, dean of the Berkshire Music Center, will hold auditions for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the 1947 season this week in St. Louis. The Music Center will have a six-week session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. from June 30 to August 10, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Auditions will be held on Wednesday, April 9, at the Baldwin Piano Store, 960 Olive Street St. Louis, on the following schedule: Violin and viola, 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass 10 a.m.; woodwinds, 10:30 a.m. brass and other instruments, 1 a.m.; opera department, 1 p.m.

Applications for admission to the Music Center should be made to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15. Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

APR 8 - 1947

Tanglewood To Have New Press Quarters

Plans for the erection of new press quarters as well as an additional stage for the use of student orchestras at Tanglewood. were discussed at a meeting of the Tanglewood advisory committee at the Hotel Sheraton yesterday afternoon.

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, explained to the local group, which represents the local steering committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, that the press quarters will be separated from the office. He added that newspapermen and radio representatives will have an "exclusive section" when the Festival opens next summer.

About $7000 has been earmarked for the rehearsal stage to be constructed. Last year the Festival officials found that at times one of the two student orchestras had to either wait or lose its turn for rehearsals because of inadequate facilities.

"We have come to feel the need for a sizable stage so that both orchestras can hold renearsals without having to interfere with one another," Mr. Judd said.

APR 9 - 1947

COUPLE TO ATTEND MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES BY BOAT

One musical couple is going to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood next summer by boat.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Manager George E. Judd and a New York woman recently told him she had wanted for years to hear the summer symphony, but her husband was too "wrapped up" in sailing their boat on Cape Cod.

Judd suggested the couple join their music and yatching by sailing up the Hudson river, anchoring near Albany, N. Y., and driving 35 miles to Tanglewood.

The woman bought a box for the symphonic series, and her husband charts of the Hudson.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 10 1947

Swiss Composer Joins Tanglewood School Staff

BOSTON, April 10 (UP)—Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serge Kroussevitzky announced today.

Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

APR 10 1947

TO TEACH MUSIC

BOSTON, April 10. — (UP) — Arthur Honegger, distingushed Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, director Serge Koussevitzky announced to-day. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

APR 10 1947

Honegger Accepts Summer School Post

Boston, April 10. (UP)—Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serve Moussevitzky announces today. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston Orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

APR - 1947

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will present a series of twelve concerts at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, during July and August. Most of the concerts will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Leonard Bernstein, and Robert Shaw, of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, being invited by Dr. Koussevitzky to be guest conductors.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

APR 16 1947

SEYMOUR LIPKIN, 20, piano and violin student at the Curtis Institute, won a summer scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor announced.

APR 16 1947

TEN NAMED WINNERS OF BERKSHIRE HONORS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, April 15—The names of ten winners of music scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center this summer ,were announced tonight by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The scholarships were awarded by the sponsor of the Boston Symphony radio programs, the John Hancock Life Insurance Company, as part of its broadcast activities.

Each winner will be able to further his or her musical education under the tutelage of such famous musicians as Dr. Koussevitsky, Aaron Copland, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross and Katherine Wolff. Each scholarship covers both tuition and expenses while at school.

Norman Carol of Philadelphia, a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia, was one of the winners. Others were:

Adele Addison of Springfield, Mass.; Stanley Kimes of Nokomis, Ill.; Russell Smith of Alexandria, Va.; Gordon Playman of Minneapolis; Maricarol Hanson of Minneapolis; Lois Schaefer of Olympia, Wash.; Kermit D. Moore of Akron, Ohio; Seymour Lipkin of Detroit, and Adolph S. Herseth of Bertha, Minn.

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
2/13/47

Guest Conductors Invited To Lead At Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next summer. Dr. Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the greater part of the festival of 12 concerts, announces music to be included in the programs. Mr. Bernstein and Mr. Shaw will be members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session at the orchestra's summer home in July and early August.

The opening concert on July 13, by an orchestra of chamber music proportions, will be devoted to the works of Bach, and the second concert on July 20, to Mozart.

In the first series of concerts (July 24, 26 and 27) by the full orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh, Copland's Third, Rachmaninoff's Third, Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Barbert's Overture, "School for Scandal", Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso. Miss Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for the Hindemith Concerto and William Primrose for the Berlioz Symphony.

The second week-end, July 31 and August 2 and 3, will be devoted to a Beethoven cycle, and will be followed on August 5 by a performance of the Ninth Symphony in an extra concert.

In the final series, August 7, 9 and 10, will be played a Haydn Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second, Tchaikovsky's Fourth, Debussy's "The Sea", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem, with chorus and soloists.

Information and subscriptions may be obtained from the Festival Office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 1 - 1947

Tanglewood Ticket Sale Ahead of '46

Demand for Season Tickets for 1947 Berkshire Festival Running 50 Per Cent Over Last Year's.

The demand for season tickets for the 1947 Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, is running about 50 per cent ahead of last year's, it was revealed today.

Sale of tickets started only last month but already all seats in the front section of the big music shed and most of the boxes have been taken for the three regular series of three concerts each, starting July 24. For the three extra concerts, scheduled for July 13, July 20 and Aug 5, the demand has not been so large, it was stated.

George E. Judd, Berkshire Symphony orchestra manager, said yesterday he believed the increased advance registration meant only that people were applying earlier, not that there would be a larger over-all attendance.

Chicago, Ill.
Diapason
4/1/47

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, established in 1940 to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire festival concerts, will hold a six-weeks' session June 30 to Aug. 10 under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs will be a member of the faculty. The organ in the Tanglewood shed is an Aeolian-Skinner, built in 1940, and designed by G. Donald Harrison.

BROWNWOOD, TEXAS
BULLETIN

MAR 2 3 1947

Koussevitzky has commissioned Marc Blitzstein to write the music for an opera version of Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes." . . .The Gerhardt Eisler appeal will be heard within two weeks, as a result of a stipulation between his attorney and the Federal prosecutor. An appeal such as this usually takes 30 days

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 5 - 1947

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS SET

Members of Student Orchestra to Be Selected Next Week

New York members of the faculty will hold final auditions next week for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, which will have a six-week session, June 30-Aug. 10, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. All auditions, except those for tympanists, will be held at Carnegie Chamber Music Hall.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hear players of orchestral instruments, Thursday, when auditions for violists and soloists are scheduled at 9 A. M., for 'cellists and contrabassists, 10 A. M.; for woodwinds and harp, 11 A. M., and for brass and other instruments, at noon. Tympanists will be heard backstage at Carnegie Hall, tomorrow at 6:30. Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes will conduct auditions for the Opera Department, from 9 A. M. to noon, April 12.

Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston, before April 10. Application for admission to the Music Center also should be made to Mr. Perry.

FALLS, N. Y.
T STAR

APR 4 - 1947

Serge Koussevitzky has announced [illegible] next Summer's Berkshire's Festival concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest-conductors. Both men will be faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session during July and early August. The opening concert which will be given July 13 by an orchestra of chamber music proportions will be devoted to the music of Bach. On July 20 music of Mozart will be played.

In the concerts of July 24, 26 and 27 Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include the Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh Symphony, Copland's Third Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Third Symphony, Berlioz "Harold in Italy" Symphony with William Primrose as viola soloist, Hindemith's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, Barber's Overture to "School for Scandal", Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso.

A Beethoven cycle will be given during the second week-end, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3; and on July 5 an extra concert will feature the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

The final series on Aug. 7, 9 and 10 will include a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohns "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "The Sea," Stravinsky's "La Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem with chorus and soloists.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 6 - 1947

Final Auditions Here For Berkshire Center

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra and opera department in this summer's session will be held here this week. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold auditions for instrumentalists at the Cargenie Chamber Hall next Thursday morning as follows: Nine o'clock, violin and viola; 10, cello and double-bass; 11, woodwind and harp; noon, brass and other instruments. Auditions for tympanists will be held backstage at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday afternoon at 6:30.

Auditions for the opera department will be held by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes next Saturday morning from 9 o'clock to noon in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall. An accompanist will be provided. Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notificat ions have not been received by April 10 will not be heard. The Center's six weeks' session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opens June 30.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

APR 5 - 1947

ALONG... THE WHITE WAY

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be held next week in Boston by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Mus ic center, Tanglewood. The music center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director and Stanley Chapple as dean. The music center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to Aug. 10.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 5 - 1947

Berkshire Music Center Auditions Held Next Week

Applicants for Instrumental, Orchestra Departments Will Be Heard at Boston

It has been announced that the final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be next week in Boston, by members of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

The Music Center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director, and Stanley Chapple as dean. The Music Center will be held in Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to August 10.

The auditions will be held on the following schedule:-

Orchestral instruments, Monday, at stage entrance Symphony Hall, Boston; violin and viola, 2 p.m.; violin, cello and contrabass, 3 p.m.; woodwinds, 3:30 p.m.; brass and other instruments, 4 p.m.

Opera department auditions will be held on Tuesday from 2 to 5 p.m. at Brown Hall, Boston Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave.

Applicants who wish to audition for the opera department, should notify Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The Symphony announces that "those whose notifications have not been received by April 7, cannot be heard."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 8 - 1947

Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will hear the final auditions for admission to the student orchestra and for the opera department in New York this week. Applications for admission to the music center should be made to Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notifications have not been received by April 10 can not be heard.

The auditions will be held in Carnegie Chamber Music hall, New York. Orchestral instruments auditions will be held Thursday for violin and viola at 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass, 10 a.m.; woodwinds and harp, 11 a.m.; brass and other instruments, 12 m. Tympani auditions will be held Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. back stage at Carnegie hall.

Auditions for the opera department will be held Saturday from 9 a.m. to 12 m. The opera auditions will be conducted by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes. An accomapnist will be provided.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

APR 6 - 1947

Auditions Listed

Stanley Chappel, dean of the Berkshire Music Center, will hold auditions for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the 1947 season this week in St. Louis. The Music Center will have a six-week session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. from June 30 to August 10, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Auditions will be held on Wednesday, April 9, at the Baldwin Piano Store, 960 Olive Street, St. Louis, on the following schedule: Violin and viola, 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass, 10 a.m.; woodwinds, 10:30 a.m.; brass and other instruments, 11 a.m.; opera department, 1 p.m.

Applications for admission to the Music Center should be made to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

APR 8 - 1947

Tanglewood To Have New Press Quarters

Plans for the erection of new press quarters as well as an additional stage for the use of student orchestras at Tanglewood, were discussed at a meeting of the Tanglewood advisory committee at the Hotel Sheraton yesterday afternoon.

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, explained to the local group, which represents the local steering committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, that the press quarters will be separated from the office. He added that newspapermen and radio representatives will have an "exclusive section" when the Festival opens next summer.

About $7000 has been earmarked for the rehearsal stage to be constructed. Last year the Festival officials found that at times one of the two student orchestras had to either wait or lose its turn for rehearsals because of inadequate facilities.

"We have come to feel the need for a sizable stage so that both orchestras can hold renearsals without having to interfere with one another," Mr. Judd said.

APR 9 - 1947

COUPLE TO ATTEND MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES BY BOAT

One musical couple is going to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood next summer by boat.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Manager George E. Judd and a New York woman recently told him she had wanted for years to hear the summer symphony, but her husband was too "wrapped up" in sailing their boat on Cape Cod.

Judd suggested the couple join their music and yatching by sailing up the Hudson river, anchoring near Albany, N. Y., and driving 35 miles to Tanglewood.

The woman bought a box for the symphonic series, and her husband charts of the Hudson.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 1 0 1947

Swiss Composer Joins Tanglewood School Staff

BOSTON, April 10 (UP)—Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serge Kroussevitzky announced today.

Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

APR 1 0 1947

TO TEACH MUSIC

BOSTON, April 10. — (UP) — Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, director Serge Koussevitzky announced to-day. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

APR 1 0 1947

Honegger Accepts Summer School Post

Boston, April 10. (UP)—Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serve Moussevitzky announces today. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston Orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

APR - 1947

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will present a series of twelve concerts at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, during July and August. Most of the concerts will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Leonard Bernstein, and Robert Shaw, of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, being invited by Dr. Koussevitzky to be guest conductors.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

APR 1 6 1947

SEYMOUR LIPKIN, 20, piano and violin student at the Curtis Institute, won a summer scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor announced.

APR 1 6 1947

TEN NAMED WINNERS OF BERKSHIRE HONORS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, April 15—The names of ten winners of music scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center this summer were announced tonight by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The scholarships were awarded by the sponsor of the Boston Symphony radio programs, the John Hancock Life Insurance Company, as part of its broadcast activities.

Each winner will be able to further his or her musical education under the tutelage of such famous musicians as Dr. Koussevitaky, Aaron Copland, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross and Katharine Wolff. Each scholarship covers both tuition and expenses while at school.

Norman Carol of Philadelphia, a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia, was one of the winners. Others were:

Adele Addison of Springfield, Mass.; Stanley Kimes of Nokomis, Ill.; Russell Smith of Alexandria, Va.; Gordon Playman of Minneapolis; Maricarol Hanson of Minneapolis; Lois Schaefer of Olympia, Wash.; Kermit D. Moore of Akron, Ohio; Seymour Lipkin of Detroit, and Adolph S. Herseth of Bertha, Minn.

[4]

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
2/13/47

Guest Conductors Invited To Lead At Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next summer. Dr. Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the greater part of the festival of 12 concerts, announces music to be included in the programs. Mr. Bernstein and Mr. Shaw will be members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session at the orchestra's summer home in July and early August.

The opening concert on July 13, by an orchestra of chamber music proportions, will be devoted to the works of Bach, and the second concert on July 20 to Mozart.

In the first series of concerts (July 24, 26 and 27) by the full orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh, Copland's Third, Rachmaninoff's Third, Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso. Miss Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for the Hindemith Concerto and William Primrose for the Berlioz Symphony.

The second week-end, July 31 and August 2 and 3, will be devoted to a Beethoven cycle, and will be followed on August 5 by a performance of the Ninth Symphony in an extra concert.

In the final series, August 7, 9 and 10, will be played a Haydn Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second, Tchaikovsky's Fourth, Debussy's "The Sea", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem, with chorus and soloists.

Information and subscriptions may be obtained from the Festival Office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 1 - 1947

Tanglewood Ticket Sale Ahead of '46

Demand for Season Tickets for 1947 Berkshire Festival. Running 50 Per Cent Over Last Year's.

The demand for season tickets for the 1947 Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, is running about 50 per cent ahead of last year's, it was revealed today.

Sale of tickets started only last month but already all seats in the front section of the big music shed and most of the boxes have been taken for the three regular series of three concerts each, starting July 24. For the three extra concerts, scheduled for July 13, July 20 and Aug 5, the demand has not been so large, it was stated.

George E. Judd, Berkshire Symphony orchestra manager, said yesterday he believed the increased advance registration meant only that people were applying earlier, not that there would be a larger over-all attendance.

Chicago, Ill.
Diapason
4/1/47

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, established in 1940 to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts, will hold a six-weeks session June 30 to Aug. 10 under the direction of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs will be a member of the faculty. The organ in the Tanglewood [illegible] built in 19[illegible] is an Aeolian-Skinner, designed by G. Donald Harrison.

BROWNWOOD, TEXAS
BULLETIN

MAR 23 1947

Koussevitzky has commissioned Marc Blitzstein to write the music for an opera version of Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes." . . .The Gerhardt Eisler appeal will be heard within two weeks, as a result of a stipulation between his attorney and the Federal prosecutor. An appeal such as this usually takes 30 days . . .

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 5 - 1947

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS SET

Members of Student Orchestra to Be Selected Next Week

New York members of the faculty will hold final auditions next week for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, which will have a six-week session, June 30-Aug. 10, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. All auditions, except those for tympanists, will be held at Carnegie Chamber Music Hall.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hear players of orchestral instruments, Thursday, when auditions for violists and soloists are scheduled at 9 A. M., for 'cellists and contrabassists, 10 A. M.; for woodwinds and harp, 11 A. M., and for brass and other instruments, at noon. Tympanists will be heard backstage at Carnegie Hall, tomorrow at 6:30. Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes will conduct auditions for the Opera Department, from 9 A. M. to noon, April 12.

Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston, before April 10. Application for admission to the Music Center also should be made to Mr. Perry.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

APR 4 - 1947

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the program for next Summer's Berkshire's Festival concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw to be guest-conductors. Both men will be faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be in session during July and early August. The opening concert which will be given July 13 by an orchestra of chamber music proportions will be devoted to the music of Bach. On July 20 music of Mozart will be played.

In the concerts of July 24, 26 and 27 Dr. Koussevitzky plans to include the Brahms' Second Symphony, Schubert's Seventh Symphony, Copland's Third Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Third Symphony, Berlioz "Harold in Italy" Symphony with William Primrose as viola soloist, Hindemith's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, Barber's Overture to "School for Scandal," Ravel's "Pavane" and "La Valse" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso.

A Beethoven cycle will be given during the second week-end, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3; and on July 5 an extra concert will feature the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

The final series on Aug. 7, 9 and 10 will include a symphony by Haydn, Mendelssohns "Italian" Symphony, Schumann's Second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "The Sea," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Mozart's Requiem with chorus and soloists.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 6 - 1947

Final Auditions Here For Berkshire Center

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra and opera department in this summer's session will be held here this week. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold auditions for instrumentalists at the Cargenie Chamber Hall next Thursday morning as follows: Nine o'clock, violin and viola; 10, cello and double-bass; 11, woodwind and harp; noon, brass and other instruments. Auditions for tympanists will be held backstage at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday afternoon at 6:30.

Auditions for the opera department will be held by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes next Saturday morning from 9 o'clock to noon in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall. An accompanist will be provided. Applicants for the opera auditions must notify Thomas D. Perry jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notificat ions have not been received by April 10 will not be heard. The Center's six weeks' session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opens June 30.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

APR 5 - 1947

ALONG... THE WHITE WAY

Final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be held next week in Boston by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Mus ic center, Tanglewood. The music center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director and Stanley Chapple as dean. The music center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to Aug. 10.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 5 - 1947

Berkshire Music Center Auditions Held Next Week

Applicants for Instrumental, Orchestra Departments Will Be Heard at Boston

It has been announced that the final auditions for admission to the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra and opera department will be next week in Boston, by members of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

The Music Center, which is operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra, with Aaron Copland as assistant director, and Stanley Chapple as dean. The Music Center will be held in Tanglewood, Lenox, from June 30 to August 10.

The auditions will be held on the following schedule:-

Orchestral instruments, Monday, at stage entrance Symphony Hall, Boston; violin and viola, 2 p.m.; violincello and contrabass, 3 p.m.; woodwinds, 3.30 p.m.; brass and other instruments, 4 p.m.

Opera department auditions will be held on Tuesday from 2 to 5 p.m. at Brown Hall, Boston Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave.

Applicants who wish to audition for the opera department, should notify Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The Symphony announces that "those whose notifications have not been received by April 7, cannot be heard."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 8 - 1947

Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will hear the final auditions for admission to the student orchestra and for the opera department in New York this week. Applications for admission to the music center should be made to Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Those whose notifications have not been received by April 10 can not be heard.

The auditions will be held in Carnegie Chamber Music hall, New York. Orchestral instruments auditions will be held Thursday for violin and viola at 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass, 10 a.m.; woodwinds and harp, 11 a.m.; brass and other instruments, 12 m. Tympani auditions will be held Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. back stage at Carnegie hall.

Auditions for the opera department will be held Saturday from 9 a.m. to 12 m. The opera auditions will be conducted by Boris Goldovsky, Frederic Cohen and Felix Wolfes. An accomapnist will be provided.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

APR 6 - 1947

Auditions Listed

Stanley Chappel, dean of the Berkshire Music Center, will hold auditions for admission to the Student Orchestra and the Opera Department of the 1947 season this week in St. Louis. The Music Center will have a six-week session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from June 30 to August 10, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Auditions will be held on Wednesday, April 9, at the Baldwin Piano Store, 960 Olive Street, St. Louis, on the following schedule: Violin and viola, 9 a.m.; violoncello and contrabass, 10 a.m.; woodwinds, 10:30 a.m.; brass and other instruments, 1 a.m.; opera department, 1 p.m.

Applications for admission to the Music Center should be made to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston 15. Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

APR 8 - 1947

Tanglewood To Have New Press Quarters

Plans for the erection of new press quarters as well as an additional stage for the use of student orchestras at Tanglewood, were discussed at a meeting of the Tanglewood advisory committee at the Hotel Sheraton yesterday afternoon.

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, explained to the local group, which represents the local steering committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, that the press quarters will be separated from the office. He added that newspapermen and radio representatives will have an "section" when the Fes-

Card Parties

Rockwell Relief Corps

The W. W. Rockwell Relief Corps will hold a whist tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 at 29 Fenn Street.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

APR 9 - 1947

COUPLE TO ATTEND MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES BY BOAT

One musical couple is going to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood next summer by boat.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Manager George E. Judd and a New York woman recently told him she had wanted for years to hear the summer symphony, but her husband was too "wrapped up" in sailing their boat on Cape Cod.

Judd suggested the couple join their music and yatching by sailing up the Hudson river, anchoring near Albany, N. Y., and driving 35 miles to Tanglewood.

The woman bought a box for the symphonic series, and her husband charts of the Hudson.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 10 1947

Swiss Composer Joins Tanglewood School Staff

BOSTON, April 10 (UP)—Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serge Kroussevitzky announced today.

Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

APR 10 1947

TO TEACH MUSIC

BOSTON, April 10. — (UP) — Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, director Serge Koussevitzky announced to-day. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

APR 10 1947

Honegger Accepts Summer School Post

Boston, April 10. (UP)—Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serve Moussevitzky announces today. Honegger, whose symphony for strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston Orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

APR - 1947

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will present a series of twelve concerts at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, during July and August. Most of the concerts will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Leonard Bernstein, and Robert Shaw, of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, being invited by Dr. Koussevitzky to be guest conductors.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
APR 16 1947

SEYMOUR LIPKIN, 20, piano and violin student at the Curtis Institute, won a summer scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor announced.

APR 16 1947

TEN NAMED WINNERS OF BERKSHIRE HONORS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, April 15—The names of ten winners of music scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center this summer were announced tonight by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The scholarships were awarded by the sponsor of the Boston Symphony radio programs, the John Hancock Life Insurance Company, as part of its broadcast activities.

Each winner will be able to further his or her musical education under the tutelage of such famous musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross and Katherine Wolff. Each scholarship covers both tuition and expenses while at school.

Norman Carol of Philadelphia, a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia, was one of the winners. Others were:

Adele Addison of Springfield, Mass.; Stanley Kimes of Nokomis, Ill.; Russell Smith of Alexandria, Va.; Gordon Playman of Minneapolis; Maricarol Hanson of Minneapolis; Lois Schaefer of Olympia, Wash.; Kermit D. Moore of Akron, Ohio; Seymour Lipkin of Detroit, and Adolph S. Herseth of Bertha, Minn.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 16 1947

(Arthur Johnson Photo)

ADELE ADDISON, rising young singer of this city, is one of the 10 nationwide winners of the John Hancock music scholarships offered this season at the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. Each winner will be able to further his or her musical education under the tutelage of such preeminent musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Katharine Wolff and others.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

APR 16 1947

Wins Music Scholarship

Kermit Moore, 20-year-old 'cello student at the Cleveland Institute of Music, has been awarded a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Festival June 30 to Aug. 10 at Tanglewood, Mass., it was announced today.

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD

APR 16 1947

Carleton Greely Given Audition In Boston

Carleton Greely, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy L. Greely, 503 Woodford Street, recently received an audition in Boston's Symphony Hall for the Tanglewood Summer School. He was the only young musician in the state to apply for admission.

Greely, who plays tuba in the Deering High School Band and is a member of the Portland Symphony Orchestra and the Student Philharmonic Orchestra, has studied music for five years. He is a senior at Deering.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be in session from June 30 to Aug 10. The pianist and musicologist, Stanley Chappel, is dean and the assistant director will be one of the Country's foremost composers, Aaron Copland.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 20 1947

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Arthur Honegger, who has not been in this country since 1929, is coming to take charge of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Centre this summer.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

APR 16 1947

10 WIN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR TANGELWOOD STUDY

BOSTON, April 16.—(INS) A 21-year-old Springfield girl was among ten winners of scholarships today to study at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood this summer.

She was Miss Adele Addison, soprano, who was selected by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor during the regular Tuesday night radio broadcast of the orchestra.

Two winners were students at the New England Conservatory of Music. They were Miss Lois Schaefer, Olympia, Wash., flutist; and Adolph S. Herseth, Bertha, Minn., trumpeter.

The other seven winners were:

Russell Smith, Alexandria, Va., Gordon Playman, Minneapolis; Stanley Kimes, Nokomis, Ill.; Miss Maricarol Hanson, Minneapolis, all pianists: Kermit D. Moore, Akron, O., cellist; Norman Carol, Philadelphia, violinist; and Seymour Lipkin, Detroit, pianist, violinist and a guest conductor of the Detroit symphony.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 16 1947

Springfield Soprano Wins Music Award

Boston—(INS)—A 21-year-old Springfield girl was among 10 winners of scholarships today to study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer.

She was Miss Adele Addison, soprano. The other winners were: Miss Lois Schaefer, Olympia, Wash., flutist; Adolph S. Herseth Bertha, Minn., trumpeter; Russell Smith, Alexandria, Va.; Gordon Playman, Minneapolis, Minn.; Stanley Kimes, Nokomis, Ill.; Miss Maricarol Hanson, Minneapolis, Minn.; all pianists; Kermit D. Moore, Akron, O., cellist; Norman Carol, Philadelphia, Pa., violinist; and Seymour Lipkin, Detroit, Mich., pianist, violinist and a guest conductor of he Detroit Symphony.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

APR 16 1947

News Copy Boy Wins Music Scholarship

Russell Smith, 19-year-old Washington News copy boy, has won a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center Summer School at Tanglewood, Mass. The Music Center was founded by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Russell Smith

The award, for musical composition, was made on the basis of a nation-wide contest, sponsored by the John Hancock Life Insurance Co. Winners will take a six-weeks' course in musical composition under the direction of Aaron Copland.

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

APR 10 1947

BRIEFING THE NEWS

Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serge Koussevitzky announced today.

Honegger, whose Symphony for Strings was introduced to America recently by the Boston Orchestra, will direct the Composition Department of the summer school.

[5]

APR 16 1947

SIX GET MUSIC SCHOLARSHIPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Will Study This Summer at Berkshire Center in Lenox

Boston, April 15 (AP)—Winners of six of 10 music scholarships for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center were announced tonight by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the center.

The awards cover tuition and expenses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, (Mass.) school for the season and are made by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company.

The six winners are:

Maricarol Hanson, 23, of Minneapolis, Minn., a pianist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Lois Schaefer, 23, of Olympia, Wash., a flautist now attending the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

Kermit D. Moore, 19, of Akron, O., a cellist now attending the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Norman Carol, 18, of Philadelphia, Pa., a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music.

Seymour Lipkin, 20, of Detroit, Mich., a pianist and violinist and student at Curtis Institute.

Adolph S. Hersetl, 25, of Bertha, Minn., a trumpeter, a student at the New England Conservatory of Music.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 15 1947

Adele Addison Wins New Honors With Tanglewood Scholarship

Young Springfield Soprano Only New England Winner Of Competition Sponsored by John Hancock Company

Word was received here today that Miss Adele Addison of 115 Tenth St., this city, who last week won the $1500 Paul Laval musical scholarship at Boston, and the right to be heard in the national finals, has been chosen as the only New England winner of one of 10 scholarships offered by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Miss Addison, a lyric soprano, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James N. Addison, and ever since she won Springfield Junior League scholarships several years ago her musical career has been steadily in the ascendant.

A graduate of Classical High School, she is a pupil of Mrs. Ruth Ekberg of this city, and was recently named soprano soloist at First Church.

She is a graduate of the Westminster Choir College at Princeton, N. J.

The scolarship won by Miss Addison is one of 10 offered by John Hancock Company in connection with its sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the air. The competition was open only to accomplished musicians of outstanding talent.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

APR 15 1947

WINNERS of the 1° scholarships at Tanglewood next summer will be announced during Boston Symphony's concert via ABC-WGBS at 8:30 p. m. The Bach Suite No. 3 in D major and the Strauss symphonic poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," will highlight the program, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

* * *

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS

APR 16 1947

3 Minnesotans Win Music Scholarships

Two Minneapolis musicians and one from Bertha, Minn. are among 10 scholarship winners to the Berkshire Musical center, Tanglewood, Mass.

The winners were announced Tuesday by Dr. Serge koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra and director of the center, on the weekly program heard over WTCN locally.

Mr. Playman

Miss Hanson

This organist for the St. Paul ... land ave., Minneapolis, will further her piano and organ studies under the scholarship.

Other winners are Gordon B. Playman, 25 years old, of 4306 Linden Hills blvd., Minneapolis, a composer, and Adolph S. Herseth of Bertha, concert trumpet player.

Playman, former Marine Corps pilot, wrote several of his works overseas. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Minnesota last March.

The scholarships, worth about $500, are for a course of study beginning June 30. Minnesota led all states in the award.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH

APR 14 1947

Tanglewood Winners

Names of the young musicians who have won the Tanglewood scholarships will be announced tomorrow night by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky on the broadcast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:30 P. M. on WRNL.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 16 1947

BERKSHIRE SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS ANNOUNCED

BOSTON, Wednesday (AP) — Winners of six of 10 music scholarships for study this Summer at the Berkshire Music Center were announced last night by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the center.

The awards cover tutition and expenses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, School for the season and are made by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company.

The six winners are:

Maricarol Hanson, 23, of Minneapolis, Minn., a pianist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Lois Schaefer, 23, of Olympia, Wash., a flautist now attending the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

Kermit D. Moore, 19, of Akron, Ohio, a cellist now attending the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Norman Carol, 18, of Philadelphia, Pa., a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music.

Seymour Lipkin, 20, of Detroit, Mich., a pianist and violinist and student at Curtis Institute.

Adolph S. Herseth, 25, of Bertha, Minn., a trumpeter, a student at the New England Conservatory of Music.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

APR 15 1947

WINNERS ANNOUNCED:

The winners of 10 scholarships for music study at Tanglewood this summer will be announced during the broadcast of the Boston Symphony at 8:30 tonight over WOKO. The contest was conducted by the program sponsor, the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Winners were selected personally by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony. More than 1,500 aspirants applied for the scholarships. They will study at the idyllic Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Mass.

Tonight's program will include Bach's Overture (Suite) No. 3 in D Major and the Symphonic Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," by Strauss.

* * *

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 10 1947

Composer to Teach At Symphony School

Boston—(UP)—Arthur Honegger, distinguished Swiss composer, has accepted an invitation to join the faculty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, Director Serge Koussevitzky announced today.

Honegger, whose "Symphony for Strings" was introduced to America recently by the Boston orchestra, will direct the composition department of the summer school. This will be his first visit to the United States since 1929. The school will open July 1 at Lenox.

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
APR 18 1947

Detroiter Wins Study Prize

SEYMOUR LIPKIN of 3260 Webb has been selected as one of 10 winners of the John Hancock Scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center.

Although only 20 years of age, young Lipkin is proficient in piano and violin. He has also been a guest conductor with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, the Philadelphia Opera Company and the Curtis String Orchestra. At the Center, Lipkin will study conducting under Dr. Sergé Koussevitzky director of the Boston Symphony.

He attended Northwestern High School and Wayne University before going to Philadelphia to continue his music studies.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

APR 16 1947

Carol Gets Scholarship

Norman Carol, Philadelphia violinist, is one of the ten young American musicians to be awarded scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center.

The 18-year-old prodigy, who lives at 6542 N. 18th st., studied at the Curtis Institute here under Efrem Zimbalist. He made his debut as a soloist at the age of nine with the Philadelphia Civic Symphony Orchestra.

The winners of the scholarships were selected from 1,500 applicants by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose weekly broadcasts are sponsored by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AP: 16 1947

IX GET MUSIC SCHOLARSHIPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Will Study This Summer at Berkshire Center in Lenox

Boston, April 15 (AP)—Winners of x of 10 music scholarships for study his summer at the Berkshire Music enter were announced tonight by Dr. erge Koussevitzky, conductor of the oston Symphony Orchestra and ounder of the center.

The awards cover tuition and exenses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.) school for the season and are ade by the John Hancock Mutual ife Insurance Company.

The six winners are:

Maricarol Hanson, 23 of Minneapolis, Minn., a pianist now attending Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Lois S[illegible], 23, of Olympia, Wash., [illegible] now attending the New England Conservatory of Music B[illegible].

K[illegible] D. Moore, 19, of Akron, O., [illegible] now attending the Cleveland [illegible] of Music.

Norman C[illegible], 18, of Philadelphia, [illegible] a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music.

Seymour Lipkin, 20, of Detroit, Mich., a pianist and violinist and student at Curtis Institute.

Adolph S. Herseth, 25, of Bertha, Minn., a trumpeter, a student at the New England Conservatory of Music.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

6

Olympia Girl Wins Music Scholarshi

BOSTON, April 16.—(AP)—Lo Schaefer, 23 years old, of Olympi Wash., was named one of six wi ners of summer scholarships at th Berkshire Music Center. Th awards were announced last nigh by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, condu tor of the Boston Symphony O chestra and founder of the cente

The awards cover tuition and ex penses at the Tanglewood, Leno Mass., school for the season.

Miss Schaefer is a flautist no attending the New England Co servatory of Music in Boston.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

6

Coast Girl Winner

BOSTON, Mass., April 16. (AP)—Lois Schaefer, 23, of Olympia, Wash., was named one of six winners of summer scholarships at the Berkshire Music center. The awards were announced last night by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder of the center.

The awards covered tuition and expenses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., school for the season and are made by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance company.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 17 1947

10 WIN MUSIC AWARDS

Springfield Girl Selected to Study at Berkshire Music Center

Boston, April 16.—(INS)—A 21-year-old Springfield girl was among ten winners of scholarships today to study at the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood this Summer. She was Miss Adele Addison, soprano, who was selected by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the other nine students from among 1500 applicants.

Two winners were students at the New England Conservatory of Music. They were Miss Lois Schaefer, Olympia, Wash., flutist; and Adolph S. Herseth, Bertha, Minn., trumpeter.

The other seven winners were: Russell Smith, Alexandria, Va.;

Minn., all pianists; Kermit D. Moore, Akron, O., cellist; Norman Carol, Philadelphia, Pa., violinist; and Seymour Lipkin, Detroit, Mich., pianist, violinist and a guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 27 1947

THE WORLD OF MUSIC: FESTIVALS

Events Throughout Nation Place Emphasis on Modern Music

BY ROSS PARMENTER

THIS will certainly be a banner summer for music festivals in America—and most of them will feature contemporary music. There are so many lined up that a man with private plane could probably a tend a festival every night of th summer and his flights would tak him back and forth across th continent several times. At tha he'd have to miss quite a fe While Columbia University is hol ing its third annual festival contemporary American mus here next month, the Universi of Oregon is holding a three-d contemporary festival out in E gene, Ore. And while the new Vi ginia Music Festival is running Charlottesville, Va., the nin annual festival will be going out at Brigham Young Universi in Provo, Utah.

One of the major festivals ope on Tuesday. It is the seventeen annual Eastman School Festiv of American Music, which will ce brate the twenty-fifth anniversa of the founding of the school. D Howard Hanson will be the dir tor and eleven compositions w receive premières during the we long event. Another festival ginning on Tuesday is the ni teenth annual one of the Americ Society of the Ancient Instrumen in Philadelphia. The society w present three programs in memo of Ben Stad, its founder, who died last summer.

The new Charlottesville festival will be held June 13, 14 and 15 in the Scott Stadium at the University of Virginia. Dr. Hans Kindler will be the musical director and the concerts will be given by the National Symphony Orchestra. Edward R. Stettinius Jr. is the chairman of the festival's advisory board. The founders plan it as an annual event and have adopted the slogan "The Salzburg of the South."

One of the largest festivals, of course, will be the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. It will be held in July and August. An idea of some of the smaller festivals can be gained from the itinerary of the Roth Quartet. It will play at events being sponsored by the University of California both in Los Angeles and Berkeley, by the California Music Society in La Jolla, by Denver University and by the University of Colorado at Boulder.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

APR 16 1947

Minnesotans Collect

Out of 10 music scholarships awarded by trustees of the Boston symphony orchestra, three go to young Minnesota musicians. Awards were announced last night during the symphony's broadcast over ABC (WTCN).

Winners are:

Gordon B. Playman, 25, 4306 Linden Hills boulevard, former marine corps flyer, for a composition titled "A Little Overture."

Miss Hanson

Playman

Maricarol Hanson, 23, 1923 Portland avenue, pianist and organist, now studying at Curtis institute in Philadelphia.

Adolph S. Herseth, 25, Bertha, Minn., trumpeter, now studying at New England Conservatory of Music.

The three will study under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky, Aaron Copland, and others.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Mozart and Sessions of Operas May Be Done at Tanglewood During Festival

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE operas to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center opera department are rumored to be Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "The Trial of Lucullus," the one act work Roger Sessions wrote for student performance at the University of California at Berkeley, where he teaches. The Sessions work, which has a libretto by Berthold Brecht, is the composer's first opera. It received its première last month at Berkeley. In it the shade of Lucullus, a Roman general who dethroned seven kings and destroyed fifty-three cities, is put on trial by the shades of little people who are swayed more by the death and destruction he wrought than by the empire he extended.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

APR 17 1947

Phila. Youth Wins Berkshire Award

Norman Carol, of 6542 N. 18th st., has been awarded a scholarship for next summer's Berkshire Music Festival, at Lenox, Mass., as a result of auditions held all over the country by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was announced yesterday.

Carol, who is 18, won first prize among violinists. He is a student at Curtis Institute here, and recently won an award from the Washington Music Guild for his playing.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 12 1947

PUT ON TANGLEWOOD NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Local Trio to Aid Summer School for Music

Dr. James P. Baxter, 3rd, Williams college president: Mrs. Robert M. Derby and Karl E. Weston of Williamstown have been named to the national committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood by Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips academy, Exeter, first chairman of the organization created last summer to support the Boston Symphony orchestra summer school for music.

Honorary members of the committee include Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, musical director of the orchestra; Mrs. Andrew Hepburn of Concord, who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot of Boston, president of the Boston orchestra, and Jerome D. Greene of Boston, former president.

Subscribers to the Berkshire festival and former members have been invited to join the friends and invitations will be mailed this week to prospective new members. A gift in any amount will constitute the donor to attend musical events and lectures at Tanglewood.

The schools will open June 30 for six weeks. The 400 students will attend the Berkshire festival on the last three week-ends of the session.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1947

Berkshire Music Center Names National Group

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., May 23.—A national committee has been named for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. With Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, as chairman, the honorary members are Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and founder and head of the center; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, of Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs; Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, of Concord, Mass., who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary A. Tappan, gave their family's summer home to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot and Jerome D. Greene, the orchestra's current and former president.

Former members of the society and prospective members have been invited by Dr. Perry to join by a gift "in any amount," which will constitute enrollment and will entitle the donor to attendance at performances of the two student orchestras, the choral and opera departments and the chamber music groups.

The center will open its six-weeks session June 30, with a student body of 400 from all sections of the United States and from other countries.

Contributions may be mailed before June 1 to Symphony Hall, Boston; later to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MAY 1 1 1947

Berkshire Music Festival Features Boston Symphony

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—Music lovers will make their annual pilgrimage to the famed Berkshire Festival here during the period from July 13 to August 10, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzsky, will play a series of 12 concerts.

Conducted on the 210-acre Tanglewood estate, the open-air concerts attract thousands of out-of Staters who stop over in nearby hotels, inns and guest-houses.

Many music lovers attending the festival spend their vacations in the Berkshire area, of which Tanglewood is a part.

From the music center, vacationists may go to Becket State Forest, Beartown State Forest or East Mountain State Forest, all of which are amply equipped for picnics and sports activities.

In the northern part of the Berkshire area, the towns of North Adams, Williamstown and Mount Greylock draw vacationists for their scenic beauty and recreational attractions. Williams College is located in Williamstown.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

MAY 25 1947

Berkshire Program

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival Concerts in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be increased from nine to 12 for the 1947 event, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. These will include two concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart respectively, by a chamber orchestra (July 13, 20), and three weeks of concerts by the full orchestra in the Shed, the middle week to be devoted to a Beethoven cycle (July 31, Aug. 2, 3), the Ninth Symphony to be performed as an extra concert on the following Tuesday (Aug. 5).

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the greater part of the Festival, and has invited two guest conductors, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

The orchestra's summer school, the Berkshire Music Center will open its six-week term on June 30 directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. As before, activities include instrumental, choral, opera and student orchestra programs. Tickets for these are not sold but are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Center.

Information concerning the Festival, the Music Center and Friends, may be obtained by writing to Berkshire Festival Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass., and after June 1 to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As usual, a number of Rochesterians are planning to attend the Festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 22 1947

NAMED TO COMMITTEE

John Nicholas Brown, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Philip S. Jastram and Mrs. Royal Little have been named to the National Committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer School conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Lenox, Mass.

The committee, with Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., as chairman, was formed to foster support of the school which was founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, its director and music director of the Boston orchestra. The school, whose six weeks session will include the Berkshire Festival, will open June 30 with 400 students from many States and several countries.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAY 22 1947

NAMED TO COMMITTEE

John Nicholas Brown, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Philip S. Jastram and Mrs. Royal Little have been named to the National Committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer School conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Lenox, Mass.

The committee, with Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., as chairman, was formed to foster support of the school which was founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, its director and music director of the Boston orchestra. The school, whose six weeks session will include the Berkshire Festival, will open June 30 with 400 students from many States and several countries.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AP 16 1947

IX GET MUSIC SCHOLARSHIPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Vill Study This Summer at Berkshire Center in Lenox

Boston, April 15 (AP)—Winners of of 10 music scholarships for study is summer at the Berkshire Music nter were announced tonight by Dr. rge Koussevitzky, conductor of the ston Symphony Orchestra and under of the center.

The awards cover tuition and ex- nses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, ass.) school for the season and are de by the John Hancock Mutual e Insurance Company.

The six winners are:

Maricarol Hanson, 23, of Minneapo- Minn., a pianist now attending e Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Lois Schaefer, 23, of Olympia, ash., a [illegible] now attending the ew England Conservatory of Music Boston.

Kermit D. Moore, 19, of Akron, O., cellist now attending the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Norman Carol, 18, of Philadelphia, a violinist now attending the Curtis Institute of Music.

Seymour Lipkin, 20, of Detroit, Mich., a pianist and violinist and student at Curtis Institute.

Adolph S. Herseth, 25, of Bertha, Minn., a trumpeter, a student at the New England Conservatory of Music.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

[illegible]

Olympia Girl Wins Music Scholarshi

BOSTON, April 16.—(AP)—Lo Schaefer, 23 years old, of Olympi Wash., was named one of six wi ners of summer scholarships at th Berkshire Music Center. Th awards were announced last nigh by Dr. ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~, condu tor of the Boston Symphony O chestra and founder of the cente

The awards cover tuition and ex penses at the Tanglewood, Leno Mass., school for the season.

Miss Schaefer is a flautist no attending the New England Co servatory of Music in Boston.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

[illegible] 6 [illegible]

Coast Girl Winner

BOSTON, Mass., April 16. (AP)—Lois Schaefer, 23, of Olympia, Wash., was named one of six winners of summer scholarships at the Berkshire Music center. The awards were announced last night by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder of the center.

The awards covered tuition and expenses at the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., school for the season and are made by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance company.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 17 1947

10 WIN MUSIC AWARDS

Springfield Girl Selected to Study at Berkshire Music Center

Boston, April 16.—(INS)—A 21-year-old Springfield girl was among ten winners of scholarships today to study at the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood this Summer.

~~She was~~ Miss Adele Addison, soprano, who was selected by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of ~~the Boston Symphony Orchestra~~

Gordon Playman, Minneapolis, Minn.; Stanley Kimes, Nokomis, Ill.; Miss Maricarol Hanson, Minneapolis, Minn., all pianists; Kermit D. Moore, Akron, O., cellist; Norman Carol, Philadelphia, Pa., violinist; and Seymour Lipkin, Detroit, Mich., pianist, violinist and a guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 27 1947

THE WORLD OF MUSIC: FESTIVALS

Events Throughout Nation Place Emphasis on Modern Music

BY ROSS PARMENTER

THIS will certainly be a banner summer for music festivals in America—and most of them will feature contemporary music. There are so many lined up that a man with a private plane could probably attend a festival every night of the summer and his flights would take him back and forth across the continent several times. At that, he'd have to miss quite a few. While Columbia University is holding its third annual festival of contemporary American music here next month, the University of Oregon is holding a three-day contemporary festival out in Eugene, Ore. And while the new Virginia Music Festival is running in Charlottesville, Va., the ninth annual festival will be going on out at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

One of the major festivals opens on Tuesday. It is the seventeenth annual Eastman School Festival of American Music, which will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the school. Dr. Howard Hanson will be the director and eleven compositions will receive premières during the week-long event. Another festival beginning on Tuesday is the nineteenth annual one of the American Society of the Ancient Instruments in Philadelphia. The society will present three programs in memory of Ben Stad, its founder, who died last summer.

The new Charlottesville festival will be held June 13, 14 and 15 in the Scott Stadium at the University of Virginia. Dr. Hans Kindler will be the musical director and the concerts will be given by the National Symphony Orchestra. Edward R. Stettinius Jr. is the chairman of the festival's advisory board. The founders plan it as an annual event and have adopted the slogan "The Salzburg of the South."

One of the largest festivals, of course, will be the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. It will be held in July and August. An idea of some of the smaller festivals can be gained from the itinerary of the Roth Quartet. It will play at events being sponsored by the University of California both in Los Angeles and Berkeley, by the California Music Society in La Jolla, by Denver University and by the University of Colorado at Boulder.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Mozart and Sessions of Operas May Be Done at Tanglewood During Festival

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE operas to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center opera department are rumored to be Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "The Trial of Lucullus," the one act work Roger Sessions wrote for student performance at the University of California at Berkeley, where he teaches. The Sessions work, which has a libretto by Berthold Brecht, is the composer's first opera. It received its première last month at Berkeley. In it the shade of Lucullus, a Roman general who dethroned seven kings and destroyed fifty-three cities, is put on trial by the shades of little people who are swayed more by the death and destruction he wrought than by the empire he extended.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

APR 16 1947

Minnesotans Collect

Out of 10 music scholarships awarded by trustees of the Boston symphony orchestra, three go to young Minnesota musicians. Awards were announced last night during the symphony's broadcast over ABC (WTCN).

Winners are:

Gordon B. Playman, 25, 4306 Linden Hills boulevard, former marine corps flyer, for a composition titled "A Little Overture."

Maricarol Hanson, 23, 1923 Portland avenue, pianist and organist, now studying at Curtis institute in Philadelphia.

Miss Hanson

Playman

Adolph S. Herseth, 25, Bertha, Minn., trumpeter, now studying at New England Conservatory of Music.

The three will study under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky, Aaron Copland, and others.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

APR 17 1947

Phila. Youth Wins Berkshire Award

Norman Carol, of 6542 N. 18th st., has been awarded a scholarship for next summer's Berkshire Music Festival, at Lenox, Mass., as a result of auditions held all over the country by the ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra, it was announced yesterday.

Carol, who is 18, won first prize among violinists. He is a student at Curtis Institute here, and recently won an award from the Washington Music Guild for his playing.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 12 1947

PUT ON TANGLEWOOD NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Local Trio to Aid Summer School for Music

Dr. James P. Baxter, 3rd, Williams college president; Mrs. Robert M. Derby and Karl E. Weston of Williamstown have been named to the national committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood by Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips academy, Exeter, first chairman of the organization created last summer to support the ~~Boston Symphony orchestra~~ summer school for music.

Honorary members of the committee include Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, musical director of the orchestra; Mrs. Andrew Hepburn of Concord, who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot of Boston, president of the Boston orchestra, and Jerome D. Greene of Boston, former president.

Subscribers to the Berkshire festival and former members have been invited to join the friends and invitations will be mailed this week to prospective new members. A gift in any amount will constitute the donor to attend musical events and lectures at Tanglewood.

The schools will open June 30 for six weeks. The 400 students will attend the Berkshire festival on the last three week-ends of the session.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1947

Berkshire Music Center Names National Group

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., May 23.—A national committee has been named for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. With Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, as chairman, the honorary members are Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and founder and head of the center; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, of Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs; Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, of Concord, Mass., who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary A. Tappan, gave their family's summer home to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot and Jerome D. Greene, the orchestra's current and former president.

Former members of the society and prospective members have been invited by Dr. Perry to join by a gift "in any amount," which will constitute enrollment and will entitle the donor to attendance at performances of the two student orchestras, the choral and opera departments and the chamber music groups.

The center will open its six-weeks session June 30, with a student body of 400 from all sections of the United States and from other countries.

Contributions may be mailed before June 1 to Symphony Hall, Boston; later to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MAY 11 1947

Berkshire Music Festival Features Boston Symphony

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—Music lovers will make their annual pilgrimage to the famed Berkshire Festival here during the period from July 13 to August 10, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzsky, will play a series of 12 concerts.

Conducted on the 210-acre Tanglewood estate, the open-air concerts attract thousands of out-of Staters who stop over in nearby hotels, inns and guest-houses.

Many music lovers attending the festival spend their vacations in the Berkshire area, of which Tanglewood is a part.

From the music center, vacationists may go to Becket State Forest, Beartown State Forest or East Mountain State Forest, all of which are amply equipped for picnics and sports activities.

In the northern part of the Berkshire area, the towns of North Adams, Williamstown and Mount Greylock draw vacationists for their scenic beauty and recreational attractions. Williams College is located in Williamstown.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

MAY 25 1947

Berkshire Program

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival Concerts in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be increased from nine to 12 for the 1947 event, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. These will include two concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart respectively, by a chamber orchestra (July 13, 20), and three weeks of concerts by the full orchestra in the Shed, the middle week to be devoted to a Beethoven cycle (July 31, Aug. 2, 3), the Ninth Symphony to be performed as an extra concert on the following Tuesday (Aug. 5).

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the greater part of the Festival, and has invited two guest conductors, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

The orchestra's summer school, the Berkshire Music Center will open its six-week term on June 30 directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. As before, activities include instrumental, choral, opera and student orchestra programs. Tickets for these are not sold but are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Center.

Information concerning the Festival, the Music Center and Friends, may be obtained by writing to Berkshire Festival Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass., and after June 1 to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As usual, a number of Rochesterians are planning to attend the Festival.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 22 1947

NAMED TO COMMITTEE

John Nicholas Brown, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Philip S. Jastram and Mrs. Royal Little have been named to the National Committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer School conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Lenox, Mass.

The committee, with Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., as chairman, was formed to foster support of the school which was founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, its director and music director of the Boston orchestra. The school, whose six weeks session will include the Berkshire Festival, will open June 30 with 400 students from many States and several countries.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAY 22 1947

NAMED TO COMMITTEE

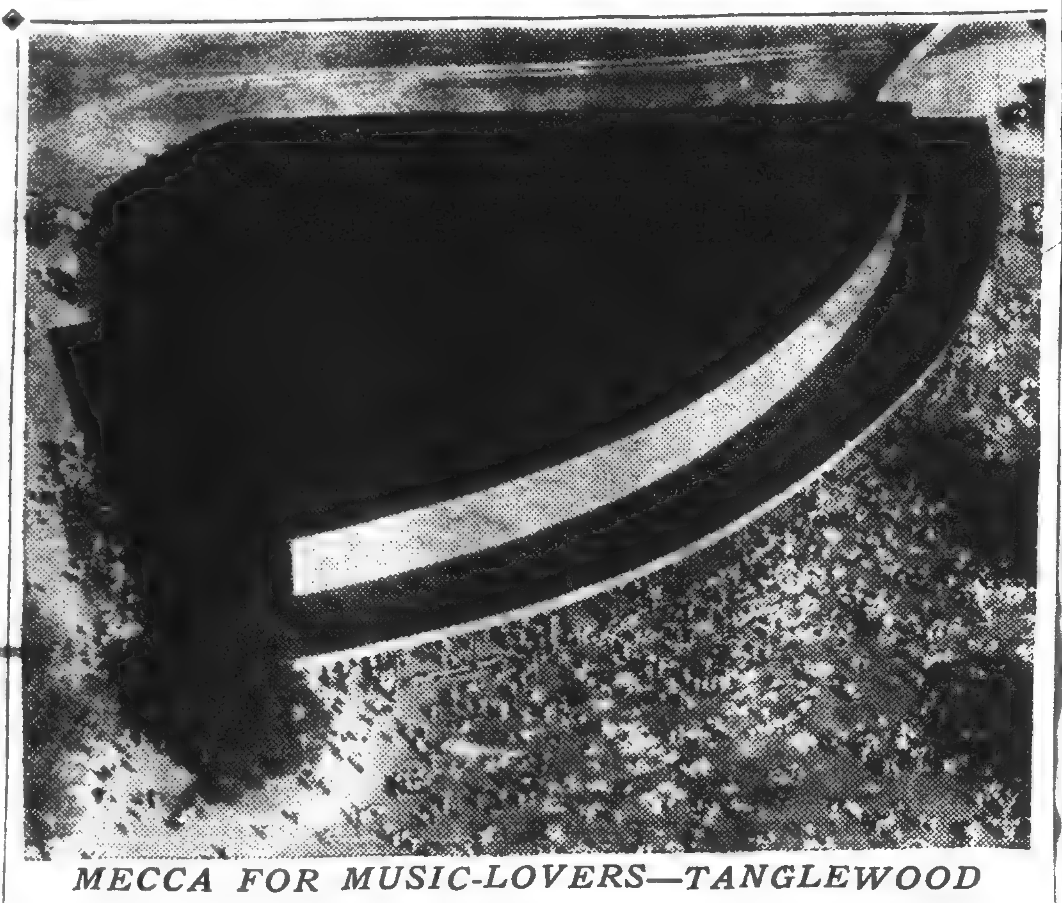
John Nicholas Brown, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Philip S. Jastram and Mrs. Royal Little have been named to the National Committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer School conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Lenox, Mass.

The committee, with Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., as chairman, was formed to foster support of the school which was founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, its director and ~~music director of the~~ Boston orchestra. The school, whose six weeks session will include the Berkshire Festival, will open June 30 with 400 students from many States and several countries.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 1 1 1947

Berkshire Vacations Offer Variety

Program Ranges From Firemen's Muster to 1947 Tanglewood Fete



MECCA FOR MUSIC-LOVERS—TANGLEWOOD

Variety will spice this summer's doings in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, and it looks as though every taste might be satisfied. For a noisy good time there will be the old-fashioned firemen's muster in Pittsfield; for music lovers there will be the twelve concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, from July 13 through Aug. 10, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Living accommodations will range from converted barns to a number of inns and guest houses that are former estates of wealthy summer residents of the region. In all, there will be 100 hotels, inns and guest houses operating, with a good variety of rates by the day, week or season, American or European plan.

The City of Pittsfield Fire Department will open its old-fashioned muster with a lawn party on June 30 at Wahconah Park. This is the first muster in the city since 1916 and will culminate with a July 4 parade in which sixty fire companies from the region will take part with men and equipment.

At Wahconah Park twenty drum corps will compete the afternoon of the Fourth, there will be a pumping contest and prizes will be given for the pumping contest, hose race, ladder contest and tug of war. Several hundred dollars in prizes will be awarded the visiting firemen. Band concerts will be presented nightly at the lawn party.

Antique Fire Equipment

Especially featured in the parade will be antique fire equipment, the oldest piece of apparatus being a hand pumper owned by the Berkshire Museum. This was built in 1805 for No. 6 Fire Company in New York City, situated near today's Nassau Street, and was called "Little Neptune," or "Neptune No. 6."

Spectators will be admitted to all parts of the firemen's muster free of charge.

The City of Pittsfield plans a number of free attractions during the summer, including Friday night block dances in all parts of the city and outdoor movies several nights a week at the twelve city playgrounds. The playgrounds will be open during the day, free, to children of residents and visitors, and are supervised. A number of evening baseball and boxing contests will be staged at these points, also free.

At Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its season July 13 with an all-Bach program, following it July 20 with an all-Mozart presentation. Series A, July 24, 26 and 27, will include Brahms, Schubert, Copland, Rachmaninoff, Berlioz, Hindemith, Barber and Ravel. Series B will consist of a Beethoven cycle which also will be included in an extra concert August 5 which features the Ninth Symphony.

Series B will be heard July 31, Aug. 2 and 3. Series C, Aug. 7, 9 and 10, will include works by Haydn, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky, Debussy and Mozart.

Mr. Koussevitzky will again be director of the Berkshire Music Center which will be in session June 30 to Aug. 10. It functions in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival and provides students with schooling in five music departments. Several programs will be presented by this group for which no tickets will be sold, but which will be open to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Titleholders Will Race

Also planned for visitors who wish to study will be the Pittsfield Summer College which operates during school vacation. It is directed by the Masachusetts State Teachers College of North Adams, and professional improvement of teachers is its aim. Credit is offered for master's degrees in education. Each course will carry three semester hours' credit, and the graduate unit provides eight hours.

Water sports the Fourth of July will culminate in races on Pontoosuc Lake sanctioned by the American Power Boat Association.

Sunday polo matches will be played throughout the summer at the Pittsfield Riding and Polo Club, and more than a dozen state forests, public reservations and wildlife sanctuaries, many with picnic facilities, will be available for vacationists.

Hartford Times
MAY 22 1947

Berkshire Music Group Names Mrs. Murphy to Post

Mrs. Francis S. Murphy of So. Main St., West Hartford, and Mrs. William Mather Lewis of Colebrook have been named to the National Committee for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, Mass., of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The committee, with Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, as chairman, has been formed to foster support of the school, of which Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director, is founder and head.

Dr. Perry has invited former and prospective Friends to make contributions "in any amount," which will constitute enrollment and will entitle donors to attendance at performances of the two student orchestras, the choral and opera departments and the chamber music groups. Donations will be used to help support the school, which will be conducted for six weeks, beginning July 30, with about 400 students from all sections of the United States and other countries. They will attend, as part of their training, concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival the last five weekends the school is in session.

In his invitation to join the "Friends," Dr. Perry quotes Dr. Koussevitzky's description of the school's purpose, "What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study, and broaden their acquaintance with music."

Dr. Perry states, "The venture is justified in its results, for the Center may well become a vital step in the development of a notable coming generation of creative and interpretative musicians in this country." The students will work under Dr. Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple, Eleazar deCarvalho, William Primrose, Aaron Copland, ~~Arthur Honegger,~~ Boris Goldovsky, Frederck Cohen, Richard Rychtarik, Hugh Ross, Robert Shaw, Katharine Wolff and other outstanding musicians and teachers.

Contributions may be mailed before June 1 to Symphony Hall, Boston; later to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUN 7 - 1947

Karl Koch Pla

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS.

Tanglewood Programs Announced by Koussevitzky

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has just announced programs for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home of the orchestra in Lenox, Mass. They are as follows:

Series A—Thursday evening, July 24: Honegger's Symphony for Strings: Debussy's "The Sea," three orchestral sketches; Brahms' Second Symphony.

Saturday evening, July 26: Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal"; Copland's Third Symphony; Berlioz "Harold in Italy" Symphony with William Primrose as viola soloist.

Sunday afternoon, July 27: Schubert's C Major (No. 7) Symphony, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." Leonard Bernstein conducts this concert.

Series B will be devoted to Beethoven. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct concerts on Thursday evening, July 31; Saturday evening, Aug. 2; Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3 and Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. All nine of the Beethoven symphonies will be heard, and the Fourth and Fifth Piano Concertos, with Joseph Battista and Jacob Lateiner as soloists.

Series C—Thursday evening, Aug. 7; Bernstein conducting. Haydn Symphony in B Flat, No. 102; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist, and Schumann's Second Symphony in C.

Saturday evening, Aug. 9: Robert Shaw conducting. Mozart's Requiem; Poulenc's Chorus and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10: Koussevitzky conducting. Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra and two pianos; Ravel's Pavane and Bolero, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

Pre-festival Bach concerts on July 13 and July 15. Mozart concerts on July 20 and July 22 also are scheduled. No tickets remain for the July 13 and 20 concerts. Address inquiries to Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
MAY 25 1947

Mrs. Newberry Aids Music Center

MRS. JOHN S. NEWBERRY of Lake Shore road, Grosse Pointe Farms, has been named to the National Committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, Mass., of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lewis Perry, principal emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, heads the 62-member committee, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony and founder and director of the school, is one of six honorary members.

Donations from former and prospective friends will help support the school which will be conducted for six weeks, beginning June 30, for approximately 400 students from all sections of the United States and other countries.

Contributions will also entitle donors to attendance at performances of the two student orchestras, the choral and opera and the chamber music groups.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
MAY 23 1947

Mrs. Gannett Given New Honor By Tanglewood Music Center

Lenox, Mass., May 22—New honors are announced for Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Cape Elizabeth, Me., who on Tuesday was named to membership in the Metropolitan Opera Guild of New York. Today she was made an honorary member of the National committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewod, the summer school conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra here.

Mrs. Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, is one of six members of the honorary group, a part of the committee formed to sponsor support of the school founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other honorary members are Dr. Koussevitzky; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, widow of the late president of the orchestra; Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, Concord, Mass., who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot and Jerome D. Greene, the orchestra's president and former president. The 62 members of the active committee are in all sections of the country.

The school, to be conducted for six weeks, will open June 30, and will have a student body of about 400.

MAY 22 1947

Mrs. Gannett Given New Honor By Berkshire Music Center

Lenox, Mass., May 22.—New honors are announced for Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Cape Elizabeth, Me., who on Tuesday was named to membership in the Metropolitan Opera Guild of New York. Today she was made an honorary member of the National committee of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra here.

Mrs. Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, is one of six members of the honorary group, a part of the committee formed to sponsor support of the school founded in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other honorary members are Dr. Koussevitzky; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, widow of the late president of the orchestra; Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, Concord, Mass. who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Tappan gave Tanglewood to the orchestra; Henry B. Cabot and Jerome D. Greene, the orchestra's president and former president. The 62 members of the active committee are in all sections of the Country.

The school, to be conducted for six weeks, will open June 30, and will have a student body of about 400.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAY 31 1947

Recording Recalls Tanglewood Concert

By C. E. L.

AMONG THE many fond memories taken home from Tanglewood was the performance of Bach's D major Brandenburg Concerto a couple of seasons ago. The finish of Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra was exceeded only by the extraordinary artistry of the ripieno, in this case the Burgin violin, the Laurent flute and the piano of Lukas Foss.

It was the Foss performance in the long cadenza which clung to the mind so hauntingly — one of those things which cannot be repeated; one of those things to think about wishfully. When lo! Victor shows up with a recording of this very performance and there you are.

It comes as near as mechanical reproduction can come to the real thing. In this same album also is the Brandenburg Concerto in F—the one with the brilliant and difficult part for the clarino which is the original name for the high Bach trumpet which has to be especially made for this score.

* * *

VLADIMIR HOROWITZ finds within the scope of Mendelssohn's piano music the opportunity to exploit the many facts of his keyboard genius. There are two of the Songs Without Words the restrained poetry of which this pianist is equal to upon occasion.

In the Serious Variations contained in this Victor album he conveys the implicit melancholy which is about as deep an emotion as the composer ever allowed himself. Needless to say, the technical demands of this work are met by Horowitz without ever extending himself.

For sheer virtuosity he trots out Liszt's version of the Wedding March. For sparkle and thunder this is all Horowitz and a yard wide.

* * *

ANOTHER VERSION of the great C Major Symphony of Schubert is offered by Columbia. Bruno Walter with the New York Philharmonic Symphony has a decidedly new approach which can best be described as rhapsodic. Actually there are violent fluctuations of tempo which may not at first be acceptable to those who know this symphony best in its more chaste and classic outlines. Some episodes are quietly taken, followed by abrupt accelarations.

Fact is, in this version the symphony seems far less protracted than in others. Perhaps if he had heard it in this form Schuman would not have referred to Schubert's "heavenly length."

[7]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

MAY 14 1947

PLANNING FOR MUSICAL SUMMER: Serge Koussevitzky (left) and Henry B. Cabot, music director and president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discussing plans for the Berkshire Music Center and the Festival in Dr. Koussevitzky's garden at Seranac, Lenox, yesterday. Earlier in the day they visited the school and the concert halls at Tanglewood.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

MA[illegible] - 1947

Saarinen Designs to Be Exhibited Here

WHAT WILL PROBABLY prove to be the most important art exhibit of the year here, from the point of view of Milwaukeeans — the Saarinen and Cranbrook Academy of Art Show — will open Friday evening at the Milwaukee Art Institute.

Eliel Saarinen is the world famous, Finnish born architect named by the Milwaukee War Memorial Committee to design the city's "living" memorial building dedicated to the young people who served in World War II. Working with him will be his son, Eero Saarinen, and his son-in-law, J. Robert F. Swanson, who together comprise an architectural firm.

Along with the Saarinen designs will be shown the art work of students at Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., where Saarinen resides, and for which he was the inspiration and which he now heads.

Also shown will be several pieces of sculpture by Carl Milles, one of the greatest of living sculptors, who is Saarinen's friend and an artist in residence at Cranbrook.

Show to Have A Triple Goal

The show assumes added importance since it will coincide with the War Memorial Committee's countrywide drive for building funds, May 15 to June 15. Burton Cumming, director of the Art Institute, comments:

"The show is intended to achieve a triple aim. The Milwaukee Art Institute wishes to show contemporary architecture at its very best.

"It wishes to help the people of the community understand and appreciate the genius and craftsmanship which is native to these builders and will be applied to their memorial project.

"It is anxious to help the corporation of the Memorial Center by exhibiting the work of these masters."

Variety of Designs Will Be Shown

Speaker at the opening reception Friday night will be Albert Christ-Janer, noted art historian and teacher at Cranbrook. His close association with the Saarinens will make him a particularly interesting commentator on their work.

Honor guests, in addition to Mr. Christ-Janer, at the reception will be Eero Saarinen and Mr. Swanson. It is not yet certain that Eliel Saarinen will be able to be present.

Milwaukeeans will be most interested in the models and large mural-type photographs of Saarinen's works, and also that of his firm, which indicate the wide range of architecture they have recently designed.

Among the designs shown will be those for the following places:

Antioch College, Yellow Springs, O.; the opera shed at the Berkshire Music Center, Stockridge, Mass.; the proposed high school at Birmingham, Mich.; the First National Bank of Birmingham; a competition entry for the Chicago City Plan; the buildings at the Cranbrook Institutions; the Tabernacle Church of Christ, Columbus, O.; the Kleinhans Music Hall, Buffalo, N. Y.; the proposed Art Museum, Fort Wayne, Ind.; the proposed plans for the General Motors Technical Research Center, Detroit, Mich.; ~~the entry~~ for the Legislative Palace, Quito, Ecuador; the entry for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.; the home for A. C. Wermuth, Fort Wayne, Ind.; the entry for the Festival Theater and Fine Arts Building, College of William and Mary.

The Cranbrook Show will include paintings, ceramic pieces, sculpture, wood carving, photography and textiles done by instructors, students and alumni of Cranbrook Academy of Art, many of them widely known. This latter is a traveling show that has been exhibited at leading art museums throughout the nation.

Cranbrook Academy of Art has been supervising installation of the exhibit. Installation experts at the institution have made detailed studies of the Milwaukee Art Institute floor plan and have made novel and workable plans for showing the exhibit to best advantage.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 7 - 1947

Music Festival Concerts Start Sun., July 13

Complete Tanglewood Program Announced by Director Serge Koussevitzky

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's music director, as follows:

Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15
Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for 2 Horns, 3 Oboes, and Bassoon, with Strings
Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for Strings
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C minor
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C major
Suite No. 1 in C major
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff

Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday evening, July 22
Mozart Serenade in B flat major, for Wind Instruments
Divertimento in B flat major, for Violin, Two Horns, and Strings
Symphony in E flat major, No. 26
Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), No. 41

Thursday evening, July 24
SERIES A
Honegger............Symophony for Strings
Debussy......."The Sea," Three Orchestral Sketches
Brahms.........Symphony No. 2 in D major

Saturday evening, July 26
Barber......Overture, "School for Scandal"
Copland....................Symphony No. 3
Berlioz.."Harold in Italy" Symphony with Viola Solo
Soloist: William Primrose

Sunday afternoon, July 27
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Schubert.......Symphony in C major, No 7.
Stravinsky........"Le Sacre du Printemps"

Thursday evening, July 31
SERIES B—Beethoven Cycle
Symphony No. 1, in C major
Symphony No. 2, in D major
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday evening, August 2
Symphony No. 4, in B flat major
Piano Concerto No. 5, in E flat major "Emperor"
Symphony No. 5, in C minor
Soloist: Jacob Lateiner

Sunday afternoon, August 3
Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"
Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major
Symphony No. 7, in A major
Soloist: Joseph Battista

Tuesday evening, August 5
EXTRA CONCERT
Symphony No. 8, in F major
Symphony No. 9, with Final Chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy"

Thursday evening, August 7
SERIES C
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Haydn......Symphony in B flat, No. 102
Hindemith..................Violin Concerto
Schumann.....Symphony No. 2, in C major
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Saturday evening, August 9
Robert Shaw, conducting
Mozart..............................Requiem
Poulenc..............................Chorus
Stravinsky............Symphony of Psalms

Sunday afternoon, August 10
Martinu.......Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with 2 pianos
Ravel...............................Pavane
Ravel...............................Bolero
Tchaikovsky...Symphony No. 4, in F major

Soloists for August 5 and 9 will be announced. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will assist.

Reserved seats for all concerts except those on July 13 and 20, for which no tickets remain, are on sale at Tanglewood.

General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, Aug 2 and 9 will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUN 22 1947

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the 1947 Berkshire Festival, given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky, ~~the or~~chestra's music director.

Koussevitzky

Three of the festival concerts will be directed for the first time this year by two young American conductors: Leonard Bernstein will conduct on July 27 and Aug. 7, and Robert Shaw on Aug. 9. The rest of the concerts will be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 8 - 1947

Music

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL'S 14 CONCERTS ARRANGED

By RAYMOND MORIN

Complete programs for the fourteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Lenox, are announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director. The subscription sale being closed, all remaining tickets are for single concerts and it is reported that seats are available only in the last three rows in the Shed and in the boxes.

Koussevitsky

Posselt

The schedule will open on Sunday afternoon, July 13 with an all-Bach program with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as duo-pianists in the "Concertos in C minor and C major." The balance of the program which will be repeated on Tuesday night, July 15, will include the "Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 1 and 6" for strings and the "Suite No. 1 in C major."

Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday night, July 22, there will be an all-Mozart program—the "Serenade in B-flat major," "Divertimento in B-flat," Symphony in E-flat major, No. 26," and the "Jupiter Symphony." Thus far the concerts will have been given in the theater concert hall.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 11 1947

Modern Composers' Works To Be Heard at Tanglewood

Contemporary Composers to be Well Represented With Old Masters in Works to be Performed in 14 Concerts Comprising Berkshire Festival by Boston Symphony Orchestra—Season to be Opened Sunday Afternoon July 13—Some Concerts to be Devoted Exclusively to Beethoven, Bach and Mozart.

Modern composers will be well represented with the old masters in the works to be performed in the 14 concerts comprising the Berkshire Festival program at Tanglewood, Lenox, it has been revealed with announcement of the full season's fare by ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~, Boston Symphony orchestra director.

Moderns Conspicuous

One of the three regular series of three concerts plus an extra concert will be devoted exclusively to Beethoven's works, while four preliminary concerts pre eding the opening of the three regular series will be similarly devoted to Bach and Mozart. But the moderns appear conspicuously in the schedules for the other performances.

This year also, the announcement of the programs has disclosed, Dr. Koussevitzky will accept assistance from two of his proteges. Leonard Bernstein will conduct two of the concerts and Robert Shaw a third.

The season will be opened on Sunday afternoon July 13, when the first of the four preliminary concerts, to be given by orchestras of chamber dimensions under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, will be presented. This concert will be devoted to Bach's concertos, the program including the Brandenburg No. 1, the Brandenburg No. 6, the concerto for two pianos in C minor, the concerto for two pianos in C major, and the Suite No. 1 in C major. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff are to be soloists for this program which will be repeated at the second preliminary concert, Tuesday evening, July 15.

The third concert will be given on Sunday afternoon, July 20 and will comprise Mozart works exclusively, the Serenade in B flat major, the Divertimento in B flat major for violin, two horns and strings, the Symphony in E flat major and the "Jupiter" symphony in C major. This program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 22.

Traditional Series

The traditional series of three concerts each by the entire Boston Symphony orchestra will open on Thursday evening, July 24 when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Honneger's symphony for strings, Debussy's three orchestra sketches under the general title "The Sea," and Brahm's second symphony in D major. On Saturday evening, July 26, the program will include Barber's overture for "School for Scandal," Copland's third symphony and Berlioz's "Harold In Italy" symphony, with William Primrose as viola soloist. On Sunday afternoon, July 27, with Mr. Bernstein conducting, Schubert's C major symphony No. 7 and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" will be performed.

The Beethoven cycle will start with the opening concert of Series B on Thursday evening, July 31, and run through the other two concerts of that series, on Saturday evening, Aug. 2, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, and an extra concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. The first of the four programs will offer straight symphonies, the No. 1 in C major, No. 2 in D major and No. 3, or "Eroica," symphony; the second will present the No. 4 symphony in B flat major, the fifth (or "Emperor") piano concerto in E flat major, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, and the fifth symphony in C minor; in the third concert of the cycle, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the sixth, or "Pastorale" symphony, the fourth piano concerto in G major and the seventh symphony. Joseph Battista will be the concerto soloist. At the extra concert on Aug. 5, the eighth and ninth symphonies will be presented, the latter with the final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" in which the Festival chorus directed by Mr. Shaw will perform.

Third Series

In the third series, on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Mr. Berstein will conduct Haydn's B flat symphony, Hindemith's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's second symphony; on Saturday evening, Aug. 9, Mr. Shaw will conduct Mozart's Requiem, Poulenc's Chorus and Stravinsky's "Psalms" symphony, with the chorus assisting, and on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, Dr. Koussevitsky will again occupy the podium to direct Martinu's Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra and two pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and, as the final number of the season, Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony in F major.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM STAR NEWS

JUN 21 1947

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced fourteen instead of twelve concerts at the 1947 Berkshire Festival and that all nine of the Beethoven symphonies would be played in the four-concert Beethoven cycle. The first program will be given Sunday afternoon, July 13 and continue through August 10. The season subscription sale is closed but reserved seats for single concerts are on sale at Tanglewood. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

JUN 19 1947

Winsor French

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.: Now that the great European music festivals have become more or less inaccessible, I suppose the annual event in the Tanglewood gardens is perhaps the most impressive musical banquet taking place anywhere in the world today.

The setting, certainly, under the massive elms shading the birthplace of Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales" would be difficult to surpass and Serge Koussevitzky, the musical director, is hardly an amateur.

The muted strings and horns will commence sending their echoes into the hills on July 13, much earlier than usual.

This, by the way, with a series of special Bach and Mozart concerts that have already been sold out.

The festival proper begins on Thursday, July 24, continuing through Sunday afternoon, Aug 10 with concerts Thursday and Friday nights and Sunday afternoons.

The accent this year is on Beethoven, but the program will include the works of such men as Honegger, Debussy, Haydn, Stravinsky, Hindemith, Ravel, Schubert, Berlioz among many others, all receiving a bow from the Boston Symphony.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 9 - 1947

Tanglewood Festival Programs Announced

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

THE Tanglewood Festival appears to be unable to find a saturation point. The gradual increase in the number of concerts has seemed to be crowding the limit of what the traffic would bear but always concerts have been as popular as ever and the overflow kept increasing from season to season.

Nine concerts on three successive weekends seem to be about the limit. But this year management boldly announced 14 concerts and from the look of things even now the limit has not been reached because all reserved seats for the concerts on July 13 and 20 have already been sold. These concerts are to be devoted to Bach and Mozart respectively.

The second or B series comprises an extra concert for the reason that these programs are to be given over to a Beethoven cycle and it isn't possible to get all nine symphonies into the three concerts. Otherwise the Symphonies One to Nine will be played in that order on July 31, Aug. 2, 3 and 5. The two piano concertos, four and five, will be extras played respectively by Joseph Battista and Jacob Lateiner. Fancy hearing in one concert Symphonies One and Two followed after intermission by the "Eroica!"

Also in the case of admission price, the traffic seems to have born up exceedingly well in spite of increases. If memory serves, the original grounds admission was one dollar. With subsequent increases the prices is now two dollars which seems like a lot of money for a place on the green sward. But there seems to be no fear that there will be a falling off in attendance.

There will be another departure this season in that for the first time there will be concerts at which Dr. Koussevitzky will not conduct. He could not, of course, be expected to undertake a schedule of 14 concerts within so brief a time especially in the summer season. His protege, the enormously successful Leonard Bernstein, who was so popular with Bushnell audiences last winter, will conduct the last concert in Series A and the first in Series C. Robert Shaw will conduct the second concert in Series C. Koussevitzky will himself conduct all of the Beethoven symphonies.

Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26 Aug. 2 and 9, will be for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund.

Better save the programs for future reference. Here they are:

Sunday afternoon, July 13 and Tuesday Evening, July 15

Bach—Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for 2 Horns, 3 Oboes, and Bassoon, with Strings
Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for Strings
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C minor
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C major
Suite No. 1 in C major
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff

Sunday afternoon, July 20 and Tuesday evening, July 22

Mozart—Serenade in B flat major, for Wind Instruments
Divertimento in B flat major, for Violin, two Horns and Strings
Symphony in E flat major, No. 26
Symphony in C major "Jupiter," No. 41

Series A

Thursday evening, July 24

Honegger — Symphony for Strings
Debussy — "The Sea," 3 Orchestral Sketches
Brahms — Smyphony No. 2 in D major

Saturday evening, July 26

Barber — Overture, "School for Scandal"
Copland — Symphony No. 3
Berlioz — "Harold in Italy" Symphony with Viola Solo
Soloist: William Primrose

Sunday afternoon, July 27

Leonard Bernstein conducting
Schubert — Symphony in C major, No. 7
Stravinsky — "Le Sacre du Printemps"

Series B

Thursday evening, July 31

Symphony No. 1 in C major
Symphony No. 2, in D major
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday evening, Aug. 2

Symphony No. 4, in B flat major
Piano Concerto No. 5, in E flat major "Emperor"
Soloist: Jacob Lateiner

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3

Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"
Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major
Symphony No. 7, in A major
Soloist: Joseph Battista

Extra Concert—Tuesday evening, Aug. 5

Symphony No. 8, in F major
Symphony No. 9, with Final Chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy"

Series C

Thursday evening, Aug. 7

Leonard Bernstein conducting
Haydn — Symphony in B flat, No. 102
Hindemith — Violin Concerto
Schumann — Symphony No. 2, in C major
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Saturday evening, Aug. 9

Robert Shaw, conducting
Mozart — Requiem
Poulenc — Chorus
Stravinsky — Symphony in Psalms

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10

Martinu — Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with 2 pianos
Ravel — Pavane
Ravel — Bolero
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 4, in F major

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 15 1947

SUMMER TIME

Symphony, Opera and Chamber Music Listed From Coast to Coast

By OLIN DOWNES

WHEN the summer concerts of the New York Philharmonic Society were instituted at the Lewisohn Stadium in June of 1918 the kind of program that Pierre Monteux will present for the opening of the 1947 season tomorrow night would have been viewed with alarm by the sponsors of the project, if not by its prospective public.

For it was then the doctrine that audiences which patronized orchestral performances at popular prices in the summer time would not welcome programs beginning, say, with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

The Tchaikovsky violin concerto which Isaac Stern will play would have been considered nearer the mark. But the event would have loomed in advance as something dangerously above the public taste, and one which connoted poor patronage for the new series of summer concerts. Possibly, at the time, this would have been true. The Stadium programs are more "advanced" today than they were when they started. They have, however, kept consistently from the beginning to their initial conception, which was that of providing the public of New York City, during the hot months, with symphonic programs as representative as those of the winter season.

Bold Step

To offer such programs was a bold step. It was long before the establishment of the open-air festival of orchestral music given annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its present distinguished conductor at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, Mass. Indeed, it was before conductors and artists of the highest eminence felt very sure of themselves in accepting engagements to appear at summer concerts in America.

The highest level of summer taste in music was generally believed to be that represented by the "Pop" concerts established and immortalized in Boston. Their programs were semi-popular, with Sousa and Victor Herbert at one end, and occasionally Dvorak, Tchaikovsky of the smaller pieces, and Wagner of the occasional overture at the other. It is to be noted that the programs of the Boston Pops in late years have grown more enterprising and inclusive under Arthur Fiedler's leadership than in the past. It is furthermore the fact that the "Pop" concert idea, which is one fundamentally of indoor entertainment, has by no means lost its appeal. New York has its "Pop" season, now nearing its end. There are "Pop" concert series in cities as far apart as Cleveland, New Orleans, Toronto. These have more or less followed established precedent. The Stadium concerts embodied another concept; one which reckoned confidently upon the artistic perceptions of the public, and brought far-reaching consequences in its train.

IN OPERA

Rosalia Maresca, the Santuzza, at Carnegie Hall Saturday.

They assumed that plain people were eager to hear the finest music if it could be made accessible to them. Through the initiative and generosity of the sponsors of the plan, which never has relaxed, they have provided this benefit. They have proved that the public will warmly welcome great music, at any time of the year, anywhere that it is presented with a modicum of comfort and at a cost within the average purse's reach. Not only have these concerts met a vital need, they have vindicated the taste of the music-loving public, and they have inaugurated a new period in the dissemination of symphonic music in America.

The proofs of this are to be found on every hand, and are so numerous that they could not be given complete illustration here. In the symphonic field alone they comprise the extensions in the form of summer series of many of the leading orchestras' seasons. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, from modest beginnings certainly owed its inception to their example. The brilliant summer concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Robin Hood Dell; the Water Gate concerts on the Potomac by the Washington Symphony; the Ravinia Park Symphony concerts in Chicago; the Milwaukee Symphony concerts given in the open air auditorium of the Blaty Temple of Music; the series instituted by Mr. Sevitzky at Indianapolis; the famous Hollywood Bowl concerts at Los Angeles; the summer concerts of the San Francisco Symphony are further cases in point.

Summer festivals not of a purely orchestral nature, varied in their nature and their artistic resources according to the conditions in different localities and nature of the terrain, are everywhere multiplying.

Music All Over

We do not speak of the big, long-established festivals of the springtime and the fall, such as the biennial Cincinnati May Festival, the Ann Arbor Festival, the Worcester, Mass., Festival, and the like, but of the concert and opera series, such as the "Zoo" opera season given each summer in the opera pavilion in Cincinnati's Zoological Gardens; the unique performances of opera in the historic little theatre in Central City, the former mining town of Colorado; the concerts now to be given at Red Rocks in the superb natural theatre which George Cranwer, with the cooperation of Denver's municipal authority, has had carved from towering masses of stone; of the festivals at Oglebay Park, Wheeling, Va.; the Brevard Festival in North Carolina; the programs given in the Sunken Garden Open Air Theatre in San Antonio, and so forth.

What stands out from all this is the fact the summer symphonic project launched here twenty-nine seasons ago has led the way in a development of pronounced importance to the cultural life of the nation. Largely because of these developments, which received their first great stimulus at the Lewisohn Stadium, symphonic music is now a year-round commodity that the plain citizen, by one means or another, may enjoy; one no longer confined to isolated communities; a benefaction which enters into the life of the nation.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 18 1947

Music, Plays Add Fun in Berkshires

Headlighted by the Tanglewood music season, the Berkshire region is scheduling a wide variety or recreation and cultural entertainment during the summer.

The Music Festival, which opens July 13, features a series of 12 concerts by the Boston Symphony, with nine concerts on consecutive weekends beginnings July 24. At the Berkshire Museum Theater in Pittsfield, another series of concerts will be given by the South Mountain Music Association, with dates still to be announced.

Two little theaters will be open in the region. The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge initiates its 10-week season the last week of June; the Rollins Theater School at Lenox, July 1. A dance festival will be held at Jacob's Pillow during July. During September, the Pittsfield Art League's exhibition and others will be held at the Berkshire Museum.

The area is a sportsman's paradise. Through the 959 square miles of the Berkshire Hills run 800 miles of trout streams, and there are 200 lakes, and 73,098 acres of state forest open to fishermen and hikers. Climbers flock to Mt. Greylock, highest mountain in Massachusetts, and horseback and hiking parties find Mt. Washington the most popular objective.

For those who like to take nature a little more leisurely, there are two "cobbles," or rocky islands in valleys, one near Sheffield, the other near Tyringham. The former, called Bartholomew Cobble, extend for 31 acres, and contains 276 varieties of wild flowers.

There are wild life sanctuaries at Lenox, Hancock and Hinsdale. And the mountain laurel display is expected to be at its best next weekend, at Mt. Everett, not far from Pittsfield.

SAN FRANCISCO, C
CHRONICLE

JUN 1 1947

Going Pla

By ELLEN D. SMALL

A small, quiet country with a turbulent history. A country with constant even temperatures and gentle trade winds the year

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., are two quiet old villages in the beautiful and gentle Berkshire hills. Between them lies the estate where Nathanial Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." It is called, appropriately, Tanglewod.

Head for Tanglewood this summer and discover for yourself the great music offered at the Berkshire Festival, a series of outdoor concerts presented annually by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Settle comfortably in the open-air music shed—or on Tanglewood's rolling lawns—for an afternoon or evening of Bethoven, Bach, Mozart, Berloz, Stravinsky, Barber and Copland.

Not to be missed either are the festival's smaller concerts and "operatic evenings" given by the Berkshire Music Center, a school established at Tanglewood by Koussevitsky.

This year's festival starts July 13 but right now is the time to write to the Festival Committee for reservations.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUN 9 - 1947

Tanglewood Festival To Open July 13

A program of Bach piano concertos will be given July 13, in the Sunday matinee opening the 1947 Berkshire Music Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass.

Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony director, has announced that the Music Shed concerts will continue this year through Aug. 10. The opening program will be repeated July 15, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff pianists for both concerts.

Music by Mozart will be featured at the concerts July 20 and July 22.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUN 15 1947

SHARPS
AND FLATS

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

THE complete program of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., is herewith listed with the thought that it may interest many more people than usual, since the approaching summer gives the appearance of being one of unprecedented travel and since the general musical appetite shows no signs of diminishing.

The programs of Sunday afternoon, July 13 and Tuesday evening, July 15 will be all Bach: the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6, the Concertos for two pianos in C minor and C major, the Orchestral Suite No. 1. Luboshutz and Nemenoff will be soloists. The programs of Sunday afternoon, July 20 and Tuesday evening, July 22 will be all Mozart: the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments, Divertimento in B flat major, the Symphonies in E flat major, No. 26 and in C major, No. 41.

The concerts of the A series will be played on Thursday and Saturday evenings, July 24 and 26, and on Sunday afternoon, July 27. The first program will contain Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2; the second Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copland's Symphany No. 3, and "Harold in Italy" of Berlioz; the third Schubert's Symphony No. 7 and Stravinsky's "Le Sacré du Printemps." The violist, William Primrose, will be soloist in the second concert and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the third.

THE B series which will be a Beethoven Cycle will be played on Thursday and Saturday evenings, July 31 and Aug. 2, and on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3. The Cycle will be concluded with an extra concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. In the first program will be played the composer's first three symphonies; in the second the fourth and fifth symphonies and the Piano Concerto, No. 5; in the third the sixth and seventh symphonies and the Piano Concerto, No. 4. The extra program will contain the remainder of the symphonies, No. 8 and No. 9. Jacob Lateiner will be soloist in the second concert and Joseph Battista in the third.

The concerts of series C, the concluding series of the Festival, will be performed on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Aug. 7 and 9, and on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. The programs are as follows: the first concert, Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 2; the second, Mozart's Requiem, Poulenc's Chorus, Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms; the third, Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber orchestra with two pianos, Ravel's Pavane and Bolero, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the first concert of the series and Robert Shaw the second. The violin soloist in the first concert will be Ruth Posselt who is the wife of Richard Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra.

ALL the concerts will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky except as otherwise noted. The names of the vocal soloists for the concerts of Aug. 5 and 9 and of the two pianists for the concert of Aug. 10 are still to be announced. The Festival Chorus will be prepared by Robert Shaw.

Reserved seats for all concerts except those on July 13 and 20, for which no tickets remain, are on sale at Tanglewood. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. The public will also be admitted for a nominal fee to the rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, Aug. 2 and 9.

IT has been announced that Jane Carlson, the young pianist who played with the Friends of Music Orchestra during the last winter, is one of the three young musicians who have won the 1947 Walter W. Naumberg award. She will play in Town Hall on Nov. 10 of this year and over the radio on the Telephone Hour on Dec. 1.

It appeared to this writer that the notable quality of Miss Carlson's work as it was displayed when she played here, was her strict attention to the essence of the music which she played. The stence of such musical concention without a rather harried re for pure technical matters is ite unusual in a person of her age d experience. The same quality s apparent in the playing of illiam Masselos who was one of performers in the Museum's ahms Festival and in the playing Arthur Ferrante and Louis icher who also appeared with the ends Orchestra during the year. would be a pretty safe guess that reason for the unusual quality their performances lies in the ining that all of them have re-ved from Carl Friedberg, for y have all been his pupils at one e or another.

But now Miss Carlson is in a her anomalous position. She has en well taught. She has played nsiderably during the last year d always, so far as I have been le to determine, with a high qual-of musicianship. She has been osen from among 170 applicants the Naumberg prizes. To be e of three winners from so many ould indicate that the judges who ose her considered her talents usual. It would seem that Miss rlson is now on her way up. But ch is not exactly the case.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 22 1947

Berkshire Center

Twenty-eight Performances Scheduled for Summer Season

The Berkshire Music Center will present twenty-eight performances this summer between June 29, the opening day of the session, and Aug. 10 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. These will be open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, composed of contributors to the support of this school. The schedule is as follows:

Student orchestra, Department 2: Music Shed, Fridays, 8:15.

Chamber music, Department 2: Sundays, beginning July 6, 10:30 a. m.

Chorus, Department 5: Thursdays, July 10, 17, 24, 31, 3:30.

Opera scenes, Opera Department: Thursdays, July 10, 17; Wednesdays, July 30 and Aug. 6, 8:15.

Orchestra, Department 5: Tuesdays, July 15, 22, 3:30.

Chamber music (sponsored by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Chamber Music Foundation): Wednesdays, 8:15; July 2, Gordon Quartet; July 9, Albeneri Trio; July 16, Boston Wood Wind Ensemble; July 23, Juilliard Quartet.

Information about these programs and about joining the society is obtainable from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will also hold public rehearsals of its Berkshire Festival programs on Saturday mornings, July 26, Aug. 2 and 9, at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 4 - 1947

Tanglewood Festival Ticket Sale Reported Very Heavy

Because of Big Demand for Seats, Bach and Mozar Programs Will Be Repeated

Word was received from the Berkshire Music Festival headquarters at Tanglewood today that because all the seats have been sold for the first two concerts, the Bach program scheduled for Sunday afternoon, July 13, will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 15, and the all-Mozart program of Sunday, July 20, will be given again Tuesday evening, July 22.

These concerts, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be performed by an orchestra of chamber proportions at the theater-concert hall.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists, will be the soloists in the Bach Concerto for two pianos in C-Minor on July 13 and 15. Other Festival soloists will be William Primrose, viola, July 26; Jacob Lateiner, pianist, August 2; Joseph Battista, piano, August 3, and Ruth Posselt, violin, August 7.

So heavy has been the ticket sale, that seats for the 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons from July 26 to August 10, and on Tuesday evening, August 5, are available only in the last three rows of the shed and in the boxes. With the close of the subscription sale on June 1, all remaining seats are for single concerts.

Requests for information and tickets should be addressed to Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 8 - 1947

Tanglewood Concerts Open July 13

Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced programs of the 14 summer concerts to be presented at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., beginning July 13 and continuing through Aug. 10.

Opening with a program of Bach Concertos Sunday afternoon July 13, the concert will be repeated Tuesday night, July 15. Soloists for the two concerts will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists.

The third and fourth concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart and will be played Sunday afternoon July 20 and Tuesday night, July 22.

Three concerts, called Series A, will be presented Thursday night July 24, Saturday night July 26 and Sunday afternoon July 27. William Primrose, will be viola soloist for the Saturday concert and Leonard Bernstein will be guest conductor for the Sunday matinee.

Series B will be the Beethoven Cycle and will be played Thursday night July 31, Saturday night Aug. 2 and Sunday afternoon Aug. 3. Jacob Lateiner, pianist, will be soloist for the Saturday concert, and Joseph Battista will be piano soloist on Sunday. An extra concert to complete the Beethoven cycle will be offered Tuesday night Aug. 5. The Festival Chorus under the direction of Robert Shaw are also on the Aug. 5 program.

The final Series C will be played Thursday night Aug. 7, Saturday night Aug. 9 and Sunday afternoon Aug. 10. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra Thursday with Ruth Posselt as violin soloist. Robert Shaw will conduct the Saturday concert, in which the chorus will also take part.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
ENQUIRER

JUN 16 1947

AWARD TED MOSSMAN A MUSIC FELLOWSHIP

Ted Mossman, who has been awarded a Fellowship by the Berkshire Music Center, Mass., will leave this week for Tanglewood Summer Music Center, where he will conduct under Koussevitsky, and finish some new American scores of his own. Mossman is co-writer of "Till The End Of Time" and other hits.

---

y at House of Mercy.

Lenox

Music Center Faculty Members Arrive Here

LENOX — Many of the members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will spend the six-weeks' season in Lenox. With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at his home, Seranac, will be Eleazar deCarvalho of Brazil, who will assist him in the conducting class.

Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, who will join Aaron Copland in teaching composition, will be at the Downs Cottage, Mr. and Mrs. Boris Goldovsky at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Richard V. Pelton, Cliffwood Street, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Cohen (Elsa Kahl) at Windsor Mountain School; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rychtarik at the Dunbar Farm, West Street; Felix Wolfes, Jean Bedetti and Julius Herford with Mrs. J. Herbert Owen of Cliffwood Street; Miss Katharine Wolff at the Village Inn.

Leonard Bernstein, conductor, who will assist Dr. Koussevitzky in teaching conducting, will stay at the Bull Cottage, Beechwood, on Stockbridge Bowl. Also on the Bowl will be Einar Hansen, Alfred Zighera, Victor Polatschek, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz, the last two in cottages of their own.

WORCESTER SUNDAY TELEGRAM, JUNE 8,

Music

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL'S 14 CONCERTS ARRANGED

By RAYMOND MORIN

Complete programs for the fourteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Lenox, are announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director. The subscription sale being closed, all remaining tickets are for single concerts and it is reported that seats are available only in the last three rows in the Shed and in the boxes.

The schedule will open on Sunday afternoon, July 13 with an all-Bach program with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as duo-pianists in the "Concertos in C minor and C major." The balance of the program which will be repeated on Tuesday night, July 15, will include the "Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 1 and 6" for strings and the "Suite No. 1 in C major."

Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday night, July 22, there will be an all-Mozart program—the "Serenade in B-flat major," "Divertimento in B-flat," Symphony in E-flat major, No. 26," and the "Jupiter Symphony." Thus far the concerts will have been given in the theater concert hall.

Koussevitsky

Posselt

Formal Series

The first formal series of three concerts in the Shed will take place on Thursday night, July 24 and on the succeeding Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The first concert will have Honegger's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2."

The second concert of Series A will have William Primrose, violist, for soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony. Also to be played are Samuel Barber's overture, "School for Scandal," and Copland's "Symphony No. 3."

The third concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. The two works are Schubert's "Symphony in C major, No. 7," and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printempts."

Series B Concerts

Series B (Thursday night, July 31, Saturday night, Aug. 2, and the following Sunday afternoon) will be a Beethoven cycle. The first concert will comprise the first three Beethoven symphonies.

The Saturday concert will have Jacob Lateiner as soloist in the "Pianoforte Concerto in E-flat, No. 5." Also on this program are symphonies No. 4 and 5.

The final Beethoven concert (Sunday afternoon) of Series B will include the sixth and seventh symphonies and Joseph Battista in the "Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G major."

Not included in the regular Beethoven series will be an extra concert on Tuesday night, Aug. 5, at which the "Symphonies No. 8 and 9" will be played.

Series C Programs

Series C (Thursday night, Aug. 7, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9 and 10) will open with Haydn's "Symphony in B-flat, No. 102," followed by the Hindemith "Violin Concerto" with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's "Symphony No. 2." Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Robert Shaw will conduct the second concert, the repertory for which is Mozart's "Requiem," a "Chorus" by Poulenc, and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

The festival will close on Aug. 10 with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra," Ravel's "Pavane," and "Bolero" and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 4, in F major."

Requests for information and reservations should be addressed to the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Chautauqua Program

The Summer session at Chautauqua will comprise eight consecutive weeks of diversified programs of study and entertainment, beginning June 29 and ending Aug. 23.

Franco Autori will again conduct the Chautauqua Symphony and among his guest soloists will be Mischa Mischakoff, violist; Nathan Gordon, violist; Beryl Rubinstein, James Friskin, and Harrison Potter, pianists; Hugh Thompson, baritone; Norman Dello Joio, composer and pianist.

which will include a "Program for Youth," excerpts from Handel's "The Messiah," a service devoted to Bach and Handel, an American program dedicated to the National Federation of Music Clubs, and a "Service of Psalms."

The Chautauqua Student Symphony will play under Edward Murphy, the Mischakoff String Quartet will be presented in three recitals, the Columbus Boys' Choir will appear in several amphitheater performances, and the Chautauqua Opera Association, directed by Alfredo Valenti, will present several productions in English.

Student recitals and recitals by members of the Music School will be presented for the general public through the Summer, and the Drama School will also present weekly demonstrations for the public.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 18 1947

Tanglewood Invites Society of Friends

The more than 900 members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be invited to 28 musical events listed on the calendar for the six weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school.

Beginning with opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, June 29, there will be concerts by students or other groups every day or two throughout the season.

All morning concerts will start at 10:30; afternoon at 3:30 and evening at 8:15. Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony will be open to the public at 10 on the mornings of July 26 and Aug. 2 and 9 for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 4 1947

Tanglewood To Repeat Bach, Mozart Events

Because all seats have been sold for the first two concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Bach concert scheduled for Sunday afternoon, July 13, will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 15 and the all-Mozart program of Sunday, June 20, will be given again Tuesday evening, July 22.

These concerts, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be performed by an orchestra of chamber proportions in the theater-concert hall.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists, will be the soloists in the Bach Concerto for Two Pianos in C minor July 13 and 15.

Requests for information and reservations should be addressed to the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 14 1947

Augustan Selected to Study At Famed Music Festival

MR. FERGUSON

Edgar Ferguson, well-known musician who organized Augusta's first little symphony orchestra, will spend the month of July and a part of August at the Berkshire Music Center, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. While there he will study orchestral and choral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, directr of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and choral conducting under Robert Shaw.

Mr. Ferguson said that he felt that he had been able to secure admission to the summer classes because of a personal letter of recommendation from Rudolph Serkin, the pianist, who wrote to the directors of the Berkshire Music Festival, and because of his own work in connection with Augusta's Little Symphony orchestra.

It is considered a great honor to be accepted at the music center and Mr. Ferguson is looking forward to his studies there with considerable interest, he said.

Only 400 students are accepted. These are chosen from all parts of the United States.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky to provide an opportunity for study in connection with the annual Berkshire Festival concerts.

The Berkshire Festival, held at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills, attracts world-wide attention. It has been called the American Saltzbourg because musicians journey hundreds of miles to hear the Bach, Beethoven and Brahms cycles given there each year.

The summer session will open June 30 and close August 10.

The faculty is composed of 45 distinguished musicians, including the principal players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

Wild Azaleas in Full Bloom in Berkshires

PITTSFIELD, Mass. [Special]—Berkshire natural gardens of wild azalea are at their zenith this week-end and along woodsy roads the atmosphere is permeated with the pink blossoms' fragrance. Largest of these gardens is around Berry pond, Pittsfield state forest, near the town of Hancock. For several miles the hard surface roads on the brink of heavily forested Lulu Cascade are flanked by azalea bushes from four to 15 feet high. They also surround the five acre pond.

This unspoiled display, said to be the finest in New Egland, is nature's legacy from Old John Berry, a Revolutionary soldier, who staked out his claim on the mountain after the battle of Bennington, Aug. 16, 1777. Only the cellar hole remains of the log cabin he built on his 100 acre farm.

• • •

Mrs. Wait Talcott of Rockford, who is at her North Egremont estate overlooking Prospect lake, has a wild azalea garden of exceptional beauty.

A newcomer in Stockbridge this summer will be Mrs. Welch Dickinson of E. Walton st., who has rented Dr. Charles H. Kimberly's house.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz are at Fernbrook, Lenox, for the season. Mrs. Metz is the former Mrs. John Crerer of Lake Shore dr. and she has made many friends in Berkshire since her marriage to Dr. Metz at Southampton last summer. Mrs. James Ransom Walker and her sister, Mrs. David Shields Cook of the Drake arrived early in the week at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. Before going to Chicago last fall Mrs. Walker sold her place on Prospect Hill to Miss M. Adele Ryan, granddaughter of the late Thomas Fortune Ryan.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, is at Seranak on the heights overlooking a wide sector of Lenox and Stockbridge. This is the one-time summer home of the late Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago. Dr. Koussevitzky has arranged for 12 symphony concerts at Tanglewood starting July 13 and ending Aug. 10. The main festival of nine concerts over three week-ends starts July 24. The boxes and nearly all blue ticket orchestra seats have been sold.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 10 1947

Of Music a

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Reserved seats for the concerts are on sale at Tanglewood. but the concerts on July 13 and 20 are sold out. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, Aug. 2 and 9 will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension fund.

The program for Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15, will have Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. The program will be all Bach and will include the Brandenburg concerto number 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon with strings; the Brandenburg concerto number 6 for strings; concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos; and the Suite number 1 in C major.

The program for Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday evening, July 22, will be devoted to works of Mozart. It will include the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments; Divertimento in B flat major for violin, two horns and strings; symphony in E flat major number 26 and symphony in C major (Jupiter"), number 41.

Series A concerts will be given the evenings of July 24 and 26 and the afternoon of July 27. The Thursday evening program will include the Honegger "Symphony for Strings"; Debussy' "The Sea" and "Three Orchestral Sketches"; and the Brahms Symphony number 2 in D major.

The Saturday evening concert will include Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony number 3 and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Symphony with viola solo by William Primrose.

The Sunday afternoon concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. It will include the Schubert Symphony in C major, number 7 and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps."

Series B, the Beethoven Cycle will be held evenings of July 21 and Aug. 2 and the afternoon of Aug. 3.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 8 - 1947

Music Schools Offer Summer Learning, Fun

Teen-agers who aspire to musical careers and those who want to increase their acquaintance with music can find opportunities mingled with recreation this Summer in the varied music schools throughout New England.

Most famous is the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as music director. Chamber and choral music are stressed with additional activities including forum meetings on musical subjects, harmonic analysis, solfege and modern American music.

Auditions or interviews are necessary for all courses except that on choral singing and orchestral playing, for which there are no formal requirements other than an interest in music.

Courses in harmony, counterpoint, composition and other phases of music together with private instruction in voice and instruments will be given at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston with credit allowed towards Bachelor of Music and diploma. Consultation with the dean or registrar is necessary. A school of popular music also will be held.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 28 1947

Music Center To Open Tomorrow

One-Third of 420 Students Arrive At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD—Final preparations are being made today for the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow. A third of the 420 students had arrived last night to live at the Lenox School, Tracy Hall, the Barrington School and in private homes as close to Tanglewood as possible.

Twenty of the students are from other countries, including Canada, Hungary, Australia, Chile, Norway, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Uruguay, Holland, Greece, Colombia, Palestine and Lebanon. Forty per cent have attended the school before. Thirty-nine states and the District of Columbia are represented, with the largest delegation, 115, from New York State, of whom 81 are from New York City. Massachusetts is second, with 62 and Ohio has 32. Fifteen are from California.

The commissary, which will be operated by the Treadway Inns, will be completed early next week, as will the rehearsal stage in the orchard. The studios in the Hawthorne cottage are promised for early use, though the building will not be completed this season.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, without formal notice are invited to the opening exercises tomorrow at 3.30, and for tea that will follow in the garden.

Events next week will include a chamber music concert by the Gordon String Quartet Wednesday evening at 8.15, the gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and the first student concert, by the orchestra of department 2, Friday evening in the Shed.

STONE

At Home on a Mountaintop: Serge Koussevitzky

At Seranak, his Berkshire mountain home, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky spends his summers, and at near-by Tanglewood studies the scores for the Berkshire Music Center concerts as well as for the programs he and his Boston Symphony will present the following season. Visitors find him hospitable and stimulating to talk to—if they can keep him interested. Music is his sole concern—he has exciting ideas about its role in the world to come and he likes to discuss his musical protégés. He is planning a world tour for the Boston Symphony and is eager to show Europeans that American musicians rank easily with those of the Old World. Aside from music (and he smilingly admits he considers all else incidental), he allows himself morning and evening walks through the beautiful mountain countryside.

Esquire (Jul. 47

Events Listed for Berkshire Festival

All seats having been taken for the Bach and Mozart concerts which opens the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 13, an additional performance of each program is announced. The Mozart program will be repeated on Tuesday evening, July 15, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 22. These programs will be performed by an orchestra of chamber proportions in the Theater-Concert Hall and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. In the Bach program Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists, will appear as soloists.

There will be ten conerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood on three week-ends following (Thursday evenings, Saturdays evenings and Sunday afternoon), including an extra concert on Tuesday evening, August 5, making fourteen concerts in all. In the first week William Primrose, viola, will appear as soloist on July 26. In the second week, which is a Beethoven Cycle, the pianists Jacob Lateiner and Joseph Bapttista will appear on August 7. The season sale having closed, all remaining seats are on sale for the single concerts.

Three chamber music concerts by invitation will be given through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesday evenings, as follows: July 2—The Gordon String Quartet; July 9—The Albeneri Trio; July 16—The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble.

AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 14 1947

Augustan Selected to Study At Famed Music Festival

MR. FERGUSON

Edgar Ferguson, well-known musician who organized Augusta's first little symphony orchestra, will spend the month of July and a part of August at the Berkshire Music Center, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. While there he will study orchestral and choral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, directr of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and choral conducting under Robert Shaw.

Mr. Ferguson said that he felt that he had been able to secure admission to the summer classes because of a personal letter of recommendation from Rudolph Serkin, the pianist, who wrote to the directors of the Berkshire Music Festival, and because of his own work in connection with Augusta's Little Symphony orchestra.

It is considered a great honor to be accepted at the music center and Mr. Ferguson is looking forward to his studies there with considerable interest, he said.

Only 400 students are accepted. These are chosen from all parts of the United States.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky to provide an opportunity for study in connection with the annual Berkshire Festival concerts.

The Berkshire Festival, held at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills, attracts world-wide attention. It has been called the American Saltzbourg because musicians journey hundreds of miles to hear the Bach, Beethoven and Brahms cycles given there each year.

The summer session will open June 30 and close August 10.

The faculty is composed of 45 distinguished musicians, including the principal players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN 8 - 1947

Wild Azaleas in Full Bloom in Berkshires

PITTSFIELD, Mass. [Special]—Berkshire natural gardens of wild azalea are at their zenith this week-end and along woodsy roads the atmosphere is permeated with the pink blossoms' fragrance. Largest of these gardens is around Berry pond, Pittsfield state forest, near the town of Hancock. For several miles the hard surface roads on the brink of heavily forested Lulu Cascade are flanked by azalea bushes from four to 15 feet high. They also surround the five acre pond.

This unspoiled display, said to be the finest in New Egland, is nature's legacy from Old John Berry, a Revolutionary soldier, who staked out his claim on the mountain after the battle of Bennington, Aug. 16, 1777. Only the cellar hole remains of the log cabin he built on his 100 acre farm.

• • •

Mrs. Wait Talcott of Rockford, who is at her North Egremont estate overlooking Prospect lake, has a wild azalea garden of exceptional beauty.

A newcomer in Stockbridge this summer will be Mrs. Welch Dickinson of E. Walton st., who has rented Dr. Charles H. Kimberly's house.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz are at Fernbrook, Lenox, for the season. Mrs. Metz is the former Mrs. John Crerer of Lake Shore dr. and she has made many friends in Berkshire since her marriage to Dr. Metz at Southampton last summer. Mrs. James Ransom Walker and her sister, Mrs. David Shields Cook of the Drake arrived early in the week at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. Before going to Chicago last fall Mrs. Walker sold her place on Prospect Hill to Miss M. Adele Ryan, granddaughter of the late Thomas Fortune Ryan.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, is at Seranak on the heights overlooking a wide sector of Lenox and Stockbridge. This is the one-time summer home of the late Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago. Dr. Koussevitzky has arranged for 12 symphony concerts at Tanglewood starting July 13 and ending Aug. 10. The main festival of nine concerts over three week-ends starts July 24. The boxes and nearly all blue ticket orchestra seats have been sold.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 8 - 1947

Music Schools Offer Summer Learning, Fun

Teen-agers who aspire to musical careers and those who want to increase their acquaintance with music can find opportunities mingled with recreation this Summer in the varied music schools throughout New England.

Most famous is the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as music director. Chamber and choral music are stressed with additional activities including forum meetings on musical subjects, harmonic analysis, solfege and modern American music.

Auditions or interviews are necessary for all courses except that on choral singing and orchestral playing, for which there are no formal requirements other than an interest in music.

Courses in harmony, counterpoint, composition and other phases of music together with private instruction in voice and instruments will be given at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston with credit allowed towards Bachelor of Music and diploma. Consultation with the dean or registrar is necessary. A school of popular music also will be held.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 28 1947

Music Center To Open Tomorrow

One-Third of 420 Students Arrive At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD—Final preparations are being made today for the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow. A third of the 420 students had arrived last night to live at the Lenox School, Tracy Hall, the Barrington School and in private homes as close to Tanglewood as possible.

Twenty of the students are from other countries, including Canada, Hungary, Australia, Chile, Norway, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Uruguay, Holland, Greece, Colombia, Palestine and Lebanon. Forty per cent have attended the school before. Thirty-nine states and the District of Columbia are represented, with the largest delegation, 115, from New York State, of whom 81 are from New York City. Massachusetts is second, with 62 and Ohio has 32. Fifteen are from California.

The commissary, which will be operated by the Treadway Inns, will be completed early next week, as will the rehearsal stage in the orchard. The studios in the Hawthorne cottage are promised for early use, though the building will not be completed this season.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, without formal notice are invited to the opening exercises tomorrow at 3.30, and for tea that will follow in the garden.

Events next week will include a chamber music concert by the Gordon String Quartet Wednesday evening at 8.15, the gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and the first student concert, by the orchestra of department 2, Friday evening in the Shed.

STONE

At Home on a Mountaintop: Serge Koussevitzky

At Seranak, his Berkshire mountain home, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky spends his summers, and at near-by Tanglewood studies the scores for the Berkshire Music Center concerts as well as for the programs he and his Boston Symphony will present the following season. Visitors find him hospitable and stimulating to talk to—if they can keep him interested. Music is his sole concern—he has exciting ideas about its role in the world to come and he likes to discuss his musical protégés. He is planning a world tour for the Boston Symphony and is eager to show Europeans that American musicians rank easily with those of the Old World. Aside from music (and he smilingly admits he considers all else incidental), he allows himself morning and evening walks through the beautiful mountain countryside.

Esquire Jul. 47

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 10 1947

Of Music a

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Reserved seats for the concerts are on sale at Tanglewood but the concerts on July 13 and 20 are sold out. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, Aug. 2 and 9 will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension fund.

The program for Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15, will have Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. The program will be all Bach and will include the Brandenburg concerto number 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon with strings; the Brandenburg concerto number 6 for strings; concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos; and the Suite number 1 in C major.

The program for Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday evening, July 22, will be devoted to works of Mozart. It will include the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments; Divertimento in B flat major for violin, two horns and strings; symphony in E flat major number 26 and symphony in C major (Jupiter"), number 41.

Series A concerts will be given the evenings of July 24 and 26 and the afternoon of July 27. The Thursday evening program will include the Honegger "Symphony for Strings"; Debussy' "The Sea" and "Three Orchestral Sketches"; and the Brahms Symphony number 2 in D major.

The Saturday evening concert will include Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony number 3 and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Symphony with viola solo by William Primrose.

The Sunday afternoon concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. It will include the Schubert Symphony in C major, number 7 and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps."

Series B, the Beethoven Cycle will be held evenings of July 21 and Aug. 2 and the afternoon of Aug. 3.

[illegible] June 10

Events Listed for Berkshire Festival

All seats having been taken for the Bach and Mozart concerts which opens the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 13, an additional performance of each program is announced. The Mozart program will be repeated on Tuesday evening, July 15, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 22. These programs will be performed by an orchestra of chamber proportions in the Theater-Concert Hall and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. In the Bach program Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemenoff, pianists, will appear as soloists.

There will be ten conerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood on three week-ends following (Thursday evenings, Saturdays evenings and Sunday afternoon), including an extra concert on Tuesday evening, August 5, making fourteen concerts in all. In the first week William Primrose, viola, will appear as soloist on July 26. In the second week, which is a Beethoven Cycle, the pianists Jacob Lateiner and Joseph Bapttista will appear on August 7. The season sale having closed, all remaining seats are on sale for the single concerts.

Three chamber music concerts by invitation will be given through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesday evenings, as follows: July 2—The Gordon String Quartet; July 9—The Albeneri Trio; July 16—The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble.

TANGLEWOOD OPENING: About 800 attended the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. In his talk to the audience in the Tanglewood Theatre, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founder and director of the Music Center, said that a part of the duty of the democratic state should be "the ultimate support of the arts." Others who spoke included Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of the Friends of Tanglewood; Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Dr. Stanley Chapple, dean of the school. At the close of the program, a student chorus of 200 voices sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." A tea followed in the Tanglewood gardens. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, flew here from Portland, Me., for the exercises in an amphibian plane, landing on Stockbridge Bowl.

Amherst Couple's Baby

THESE, then, are the major big-city summer concerts. Among the several country festivals that will be held this year are the Chautauqua, New York, concerts by the Juilliard School, and the Yaddo concerts of modern music in Saratoga, New York. But the best known, the most popular and most populous, is the Berkshire Festival.

It deserves to be the most popular, for it is the most satisfying—perhaps the only festival in the true sense of the word. Here, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts, two lovingly preserved old villages, lies the Tanglewood Estate, so called because Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales while he stayed there. The surroundings are just right: hills, a lake, an old garden—nothing spectacular, but all beautiful and gentle. On the estate an open-air concert shed has been constructed. It is an acoustic marvel: no matter where you sit, you can hear a pianissimo. People come from all over with the sole purpose of hearing music, the kind of music that, because it is great and strong and immortal, is worth the journey. Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony, an incomparable orchestra. On a Sunday afternoon as many as ten thousand people hear the concert.

This year the season will last longer than usual and will include two extra Sunday-afternoon concerts of music by Bach and Mozart. There will be a Beethoven cycle, a performance of Berlioz' Harold in Italy, Stravinsky's Rites of Spring, Debussy's The Sea, the Mozart Requiem, and modern American music by Barber and Copland. The festival starts July 13. In addition to the main concerts, the Berkshire Music Center (the school established by Koussevitzky) will give a series of smaller concerts and have a few operatic evenings.

Unfortunately, there are not enough hotel accommodations. It's a good idea to write well in advance to the Festival Committee and ask to be assigned to a private family or a tourist camp. And take your car; you will be lost without it. There is ample parking space at Tanglewood, and the parking is supervised by the handsomest State Troopers you have ever seen.

THE END

Music in a Democracy

The following is a sizable excerpt from the speech of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the fifth opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday.

By SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The grave and tragic instances of present day life have shown that an artist is also a leader in society: he cannot withdraw from the open strife into the safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and aesthetic dreams. For art is a creative process. Art is the result of the creative act of man.

It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their constructive effort. He must awaken the people from a passive acceptance of the values of art to an active interest in the work of art. For it was well said that the basic force of universal culture lies in the active participation of the masses.

In music, we have reached a dangerous impasse. From the beginning of the 20th century, music, once the privilege of the "initiated," became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a "mass initiation" of the listener into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music in the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of "entertainment" and "enjoyment" to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value.

It is for the artist musician to correct that fundamental error, to combat the inertia of the passive consumer, and recreate in the mind and consciousness of the wide listener the true meaning of music, as an art of eternal value.

• • •

The great creative artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations. Today, we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden of responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century. Are we prepared to meet this formidable assignment? Have we the courage to break away from the banality of mere "enjoyment" to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs?

Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals?

Is our mind free from the smallness and limitations of our "ego"?

Is our heart burning within us? The cause of music asks for not action alone: It asks for an all-consuming love, renunciation of self, and will for sacrifice.

Beethoven, that titan in music, that great master, man and martyr, wrote: "Let us sacrifice life for art: let it be a sanctuary. . . ."

This, indeed, is the first step on the road of our spiritual reform. With new concentrated energy we shall enter a world of conflict and lay open the creative meaning of music and the arts in the complex structure of life.

The progress of the evolution of music, this highest attainment in art, is not unlike the evolution of democracy, representing the highest ideals of the political and social form of government. Both aspire to spiritual equality and freedom.

Music in the past experienced the aristocratic rule of the Maecenas that kept music in a lofty and noble, yet restricted sphere. Since the advent of the 20th Century and our industrial age, the influence of the Maecenas was gradually succeeded by larger groups, firms, agencies and corporations, the patronage of which offered many advantages and created a wide public, yet held the danger of mechanization and commercialization.

The ultimate support of th arts, to which the evolution o life points, must come from th democratic state.

My appeal from Tanglewood a year ago, was not a voice in th wilderness: it was heard, and i will be heard again and agai until action is taken and the support of the arts becomes a part o the duty of the state.

America, the holder of grea democratic ideals and tradition who gave the world that immortal and unsurpassed huma document—the Declaration of Independence, must awaken to th consciousness.

This government, while exten ing aid to countries wrecked a ravaged by war, must be r minded that the light of art a culture, with which America blessed, can and will prevent f ture world catastrophes.

Art and culture are the guardians of peace: they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

Every American must be reminded of these words by Jefferson written over a century ago:

"I shall not die without the hope that light and liberty are on a steady advance . . . and even should the cloud of barbarism and despotism again obscure the science and liberties of Europe, this country remains to preserve and restore light and liberty to them . . ." Great words of deep prophetic insight.

Today, of all time, the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world.

Never before has history offered so vast an opportunity to prove to ourselves that we indeed have a right to live and serve humanity, that we are men of heart, mind and soul.

Let our ascending love and passion for art descend in love and compassion to mankind!

GREAT BARRINGTON,
MASS
COURIER
6/12/47

Tanglewood Music Programs Listed

Complete Concert Schedule Is Announced

Director Serge Koussevitzky Itemizes Selections for Fourteen Concerts By Boston Symphony Orchestra, Beginning July 13.—Two Soloists to Be Chosen.

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were announced this week by Serge Koussevitzky, the orchstra's music director, as follows:

Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for two horns, three oboes, and bassoon, with strings; Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for strings; Concerto for Two Pianos, in C minor; Concerto for Two Pianos, in C major; Suite No. 1 in C major. Soloists, Piere Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday evening, July 22: Mozart, Serenade in B flat major, for wind instruments; Divertimento in B flat major, for violin, two horns and strings; Symphony in E flat major, No. 26; Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), No. 41.

Series A

Thursday evening, July 24: Honegger, Symphony for Strings; Debussy, "The Sea," Three Orchestral Sketches; Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D major.

Saturday evening, July 26: Barber, Overture, "School for Scandal"; Copland, Symphony No. 3; Berlioz, "Harold In Italy," Symphony with Viola Solo. Soloist, William Primrose.

Sunday afternoon, July 27, Leonard Bernstein, conducting: Schubert, Symphony in C major, No. 7; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps."

Series B—Beethoven Cycle

Thursday evening, July 31: Symphony No. 1, in C major; Symphony No. 2, in D major; Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

Saturday evening, August 2: Symphony No. 4, in B flat major; Piano

Tanglewood Turn to tenth page

Concerto No. 5, in E flat major "Emperor"; Symphony No. 5, in C minor. Soloist, Jacob Lateiner.

Sunday afternoon, August 3: Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"; Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major; Symphony No. 7, in A major. Soloist, Joseph Battista.

Extra Concert

Tuesday evening, August 5: Symphony No. 8, in F major; Symphony No. 9, with Final Chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

Series C

Thursday evening, August 7, Leonard Bernstein, conducting: Haydn, Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Hindemith, Violin Concerto; Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major. Soloist, Ruth Posselt.

Saturday evening, August 9, Robert Shaw, conducting: Mozart, Requiem; Poulenc, Chorus; Stravinsky, Symphony of Psalms.

Sunday afternoon, August 10: Martinu, Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two pianos; Ravel, Pavane; Ravel, Bolero; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4, in F major.

Soloists for August 5 and 9 will be announced. The festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will assist. Reserved seats for all concerts except those on July 13 and 20, for which no tickets remain, are on sale at Tanglewood.

General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, August 2 and 9, will be for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 18 1947

Musical Events At Tanglewood

Twenty - eight musical events, open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, are listed on the calender for the six weeks of the summer school of the Boston Symphony orchestra, founded and directed by Serge Koussevitzy. More than 900 members from all parts of the United States and Canada have joined the society by making voluntary ontributions to the support of the chool.

Beginning with opening exercises f the Berkshire Music Center on unday afternoon, June 29, there ill be concerts by students or othr groups every day or two hrough the Berkshire Festival that loses Aug. 10.

PORTLAND, ORE.
JOURNAL

JUN 1947

Student Group Will Go East

A group of young students including Miss Marilyn McAllister, Miss Lois Hough, Miss Jane Anderson, Miss Doenda and Miss Nancy Hammond, will accompany Mrs. Esther Sadler Weller to New York to continue study of piano at the summer sessions of the Juillard School of Music.

The students also anticipate several days at the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass., when they will hear the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. They leave Portland on the Streamliner Saturday.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUN 17 1947

Robert Farr, a student at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N. Y., is spending this week with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie J. Farr of 94 Blake street. He will attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra Summer school in Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., this summer.

[12]

TANGLEWOOD OPENING: About 800 attended the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. In his talk to the audience in the Tanglewood Theatre, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founder and director of the Music Center, said that a part of the duty of the democratic state should be "the ultimate support of the arts." Others who spoke included Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of the Friends of Tanglewood; Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Dr. Stanley Chapple, dean of the school. At the close of the program, a student chorus of 200 voices sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." A tea followed in the Tanglewood gardens. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, flew here from Portland, Me., for the exercises in an amphibian plane, landing on Stockbridge Bowl.

Amherst Couple's Baby

THESE, then, are the major big-city summer concerts. Among the several country festivals that will be held this year are the Chautauqua, New York, concerts by the Juilliard School, and the Yaddo concerts of modern music in Saratoga, New York. But the best known, the most popular and most populous, is the Berkshire Festival.

It deserves to be the most popular, for it is the most satisfying—perhaps the only festival in the true sense of the word. Here, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts, two lovingly preserved old villages, lies the Tanglewood Estate, so called because Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales while he stayed there. The surroundings are just right: hills, a lake, an old garden—nothing spectacular, but all beautiful and gentle. On the estate an open-air concert shed has been constructed. It is an acoustic marvel: no matter where you sit, you can hear a pianissimo. People come from all over with the sole purpose of hearing music, the kind of music that, because it is great and strong nd immortal, is worth the journey. oussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony, an incomparable orchestra. On a Sunday afternoon as many as ten thousand people hear the concert.

This year the season will last longer than usual and will include two extra Sunday-afternoon concerts of music by Bach and Mozart. There will be a Beethoven cycle, a performance of Berlioz' Harold in Italy, Stravinsky's Rites of Spring, Debussy's The Sea, the Mozart Requiem, and modern American music by Barber and Copland. The festival starts July 13. In addition to the main concerts, the Berkshire Music Center (the school established by Koussevitzky) will give a series of smaller concerts and have a few operatic evenings.

Unfortunately, there are not enough hotel accommodations. It's a good idea to write well in advance to the Festival Committee and ask to be assigned to a private family or a tourist camp. And take your car; you will be lost without it. There is ample parking space at Tanglewood, and the parking is supervised by the handsomest State Troopers you have ever seen.

THE END

Good Housekeeping
June

George Marek – Summer Concerts

Music in a Democracy

June 30 Globe

The following is a sizable excerpt from the speech of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the fifth opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday.

By SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The grave and tragic instances of present day life have shown that an artist is also a leader in society: he cannot withdraw from the open strife into the safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and aesthetic dreams. For art is a creative process. Art is the result of the creative act of man.

It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their constructive effort. He must awaken the people from a passive acceptance of the values of art to an active interest in the work of art. For it was well said that the basic force of universal culture lies in the active participation of the masses.

In music, we have reached a dangerous impasse. From the beginning of the 20th century, music, once the privilege of the "initiated," became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a "mass initiation" of the listener into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music in the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of "entertainment" and "enjoyment" to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value.

It is for the artist musician to correct that fundamental error, to combat the inertia of the passive consumer, and recreate in the mind and consciousness of the wide listener the true meaning of music, as an art of eternal value.

• • •

The great creative artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations. Today, we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden or responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers, whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century. Are we prepared to meet this formidable assignment? Have we the courage to break away from the banality of mere "enjoyment" to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs?

Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals?

Is our mind free from the smallness and limitations of our "ego"?

Is our heart burning within us? The cause of music asks for not action alone: It asks for an all-consuming love, renunciation of self, and will for sacrifice.

Beethoven, that titan in music, that great master, man and martyr, wrote: "Let us sacrifice life for art: let it be a sanctuary. . . ."

This, indeed, is the first step on the road of our spiritual reform. With new concentrated energy we shall enter a world of conflict and lay open the creative meaning of music and the arts in the complex structure of life.

The progress of the evolution of music, this highest attainment in art, is not unlike the evolution of democracy, representing the highest ideals of the political and social form of government. Both aspire to spiritual equality and freedom.

Music in the past experienced the aristocratic rule of the Maecenas that kept music in a lofty and noble, yet restricted sphere. Since the advent of the 20th Century and our industrial age, the influence of the Maecenas was gradually succeeded by larger groups, firms, agencies and corporations, the patronage of which offered many advantages and created a wide public, yet held the danger of mechanization and commercialization.

The ultimate support of the arts, to which the evolution of life points, must come from the democratic state.

My appeal from Tanglewood, a year ago, was not a voice in the wilderness: it was heard, and it will be heard again and again until action is taken and the support of the arts becomes a part of the duty of the state.

America, the holder of great democratic ideals and traditions, who gave the world that immortal and unsurpassed human document—the Declaration of Independence, must awaken to this consciousness.

This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes.

Art and culture are the guardians of peace: they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

Every American must be reminded of these words by Jefferson written over a century ago:

"I shall not die without the hope that light and liberty are on a steady advance . . . and even should the cloud of barbarism and despotism again obscure the science and liberties of Europe, this country remains to preserve and restore light and liberty to them . . ." Great words of deep prophetic insight.

Today, of all time, the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world.

Never before has history offered so vast an opportunity to prove to ourselves that we indeed have a right to live and serve humanity, that we are men of heart, mind and soul.

Let our ascending love and passion for art descend in love and compassion to mankind!

GREAT BARRINGTON,
MASS
COURIER
6/12/47

nglewood Music Programs Listed

omplete Concert Schedule Is Announced

irector Serge Koussevitzky Itemizes Selections for Fourteen Concerts By Boston Symphony Orchestra, Beginning July 13.—Two Soloists to Be Chosen.

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were announced this week by Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director, as follows:

Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for two horns, three oboes, and bassoon, with strings; Brandenburg Concerto No. for strings; Concerto for Two Pianos, in C minor; Concerto for Two ianos, in C major; Suite No. 1 in C ajor. Soloists, Piere Luboshutz and enia Nemenoff.

Sunday afternoon, July 20, and esday evening, July 22: Mozart, renade in B flat major, for wind truments; Divertimento in B flat jor, for violin, two horns and ings; Symphony in E flat major, . 26; Symphony in C major ("Jupi-"), No. 41.

Series A

hursday evening, July 24: Honeg-, Symphony for Strings; Debus-"The Sea," Three Orchestral Sketches; Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D major.

Saturday evening, July 26: Barber, Overture, "School for Scandal"; Copland, Symphony No. 3; Berlioz, "Harold In Italy," Symphony with Viola Solo. Soloist, William Primrose.

Sunday afternoon, July 27, Leonard Bernstein, conducting: Schubert, Symphony in C major, No. 7; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps."

Series B—Beethoven Cycle

Thursday evening, July 31: Symphony No. 1, in C major; Symphony No. 2, in D major; Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

Saturday evening, August 2: Symphony No. 4, in B flat major; Piano

Tanglewood Turn to tenth page

Concerto No. 5, in E flat major "Emperor"; Symphony No. 5, in C minor. Soloist, Jacob Lateiner.

Sunday afternoon, August 3: Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"; Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major; Symphony No. 7, in A major. Soloist, Joseph Battista.

Extra Concert

Tuesday evening, August 5: Symphony No. 8, in F major; Symphony No. 9, with Final Chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

Series C

Thursday evening, August 7, Leonard Bernstein, conducting: Haydn, Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Hindemith, Violin Concerto; Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major. Soloist, Ruth Posselt.

Saturday evening, August 9, Robert Shaw, conducting: Mozart, Requiem; Poulenc, Chorus; Stravinsky, Symphony of Psalms.

Sunday afternoon, August 10: Martinu, Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two pianos; Ravel, Pavane; Ravel, Bolero; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4, in F major.

Soloists for August 5 and 9 will be announced. The festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will assist. Reserved seats for all concerts except those on July 13 and 20, for which no tickets remain, are on sale at Tanglewood.

General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Admission to three rehearsals on Saturday mornings, July 26, August 2 and 9, will be for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 18 1947

Musical Events At Tanglewood

Twenty - eight musical events, open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, are listed on the calender for the six weeks of the summer school of the Boston Symphony orchestra, founded and directed by Serge Koussevitzy. More than 900 members from all parts of the United States and Canada have joined the society by making voluntary contributions to the support of the school.

Beginning with opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday afternoon, June 29, there will be concerts by students or other groups every day or two through the Berkshire Festival that closes Aug. 10.

PORTLAND, ORE.
JOURNAL

JUN 20 1947

Student Group Will Go East

A group of young students including Miss Marilyn McAllister, Miss Lois Hough, Miss Jane Anderson, Miss Doenda and Miss Nancy Hammond, will accompany Mrs. Esther Sadler Weller to New York to continue study of piano at the summer sessions of the Juillard School of Music.

The students also anticipate several days at the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass., when they will hear the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. They leave Portland on the Streamliner Saturday.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUN 17 1947

Robert Farr, a student at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y., is spending this week with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie J. Farr of 94 Blake street. He will attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra Summer school in Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., this summer.

[12]

Bigotry in B-Flat

HOW THE BERKSHIRES FACE THE MUSIC

BY HORACE SUTTON

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, June 19

PRECISELY at 3:30 p.m., Sunday, July 13, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will rap his baton on a music stand at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, and leading the orchestra in an all-Bach program formally open the 1947 Berkshire Music Festival. Before the series ends four weeks later at least a hundred thousand people will have poured into the village to hear the concerts, operas, and chorales. They will jam Tanglewood's Finnish-designed, $80,000 Music Shed, spill over on to its green lawns, lie under its birches, evergreens, and pines. On Saturday afternoons the crowds will come with their picnic baskets and pay a dollar to listen to the Boston Symphony in rehearsal. On Sunday mornings they will stretch out in the sun and watch the waters of Stockbridge Bowl ripple in the summer wind.

When these music lovers seek a place to lay their heads at nightfall, the story will become less melodious than malodorous. According to Haydn Mason, director of public relations of the Berkshire Hills Conference, the annual music festivals at Tanglewood aggravate a Berkshire sore point into what the county now considers a very important problem. Of the forty-three hotels and inns which the conference lists in its 1947 vacation guide Mr. Mason estimates that 50 per cent will not welcome Jews. At least one is militant on the subject.

"Actually we would have a problem here anyway because of our proximity to New York," says Mr. Mason, "but the Jewish people are artistic as a race, and the festival has amplified our predicament. I would say that 98 per cent of our inns would have no objection if Jews would conduct themselves according to ordinary standards, but they don't. Here's what happens. A car pulls up full of boisterous people. If they turn out to be Irish—o. k. If they're Italian—o. k. If they're Americans, nobody says anything. But if they're Jews, thumbs down."

As the official information center for the Berkshires, Mr. Mason's office gets some 15,000 inquiries about accommodations each year. The letters are opened and placed in a huge cardboard bin. Regardless of the type of name, Mason says, each applicant is sent a copy of the Berkshire Hills Vacation Guide, which lists the hotels, and another pamphlet which lists guest houses. Neither mentions clientèle restrictions. The prospective Berkshire vacationist then makes a selection and writes to one of the hotels. Mason says that half the hotels listed write back, "Please be advised we only cater to . . ." or "We only welcome. . . ." The guest houses, he indicated, are not so strict since they do not serve food, and Jews do not have as much opportunity to mingle with other guests.

HORACE SUTTON contributes monthly articles on travel to The Nation.

During the 1946 summer season the festival and its related activities drew an estimated 160,000 persons to the Berkshires. Of this number Mason estimates that only one-half could be accommodated with the type of service and facilities the county would have liked to provide. Some 10,000 rooms in the county, Mason's office figures, brought a total return to the area of $100,000 a day. With perhaps an even larger crowd coming this year, some festival ticket-holders will be sleeping as far away as Danbury, Connecticut, sixty-two miles to the south.

The smart Jew who is aware of the local attitude, Mason says, does not even attempt to find a place in Berkshire County. He goes to a hotel in Albany, or he takes a room at a tourist house on the road before he gets to the Berkshires. There are 117 tourist houses, cabins, and small hotels between Danbury and Tanglewood, according to Mason's tally. "Other Jews," he says, "may sleep in their cars."

From Albany to Tanglewood is a thirty-seven-mile trip, but Mason explains that "it's only ten miles to Lebanon Valley, which is lined with guest houses." Copake Falls, New York, is "90 per cent Jewish, just like the Catskills." And Canaan, Connecticut, just over the state border, he says, is "wide open for them."

The Berkshire Hills Conference, which functions like a local chamber of commerce, is supported by a taxpayers' appropriation and by voluntary contributions. Although it is denied officially, apparently some strain exists between the conference, an old, established agency which aims to promote the whole Berkshire region over an eight-month period, and the infant music festival, which though it lasts only a month overshadows all other community activities. Mason quotes a townsman as saying last year, "I wouldn't give a dime to the Berkshire Hills Conference; look at all the Jews it has brought to the county." "We didn't bring them," Mason explains privately, "it's the music festival that brought them. But don't get me wrong. Some of our best families in Pittsfield are Jewish."

The Berkshire Hills Conference, which has two Jewish members, has gone on record against racial discrimination. They say that if any anti-Semitism exists in the area, they have not fostered or supported it. They agree that "some resort hotels in the county pursue a restricted-clientèle policy," but they make it plain that such an attitude "does not represent the policy of the Berkshire Hills Conference." Pittsfield journalists believe that local anti-Semitism stems mainly from the types of dress affected by the counselors and children from nearby Jewish camps and from the public's behavior at the festival rather than from "names and faces." A scorching letter was printed last year in the Berkshire Eagle berating visitors for sun-bathing and indecent dressing. With this exception the Eagle has given complete support to the festival.

Though Pittsfield elders have clearly rejected anti-Semitism, Jewish visitors to the Berkshires this year may expect a chilly welcome. A few weeks ago a man and his ill wife arrived at a New England hotel which they found to be run down and dilapidated. Hearing of another place where he thought his wife might be more comfortable, the man called and explained his predicament. The rest of the conversation went like this:

"Yes, we have a double room."

"Oh, that's fine."

"Are you a Christian?"

"No, I'm not."

"Well, then I don't think you'd be very comfortable here."

Tanglewood is near Lenox, Massachusetts. There is parking space on the grounds for 4,000 cars. The New Haven Railroad furnishes limited train service from New York to Great Barrington, Stockbridge, Lee, Lenox, and Pittsfield. The New York Central and the Boston and Albany also run to Pittsfield. Commercial air service operates to Albany and to Springfield-Westfield, and there is direct bus service to the concert grounds from all neighboring towns.

Tanglewood's first two Sunday-afternoon concerts, on July 13 and 20, will be given by skeleton orchestras of forty musicians. The regular week-end series begin on July 24, with three sets of programs scheduled for each Thursday evening, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon thereafter until August 10. Some 400 students who are studying at Tanglewood will present student-orchestra concerts, student operas, chamber music, and choral concerts. Tickets for the regular series are $6 for boxes, $4, $3, and $2.50 for other reserved seats. General admission is $2, and patrons are invited to bring blankets, beach chairs, and picnic baskets. Admission to student concerts is limited to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which invites inquiries at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. All the concerts of the regular series will be performed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky as director.

The first guest conductor in the history of the music festival will be Leonard Bernstein, who will appear on Sunday afternoon, July 27—a fact I thought interesting under the circumstances.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

MORE ABOUT COPLAND'S THIRD

By VIRGIL THOMSON

ARON COPLAND'S Third Symphony, which received the season's award [illegible] the Music Critic's Circle of New York, is [illegible] impressive piece of new symphonic com[illegible] heard this year. It is a serious work, and its tion [illegible] dignity and simplicity mark it as manly effort. ure is personal. It [illegible] not quite a satisfying piece. There is something the same [illegible] content. Not wholly false but not convincing [illegible] writer has referred to this troublesome quality as er T[illegible] "editorial tone." H[illegible] means by that he is not convinced that the ings expressed in the work are entirely spontaneous and personal. [illegible] an exposition of ideas not necessarily those [illegible] [illegible]rial writer's conscientious objections to the edure are [illegible] ethical problem. Publicly he accepts no in[illegible] is not signed. From every point of view, in [illegible]imate, because ideas are common property. [illegible]ttish about expounding them unless he be[illegible] man [illegible] hat their dissemination would be injurious s, in a given [illegible] he owes allegiance. Up to that point the ome cause [illegible] free an agent as any other anonymous skilled kman.

• • •

ic's Problem of Sincerity

USIC, however, does not deal with ideas; it deals with feelings. And feelings are personal. My lawyer, my secretary or any friend speak my ideas for me, represent me, defend my interests in a n matter. Nobody can insult my enemies for me or write my love rs. A composer may like to believe that it would be a wonderful g if his feelings about love, liberty and landscape were shared. But n he writes a piece, he must really express his own feelings, if he es to hold our attention. Or he may yearn to be taken for a pasate fellow, patriotic, not too religious and infallibly kind to chil. Nothing is a more agreeable daydream. But a symphony is no dream. To hold a place in repertory it must be a true account, bee that is what all the great music of the past is. This is why tical propaganda and moral edification have no place in it and the editorial attitude is unbecoming to it.

Shocking as the proposition may appear to an epoch that is corted all through by advertising and propaganda, quality in music ot determined by the nature or social utility of its expressive con but by the absolute sincerity of same. Even in writing for the e a composer must believe in his characters, all of them. In writing phonies and similar untitled instrumental works it is sheer suicide a composer to get involved with feelings, sentiments or emotions er than the ones he really has.

* * *

land's Problem of Conformity

ST how far the expressive content of Copland's Third Symphony is a reflection of his real emotional life nobody will ever know. I think, though, that there is some pose in it. I have noticed that her the composer's very old friends, like myself, nor his more re and devoted satellites are quite happy about the piece. Nor was Critics' Circle. We all thought it was a good try and worth honor but we regretted that it didn't mean more to us. Myself, I found ot unlike the speeches of Henry Wallace, striking in phraseology all too reminiscent of Moscow. And not of Moscow as a source igorous political ideas, either, but of Moscow as the very spirit of rnational pietism. I do not care where ideas and techniques come n. The wider their origins the better. Neither divergencies nor larities among them shock me. But I am disappointed at feelings show so little variation, save in the manner of their expression, n the patriotic-versus-pastoral formula that the Russians evolved war-time radio usage. Aaron Copland's real personality is more resting than that, fuller of depths and surprises.

Berkshire Center

nty-eight Performances Scheduled for Summer Season

he Berkshire Music Center will ent twenty-eight performes this summer between June he opening day of the session, Aug. 10 at Tanglewood, Lenox, s. These will be open by intion to members of the Society Friends of the Berkshire Music ter, composed of contributors he support of this school. The edule is as follows:

dent [illegible] Department 2: Musi[illegible], Fridays, 8.15.
amber [illegible] Department 2: Sundays, beng July 6, 10 a. m. orus, De[illegible] 5: Thursdays, July 10, 4, 31 3.30.
era scenes, O[illegible] Department: Thursdays, 10, 17, We[illegible] July 30 and Aug. 6.
chestra [illegible] Tuesdays, July 15, :30.
amber [illegible] (sponsored by Elizabeth gue C[illegible] Chamber Music Foundation) nesday[illegible] July 2, Gordon Quartet; 9 A[illegible] July 16, Boston Wood Ensemble; [illegible] 23, Juilliard Quartet.

nformation about these proms and about joining the soy is obtainable from the Berkre Music Center at Tanglewood. e Boston Symphony Orchestra also hold public rehearsals of Berkshire Festival programs on urday mornings, July 26, Aug. nd 9, at 10 o'clock for the beneof its pension fund.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUN 1[illegible]

Special Concerts Open To Friends Of Lenox Festival

Twenty-eight musical event open to members of the Societ f Friends of the Berkshire M ic Center at Tanglewood, Leno y invitation, are listed on th alendar for the six weeks of th ummer school of the Bosto ymphony orchestra, founded an irected by Serge Koussevitzky More than 900 members from a parts of the United States an Canada have joined the society b making voluntary contribution o the support of the school.

Beginning with opening exer cises of the Berkshire Music cen ter on Sunday afternoon, Jun 29, there will be concerts by stu dents or other groups every da or two through the Berkshir Festival closing Aug. 10. Spon sored by the Elizabeth Spragu Coolidge Foundation in the Li brary of Congress, three cham ber music concerts will be give on Wednesday evenings: on Jul 2 by the Gordon String quarte July 9, the Albeneri trio; July 16 the Boston Wood Wind ensemble The Juilliard quartet will pla July 23.

The student orchestra of De partment 2 will give concerts i the festival shed on Friday eve nings beginning July 4. Cham ber music concerts will be playe by Department 2 every Sunda morning at 10.30, starting July 6 The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon from July 10 through 31. Students in the opera department will give scenes from operas Thursday evenings, July 10 and 17, and Wednesday evenings, July 30 and Aug. 6. Department 5 orchestra will play Tuesday afternoons, July 15 and 22.

All morning concerts will start at 10.30; afternoon at 3.30 and evening at 8.15. Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be open to the public at 10 on the Saturday mornings of July 26 and Aug. 2 and 9 for the benefit of the Boston orchestra's pension fund.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and contributions for membership in the society should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 18 1947

28 Musical Events Open To Friends of Music Center

Twenty-eight musical events, open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, are listed on the calendar for the six weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, founded and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. More than 900 members from many parts of the United States and Canada have joined the society by making voluntary contributions to the support of the school.

Beginning with opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday afternoon, June 29, there will be concerts by students and others every day or two through the Berkshire Festival that will close Aug. 10. The student orchestra of Department 2 will give concerts in the Festival Shed on Friday evenings, beginning July 4. Chamber music will be played by Department 2 every Sunday morning, starting July 6. The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoons from July 10 through 31. Students in the opera departments will give scenes from operas Thursday evenings, July 10 and 17 and Wednesday evenings, July 30 and Aug. 6. Department 5 orchestra will play Tuesday afternoons, July 15 and 22.

Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Chamber Music Foundation in the Library of Congress, chamber music concerts will be given Wednesday evenings: July 2, by the Gordon String Quartet; July 9, the Albeneri Trio; July 16, the Boston Wood Wind Ensemble. The Juilliard Quartet will appear the evening of July 23.

All morning concerts will start at 10.30; afternoon at 3.30 and evening at 8.15. Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be open to the public at 10 Saturday mornings, July 26 and Aug. 2 and 9 for the benefit of its pension fund.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and contributions for membership in the society should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 21 1947

Three Musicians From This City At Tanglewood

Adele Addison, Lillian Levine, Arppie Charkoudian to Attend Music School

Miss Adele J. Addison of 115 Tenth St., Miss Lillian P. Levine of 41 Elwood Dr., and Arppie Charkoudian of 17 Dearborn St. will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, the 29th and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start uly 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry b. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six-week session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 21 1947

Four Students From County At Music School

Four Berkshire County residents are among the 416 students of music enrolled for the Berkshire Music Center, the school the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct for six weeks at Tanglewood, starting June 29.

Local students at the school, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, are: Richard W. [redacted] Euclid Avenue and Joseph Pizzonia of 8 Lyric Street; Miss Alice Bishop Berle, summer resident of Great Barrington; and Miss Muriel H. Schiff of Adams. Seventeen students will come from Canada, Europe, South America and Lebanon.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak at the opening exercises of the school in the theatre-concert hall Sunday afternoon, June 29 at 3.30. Friends of the Music Center are invited.

Among the faculty will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 21 1947

Dr. Perry Now at Lenox

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emtus of Phillips academy at Exe, N. H., and a member of a famlong associated with Williams lege, has arrived in Lenox for a day stay during which he will rk on the nation-wide organizan of sponsoring committees for Berkshire Music Center at nglewood. ~~Dr. Perry is chairman~~ the Society of Friends of the sic Center.

SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

JUN 22

Whelan Going to Berkshire

Will Study Conducting at Tanglewood.

Harold Paul Whelan, conductor of the Spokane Philharmonic orchestra, will be in New England for the Berkshire festival this summer. going east tomorrow, he will have several weeks at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., studying conducting. This famed music center draws the music-minded from all parts of the country.

The Boston Symphony orchestra plays a series of 12 festival concerts, the series including a Bach program, July 13 (repeated July 15); a Mozart program, July 20 (repeated July 22) and a Beethoven cycle, July 31, besides others featuring the great composers.

Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation there will be three invitation concerts of chamber music on Wednesday evenings in the Theater-Concert hall. The dates and organizations are July 2, Gordon string quartet; July, Albeneri trio, and July 16, Berkshire wood wind ensemble.

* * *

New Concert Master.

Melvin Baddin, who is joining the music faculty at Eastern Washington College of Education as professor of violin, will be the new concert master this season for the Spokane Philharmonic. Mr. Whelan anticipates there will be at least six new faces in the orchestra personnel this season, new players for the string section.

Otto Huttenbach, cellist, who arrived from England this month to take a teaching position with the faculty of the Spokane Conservatory, of which his brother-in-law, Dr. Hans Moldenhauer, is director, is joining the orchestra, playing solo cello, and Mrs. Huttenbach, violinist, will also play with the orchestra.

Mr. Whelan also expects to have some of the fine scholarship students at Eastern Washington college joining the ensemble, some for the string section (double bass), others for bassoon and oboe. Everett Dallas, who plays double bass ((bass viol), is returning to Spokane this season and will be coming into the orchestra, as will a clarinet artist from Denver.

CHIC

Complete

AGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE: J

Program

UNE 22, 1947

s for Berkshire Festival Listed

Bach Concert Opens Summer Series July 13

By Edward Barry

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced complete programs and a partial list of soloists for this summer's Berkshire festival. The festival, which has become one of the nation's major summer musical undertakings, is held at Tanglewood, the Boston orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass.

On Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15, an all-Bach program will be presented. It consists of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 1 and 6, the Concertos for Two Pianos in C minor and C major, and the Suite No. 1 in C major. The soloists will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

• • •

An all-Mozart program is scheduled for the following Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening. It offers the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments: the Divertimento in B flat major for violin, two horns, and strings; and the Symphonies in E flat major [No. 26] and C major [No. 41]. This last is the work known as the "Jupiter" Symphony.

On Thursday evening, July 24, Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "The Sea," and Brahms' Second Symphony make up the program.

Serge Koussevitzky

Dimitri Mitropoulos

The following Saturday evening [July 26] the orchestra offers Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture; Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." The viola solo in the last named will be played by William Primrose.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the program of Sunday afternoon, July 27, which consists of Schubert's Symphony in C major, No. 7, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps."

• • •

The concerts of the following Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon are given over to a Beethoven cycle which will be concluded Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. All nine of the symphonies will be performed—also the Fourth and Fifth ["Emperor"] Piano Concertos, played by Joseph Battista and Jacob Lateiner, respectively. Soloists for the Ninth Symphony have not been announced. The chorus will be the Festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw.

Bernstein conducts again on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, when the program lists Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102; the Hindemith Violin Concerto [with Ruth Posselt]; and Schumann's Second Symphony. Shaw directs the following Saturday evening in a program consisting of the Mozart Requiem, the Poulenc Chorus, and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms. Names of soloists for this concert have not been released.

The festival's final concert, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, offers Martinu's Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos, the Pavane and Bolero of Ravel, and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office starting three hours before each program. Reserved seat tickets for the concerts of July 13 and 20 have been exhausted, but at last report some tickets were available for all the others. The Saturday morning rehearsals of July 26, Aug. 2 and Aug. 9 will be open to the public for a fee, the proceeds to go to the orchestra's pension fund.

[14]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Feb

V

MORE ABOUT COPLAND'S THIRD

By VIRGIL THOMSON

ARON COPLAND'S Third Symphony, which received the sea-son's award from the Music Critic's Circle of New York, is certainly the most impressive piece of new symphonic com-ion that we have heard this year. It is a serious work, and its ure is personal. Its dignity and simplicity mark it as manly effort. he same it is not quite a satisfying piece. There is something about its expressive content. Not wholly false but not convincing r. The present writer has referred to this troublesome quality as editorial tone." He means by that he is not convinced that the ngs expressed in the work are entirely spontaneous and personal. Editorial writing is an exposition of ideas not necessarily those he author. Any editorial writer's conscientious objections to the edure are his private ethical problem. Publicly he accepts no in-ity, because his work is not signed. From every point of view, in the business is legitimate, because ideas are common property. man needs to be skittish about expounding them unless he be-s, in a given case, that their dissemination would be injurious ome cause to which he owes allegiance. Up to that point the rial writer is as free an agent as any other anonymous skilled man.

• • •

ic's Problem of Sincerity

SIC, however, does not deal with ideas; it deals with feelings. And feelings are personal. My lawyer, my secretary or any friend speak my ideas for me, represent me, defend my interests in a matter. Nobody can insult my enemies for me or write my love rs. A composer may like to believe that it would be a wonderful if his feelings about love, liberty and landscape were shared. But he writes a piece, he must really express his own feelings, if he es to hold our attention. Or he may yearn to be taken for a pas-te fellow, patriotic, not too religious and infallibly kind to chil-. Nothing is a more agreeable daydream. But a symphony is no ream. To hold a place in repertory it must be a true account, be- that is what all the great music of the past is. This is why ical propaganda and moral edification have no place in it and the editorial attitude is unbecoming to it.

Shocking as the proposition may appear to an epoch that is cor-ed all through by advertising and propaganda, quality in music ot determined by the nature or social utility of its expressive con- but by the absolute sincerity of same. Even in writing for the e a composer must believe in his characters, all of them. In writing phonies and similar untitled instrumental works it is sheer suicide a composer to get involved with feelings, sentiments or emotions r than the ones he really has.

• • •

land's Problem of Conformity

ST how far the expressive content of Copland's Third Symphony s a reflection of his real emotional life nobody will ever know. I hink, though, that there is some pose in it. I have noticed that her the composer's very old friends, like myself, nor his more re- and devoted satellites are quite happy about the piece. Nor was Critics' Circle. We all thought it was a good try and worth honor- but we regretted that it didn't mean more to us. Myself, I found ot unlike the speeches of Henry Wallace, striking in phraseology all too reminiscent of Moscow. And not of Moscow as a source gorous political ideas, either, but of Moscow as the very spirit of rnational pietism. I do not care where ideas and techniques come . The wider their origins the better. Neither divergencies nor larities among them shock me. But I am disappointed at feelings show so little variation, save in the manner of their expression, the patriotic-versus-pastoral formula that the Russians evolved war-time radio usage. Aaron Copland's real personality is more esting than that, fuller of depths and surprises.

Berkshire Center

nty-eight Performances Scheduled for Summer Season

he Berkshire Music Center will ent twenty-eight perform-s this summer between June he opening day of the session Aug. 10 at Tanglewood, Lenox. s. These will be open by in-tion to members of the Society riends of the Berkshire Music ter, composed of contributors he support of this school. The dule is as follows:

dent orchestra, Department 2: Music Fridays, 8.15.
amber music, Department 2: Sundays, be-ng July 6, 10.30 a. m. orus, Department 5: Thursdays, July 10, . 31, 3.30.
ra scenes, Opera Department: Thursdays, 10, 17, Wednesdays, July 30 and Aug. 6. hestra, Department 5: Tuesdays, July 15, :30 amber music (sponsored by Elizabeth gue Coolidge Chamber Music Foundation): nesdays, 8.15, July 2, Gordon Quartet; 9, Albeneri Trio; July 16, Boston Wood Ensemble, July 23, Juilliard Quartet.

nformation about these pro-ms and about joining the so-y is obtainable from the Berk-e Music Center at Tanglewood. Boston Symphony Orchestra also hold public rehearsals of Berkshire Festival programs on urday mornings, July 26, Aug. nd 9, at 10 o'clock for the bene-of its pension fund.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUN 19

Special Concerts Open To Friends Of Lenox Festival

Twenty-eight musical event pen to members of the Societ f Friends of the Berkshire M ic Center at Tanglewood, Leno y invitation, are listed on th alendar for the six weeks of th ummer school of the Bosto ymphony orchestra, founded an irected by Serge Koussevitzky More than 900 members from a parts of the United States an Canada have joined the society b making voluntary contribution to the support of the school.

Beginning with opening exer-cises of the Berkshire Music cen ter on Sunday afternoon, Jun 29, there will be concerts by stu dents or other groups every da or two through the Berkshir Festival closing Aug. 10. Spon sored by the Elizabeth Spragu Coolidge Foundation in the Li brary of Congress, three cham ber music concerts will be give on Wednesday evenings: on Jul 2 by the Gordon String quarte July 9, the Albeneri trio; July 16 the Boston Wood Wind ensemble The Juilliard quartet will pla July 23.

The student orchestra of De partment 2 will give concerts i the festival shed on Friday eve nings beginning July 4. Cham ber music concerts will be playe by Department 2 every Sunda morning at 10.30, starting July 6 The chorus of Department 5 wil sing Thursday afternoon from July 10 through 31. Students in the opera department will give scenes from operas Thursday evenings, July 10 and 17, and Wednesday evenings, July 30 and Aug. 6. Department 5 orchestra will play Tuesday afternoons, July 15 and 22.

All morning concerts will start at 10.30; afternoon at 3.30 and evening at 8.15. Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be open to the public at 10 on the Saturday mornings of July 26 and Aug. 2 and 9 for the bene-fit of the Boston orchestra's pen-sion fund.

Inquiries, requests for the cal-endar of events and contributions for membership in the society should be addressed to Tangle-wood, Lenox, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 18 1947

28 Musical Events Open To Friends of Music Center

Twenty-eight musical events, open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berk-shire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, are listed on the calendar for the six weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, founded and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. More than 900 members from many parts of the United States and Canada have joined the society by making voluntary contributions to the sup-port of the school.

Beginning with opening exer-cises of the Berkshire Music Cen-ter on Sunday afternoon, June 29, there will be concerts by students and others every day or two through the Berkshire Festival that will close Aug. 10. The stu-dent orchestra of Department 2 will give concerts in the Festival Shed on Friday evenings, beginning July 4. Chamber music will be played by Department 2 every Sunday morning, starting July 6. The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoons from July 10 through 31. Students in the opera departments will give scenes from operas Thursday evenings, July 10 and 17 and Wednesday evenings, July 30 and Aug. 6. De-partment 5 orchestra will play Tuesday afternoons, July 15 and 22.

Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Cham-ber Music Foundation in the Li-brary of Congress, chamber music concerts will be given Wednesday evenings: July 2, by the Gordon String Quartet; July 9, the Alben-eri Trio; July 16, the Boston Wood Wind Ensemble. The Juilliard Quartet will appear the evening of July 23.

All morning concerts will start at 10.30; afternoon at 3.30 and evening at 8.15. Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be open to the public at 10 Satur-day mornings, July 26 and Aug. 2 and 9 for the benefit of its pension fund.

Inquiries, requests for the calen-dar of events and contributions for membership in the society should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 21 1947

Three Musicians From This City At Tanglewood

Adele Addison, Lillian Levine, Arppie Charkoudian to Attend Music School

Miss Adele J. Addison of 115 Tenth St., Miss Lillian P. Levine of 41 Elwood Dr., and Arppie Charkoudian of 17 Dearborn St. will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Sym-phony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, the 29th and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start uly 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry b. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Bos-ton Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students en-rolled for the six-week session, in-cluding 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Leb-anon.

On the faculty with other prom-inent musicians will be Arthur Hon-egger, Swiss composer, recently ar-rived in New York from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 21 1947

Dr. Perry Now at Lenox

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster em-eritus of Phillips academy at Exe-ter, N. H., and a member of a fam-ily long associated with Williams college, has arrived in Lenox for a 10-day stay during which he will work on the nation-wide organiza-tion of sponsoring committees for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Dr. Perry is chairman of the Society of Friends of the Music Center.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 21 1947

Four Students From County At Music School

Four Berkshire County residents are among the 416 students of music enrolled for the Berkshire Music Center, the school the Bos-ton Symphony Orchestra will con-duct for six weeks at Tanglewood, starting June 29.

Local students at the school, di-rected by Serge Koussevitzky, are: Richard W. [redacted] Euclid Avenue and Joseph Pizzonia of 8 Lyric Street; Miss Alice Bishop Berle, summer resident of Great Barrington; and Miss Muriel H. Schiff of Adams. Seventeen stu-dents will come from Canada, Eu-rope, South America and Lebanon.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak at the opening exercises of the school in the theatre-concert hall Sunday after-noon, June 29 at 3.30. Friends of the Music Center are invited.

Among the faculty will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

JUN 22 1947

Whelan Going to Berkshire

Will Study Conducting at Tanglewood.

Harold Paul Whelan, conductor of the Spokane Philharmonic or-chestra, will be in New England for the Berkshire festival this summer. going east tomorrow, he will have several weeks at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., studying conducting. This famed music center draws the music-minded from all parts of the country.

The Boston Symphony orchestra plays a series of 12 festival con-certs, the series including a Bach program, July 13 (repeated July 15); a Mozart program, July 20 (re-peated July 22) and a Beethoven cycle, July 31, besides others fea-turning the great composers.

Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foun-dation there will be three invita-tion concerts of chamber music on Wednesday evenings in the The-ater-Concert hall. The dates and organizations are July 2, Gordon string quartet; July, Albeneri trio, and July 16, Berkshire wood wind ensemble.

* * *

New Concert Master.

Melvin Baddin, who is joining the music faculty at Eastern Washing-ton College of Education as pro-fessor of violin, will be the new concert master this season for the Spokane Philharmonic. Mr. Whe-lan anticipates there will be at least six new faces in the orches-tra personnel this season, new players for the string section.

Otto Huttenbach, cellist, who ar-rived from England this month to take a teaching position with the faculty of the Spokane Conserva-tory, of which his brother-in-law, Dr. Hans Moldenhauer, is director, is joining the orchestra, playing solo cello, and Mrs. Huttenbach, violinist, will also play with the orchestra.

Mr. Whelan also expects to have some of the fine scholarship stu-dents at Eastern Washington col-lege joining the ensemble, some for the string section (double bass), others for bassoon and oboe. Ever-ett Dallas, who plays double bass ((bass viol), is returning to Spo-kane this season and will be com-ing into the orchestra, as will a clarinet artist from Denver.

CHIC
AGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE: J
UNE 22, 1947

Complete Programs for Berkshire Festival Listed

Bach Concert Opens Summer Series July 13

By Edward Barry

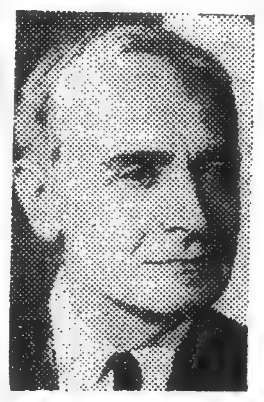
Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced complete programs and a partial list of soloists for this sum-mer's Berkshire festival. The festi-val, which has become one of the nation's major summer musical undertakings, is held at Tanglewood, the Boston orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass.

On Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15, an all-Bach program will be presented. It consists of the Brandenburg Con-certos Nos. 1 and 6, the Concertos for Two Pianos in C minor and C major, and the Suite No. 1 in C major. The soloists will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

• • •

An all-Mozart program is sched-uled for the following Sunday after-noon and Tuesday evening. It offers the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments: the Divertimento in B flat major for violin, two horns, and strings; and the Sym-phonies in E flat major [No. 26] and C major [No. 41]. This last is the work known as the "Jupiter" Symphony.

On Thursday evening, July 24, Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "The Sea," and Brahms' Second Symphony make up the pro-gram.



Serge Koussevitzky

Dimitri Mitropoulos

The following Saturday evening [July 26] the orchestra offers Bar-ber's "School for Scandal" Over-ture; Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." The viola solo in the last named will be played by William Primrose.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the program of Sunday afternoon, July 27, which consists of Schubert's Symphony in C major, No. 7, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Prin-temps."

• • •

The concerts of the following Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon are given over to a Beethoven cycle which will be con-cluded Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. All nine of the symphonies will be per-formed—also the Fourth and Fifth ["Emperor"] Piano Concertos, played by Joseph Battista and Jacob Lateiner, respectively. Soloists for the Ninth Symphony have not been announced. The chorus will be the Festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw.

Bernstein conducts again on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, when the program lists Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102; the Hindemith Violin Concerto [with Ruth Posselt]; and Schumann's Second Symphony. Shaw directs the following Saturday evening in a program consisting of the Mozart Requiem, the Poulenc Chorus, and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms. Names of soloists for this concert have not been released.

The festival's final concert, on Sun-day afternoon, Aug. 10, offers Mar-tinu's Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos, the Pavane and Bolero of Ravel, and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office starting three hours before each program. Reserved seat tickets for the con-certs of July 13 and 20 have been exhausted, but at last report some tickets were available for all the others. The Saturday morning re-hearsals of July 26, Aug. 2 and Aug. 9 will be open to the public for a fee, the proceeds to go to the orches-tra's pension fund.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JUN 22 1947

Bach Concert Opens Summer Series July 13

By Edward Barry

Serge Kou[redacted], director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced complete programs and a partial list of soloists for this summer's Berkshire festival. The festival, which has become one of the nation's major summer musical undertakings, is held at Tanglewood, the Boston orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass.

On Sunday afternoon, July 13, and Tuesday evening, July 15, an all-Bach program will be presented. It consists of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 1 and 6, the Concertos for Two Pianos in C minor and C major, and the Suite No. 1 in C major. The soloists will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 23 1947

Students to Attend Music Center Season

Seven music students from Connecticut will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

They are: Susan Dannreuther, 1765 Blvd., West Hartford; Gilbert G. Darr, 330 High St., Middletown; Betty Burnett, Putnam; Edward J. Ansara, 29 Arch St., Waterbury; Joan Brainerd, 34 Wakefield St., Hamden; Eleanor J. Diamond, 80 Sherman Ave., and William V. Gromoko, 65 Sheldon Ter., New Haven.

Opening exercises of the school will be on Sunday afternoon, June 29. Talks will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot and Dr. Lewis Perry.

Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived from Europe to join the composition faculty for the six-weeks session.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
PRESS-CHRONICLE

JUN 23 1947

Johnson To Attend Berkshire School

Roland A. Johnson of 414 West Pine street, Johnson City, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, June 29, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra~~, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six-weeks session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Homegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York from France, to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUN 23 1947

To Attend School

Miss Eleanor J. Diamond, of 80 Sherman Avenue, William V. Gromoko, of 65 Sheldon Terrace, and Miss Joan Brainerd, of Hamden, will attend the 5th season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises next Sunday afternoon, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

JUN 23 1947

MUSIC CENTER DATE SET

The Berkshire Music Center, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of [redacted] Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, June 29, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 24 1947

Will Attend Music Center

MISS CYNTHIA SWEENEY

* * *

Residents Here Enrolled At Tanglewood School

Miss Cynthia Sweeney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Sweeney of 68 Arnold Street, and Louis Frankel, 63 Carroll Street, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six-weeks session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

In addition to 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and programs presented during the season by student groups, those attending the school will hear on the first three Wednesday nights in July three chamber music concerts presented to the center by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and on the fourth Wednesday, a program by the Juilliard Quartet given by the Juilliard School of Music in New York. This concert will be correlated with Mr. Copland's course in American music. These programs and orchestral, chamber, choral, and operatic perfromances of the school will be open by invitation to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

COLUMBUS, O.
STATE JOURNAL

JUN 24 1947

Four Will Attend Berkshire Center

Four Columbus musicians will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opening June 29 for six weeks.

They are: Curtis D. Bechtel, 1486 Pennsylvania Ave.; Robert E. Middleton, 183 W. Frambes Ave.; Randal W. Near, 1554 E. Blake Ave., and David L. Hite, 2413 Indiana Ave. The school is conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES

JUN 24 1947

BERKSHIRE CENTER WILL OPEN JUNE 29

Festival Will Begin July 13; 400 Are Now Enrolled

The Berkshire Music Center, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening ~~exercises~~ Sunday afternoon, June 29, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six-week session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

In addition to fourteen festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and programs presented during the season by student groups, those attending the school will hear on the first three Wednesday evenings in July three chamber music concerts presented to the Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and on the fourth Wednesday, a program by the Juillard Quartet given by the Juillard School of Music in New York. This concert will be correlated with Mr. Copland's course in American Music. These programs and orchestral, chamber, choral, and operatic performances of the school will be open by invitation to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

AMARILLO, TEXAS
TIMES

JUN 24 1947

Barron Will Attend Music Center Session

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — Robert Louis Barron, director of Amarillo Philharmonic orchestra, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday, June 29, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which starts July 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of trustees of the Boston Sympsony, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six weeks session. On the faculty will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, and Aaron Copeland.

In addition to 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony, and programs presented by the student groups, those attending the school will hear on the first three Wednesday evenings in July, three chamber music concerts, and a program by the Julliard Quartet. The programs will be open by invitation to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

JUN 24 1947

Miss Robbs at Music School

Miss Mary E. Robbs, 911 East Fifth Street, will attend the fifth annual school of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., the school announced yesterday.

Conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Association under the supervision of Serge Koussevitzky, the school began June 29 and will continue until July 13, when the Berkshire Music Festival begins.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUN 24 1947

Localites at Tanglewood

Curtis D. Bechtel of 1486 Pennsylvania Av, Robert E. Middleton, 183 W. Frambes Av, Robert Randal W. Near, 1554 E. Blake Av, Sirek S. Boghossian, 2876 Indianola Av, and David L. Hite, 2413 Indiana Av, Columbus, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Center, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, June 29, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES

JUN 24 1947

Joan Rounds to Attend Berkshire Music Center

Miss Joan Rounds, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Rounds of 2168 Pennington Road, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will begin July 13.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 27 1947

AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Summer Music Center Will Open on Sunday Afternooon

Opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center, near Lenox, Mass., will take place Sunday afternoon at 3:30, when Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, ~~Stanley~~ Chapple and Lewis Perry will speak. The ceremony will conclude with the traditional singing by students of "Alleluia," specially composed for the Center by Randall Thompson.

The Gordon String Quartet will give a concert Wednesday at 8:15 P. M., a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and the student orchestra will perform next Friday night. Both events will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

PASADENA, CAL.
STAR-NEWS & POST

JUN 26 1947

At Music Center

Miss Polly Carruthers of 1015 Prospect Boulevard, Pasadena, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER

JUN 25 1947

6 SET TO STUDY AT TANGLEWOOD

Six residents of Newark and vicinity will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., being conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Opening exercises will be held Sunday. The center will run concurrently with the Berkshire Music Festival starting July 13.

The local music students enrolled are Raymond Hellman and Frank Scozza Jr., Newark; Marguerita M. McDonald, West Orange; Kathryn B. Sanger, East Orange; Erna Lee Stern, South Orange, and Mrs. Mary Hartley Wells, Upper Montclair.

DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

JUN 25 1947

Music Center Work Co-ordinated With Berkshire Festival

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., June 24.—The Berkshire Music Center, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold opening exercises Sunday afternoon and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, beginning July 13.

More than 400 students enrolled for the six-week session, including fifteen from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia, Lebanon, will hear speeches by Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Orchestra's trustees, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived from France to join Aaron Copland in teaching composition at the center. Coordinated with the latter's course in American music will be a July 23 concert by the Juilliard Quartet. On the first three Wednesdays in July chamber music concerts will be presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress. In addition to these and various student programs, the Berkshire center students will hear also the fourteen festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

ıvew Task for Mrs. Harry Elliott

ZILFA ESTCOURT

rs. Harry Elliott of San Franco has been appointed as a spon- for the "Little Red House" ject of the National Federation Music Clubs. Announcement of appointment has just been made Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of tland, Maine, immediate past ident of the organization, who ds the project to rebuild the his- home of Nathaniel Hawthorne Tanglewood in the Berkshires as ctice studios for the Berkshire sic School.

he late Charles Wakefield Cad- represented California, and death left a vacancy on the nsorship list which is filled by appointment of Mrs. Elliott. so serving as a sponsor for Cali- nia is Mrs. Leonora Wood Arms- of the San Francisco Symphony chestra Association.

istoric Interest

Rebuilding of the "Little Red use," which was destroyed by fire 1890, was inspired by the acute ed for additional practice facili- es at the summer music school ich Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, con- ctor of the Boston Symphony chestra maintains at Lenox, Mass. It is attended by hundreds of students from all parts of the country each year.

The house has historic and literary interest because it was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne during 1850 and 1851 and one of the most notable of American novels, "The House of Seven Gables," was written there.

The original foundations are being used in the re-erection of the house, and the structure will be an exact replica of the original in so far as the exterior is concerned. The estimated cost is $15,000, which is being raised largely by contributions from music lovers.

California Students

Construction is now under way and it is anticipated that the building will be ready for dedication by midsummer. The project interests Californians not only because of the prominence of the two local sponsors, but also because many young Californians have attended the Berkshire School. Notable among them is Eula Beal, who was the National Federation's young artist winner in 1941. She has gained recognition as a concert and radio singer and recently sang with the symphony in San Francisco on Memorial day.

Mrs. Elliott, long a prominent pianist, is widely known for her work in city, State and national music federation affairs. She served on the board of San Francisco Musical Club as director of publicity for several terms.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 27 1947

hree Concert Programs At Tanglewood Listed

Programs were announced yes- rday for three concerts to be en at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., rough the generosity of the izabeth Sprague Collidge Foun- tion in the Library of Congress, Wednesday nights, July 2, 9 d 16. These will be open by invi- tion to subscribing members of e Society of riends of the Berk- ire Music Center. In the first ncert, next Wednesday, the Gor- n String Quartet, with Jascha issi, violist, will play d'Indy's cond quartet, David Stanley ith's tenth quartet and Bohu- Martinu's quintet for strings July 9 the Albeneri Trio, as- by Milton Katims, violist, play trios by Artur Schnabel, or Villa-Lobos and Schubert. July 16 the Berkshires Wood Ensemble, assisted by Ber- Zighera, harpist and pianist, play a Mozart quartet for wind ruments, Korsand's Fantasy ntet, Darius Milhaud's "La minee du Roi Rene," a rhap- by Arthur Honegger and Ed- d Burlingame Hill's sextet, Op. 39. Information about membership in the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is obtainable from the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

29 1947

erkshire Center pens 5th Season

ore than 80 New Yorkers will d the Fifth season of the Berk- Music Center at Tanglewood, ox, Mass. The school, conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra er the direction of Serge Kous- itzky, will hold its opening ex- ises this Sunday afternoon, and l run concurrently with the kshire Festival which starts y 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Ca- t, president of the trustees of the ston Symphony Orchestra, and Lewis Perry, chairman of the iends of the Berkshire Music nter, will speak to more than 0 students enrolled for the six- eks session, including 15 from rope, Canada, South America, stralia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prom- nt musicians will be Arthur negger, Swiss composer, recently ived in New York from France join Aaron Copland in the teach- of composition at the school.

In addition to 14 festival con- rts by the Boston Symphony Or- estra and programs presented ring the season by student roups, those attending the school will hear, on the first three Wednesday evenings in July, three chamber-music concerts presented to the Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and on the ourth Wednesday, a program by he Juillard Quartet given by the uillard School of Music.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 29 1947

Isabelle Evans'

Thoughts A

Evidence of the constructive energies of musical Buffalonians during the Summer months is reflected in the announcement that Harry S. Taub of Norwalk Ave. and Frank K. Dale of Ashland Ave. will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at anglewood, Lenox, Mass. The chool, conducted by the Boston ymphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, is olding its opening exercises this fternoon. It will run concurrenty with the Berkshire Festival starting July 13th.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will address more than 400 students enrolled for the six-week session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 29 1947

Music Center Opens

Koussevitzky Will Welcome Berkshire Students Today

The Berkshire Music Center is holding its opening exercises today at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The speakers will be Serge Koussevitzky, the school's director; Henry B. Cabot, chairman of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. More than four hundred students are enrolled for the six-week summer session.

Students will attend, in addition to their regular classes, the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony, which start July 13, as well as student programs and a series of chamber music concerts on four Wednesdays in July. The fourth of these, to be given by the Juilliard Quartet, will be correlated with Aaron Copland's course in American music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 30 1947

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY IN PLEA FOR ARTS

Director at the Tanglewoor Opening Sees Support of Culture as Peace Aid

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., June 29—Speaking to an audience of 800 this afternoon at the opening of the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that a part of the duty of the democratic state should be "the ultimate support of the arts."

"This Government," he continued, "while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace; they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The director said the nation had reached a "dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of The Friends of Tanglewood, presided. Other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school. In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theatre hall, a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Me. to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrollment of 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries for six weeks of study.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 30 1947

5th Tanglewood Season Opened by Koussevitzky

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., June 29.—In an address at opening this afternoon for the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, said the ultimate support of the arts should come from the democratic state.

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes," he said.

"The nation has reached a dangerous impasse in music which has spread to the masses at too rapid a pace, resulting in a profound misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be heard creatively. The artist musician should correct the fundamental error now prevalent."

Dr. Lewis Perry, retired educator, now president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided, and other speakers were Frank W. Hatch, of Boston; Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple. A group of students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 1 - 1947

5th Tanglewood Season Opened by Koussevitzky

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., June 29.—In an address at opening Sunday afternoon for the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, said the ultimate support of the arts should come from the democratic state.

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes," he said.

"The nation has reached a dangerous impasse in music which has spread to the masses at too rapid a pace, resulting in a profound misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be heard creatively. The artist musician should correct the fundamental error now prevalent."

Dr. Lewis Perry, retired educator, now president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided, and other speakers were Frank W. Hatch, of Boston; Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple. A group of students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

Honegger in Lenox for Festival

Jul 1

His 'Symphony for Strings' To Open First Program

Arthur Honegger, whose "Symphony for Strings" will open the first program of the Berkshire Festival in the Shed at Tanglewood, arrived in Lenox last night to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the Berkshire Music Center. He flew from Paris, landing in New York early yesterday morning.

Born in LeHavre, France, of Swiss parents, he grew up in Zurich and completed his musical education at the Paris Conservatory. After the first world war he was one of the most prominent members of the "Group des Six" of young Frenchmen who came under the influence of Erik Satie and Jean Cocteau.

Coming to America in 1929, he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guests in his "Pacific 231," inspired by an American locomotive, and "Rugby," which attempted to depict in music the motions and physical tension of a football game. The symphony that will be played by the Boston orchestra, under Serge Koussetvizky's direction on July 24, was written in Paris during World War II. Widely known for his oratorio, "King David" he will introduce another oratoria "Jean d'Arc au Bucher" in New York next season.

JUL 7 1947

THE HARTFORD TI

Group to Attend Berkshire Event

Residents of Connecticut who have reserved boxes for the 10 concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 24 to Aug. 10 are, from Hartford: Mrs. Beatrice Fox Auerbach; from West Hartford, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Rosenstein; New Haven, Mrs. Charles M. Andrews; Salisbury, William C. Cannon, Mrs. Donald J. Warner and Miss Edith Scoville; Avon, Mrs. John H. Gibbons; Stamford, Ira Wilson Hirschfield; Sharon, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson; Colebrook, Mrs. William Mathew Lewis; Westport, Mrs. Samuel Strassler.

Hartford Times

JUL 7 1947

Tanglewood Lists Week's Concerts

Students and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts this week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katims, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and cello, and for violin, cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Soicety of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

The chorus Department 5 will give a concert at 4:30 Thursday afternoon and in the evening at 8:15 the students of Department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of Department 2 will give its second program Friday evening at 8:15 in the Festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and subscriptions to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

[16]

[illegible]

JUL 8 1947

Field Day at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced by the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of the coming motion picture, films will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and other contemporary composers. For the occassion the music shed will became a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience.

Tanglewood

Second Chamber Music Program Tomorrow

The Albeneri Trio will play tomorrow evening at Tanglewood the second of three weekly chamber music concerts presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

The program, which will open at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall, will consist of a trio by Schnabel; a string trio by Villa-Lobos; and a trio in E flat major by Schubert. The public is invited to the concert. There will be seats in the reserved section for students and Friends of the Center.

The trio, whose members are Alexander Schneider, violin; Benar Heifetz, violoncello; and Erich Itor Kahn, piano; will be assisted by Milton Katims, viola. The group is named by combining the first letters of the names of the artists.

Mr. Schneider, who was a member of the Budapest Quartet, later played with Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist. Mr. Heifetz was formerly with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and the NBC Orchestra. Mr. Kahn, an accompanist, teaches composition. Mr. Katims, who was assistant director of the Budapest Quartet, is a conductor.

'FIELD DAY' AT LENOX TO BE HELD ON JULY 29

[illegible]

A musical "field day" featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, and various instruments for musical reproduction, will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, July 29.

The field day, which is not part of the regular festival, has been designed to show the three scientific developments by which a greatly widened public has been introduced to symphonic music: the phonograph, the radio and sound motion pictures. Before the evening concert, visitors will have an opportunity to hear and see excerpts from films the background music of which has been composed by contemporary composers, including Copland, Honegger, Prokofieff, Thompson and Walton. The showing will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

The evening concert will take place in the Music Shed and will be divided into two portions: the weekly broadcast, which will feature Ella Goldstein, pianist, and a musical demonstration called "The March of Fidelity." The latter will be a comparison of the sound of the live orchestra with phonograph records of the same music. Recordings dating back to 1915 will be played on phonographs of the period, and then the orchestra will perform the same music. The final number in this demonstration will be Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture in a recent recording by the Boston Symphony, played on a newly designed custom-made machine.

10:45, 1:30, 4:45, 8:00

'Music for All' Field Day at Tanglewood July 29

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size syphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other contemporary composers.

'Music for All' Program

[illegible]

Boston Symphony to Give Concert July 29 at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced yesterday that it will present a special program titled "Music for All" Tuesday, July 29, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., closing with an evening concert under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The audience will have the opportunity of comparing the playing of the orchestra with recordings of the same music made by the Boston Symphony in 1915, when it made its first records under Dr. Karl Muck; in 1935, and recently. Each record will be played on a phonograph of the period in which it was made.

Early in the concert, which will be broadcast from 8:30 to 9:30 over WABC, motion pictures will be made of the audience, to form part of a film called "The Story of Tanglewood." Before the concert, parts of films with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are members of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, and other prominent contemporary composers will be shown. The latest record in the concert will be played on a new model RCA-Victor radio-phonograph named "The Berkshire"; its first 200 sets are to be sold on a subscription basis for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's scholarhip fund.

Classified

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Student Orchestra

For the first time since 1943, Director Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow evening at 8.15 in Bach's suite in D major and Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini." Claude Frank, a student in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class, will conduct Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra No. 2," and Irving Fine, a member of the faculty who is also studying conducting, will lead the orchestra in "Divertimento," by Haieff.

The concert, which will be the second of the season in the large shed, will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The public may join the organization by a voluntary contribution to the support of the school.

Berkshire Evening

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Thursday, July 10, 1947.

LESSON IN OOMPH: Serge Koussevitzky indicates the need of a little more con brio for the benefit of 21-year-old Claude Frank, one of the outstanding students in the conductor's course in conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. A native of Nuernberg, Germany, Frank went to France in 1938 to study piano with Artur Schnabel, left for America two days before the Germans entered Paris. He resumed his studies with Schnabel in New York and attended Columbia University until he went into the U.S. Army in 1944. He served in Europe and later with occupation troops in Japan. He is now preparing for his New York debut as a pianist in December.

Tanglewood

Opera Scenes Tonight

The first opera performance of the season at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall will include scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Rigoletto," "Cosi fan Tutte," "Lohengrin," "Carmen," "Don Giovanni" and "Rosenkavalier." The performance was prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik and Frederick Cohen.

Designer Visits Conductor

Robert Edmond Jones, famous theatrical designer, has spent the past two days in Lenox, consulting with Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the management on plans for staging the "music for all" field day July 29. Mr. Jones interrupted his vacation in Milton, N.H., to come to Tanglewood.

Midwest Orchestra Represented

Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Ensele of Indianapolis were at Tanglewood during the entire day and evening yesterday. Mrs. Ensele is secretary of the women's committee of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, five members of which are students at the Berkshire Music Center.

ATHENS, OHIO
MESSENGER

MAY 26 1947

3 Accepted For Berkshire Music Center

Ohio University today became one of the first schools in the state to have at least three students accepted for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., said DeForest W. Ingerham, conductor of the university orchestra.

The three men, all World War II veterans who will enroll in the school under the G.I. Bill of Rights, are William Gromko, a sophomore from New Haven, Conn.; Frank Bellino, junior from West New York, N. J.; and David Flanagan, alumnus from Mingo Junction. They were chosen to study for six weeks at the Center, founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940.

Both Gromko, a violist, and Flanagan, a violinist in the Columbus Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, were accepted for the highest section, the orchestral and chamber music department. The orchestral division is directed by Serge Koussevitzky, assisted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Gromko will be under the supervision of William Primrose, eminent violinist who is acting head of the chamber music section.

Bellino, a violinist, will be enrolled in the ensemble playing section, with an opportunity to try out for the orchestral division.

The Berkshire Music Center is located on the extensive grounds of Tanglewood, which was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was here that Hawthorne lived for a year, imagined his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables."

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH

JUN 27 1947

MISS KATHLEEN HIGGOTT

City, Scarsdale Girl To Study Music At Berkshire Center

Miss Kathleen Higgott of this city and Miss Margot R. Spillman of Scarsdale will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which is to be conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The center will hold its opening exercises Sunday and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Miss Higgott is the daughter of Mrs. Marguerite Higgott of 20 North Broadway. She is studying piano and theory with George Armstrong of Carnegie Hall and will give a recital in Carnegie Chamber Hall in October.

A member of the White Plains Gilbert and Sullivan Society, she was in the chorus of "The Gondoliers" which the group produced in the Spring. A former resident of Ridgewood, N. J., Miss Higgott was graduated last June from White Plains High School.

Miss Spillman's parents are Dr. and Mrs. Ramsay Spillman of 29 Alkamont Avenue, Scarsdale. She has been studying singing with Mrs. Eva Gauthier in New York.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 29 1947

Opening Program

The opening program on July 24 will consist of Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' Second Symphony. Listed for July 26 are Samuel Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" and Copland's Third Symphony. Leonard Bernstein will close the A series on July 27 conducting Schubert's Seventh Symphony and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." He will conduct again on Aug. 7, when the program will be Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 and a Hindemith Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Robert Shaw will conduct the Aug. 9 concert in which the Festival Chorus will assist in Mozart's Requiem and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." Koussevitzky will bring the festival to a close on Aug. 10 conducting Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra and Two Pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and Tschaikowski's Fourth Symphony.

MORNING UNION

N 28 1947

rkshire Center Will Open Sunday nox, June 27—Berkshire Music r is to open Sunday at 3.30 at ewood for its fifth season. Dr. Perry, retired educator and man of the Society of Friends Center, is to preside. Speakers include Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple. Frank Hatch, Boston, will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees. A group of about 100 students had registered for the six week's term [illegible] - Times

JUL 8 1947

Field Day at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitsky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced by the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of the coming motion picture, films will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and other contemporary composers. For the occassion the music shed will became a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience.

10:45, 1:30, 4:45, 8:00

'Music for All' Field Day at Tanglewood July 29

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size syphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other contemporary composers.

Tanglewood

Second Chamber Music Program Tomorrow

The Albeneri Trio will play tomorrow evening at Tanglewood the second of three weekly chamber music concerts presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

The program, which will open at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall, will consist of a trio by Schnabel; a string trio by Villa-Lobos; and a trio in E flat major by Schubert. The public is invited to the concert. There will be seats in the reserved section for students and Friends of the Center.

The trio, whose members are Alexander Schneider, violin; Benar Heifetz, violoncello; and Erich Itor Kahn, piano; will be assisted by Milton Katims, viola. The group is named by combining the first letters of the names of the artists.

Mr. Schneider, who was a member of the Budapest Quartet, later played with Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist. Mr. Heifetz was formerly with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and the NBC Orchestra. Mr. Kahn, an accompanist, teaches composition. Mr. Katims, who was assistant director of the Budapest Quartet, is a conductor.

'FIELD DAY' AT LENOX TO BE HELD ON JULY 29

N.Y. Times July 9

A musical "field day" featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, and various instruments for musical reproduction, will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, July 29.

The field day, which is not part of the regular festival, has been designed to show the three scientific developments by which a greatly widened public has been introduced to symphonic music: the phonograph, the radio and sound motion pictures. Before the evening concert, visitors will have an opportunity to hear and see excerpts from films the background music of which has been composed by contemporary composers, including Copland, Honegger, Prokofieff, Thompson and Walton. The showing will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

The evening concert will take place in the Music Shed and will be divided into two portions: the weekly broadcast, which will feature Ella Goldstein, pianist, and a musical demonstration called "The March of Fidelity." The latter will be a comparison of the sound of the live orchestra with phonograph records of the same music. Recordings dating back to 1915 will be played on phonographs of the period, and then the orchestra will perform the same music. The final number in this demonstration will be Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture in a recent recording by the Boston Symphony, played on a newly designed custom-made machine.

'Music for All' Program

Boston Symphony to Give Concert July 29 at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced yesterday that it will present a special program titled "Music for All" Tuesday, July 29, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., closing with an evening concert under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The audience will have the opportunity of comparing the playing of the orchestra with recordings of the same music made by the Boston Symphony in 1915, when it made its first records under Dr. Karl Muck; in 1935, and recently. Each record will be played on a phonograph of the period in which it was made.

Early in the concert, which will be broadcast from 8:30 to 9:30 over WABC, motion pictures will be made of the audience, to form part of a film called "The Story of Tanglewood." Before the concert, parts of films with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are members of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, and other prominent contemporary composers will be shown. The latest record in the concert will be played on a new model RCA-Victor radio-phonograph named "The Berkshire"; its first 200 sets are to be sold on a subscription basis for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's scholarhip fund.

Classified

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Student Orchestra

For the first time since 1943, Director Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow evening at 8.15 in Bach's suite in D major and Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini." Claude Frank, a student in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class, will conduct Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra No. 2," and Irving Fine, a member of the faculty who is also studying conducting, will lead the orchestra in "Divertimento," by Haieff.

The concert, which will be the second of the season in the large shed, will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The public may join the organization by a voluntary contribution to the support of the school.

Berkshire Evening

ittsfield, Massachusetts. Thursday, July 10, 1947.

LESSON IN OOMPH: Serge Koussevitzky indicates the need of a little more con brio for the benefit of 21-year-old Claude Frank, one of the outstanding students in the conductor's course in conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. A native of Nuernberg, Germany, Frank went to France in 1938 to study piano with Artur Schnabel, left for America two days before the Germans entered Paris. He resumed his studies with Schnabel in New York and attended Columbia University until he went into the U.S. Army in 1944. He served in Europe and later with occupation troops in Japan. He is now preparing for his New York debut as a pianist in December.

Tanglewood

Opera Scenes Tonight

The first opera performance of the season at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall will include scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Rigoletto," "Cosi fan Tutte," "Lohengrin," "Carmen," "Don Giovanni" and "Rosenkavalier." The performance was prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik and Frederick Cohen.

Designer Visits Conductor

Robert Edmond Jones, famous theatrical designer, has spent the past two days in Lenox, consulting with Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the management on plans for staging the "music for all" field day July 29. Mr. Jones interrupted his vacation in Milton, N.H., to come to Tanglewood.

Midwest Orchestra Represented

Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Ensele of Indianapolis were at Tanglewood during the entire day and evening yesterday. Mrs. Ensele is secretary of the women's committee of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, five members of which are students at the Berkshire Music Center.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH

JUN 27 1947

MISS KATHLEEN HIGGOTT

City, Scarsdale Girl To Study Music At Berkshire Center

Miss Kathleen Higgott of this ccity and Miss Margot R. Spillman of Scarsdale will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which is to be conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The center will hold its opening excrcises Sunday and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Miss Higgott is the daughter of Mrs. Marguerite Higgott of 20 North Broadway. She is studying piano and theory with George Armstrong of Carnegie Hall and will give a recital in Carnegie Chamber Hall in October.

A member of the White Plains Gilbert and Sullivan Society, she was in the chorus of "The Gondoliers" which the group produced in the Spring. A former resident of Ridgewood, N. J., Miss Higgott was graduated last June from White Plains High School.

Miss Spillman's parents are Dr. and Mrs. Ramsay Spillman of 29 Alkamont Avenue, Scarsdale. She has been studying singing with Mrs. Eva Gauthier in New York.

ATHENS, OHIO
MESSENGER

MAY 26 1947

3 Accepted For Berkshire Music Center

Ohio University today became one of the first schools in the state to have at least three students accepted for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., said DeForest W. Ingerham, conductor of the university orchestra.

The three men, all World War II veterans who will enroll in the school under the G.I. Bill of Rights, are William Gromko, a sophomore from New Haven, Conn.; Frank Bellino, junior from West New York, N. J.; and David Flanagan, alumnus from Mingo Junction. They were chosen to study for six weeks at the Center, founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940.

Both Gromko, a violist, Flanagan, a violinist in the [illegible]lumbus Philharmonic Sym[illegible] Orchestra, were accepted [illegible] highest section, the orche[illegible] chamber music departme[illegible] orchestral division is [illegible] Serge Koussevitzky, [illegible] members of the Bost[illegible] Orchestra. Gromko [illegible] the supervision of [illegible]rose, eminent vio[illegible]ng head of the [illegible] section.

Bellino, a [illegible]rolled in the [illegible]tion, with [illegible]out for th[illegible]

The Ber[illegible] located [illegible] of Tang[illegible]ed to [illegible] chest[illegible] thorne [illegible] his "Tangle[illegible] "The House of

---

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 29 1947

Opening Program

The opening program on July 24 will consist of Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' Second Symphony. Listed for July 26 are Samuel Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" and Copland's Third Symphony. Leonard Bernstein will close the A series on July 27 conducting Schubert's Seventh Symphony and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." He will conduct again on Aug. 7, when the program will be Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 and a Hindemith Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Robert Shaw will conduct the Aug. 9 concert in which the Festival Chorus will assist in Mozart's Requiem and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." Koussevitsky will bring the festival to a close on Aug. 10 conducting Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra and Two Pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and Tschaikowski's Fourth Symphony.

MORNING UNION

JUN 28 1947

Berkshire Center Will Open Sunday

Lenox, June 27—Berkshire Music Center is to open Sunday at 3.30 at Tanglewood for its fifth season. Dr. Lewis Perry, retired educator and chairman of the Society of Friends of the Center, is to preside. Speakers will include Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple. Frank Hatch, Boston, will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees. A group of about 100 students had registered for the six week's term

8—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 10, 1947

lbeneri Trio's Concert eceived Enthusiastically

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The second chamber music con rt in the theatre-concert hall at nglewood last night in the series three which is being presented the Berkshire Music Center ith the co-operation of the Eliz eth Sprague Coolidge Founda on in the Library of Congress as a program by the Albeneri io. The enthusiasm aroused by e famous ensemble accumulated s the remarkable program pro ressed until at the final note they ere accorded some of the most pontaneous and demonstrative ac laim ever tendered a visiting mu cal organization.

xciting Evening

It was an exciting evening in everal aspects; the program was remendously interesting, and the erformances were on the loftiest lane. Two of the trios were of he year 1945: that of Artur Schna el was receiving its premier per ormance; the other, by Heitor Villa-Lobos, had had only one pre ious playing, at the Library of Congress. The members of the rio are Alexander Schneider, vio in, Benar Heifetz, cello, and Erich tor Kahn, piano. The Schnabel piece, in three movements, is for midably difficult to absorb. The trange part of his writing is his totally and diametrically opposed position as a composer to his man er of piano playing, in which he has won such renown as a Beethoven interpreter and purist. Last night he showed himself a disciple of the Schoenberg and Alban Berg School, indicating and requiring modes of expression which his personal performances will scarcely lead one to believe were by one and the same individual.

The preparation had been apparently diligent, but still did not suffice to give contour, line, or goal to this listener. It hardly sems fair to dismiss with a short impertinence the product of serious and no doubt long application by an artist so universally revered as is Schnabel. Mood he has not made unplausible, but coherence has indeed been strained beyond ordinary limits in respect to both the single instrument and the ensemble.

The Villa Lobos which followed was thus comparatively transparent. It is written for string trio, and here the pianist was replaced by a viola for which the assisting artist was Milton Katims. Lobos first of all writes within much more popular and extrovert style. The canonical introduction was never in doubt, nor was the construction obscured. The themes are pleasing and conform to an easy understanding, with possibly a flavor of a movie background, while the decorative accompaniment of whichever two instruments may be supplying the setting and frame are illuminating and in readily acceptable idioms, even though they tax even the virtuosity of three such sterling artists as occupied the boards last night. The music is voiced in the best registers of the instruments and the tonal grouping is done with special judgment. The tonal beauty of the performance was enhanced by episodes of heroic dramatic portrayal, and, in turn, feats of technical audacity which were nothing less than thrilling. Lobos' interpolation of hip-swaying dance rhythms and passages of furious agitation relieved by melodies of alluring charm gave the composition pace and intrigue, and the virtuosity of the execution carried the audience to heights of vehement approval.

After intermission the Albeneris returned to play the Schubert E flat major trio, Opus 100. After two courses of such exotic fare, the endearing music of Schubert may have seemed doubly dolce, but last night's performance was the superlative culmination of all the factors which are needed to make such a masterful and unified rendition. Above and beyond the beauties of the individual playing and the sensitive interplay and high musical consideration, was the magnificent over-all conception of this lovable music. This, one could recognize, was authority. From the refined details to the gratifyingly contrasted tempos, from the tonal beauty in the most subdued passages, the proper balance of the instruments, to the eloquent restraint in the statement of the themes, to the freely released utterances of the bolder and gayer spirits, there was nothing to mar the perfection of great music ideally realized.

Mrs. Coolidge Acclaimed

Mrs. Coolidge, seated in the front row of the hall, was again acclaimed not alone for her generosity but for the keen perspicacity with which the series has been organized and the shrewd discrimination with which the programs have been arranged. The final concert in this series will be the Berkshire Wood Wind ensemble on We nesday next, July 16.

M mphis Girl

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 253,946)

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

JUN 29 1947

Other Music Notes

A PROGRAM of Spanish music will be presented by Spanish students of Western Reserve University, Tuesday at 8 p. m., in Harkness Chapel. Joseph Koch, violin; Raymond Gerkowski, 'cello and Jeannette Cherubini, piano, will be soloists.

The newly organized Shaker Summer Symphony is holding auditions for instrumentalists Mondays at 7 p. m. at the Shaker Heights High School. Boswell Jones is director of the group.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., which is regarded as the "American Salzburg" opens its 1947 season on July 13. Serge Koussevitzky is director of the center.

Programs will be given on Sunday afternoons, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights. The opening program will be an all Bach concert, including the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and 6 and the Concerto for two pianos in C major. Soloists will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

Highlight of this year's festival will be a Beethoven cycle on July 31, Aug. 2, 3 and 5th. It will include all nine symphonies and the Piano Concertos No. 4 and 5. Jacob Lateiner and Joseph Battista will be soloists.

The concluding concerts of the season Aug. 7th through 10th will feature Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw as guest conductors. The program will include the Hindemith Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Haydn Symphony in B flat No. 102 and Schumann's Second Symphony.

ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 25 1947

Local Pair to Study Under Koussevitzky

Two Allentown men, George E. Silfies Jr. and Robert Ingersoll Karol will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where they will be instructed under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Silfies, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Silfies, 1110 Club Ave., has finished two years at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, which recommended him for a scholarship at the school conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Prior to attendance at Curtis Institute, he was clarinet soloist with the Allentown band, and was also affiliated with the Lehigh Valley school in 1945, where he had also been active in music.

Karol is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Karol, 331 S. 16th St. At the age of 13, he was the first violinist in 111 years to appear as soloist with the Allentown band in a series of concerts. A graduate of Allentown High school with the class of 1943, he was active as student leader of the school band and orchestra. He studied for some time with Sascha Jacobinoff, concert violinist of Philadelphia, before entering the navy where he was a member of the Sampson, N. Y. training center icemen's choir.

Music in a Democracy

From [illegible] June 30, '47

The following is a sizable excerpt from t speech of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the fi opening of the Berkshire Music Center Tanglewood yesterday.

By SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The grave and tragic instances of present day life have shown that an artist is also a leader in society: he cannot withdraw from the open strife into the safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and aesthetic dreams. For art is a creative process. Art is the result of the creative act of man.

It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their constructive effort. He must awaken the people from a passive acceptance of the values of art to an active interest in the work of art. For it was well said that the basic force of universal culture lies in the active participation of the masses.

In music, we have reached a dangerous impasse. From the beginning of the 20th century, music, once the privilege of the "initiated," became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a "mass initiation" of the listener into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music in the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of "entertainment" and "enjoyment" to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value.

It is for the artist musician to correct that fundamental error, to combat the inertia of the passive consumer, and recreate in the mind and consciousness of the wide listener the true meaning of music, as an art of eternal value.

• • •

The great creative artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations. Today, we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden or responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers, whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century. Are we prepared to meet this formidable assignment? Have we the courage to break away from the banality of mere "enjoyment" to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs?

Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals?

Is our mind free from the smallness and limitations of our "ego"?

Is our heart burning within us? The cause of music asks for not action alone: It asks for an all-consuming love, renunciation of self, and will for sacrifice.

Beethoven, that titan in music, that great master, man and martyr, wrote: "Let us sacrifice life for art: let it be a sanctuary. . . ."

This, indeed, is the first step on the road of our spiritual reform. With new concentrated energy we shall enter a world of conflict and lay open the creative meaning of music and the arts in the complex structure of life.

The progress of the evoluti of music, this highest attainme in art, is not unlike the evoluti of democracy, representing t highest ideals of the political a social form of government. Bo aspire to spiritual equality a freedom.

Music in the past experienc the aristocratic rule of the Ma cenas that kept music in a lof and noble, yet restricted sphe Since the advent of the 20th Ce tury and our industrial age, t influence of the Maecenas w gradually succeeded by larg groups, firms, agencies and co porations, the patronage of whic offered many advantages and cr ated a wide public, yet held t danger of mechanization an commercialization.

The ultimate support of t arts, to which the evolution life points, must come from th democratic state.

My appeal from Tanglewoo a year ago, was not a voice in t wilderness: it was heard, and will be heard again and aga until action is taken and the su port of the arts becomes a part the duty of the state.

America, the holder of gre democratic ideals and tradition who gave the world that i mortal and unsurpassed huma document—the Declaration of I dependence, must awaken to thi consciousness.

This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked an ravaged by war, must be re minded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes.

Art and culture are the guardians of peace: they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

Every American must be reminded of these words by Jefferson written over a century ago:

"I shall not die without the hope that light and liberty are on a steady advance . . . and even should the cloud of barbarism and despotism again obscure the science and liberties of Europe, this country remains to preserve and restore light and liberty to them . . ." Great words of deep prophetic insight.

Today, of all time, the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world.

Never before has history offered so vast an opportunity to prove to ourselves that we indeed have a right to live and serve humanity, that we are men of heart, mind and soul.

Let our ascending love and passion for art descend in love and compassion to mankind!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

JUN 29 1947

CURTIS D. BECHTEL of 1486 Pennsylvania-av; Robert E. Middleton, 183 W. Frambes-av; Randal W. Near, 1554 E. Blake-av, and David L. Hite, 2413 Indiana-av, will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises this afternoon and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak to more than 400 students enrolled for the six weeks' session, including 15 from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer, recently arrived in New York from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition at the school.

There will be 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and numerous programs presented during the season by student groups. Those attending the school also will hear, on the first three Wednesday evenings in July, three chamber music concerts presented to the center by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, and on the fourth Wednesday, a program by the Juillard Quartet given by the Juillard School of Music in New York. This concert will be correlated with Mr. Copland's course in American music.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUN 29 1947

* * *

Organ Recital

HARRIETTE Slack Richardson, graduate of the Eastman School, will offer an organ recital at 4 p. m. Wednesday in Kilbourn Hall, the public being invited. Mrs. Richardson holds the Eastman School's artist diploma, highest performance award in the gift of the school.

* * *

At Berkshire Center

MRS. EVELYN MYERS CURRIE of 75 Irvington Rd. is in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The school, opening today, runs concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which begins July 13.

Mrs. Currie, graduate of the University of Rochester, has directed the university's women's and freshmen glee clubs for the past three years.

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 26 1947

At Tanglewood

Miss Eleanor J. Diamond of 80 Sherman Avenue, Mr. William V Gromoko of 65 Sheldon Terrace and Miss Joan Brainerd of Hamden will attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises this afternoon and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which will start July 13.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUN 29 1947

Music

—By Edgar Van Olinda—

OPENING exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will take place this afternoon on the Tanglewood grounds at 3:30 p. m. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Aaron Copland, assistant center director; Stanley Chapple, assistant dean, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the "Friends" society, will be the speakers. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the trustees of the orchestra, by whom the school is conducted.

As at all opening and closing exercises of the center, the program will conclude with the singing by vocal students of "Allelulia" written for the first opening in 1940 by Randall Thompson, and conducted by Hugh Ross. Tea will be served in the garden. The first chamber music concert by the students will be played Sunday morning, July 6, at 10:30 a. m. by Department 2. The festival will start Sunday afternoon, July 13, with the two-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff in an all-Bach program in the theatre-concert hall.

• • •

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUN 24 1947

THOMAS E. NEWELL JR., of 314 Siebenthaler avenue will attend the fifth session of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The meeting opens Sunday and will run concurrently with the Berkshire festival which will start July 13.

[18]

BRONX, N. Y.
HOME NEWS

JUL 3 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By LEONARD LYONS

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument wil be called the "Berkshire."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 26 1947

1947 Berkshire Music Center Season to Open Next Sunday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder and director of the Berkshire Music center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of Friends of the center and member of the famous Perry family of Williamstown, will speak Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock at Tanglewood in ceremonies which will usher in the 1947 season of the center.

The Berkshire Music center, operated in conjunction with but separate from the Berkshire Symphonic festival, was established to provide opportunities for music study in connection with the festival, and also presents an annual series of concerts before and during the festival, which are open only to members of the Society of Friends of the center, who acquire membership by voluntary contributions to its support.

In addition to Dr. Koussevitzky and Dr. Perry, other speakers will be Aaron Copland, assistant director, Stanley Chapple, dean, and Frank Hatch of Boston, representing the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program will close with the students singing "Alleluia," written for the first opening in 1940 by Randall Thompson. Tea will follow in the garden.

The Gordon String quartet will present a concert of chamber music Wednesday evening at 8.15 o'clock in the theater concert hall, and on Friday night, July 4, at 8.15 o'clock, the student orchestra of Department 2 (orchestral playing and chamber music) will present its first orchestral concert in the festival music shed. The first chamber music by the same students will be presented Sunday morning, July 6, at 10.30 o'clock. Each of these events will be open to members of the Friends of the Center.

The first public concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra is scheduled for Sunday afternoon, July 13, when a Bach program will be presented, with a program of Mozart to be offered the following Sunday. These two concerts will be the first of a series of four "extra" concerts preceding the opening of the festival proper on Thursday evening, July 24, when the first concert in Series A will be presented.

Tanglewood Opens Sunday

JUL 9 1947

Full Week of Programs

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, July 13, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3:30 with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8:15. Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of department 5.

* * *

WEDNESDAY evening at 8:15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rhapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; anl Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

* * *

THE CHORUS of department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4:30 and at 8:15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 25 1947

Value of Tanglewood to Berkshires Cited

Friends Report 1001st Member At Meeting

Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, receives a check from the 1001st member of the society whose voluntary contributions help finance the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood. With him are Miss Lillian MacDougal of Boston (seated) secretary, and Miss Carol Dwight of Stockbridge, a staff member of the Friends.

LENOX — The importance of Tanglewood as a community enterprise and a world music center was the theme of the first meeting of the Tanglewood Advisory Committee and the administrative, office and grounds staff yesterday noon at the Curtis Hotel.

"I wish every student interested in music could come to this school," Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, declared, after describing the replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "little red cottage" that the federation is presenting to the Berkshire Music Center. "I think it is the greatest privilege that can come to young people."

Mrs. Gannett said that the cottage, which will provide three practice studios, will be on the outside as nearly as possible exactly like the original house.

Marvels at Benefits

Robert K. Wheeler, of Great Barrington, speaking for the advisory committee, said that the residents of the community appreciate Tanglewood, and only wish they could do more for it. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, a member, describing the purpose of the committee, said that he marvels at the benefits that the genius of one man (Serge Koussevitzky, the musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center) has brought to the community.

Speaking for the Stockbridge Bowl Association, the chairman, Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, noted the change of many of the large private estates to important educational institutions, of which Tanglewood takes the lead. He praised the work of ~~Dr.~~ Koussevitzky as of great spiritual value to the community and to the country, and stressed the importance of preserving the beauty of the surroundings, one of the greatest assets of the county.

Introduced by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who presided, as "a great citizen of our country," Dr. Lewis Perry, principal emeritus of Phillips Exeter Academy, who is chairman of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, announced that more than 1000 members of the society have been enrolled. He expects this number will be doubled. "I hope to be able to do something for this great work that Dr. Koussevitzky has inaugurated," Dr. Perry said. "I have never entered upon anything with more enthusiasm," he declared.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 29 1947

Berkshire Music Center Will Open This Afternoon

THE fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open this afternoon and continue concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which begins July 13.

The center, a school conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, has a 6-week session and provides an opportunity for music study in connection with the festival concerts. Among Rhode Island students attending are Miss Elizabeth K. Bugbee, Miss Concha L. Hughes, Richard H. Craik and Robert D. Allen, of this city, and Earl L. Hedberg of Pawtucket. Prominent on the faculty will be Arthur Honegger and Aaron Copland, as well as members of the orchestra.

Beethoven Works to Be Played

All nine of Beethoven's symphonies will be played during the festival which opens Sunday afternoon, July 13, with a program devoted to the music of Bach to be followed July 20 by a concert of music by Mozart. Because seats for these concerts were sold out early, they will be repeated, respectively, on Tuesday evening, July 15, and Tuesday evening, July 22.

Bach compositions will include the first and sixth Brandenburg Concertos, Suite No. 1 in C-major and the C-minor and C-major concertos for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. Mozart will be represented by the "Jupiter" and No. 26 symphonies, the B-flat major Serenade for Wind Instruments and the Divertimento for Violin, Two Horns and Strings in B-flat major.

The usual three series, each consisting of three concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, are scheduled as follows: Series A—July 24, 26 and 27; Series B—July 31, Aug. 2 and 3; Series C—Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The Beethoven cycle will take place in the B series and conclude with an extra concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 5, which will be composed of Beethoven's Eighth and Ninth symphonies. Also to be heard in the cycle is the "Emperor" Concerto and the Fourth Piano Concerto.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 8 - 1947

Field Day

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have a "Music for All" field day on July 29 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUN 26 1947

School to Open At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be open Sunday with ceremonies beginning at 3:30 p. m. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school, will speak.

Aaron Copland, assistant director; Stanley Chapple, dean, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of Friends of the center, will be on the program, with Dr. Perry presiding. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees, which conducts the school. The students will sing "Alleluia," a chorus composed by Randall Thompson for the original opening in 1940.

The Gordon String Quartet will be heard in a chamber concert Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. Department 2 students will play a symphony concert Friday night. These events are open to members of the Society of Friends. Department 2 students will play their first chamber music at 10:30 a. m. Sunday, July 6.

JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

JUN 29 1947

Beethoven Ninth Played In Entirety By Boston Symphony

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9," better known as his "Choral Symphony," will be heard on the air in its entirety when it is broadcast over WTJS-ABC from the Berkshire Music Festival, Tuesday, August 5, at 7:30-8:45 p. m., Charles C. Barry, director of programs for ABC, announced.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the broadcast. Soloists and chorus will be announced later.

With the Beethoven score, the ABS broadcasts of the activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude for the season. Following the regular series of the fall and winter, broadcasts have been heard from Symphony Hall with Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston "Pops" Orchestra. Fiedler also will conduct this ensemble from the Esplanade on the Charles River on July 1 and 8.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 30 1947

...erkshire Music Center Opened by Dr. Koussevitzky

...00 Persons Attend Formal Opening of 1947 Season at Tanglewood—420 Musicians Enrolled for Classes—Dr. Lewis Perry Presides—Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple Among Speakers—Koussevitzky Renews Plea Ultimate Support of Arts Should be Part of Duty of Democratic State.

...ctivities at Tanglewood, Lenox, ... 1947 season began officially ...terday when Dr. Serge Kous...itzky, at ceremonies attended by ...proximately 800, opened the ...rkshire Music Center for its six ...eks of classes

420 Enrolled

...n the pine-sheathed theater con...t hall for the exercises were the ... musicians enrolled in the Music ...nter classes and approximately ...0 members of the Society of ...iends of [illegible] Music Center. Dr. ...ussevitzky [illegible] them that "the ...ght of art and culture can and will prevent future world catastrophes."

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Andover academy and president of the Society of Friends, presided during the exercises at which Aaron Copland, distinguished American composer and assistant director of the school, and Stanley Chapple, its dean, also spoke.

Dr. Koussevitzky is director of the school which operates operatic, orchestral, chamber music composition and choral departments with members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and other musicians as instructors. The various departments will start this week a series of semi-public performances, open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which will continue through the season. The latter will run during the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston orchestra and several additional Tanglewoods concerts also open to the public, the first on July 13 and the last this season on Aug. 10.

Renews Plea

Renewing a suggestion he advanced last year, Dr. Koussevitzky, in his address, said that "the ultimate support of the arts" should be a part of the duty of a democratic state.

He continued:

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes. Art and culture are the guardians of peace. They abhor war ...ution as disrupting the development, the advance ...ness of man. ...of all times the people of ...and we artists, especially ...te our lives to serve hu...eady to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The maestro sadi the nation has reached "a dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

To conclude the exercises, a chorus of 200 students sang Randall-Thompson's "Alleluia" which was written especially for the first opening of the Music Center in 1940.

The 420 students enrolled this season come from 40 states and 19 foreign countries, one of the broadest representations in its history.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

... The Boston Sym...phony orchestra will play a few ...measures, and the machine will ...play a recording of the same ...measures by the same orchestra —and the critics will try to iden...ify the original and the record...ng. The instrument will be ...alled the "Berkshire." Two ...undred will be sold to raise ...unds to be used for 200 Kousse...itzky scholarships.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

J... ...947

...rei Koussevitzky says that art "can and ...revent future world catastrophes." Ex...f course, for such occasional catastrophes ...ur in the name of art.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 30 1947

...amber Music ...Tanglewood ...dnesday

...tet No. 2 by D'Indy, Quar...10) by David Stanley Smith ...intet for two violins, two ...and cello by Martinu will be ...at Tanglewood Wednesday ...by the Gordon String

...oncert in the theatre-con...at 8.15 will be the first of ...amber music programs to ...ted on successive Wednes...ings to the Berkshire Mu...nter by the Elizabeth ...oolidge Foundation in ... of Congress. Jascha ...ll be the assisting violist ...intet.

...ith quartet and the quin... been dedicated to Mrs

...ograms will be open to ... with the reserved sec...riends of the School.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

...4... ...47

...omes now another great ...evement of the Boston Sym...ny Orchestra, under Serge ...ssevitsky, however, in a re...ing of the two works taken ...anglewood at the conclusion ...he Berkshire Festival last ...(RCA-Vic. M-DM-1123, 12-inch records). Mr. Kous...sky has given the composi... an artistic authenticity by ...g relatively the same size ...estra common in Bach's time ...ding these to four Branden... concertos he had previously ...rded at Tanglewood. Solo ... of George Laurent, first ...t in the Boston Symphony, ...otable in the Suite No. 2, ... the festive nature of the ...3, which contains the fa... "Air for the G String," is ... accurate attention.

JUL 3 - 1947

SIX CONCERTS NEXT WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

Students and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, the 13th, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, the 15th, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katim, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and Piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all students programs.

The chorus of department 5 will give a concert at 4.30 Thursday afternoon, the 10th and in the evening at 8.15 the students of department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department 2 will give its second program Friday evening, the 11th at 8.15 in the Festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 27 1947

Opening Tanglewood Exercises Slated for Sunday Afternoon

Annual Berkshire Festival Will Formally Get Under Way at 3.30; Gordon String Quartet Wednesday Evening

Opening exercises at the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday afternoon at 3.30, a chamber music concert by the Gordon String Quartet Wednesday evening, July 2 at 8.15 and a symphony concert by the student orchestra of department 2 on Friday night, July 4, will be the events open to the members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center in the first week of the school at Tanglewood. The first chamber music by students will be played Sunday morning, July 6 at 10.30 by department 2.

At the opening ceremony Serge Koussevitsky, founder and director of the school, will speak, with Aaron Copland, assistant director; Stanley Chapple, dean; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends' Society, who will preside. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by whom the school will be conducted. As at all opening and closing exercises of the Center, the program will conclude with the singing by students of "Alleluia", a chorus written for the first opening in 1940 by Randall Thompson, and conducted by Hugh Ross. Tea will follow in the garden.

Wednesday night's concert will be the gift to the Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, like the two chamber music concerts on the following Wednesday evening. They will be held in the theatre-concert hall.

The first orchestral concert on Friday evening will be in the Festival music shed.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 30 1947

Tanglewood to Have Concerts Next Month

Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will receive invitations to three chamber music concerts at Tanglewod. The concerts, made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, will be given at 8:15 in the Theater-Concert Hall on the evenings of July 2, 9 and 16.

The programs:

July 2—(Gordon String Quartet with Jascha Veissi, viola, assisting) D'Indy, Quartet No. 2; David Stanley Smith, Quartet No. 10; Martinu, Quintet.

July 9—(Albeneri Trio with Milton Katims, viola, assisting) Schnabel, Trio (violin, cello, piano); Villa-Lobos, Trio (violin, viola, cello) Schubert, Trio in E. Flat (violin, cello, piano).

July 16—(The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Bernard Zighera, harp and piano, assisting) Mozart, Concertante Quartet; Kornsand, Fantasy Quintet; Milhaud, "La Cheminee du Roi Rene"; Honegger, Rapsodie; Hill, Sextet Op. 39.

ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 27 1947

Koussevitzky To Address Students, Guests at Opening

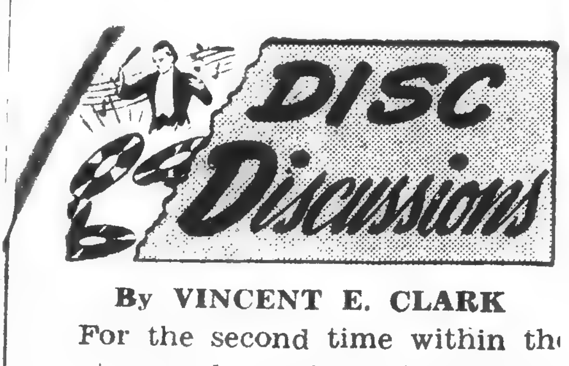
Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, will address the students and guests at the opening exercises of the school at Tanglewood Sunday at 3.30. Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will preside at the ceremony that will be open to members of the society, by invitation.

The program will include remarks by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school of more than 400, and by Stanley Chapple, the dean. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the fifth session of the center.

According to tradition, the exercises will close with the singing by students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," written for the opening exercises of the first season in 1940. The chorus will be conducted by Hugh Ross.

Tea will be served in the garden following the function.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
J... 28 1947



By VINCENT E. CLARK

For the second time within the past several months, Columbia and RCA-Victor simultaneously have issued recordings of the same work of a major modern composer and in each instance, both offerings have been excellent.

Earlier, they both released, in the same week, their versions of DeFalla's El Amor Brujo, and this week, the choice has been Dmitri Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony. The RCA-Victor reading is that of Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the Columbia recording is by the New York Philharmonic Symphony under the baton of Efrem Kurtz.

This unusual situation gives listeners an opportunity to make comparisons that may influence their choice, but unless these recordings are heard one after the other, it will be difficult to pick the better. From several standpoints, however, the RCA-Victor version is superior.

In the first place, this symphony, the final in Shostakovich's trilogy begun during the dark days of the war when Nazi bombs were laying waste to Leningrad and the composer interrupted his work by performing his duties as a firewatcher, is really the best he has done. Its first American presentation was by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky last summer at Tanglewood, Mass. and in this recording Dr. Koussevitsky has put the same vim and vigor he served there. His direction is just a shade better than that of Kurtz, who also shows a complete understanding of the score's implications.

The work is full of melody without any of the dissonance of the Seventh and Eighth. The last three of the five movements are played without interruption and the final movement combines two themes, its own and that of the first movement. It is a lyrical masterpiece, and proves that the Soviet composer can write music even if it does not follow the Kremlin's 'revolutionary" line.

Two important violin concertos appeared this week, each excellent in its own classification. The first is RCA-Victor's offering of Bartok's work, played by Yehudi Menuhin with the Dallas Symphony orchestra. It is done with all the precision of Menuhin's artistry and the orchestra provides adequate background in this excellent example of the work of the great Magyar composer, whose untimely death a few years ago left a wide gap in contemporary music. The album is produced well, with a minimum of surface noise and is an excellent introduction to Bartok for those who have not had the pleasure previously.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 6 - 1947

Bach Program Opens Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Conduct Next Sunday at 3:30; Repetition on Tuesday

The Berkshire Music Festival opens next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall, where Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in a Bach program. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will be the soloists in the concertos in C minor and C major. The first and sixth Brandenburg Concertos and the first suite, in C major, will be the other numbers. All seats have been sold, but general admission is obtainable; seats are still on hand for a repetition of this program on Tuesday night, July 15.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Mozart program on the following Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night, July 20 and 22. The first of the regular subscription festival concerts takes place Thursday night, July 24.

Six concerts during the next few days will be open to subscribing members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center Next Wednesday night the Albeneri Trio will give the second chamber music concert in a series of three sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, playing works of Artur Schnabel, Villa-Lobos and Schubert, with Milton Katims, violist, as the assisting artist.

The chorus of the Center's Department 5 will sing on Thursday afternoon at 4:30, and scenes from operas will be sung that evening at 8:15. The orchestra of Department 2 will play on Friday night at 8:15, and a chamber music orchestra will give a concert next Sunday morning at 10:30. Full information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1947

STUDENTS: European music students are starting to come to the United States to study. Evidence is to be found in the registration for the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center, which opened last Sunday at Tanglewood. Students from Norway, Holland, Hungary, Greece and Czechoslovakia are included. The majority of the 420 students, however, are from the United States. The school will run for six weeks and be integrated with the fourteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 30 1947

Richmond

Aaron Copland In Richmond

RICHMOND — Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and Irving Fine, who will teach harmonic analysis, will spend the summer at the home of Mrs. Ralph H. Hooker.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 3 - 1947

Tonight's Magic Lantern Slide

Ed Ansara of this city, who got his start on WBRY will attend Berkshire Music Center this summer and work under Boris Goldovsky and Frederic Cohen. He will probably appear in opera performances during the Berkshire Festival. Ed sang the role of Rocco in Beethovan's "Fidelio" in excerpts from the opera at the Juilliard School of Music in N. Y. recently. A big future is predicted for Ed and his unusual voice. During the war Ed sang in camps with some of America's most noted entertainers.

[20]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 30 1947

erkshire Music Center Opened by Dr. Koussevitzky

00 Persons Attend Formal Opening of 1947 Season at Tanglewood—420 Musicians Enrolled for Classes—Dr. Lewis Perry Presides—Aaron Copland and Stanley Chapple Among Speakers—Koussevitzky Renews Plea Ultimate Support of Arts Should be Part of Duty of Democratic State.

ctivitie at Tanglewood, Lenox, the 1947 season began officially esterday when Dr. Serge Kousitzky, at ceremonies attended by proximately 800, opened the rkshire Music Center for its six eks of classes.

420 Enrolled

In the pine-sheathed theater cont hall for the exercises were the 0 musicians enrolled in the Music enter classes and approximately 0 members of the Society of riends of the Music Center. Dr. ussevitzky told them that "the light of art and culture can and will prevent future world catastrophes."

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Andover academy and president of the Society of Friends, presided during the exercises at which Aaron Copland, distinguished American composer and assistant director of the school, and Stanley Chapple, its dean, also spoke.

Dr. Koussevitzky is director of the school which operates operatic, orchestral, chamber music composition and choral departments with members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and other musicians as instructors. The various departments will start this week a series of semi-public performances, open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which will continue through the season. The latter will run during the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston orchestra and several additional Tanglewoods concerts also open to the public, the first on July 13 and the last this season on Aug. 10.

Renews Plea

Renewing a suggestion he advanced last year, Dr. Koussevitzky, in his address, said that "the ultimate support of the arts" should be a part of the duty of a democratic state.

He continued:

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophes. Art and culture are the guardians of peace. They abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The maestro sadi the nation has reached "a dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

To conclude the exercises, a chorus of 200 students sang Randall-Thompson's "Alleluia" which was written especially for the first opening of the Music Center in 1940.

The 420 students enrolled this season come from 40 states and 19 foreign countries, one of the broadest representations in its history.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

. . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra —and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JU - 1947

the sunlight is h a way with sw ed for Jantzen in ur in the

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 30 1947

amber Music Tanglewood dnesday

tet No. 2 by D'Indy, Quar-10 by David Stanley Smith ntet for two violins, two nd cello by Martinu will be t Tanglewood Wednesday by the Gordon String oncert in the theatre-cont 8.15 will be the first of amber music programs to ted on successive Wednesngs to the Berkshire Muer by the Elizabeth olidge Foundation in of Congress. Jascha be the assisting violist intet.

th quartet and the quinbeen dedicated to Mrs.

ograms will be open to with the reserved secriends of the School.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

J 47

mes now another great vement of the Boston Symy Orchestra, under Serge ssevitsky, however, in a reng of the two works taken nglewood at the conclusion he Berkshire Festival last (RCA - Vic. M-DM-1123, 12-inch records). Mr. Koussky has given the composi an artistic authenticity by relatively the same size stra common in Bach's time ding these to four Brandenconcertos he had previously ded at Tanglewood. Solo of George Laurent, first in the Boston Symphony, table in the Suite No. 2, the festive nature of the which contains the fa"Air for the G String," is accurate attention.

JUL 3 - 1947

SIX CONCERTS NEXT WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

Students and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, the 13th, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, the 15th, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katim, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and Piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all students programs.

The chorus of department 5 will give a concert at 4.30 Thursday afternoon, the 10th and in the evening at 8.15 the students of department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department 2 will give its second program Friday evening, the 11th at 8.15 in the Festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 27 1947

Opening Tanglewood Exercises Slated for Sunday Afternoon

Annual Berkshire Festival Will Formally Get Under Way at 3.30; Gordon String Quartet Wednesday Evening

Opening exercises at the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday afternoon at 3.30, a chamber music concert by the Gordon String Quartet Wednesday evening, July 2 at 8.15 and a symphony concert by the student orchestra of department 2 on Friday night, July 4, will be the events open to the members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center in the first week of the school at Tanglewood. The first chamber music by students will be played Sunday morning, July 6 at 10.30 by department 2.

At the opening ceremony Serge Koussevitsky, founder and director of the school, will speak, with Aaron Copland, assistant director; Stanley Chapple, dean; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends' Society, who will preside. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by whom the school will be conducted. As at all opening and closing exercises of the Center, the program will conclude with the singing by students of "Alleluia", a chorus written for the first opening in 1940 by Randall Thompson, and conducted by Hugh Ross. Tea will follow in the garden.

Wednesday night's concert will be the gift to the Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, like the two chamber music concerts on the following Wednesday evening. They will be held in the theatre-concert hall.

The first orchestral concert on Friday evening will be in the Festival music shed.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 30 1947

Tanglewood to Have Concerts Next Month

Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will receive invitations to three chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. The concerts, made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, will be given at 8:15 in the Theater-Concert Hall on the evenings of July 2, 9 and 16.

The programs:

July 2—(Gordon String Quartet with Jascha Veissi, viola, assisting) D'Indy, Quartet No. 2; David Stanley Smith, Quartet No. 10; Martinu, Quintet.

July 9—(Albeneri Trio with Milton Katims, viola, assisting) Schnabel, Trio (violin, cello, piano); Villa-Lobos, Trio (violin, viola, cello) Schubert, Trio in E Flat (violin, cello, piano).

July 16—(The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Bernard Zighera, harp and piano, assisting) Mozart, Concertante Quartet; Kornsand, Fantasy Quintet; Milhaud, "La Cheminee du Roi Rene"; Honegger, Rapsodie; Hill, Sextet Op. 39.

ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 27 1947

Koussevitzky To Address Students, Guests at Opening

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, will address the students and guests at the opening exercises of the school at Tanglewood Sunday at 3.30. Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will preside at the ceremony that will be open to members of the society, by invitation.

The program will include remarks by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school of more than 400, and by Stanley Chapple, the dean. Frank Hatch of Boston will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the fifth session of the center.

According to tradition, the exercises will close with the singing by students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," written for the opening exercises of the first season in 1940. The chorus will be conducted by Hugh Ross.

Tea will be served in the garden following the function.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS

JUN 28 1947

DISC Discussions

By VINCENT E. CLARK

For the second time within the past several months, Columbia and RCA-Victor simultaneously have issued recordings of the same work of a major modern composer and in each instance, both offerings have been excellent.

Earlier, they both released, in the same week, their versions of DeFalla's El Amor Brujo, and this week, the choice has been Dmitri Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony. The RCA-Victor reading is that of Serge Koussevitsky with the Boston Symphony orchestra, while the Columbia recording is by the New York Philharmonic Symphony under the baton of Efrem Kurtz.

This unusual situation gives listeners an opportunity to make comparisons that may influence their choice, but unless these recordings are heard one after the other, it will be difficult to pick the better. From several standpoints, however, the RCA-Victor version is superior.

In the first place, this symphony, the final in Shostakovich's trilogy begun during the dark days of the war when Nazi bombs were laying waste to Leningrad and the composer interrupted his work by performing his duties as a fire-watcher, is really the best he has done. Its first American presentation was by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky last summer at Tanglewood, Mass. and in this recording Dr. Koussevitsky has put the same vim and vigor he served there. His direction is just a shade better than that of Kurtz, who also shows a complete understanding of the score's implications.

The work is full of melody without any of the dissonance of the Seventh and Eighth. The last three of the five movements are played without interruption and the final movement combines two themes, its own and that of the first movement. It is a lyrical masterpiece, and proves that the Soviet composer can write music even if it does not follow the Kremlin's 'revolutionary" line.

Two important violin concertos appeared this week, each excellent in its own classification. The first is RCA-Victor's offering of Bartok's work, played by Yehudi Menuhin with the Dallas Symphony orchestra. It is done with all the precision of Menuhin's artistry and the orchestra provides adequate background in this excellent example of the work of the great Magyar composer, whose untimely death a few years ago left a wide gap in contemporary music. The album is produced well, with a minimum of surface noise and is an excellent introduction to Bartok for those who have not had the pleasure previously.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 6 - 1947

Bach Program Opens Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Conduct Next Sunday at 3:30; Repetition on Tuesday

The Berkshire Music Festival opens next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall, where Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in a Bach program. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will be the soloists in the concertos in C minor and C major. The first and sixth Brandenburg Concertos and the first suite, in C major, will be the other numbers. All seats have been sold, but general admission is obtainable; seats are still on hand for a repetition of this program on Tuesday night, July 15.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Mozart program on the following Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night, July 20 and 22. The first of the regular subscription festival concerts takes place Thursday night, July 24.

Six concerts during the next few days will be open to subscribing members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center Next Wednesday night the Albeneri Trio will give the second chamber music concert in a series of three sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, playing works of Artur Schnabel, Villa-Lobos and Schubert, with Milton Katims, violist, as the assisting artist.

The chorus of the Center's Department 5 will sing on Thursday afternoon at 4:30, and scenes from operas will be sung that evening at 8:15. The orchestra of Department 2 will play on Friday night at 8:15, and a chamber music orchestra will give a concert next Sunday morning at 10:30. Full information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1947

STUDENTS: European music students are starting to come to the United States to study. Evidence is to be found in the registration for the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center, which opened last Sunday at Tanglewood. Students from Norway, Holland, Hungary, Greece and Czechoslovakia are included. The majority of the 420 students, however, are from the United States. The school will run for six weeks and be integrated with the fourteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 30 1947

Richmond

Aaron Copland In Richmond

RICHMOND — Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and Irving Fine, who will teach harmonic analysis, will spend the summer at the home of Mrs. Ralph H. Hooker.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 3 - 1947

Tonight's Magic Lantern Slide

Ed Ansara of this city, who got his start on WBRY will attend Berkshire Music Center this summer and work under Boris Goldovsky and Frederic Cohen. He will probably appear in opera performances during the Berkshire Festival. Ed sang the role of Rocco in Beethovan's "Fidelio" in excerpts from the opera at the Juilliard School of Music in N. Y. recently. A big future is predicted for Ed and his unusual voice. During the war Ed sang in camps with some of America's most noted entertainers

HACKENSACK, N. J.
RECORD

JUL 1 - 1947

Music News And Views

By DOUGLAS HART

ALEXANDER SMALLENS will conduct the first New York performance of Darius Milhaud's "Opus Americanum No. 2" in Lewisohn Stadium tonight.

The program will include three excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" by Berlioz, "Redemption" by Franck, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas, and "La Valse" by Ravel.

* * *

BERKSHIRE CENTER IS OPENED

The Berkshire Music Center opened last Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. It is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Koussevitzky, as well as Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Center, addressed over 400 students enrolled for the 6-week session, including those from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia, and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer who recently arrived from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition.

In addition to 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony and programs by the students, those attending the school will hear the Gordon String Quartet, Albeneri Trio and the Berkshire Woodwing Ensemble in three concerts: July 2, 9 and 16. The chamber music programs have been made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are also invited to attend the latter. In addition there will be a program by the Julliard Quartet.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 3 0 1947

ARTS CAN HELP BAR WAR, SAYS KOUSSEVITZKY

Culture Should Aid World Peace, Maestro Asserts at Tanglewood

Lenox, June 29—Speaking to an audeince of 800 this afternoon at the opening for the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that "a part of the duty of the democratic state should be the ultimate support of the arts."

He continued:—

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace. They abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Impasse In Music"

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The maestro said the nation has reached "a dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided and other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school.

In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theater hall a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Mr., to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrolment of 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries for six weeks of study.

Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 - 1947

DUTY ORTIST

His ObligatiorRelation to Societ iod

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is a conductor by occupation, and also a teacher of youth, which is perhaps in these years his deepest concern. He never speaks without unfolding a point of view which is far from that of the mere specialist, virtuoso, or pedant of his profession. His recent address at the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Centre was concerned principally with the relations and the obligation of the artist to his society and his period, and it contained words which any student, practitioner, or amateur of arts could afford to ponder.

Dr. Koussevitzky, examining the present period in the creative field of music, did not overestimate its production. But the emphasis that he laid upon the value of the inheritance of the music of the "colossuses" by the society of today, and the sacred obligation of the artist to protect and perpetuate that inheritance on the highest plane, is striking.

What is the position of the artist and his value to his society today? Is it that of the genius and the dreamer, at the mercy of material conditions that he can neither understand nor control? Is he the helpless prophet whose revelations are only comprehended years after he has departed? Or is the artist to learn to be a man of affairs, able and decisive in action when it is necessary to protect himself from enemies and perverters of his message?

Position of Power

The artist is something else. His is a position of much greater power and responsibility than any that the conventional definitions would imply. Far from being the helpless prey of circumstances, "the great artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and the resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations."

Now we are in an age with many cross-currents, distractions, confusions of creative thought—or so it will appear to many, and not, musically speaking, in one of the great creative periods. Are we, then, speaking as musicians, to conclude that there is little in the constructive sense to be done about it? Here is an answer: "Today we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden of the responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers, whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century."

Preserving Great Art

It is for these multiplying heirs of the great estate, the young musicians of today, to work, fight and sacrifice in preserving from all harm, and communicating anew, the vision the masters of their art have revealed. "Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals? * * * The grave and tragic instances of present-day life have shown the artis as also a leader in society; he cannot withdraw from the open strife safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and esthetic dreams."

How is the artist thus to "lead" and fulfill his mission in society? There has been much confusion on this subject, confusion accurately reflected in the remark we recall of a Boston journalist who wrote in 1914 that the most insignificant poilus in the French Army, going through the hell of the conflict, was greater in the eyes of God and man than Romain Rolland, the writer and thinker whom Tolstoy once called "the conscience of Europe," with his vain pleas to men to listen to counsels of amity and reason. By which token the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, and Beethoven himself would have less importance to humanity than a sergeant in Napoleon's ranks—or the ranks of those who opposed him! It is the reductio ad absurdum. Action apart from his proven powers and duties is no more the artist's function than sequestration from the conflicts and dangers of life are his privilege. "It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their onstructive effort. He must waken the people from a passive cceptance of the values of art to n active interest in the work of rt."

Is this "acceptance" on the part f a public which has had a deree of access to great music hich no citizens of any nation in he world possessed a hundred ears ago so reprehensible? And it is, how is it to be corrected? art of the problem, in Dr. Koussevitzky's belief, lies precisely in the act of the easy accessibility of nusic before its significance is ully comprehended. "From the beginning of the twentieth century, music, once the privilege of the 'initiated,' became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a 'mass initiation' of the listeners into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music to the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of 'entertainment' and 'enjoyment' to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value."

Superficial Attitude

One might ask at this point if the superficial attitude toward music is fundamentally a shortcoming of "the masses." Has not this attitude been really more characteristic of financially fortunate "classes"? And, after all, must every honorable man be required to take off hat and shoes and bow the head in listening to a symphony? Many a man might genuinely prefer listening to Bach rather than Offenbach, provided that at the end of a hard day's work he didn't have to get up and rehearse him. (Apologies to Mr. Drinker!) But Dr. Koussevitzky is speaking of the devoted musician and primarily of the man who elects humbly and self-sacrificingly to serve his art with all that he has. It is certainly for him to communicate his passion and to bring listeners, by the intensity of the communication, to more than an excursionist's attitude toward a composition or performance. A later paragraph holds incontestably true:

"The aristocratic rule of the Maecenases kept music in a lofty and noble, yet restricted, sphere. Since the advent of the twentieth century and our industrial age the influence of the Maecenases was gradually succeeded by larger groups, firms, agencies and corporations, the patronage of which offered many advantages and created a wide public, yet held the danger of mechanization and commercialization."

It is the "formidable assignment" of the artist to meet these destructive forces full tilt and to "break away from the banality of mere 'enjoyment' to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs." And then "the ultimate support of the arts to which the evolution of life points, must come from the democratic state."

For a Fine Arts Bureau

Dr. Koussevitzky holds strongly the conviction shared by constantly increasing numbers of citizens the nation over that a bureau of fine arts is essential to the cultural development of a modern state.

"America, the holder of the great democratic ideals and traditions, who gave the world that immortal and unsurpassed human document—the Declaration of Independence—must awaken to this consciousness."

These and related observations of Dr. Koussevitzky might appear to the students, he said, "as extending beyond the scope and objective aims of our school." He need not have been apprehensive. They are even more needed, in the writer's opinion, by students of an art than its practical definitions.

SPECIAL CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival," Overture, the Introduction to Act Three of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Cloe" second suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

SUBSCRIBE TO THE
FREE PRESS

The Virginia Quarterly Review
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.
JUN - 1947

Koussevitzky, by Moses Smith.

Although Koussevitzky may have been ill advised in his attempt to prohibit the sale of this book, it is easy to understand why the subject of such a biography should resent it. For in spite of its entertaining moments the book is not a fair, nor even a particularly honest biography. The chapters on Koussevitzky's early life are based chiefly on information gathered from, as the author puts it, "those who knew Koussevitzky 'when' . . . ." Such information, though colorful, could not be particularly objective. Much source material is available for Koussevitzky's later life. But here the author's critical estimate of his subject is still far from unbiased. His writing is too influenced by the quarrel which he once carried on with the conductor. Koussevitzky may have been hypersensitive to his critics, but an old feud scarcely excuses Mr. Smith for writing as he does, unless he intended to revive the feud. The publishers, a new house which "will dedicate itself to the music lovers of America," have produced a handsome volume for their first offering. It is regrettable that the contents do not quite live up to the format.

Allen, Towne & Heath $.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1947

Honegger Here To Take Post At Tanglewood

French-Swiss Composer In by Plane; Says He Plans No More Major Works

By Francis D. Perkins

Arhur Honegger, noted French-Swiss composer, arrived at La Guardia Field on a Trans World Airline plane from Paris at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and left at noon for Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where he will join Aaron Copland in teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center.

This is his second visit to the United States; the first was in the winter of 1929, when he appeared here as guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, presenting his already famous "Pacific 231," inspired by an express locomotive, and his then new "Rugby," of football inspiration. At that time he was known as one of the most prominent members of the "Groupe des Six," a label applied to six young French composers shortly after World War I.

Mr. Honegger was born at Le Havre fifty-five years ago; his parents were from Zurich. At breakfast yesterday, before leaving for Tanglewood, he said he could be considered both as a Swiss and a French musician, with musical associations in both countries. He has long lived in Paris, where he remained throughout the war. During the German occupation his studio was a center for the Front National des Musiciens, one of the elements of the resistance movements. The Germans, who had first regarded his music as bordering on "degenerate" modernism, later showed more interest in it and urged him to conduct for the German-controlled radio, or in Germany. Such invitations he declined, and, on the whole, was not interfered with during the occupation.

At that time the general atmosphere of national misfortune was not encouraging toward composition, but a tendency to look inward as a distraction from distressing external circumstances was an inducement for composing. One of the works which he completed early in the war was his Symphony for String Orchestra, which was first played in Switzerland, and had a war-time London performance, since the Zurich conductor, Paul Sacher, had succeeded in having a microfilm score smuggled to England. It was first played in America by the Boston Symphony under Charles Muench on Dec. 27, 1946, and will be heard in the first major concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 24.

Among his other new works and compositions of recent years are film and dramatic scores, including music for "The Suppliants" of Aeschylus and for Paul Claudel's "The Silver Slipper" (produced in Paris in the fall of 1944), a sonata for violin alone, which Yehudi Menuhin is planning to introduce, and music for a Passion Play in the small Swiss town of Selzach. This was composed just before the war, which prevented its performance; the play, which will occupy a morning and an afternoon, requires about four hours of music. He said yesterday he intended to compose no more major works, considering four symphonies quite enough.

Mr. Honegger named the French National Radio as the principal source of performances of contemporary music in Paris; in privately sponsored concerts, owing to questions of expense and limited rehearsal time, programs were inclined to be conservative and traditional.

After the close of the Tanglewood season, Aug. 10, Mr. Honegger, before returning to Europe, will go to Mexico City, where his "Liturgical" symphony will be played under the direction of Carlos Chavez, and then to South America, where his "Jeanne d'Arc" will be performed on Sept. 15 at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
RECORD

JUL 1 - 1947

Music N

C. R. oper. loc. 5 d.
ENO. vic. Hack. alt. Sat. A. M.
CTY. Purch. Dept. Hosp.
CPT.-steno. Hack.
CTY. loc. school
ENO. Ins. Agcy. exp. loc.
EYPUNCH & Tabulating mach. oprs
ENO. export dept. loc. 5 d.
ENOS. sev. vic. Ruth
MPT. oper. Hack. 5 d.
WITCHBD. oper.-typist. loc.
ST Bkpr.-typist. 5 d. loc.
ERK. some type. begr., 5 d.
TENOS. sev. loc. begrs.
YPISTS. sev. loc. begrs.
41 MAIN STREET
ACME

ALEXA perfo No. 2" in I

The progr excerpts from Faust" by Be Franck, "The tice" by Duka Ravel.

BERKSHIRE CENTER IS OPENED

The Berkshire Music Center opened last Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. It is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Koussevitzky, as well as Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Center, addressed over 400 students enrolled for the 6-week session, including those from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia, and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer who recently arrived from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition.

In addition to 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony and programs by the students, those attending the school will hear the Gordon String Quartet, Albeneri Trio and the Berkshire Woodwing Ensemble in three concerts: July 2, 9 and 16. The chamber music programs have been made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are also invited to attend the latter. In addition

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 30 1947

ARTS CAN HELP BAR WAR, SAYS KOUSSEVITZKY

Culture Should Aid World Peace, Maestro Asserts at Tanglewood

Lenox, June 29—Speaking to an audeince of 800 this afternoon at the opening for the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that "a part of the duty of the democratic state should be the ultimate support of the arts."

He continued:—

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace. They abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Impasse in Music"

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The maestro said the nation has reached "a dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided and other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school.

In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theater hall a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Mr., to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrolment of 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries for six weeks of study.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 - 1947

DUTY OF THE ARTIST

His Obligation and Value in Relation to Society and His Period

By OLIN DOWNES

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is a conductor by occupation, and also a teacher of youth, which is perhaps in these years his deepest concern. He never speaks without unfolding a point of view which is far from that of the mere specialist, virtuoso, or pedant of his profession. His recent address at the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Centre was concerned principally with the relations and the obligation of the artist to his society and his period, and it contained words which any student, practitioner, or amateur of arts could afford to ponder.

Dr. Koussevitzky, examining the present period in the creative field of music, did not overestimate its production. But the emphasis that he laid upon the value of the inheritance of the music of the "colossuses" by the society of today, and the sacred obligation of the artist to protect and perpetuate that inheritance on the highest plane, is striking.

What is the position of the artist and his value to his society today? Is it that of the genius and the dreamer, at the mercy of material conditions that he can neither understand nor control? Is he the helpless prophet whose revelations are only comprehended years after he has departed? Or is the artist to learn to be a man of affairs, able and decisive in action when it is necessary to protect himself from enemies and perverters of his message?

Position of Power

The artist is something else. His is a position of much greater power and responsibility than any that the conventional definitions would imply. Far from being the helpless prey of circumstances, "the great artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and the resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations."

Now we are in an age with many cross-currents, distractions, confusions of creative thought—or so it will appear to many, and not, musically speaking, in one of the great creative periods. Are we, then, speaking as musicians, to conclude that there is little in the constructive sense to be done about it? Here is an answer: "Today we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden of the responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers, whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century."

Preserving Great Art

It is for these multiplying heirs of the great estate, the young musicians of today, to work, fight and sacrifice in preserving from all harm, and communicating anew, the vision the masters of their art have revealed. "Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals? * * * The grave and tragic instances of present-day life have shown the artist as also a leader in society; he cannot withdraw from the open strife safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and esthetic dreams."

How is the artist thus to "lead" and fulfill his mission in society? There has been much confusion on this subject, confusion accurately reflected in the remark we recall of a Boston journalist who wrote in 1914 that the most insignificant poilus in the French Army, going through the hell of the conflict, was greater in the eyes of God and man than Romain Rolland, the writer and thinker whom Tolstoy once called "the conscience of Europe," with his vain pleas to men to listen to counsels of amity and reason. By which token the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, and Beethoven himself would have less importance to humanity than a sergeant in Napoleon's ranks—or the ranks of those who opposed him! It is the reductio ad absurdum. Action apart from his proven powers and duties is no more the artist's function than sequestration from the conflicts and dangers of life are his privilege. "It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their onstructive effort. He must waken the people from a passive cceptance of the values of art to n active interest in the work of rt."

Is this "acceptance" on the part f a public which has had a deree of access to great music which no citizens of any nation in he world possessed a hundred ears ago so reprehensible? And f it is, how is it to be corrected? art of the problem, in Dr. Koussevitzky's belief, lies precisely in the act of the easy accessibility of music before its significance is ully comprehended. "From the beginning of the twentieth century, music, once the privilege of the 'initiated,' became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a 'mass initiation' of the listeners into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music to the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of 'entertainment' and 'enjoyment' to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value."

Superficial Attitude

One might ask at this point if the superficial attitude toward music is fundamentally a shortcoming of "the masses." Has not this attitude been really more characteristic of financially fortunate "classes"? And, after all, must every honorable man be required to take off hat and shoes and bow the head in listening to a symphony? Many a man might genuinely prefer listening to Bach rather than Offenbach, provided that at the end of a hard day's work he didn't have to get up and rehearse him. (Apologies to Mr. Drinker!) But Dr. Koussevitzky is speaking of the devoted musician and primarily of the man who elects humbly and self-sacrificingly to serve his art with all that he has. It is certainly for him to communicate his passion and to bring listeners, by the intensity of the communication, to more than an excursionist's attitude toward a composition or performance. A later paragraph holds incontestably true:

"The aristocratic rule of the Maecenases kept music in a lofty and noble, yet restricted, sphere. Since the advent of the twentieth century and our industrial age the influence of the Maecenases was gradually succeeded by larger groups, firms, agencies and corporations, the patronage of which offered many advantages and created a wide public, yet held the danger of mechanization and commercialization."

It is the "formidable assignment" of the artist to meet these destructive forces full tilt and to "break away from the banality of mere 'enjoyment' to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs." And then "the ultimate support of the arts to which the evolution of life points, must come from the democratic state."

For a Fine Arts Bureau

Dr. Koussevitzky holds strongly the conviction shared by constantly increasing numbers of citizens the nation over that a bureau of fine arts is essential to the cultural development of a modern state.

"America, the holder of the great democratic ideals and traditions, who gave the world that immortal and unsurpassed human document—the Declaration of Independence—must awaken to this consciousness."

These and related observations of Dr. Koussevitzky might appear to the students, he said, "as extending beyond the scope and objective aims of our school." He need not have been apprehensive. They are even more needed, in the writer's opinion, by students of an art than its practical definitions.

SPECIAL CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival," Overture, the Introduction to Act Three of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Cloe" second suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

SUBSCRIBE TO THE FREE PRESS

The Virginia Quarterly Review
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.
JUN - 1947

Koussevitzky, by Moses Smith.

Although Koussevitzky may have been ill advised in his attempt to prohibit the sale of this book, it is easy to understand why the subject of such a biography should resent it. For in spite of its entertaining moments the book is not a fair, nor even a particularly honest biography. The chapters on Koussevitzky's early life are based chiefly on information gathered from, as the author puts it, "those who knew Koussevitzky 'when' . . . ." Such information, though colorful, could not be particularly objective. Much source material is available for Koussevitzky's later life. But here the author's critical estimate of his subject is still far from unbiased. His writing is too influenced by the quarrel which he once carried on with the conductor. Koussevitzky may have been hypersensitive to old feud scarcely excuses iting as he does, unless he ve the feud. The pubuse which "will dedicate lovers of America," have lsome volume for their regrettable that the conlive up to the format.

llen, Towne & Heath $.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1947

Honegger Here To Take Post At Tanglewood

French-Swiss Composer In by Plane; Says He Plans No More Major Works

By Francis D. Perkins

Arhur Honegger, noted French-Swiss composer, arrived at La Guardia Field on a Trans World Airline plane from Paris at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and left at noon for Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where he will join Aaron Copland in teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center.

This is his second visit to the United States; the first was in the winter of 1929, when he appeared here as guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, presenting his already famous "Pacific 231," inspired by an express locomotive, and his then new "Rugby," of football inspiration. At that time he was known as one of the most prominent members of the "Groupe des Six," a label applied to six young French composers shortly after World War I.

Mr. Honegger was born at Le Havre fifty-five years ago; his parents were from Zurich. At breakfast yesterday, before leaving for Tanglewood, he said he could be considered both as a Swiss and a French musician, with musical associations in both countries. He has long lived in Paris, where he remained throughout the war. During the German occupation his studio was a center for the Front National des Musiciens, one of the elements of the resistance movements. The Germans, who had first regarded his music as bordering on "degenerate" modernism, later showed more interest in it and urged him to conduct for the German-controlled radio, or in Germany. Such invitations he declined, and, on the whole, was not interfered with during the occupation.

At that time the general atmosphere of national misfortune was not encouraging toward composition, but a tendency to look inward as a distraction from distressing external circumstances was an inducement for composing. One of the works which he completed early in the war was his Symphony for String Orchestra, which was first played in Switzerland, and had a war-time London performance, since the Zurich conductor, Paul Sacher, had succeeded in having a microfilm score smuggled to England. It was first played in America by the Boston Symphony under Charles Muench on Dec. 27, 1946, and will be heard in the first major concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 24.

Among his other new works and compositions of recent years are film and dramatic scores, including music for "The Suppliants" of Aeschylus and for Paul Claudel's "The Silver Slipper" (produced in Paris in the fall of 1944), a sonata for violin alone, which Yehudi Menuhin is planning to introduce, and music for a Passion Play in the small Swiss town of Selzach. This was composed just before the war, which prevented its performance; the play, which will occupy a morning and an afternoon, requires about four hours of music. He said yesterday he intended to compose no more major works, considering four symphonies quite enough.

Mr. Honegger named the French National Radio as the principal source of performances of contemporary music in Paris; in privately sponsored concerts, owing to questions of expense and limited rehearsal time, programs were inclined to be conservative and traditional.

After the close of the Tanglewood season, Aug. 10, Mr. Honegger, before returning to Europe, will go to Mexico City, where his "Liturgical" symphony will be played under the direction of Carlos Chavez, and then to South America, where his "Jeanne d'Arc" will be performed on Sept. 15 at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
RECORD

JUL 1 - 1947

Music N

C. R. oper. loc. 5 d.
TENO. vic. Hack. alt. Sat. A. M.
CTY. Purch. Dept. Hosp.
CPT.-steno. Hack.
CTY. loc. school
TENO. Ins. Agcy. exp. loc.
EYPUNCH & Tabulating mach. oprs
TENO. export dept. loc. 5 d.
TENOS. sev. vic. Ruth.
OMPT. oper. Hack. 5 d.
WITCHBD. oper.-typist. loc.
ST Bkpr.-typist. 5 d. loc.
ERK. some type. begr.. 5 d.
TENOS., sev. begrs.
YPISTS. sev. loc. begrs.
41 MAIN STREET
ACME
EMPLOYMENT AGEN

ALEXA perfo No. 2" in The progr excerpts fro Faust" by Be Franck, "The tice" by Duka Ravel.

BERKSHIRE CENTER IS OPENED

The Berkshire Music Center opened last Sunday afternoon Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. It is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which will start July 13.

Koussevitsky, as well as Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Center, addressed over 400 students enrolled for the 6-week session, including those from Europe, Canada, South America, Australia, and Lebanon.

On the faculty with other prominent musicians will be Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer who recently arrived from France to join Aaron Copland in the teaching of composition.

In addition to 14 festival concerts by the Boston Symphony and programs by the students, those attending the school will hear the Gordon String Quartet, Albeneri Trio and the Berkshire Woodwing Ensemble in three concerts: July 2, 9 and 16. The chamber music programs have been made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are also invited to attend the latter. In addition

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 30 1947

ARTS CAN HELP BAR WAR, SAYS KOUSSEVITZKY

Culture Should Aid World Peace, Maestro Asserts at Tanglewood

Lenox, June 29—Speaking to an audeince of 800 this afternoon at the opening for the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that "a part of the duty of the democratic state should be the ultimate support of the arts."

He continued:—

"This government, while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace. They abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Impasse in Music"

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The maestro said the nation has reached "a dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided and other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school.

In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theater hall a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Mr., to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrolment of 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries for six weeks of study.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 - 1947

DUTY O ARTIST

His Obligatior Relation to Societ iod

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is a conductor by occupation, and also a teacher of youth, which is perhaps in these years his deepest concern. He never speaks without unfolding a point of view which is far from that of the mere specialist, virtuoso, or pedant of his profession. His recent address at the opening of the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Centre was concerned principally with the relations and the obligation of the artist to his society and his period, and it contained words which any student, practitioner, or amateur of arts could afford to ponder.

Dr. Koussevitzky, examining the present period in the creative field of music, did not overestimate its production. But the emphasis that he laid upon the value of the inheritance of the music of the "colossuses" by the society of today, and the sacred obligation of the artist to protect and perpetuate that inheritance on the highest plane, is striking.

What is the position of the artist and his value to his society today? Is it that of the genius and the dreamer, at the mercy of material conditions that he can neither understand nor control? Is he the helpless prophet whose revelations are only comprehended years after he has departed? Or is the artist to learn to be a man of affairs, able and decisive in action when it is necessary to protect himself from enemies and perverters of his message?

Position of Power

The artist is something else. His is a position of much greater power and responsibility than any that the conventional definitions would imply. Far from being the helpless prey of circumstances, "the great artists of all time have been active builders and conquerors of the passivity and the resistance of matter. They have shaped the structure of life, culture and art for many centuries and generations."

Now we are in an age with many cross-currents, distractions, confusions of creative thought—or so it will appear to many, and not, musically speaking, in one of the great creative periods. Are we, then, speaking as musicians, to conclude that there is little in the constructive sense to be done about it? Here is an answer: "Today we may not have a Plato in philosophy, a Shakespeare in drama, a Tolstoy in literature, a Michelangelo in art and sculpture, or a Beethoven in music. But we possess their heritage. The era of the colossuses may have passed, but the burden of the responsibility for the safety and advance of art and culture rests with their spiritual followers, whose number multiplies with every new generation and every turn of a century."

Preserving Great Art

It is for these multiplying heirs of the great estate, the young musicians of today, to work, fight and sacrifice in preserving from all harm, and communicating anew, the vision the masters of their art have revealed. "Have we the power to liberate music from all that is superficial and foreign to its ideals? * * * The grave and tragic instances of present-day life have shown the artist as also a leader in society; he cannot withdraw from the open strife [illegible] safety and seclusion of his ivory tower of words, sounds and esthetic dreams."

How is the artist thus to "lead" and fulfill his mission in society? There has been much confusion on this subject, confusion accurately reflected in the remark we recall of a Boston journalist who wrote in 1914 that the most insignificant poilus in the French Army, going through the hell of the conflict, was greater in the eyes of God and man than Romain Rolland, the writer and thinker whom Tolstoy once called "the conscience of Europe," with his vain pleas to men to listen to counsels of amity and reason. By which token the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, and Beethoven himself would have less importance to humanity than a sergeant in Napoleon's ranks—or the ranks of those who opposed him! It is the reductio ad absurdum. Action apart from his proven powers and duties is no more the artist's function than sequestration from the conflicts and dangers of life are his privilege. "It is the mission of the artist not only to reflect his time, environment and the life of his people, but also to shape the consciousness of the masses, to seek inspiration in the pathos of their constructive effort. He must waken the people from a passive acceptance of the values of art to an active interest in the work of art."

Is this "acceptance" on the part of a public which has had a degree of access to great music which no citizens of any nation in the world possessed a hundred years ago so reprehensible? And if it is, how is it to be corrected? Part of the problem, in Dr. Koussevitzky's belief, lies precisely in the fact of the easy accessibility of music before its significance is fully comprehended. "From the beginning of the twentieth century, music, once the privilege of the 'initiated,' became accessible to wide layers of society, bringing about a 'mass initiation' of the listeners into the sphere of musical art. This spreading of music to the masses, at too rapid a pace, resulted in a profound misconception of music as a means of 'entertainment' and 'enjoyment' to be passively consumed by the listener. Music must be listened to creatively. Only active love can lead to the understanding of art and of its lasting value."

Superficial Attitude

One might ask at this point if the superficial attitude toward music is fundamentally a shortcoming of "the masses." Has not this attitude been really more characteristic of financially fortunate "classes"? And, after all, must every honorable man be required to take off hat and shoes and bow the head in listening to a symphony? Many a man might genuinely prefer listening to Bach rather than Offenbach, provided that at the end of a hard day's work he didn't have to get up and rehearse him. (Apologies to Mr. Drinker!) But Dr. Koussevitzky is speaking of the devoted musician and primarily of the man who elects humbly and self-sacrificingly to serve his art with all that he has. It is certainly for him to communicate his passion and to bring listeners, by the intensity of the communication, to more than an excursionist's attitude toward a composition or performance. A later paragraph holds incontestably true:

"The aristocratic rule of the Maecenases kept music in a lofty and noble, yet restricted, sphere. Since the advent of the twentieth century and our industrial age the influence of the Maecenases was gradually succeeded by larger groups, firms, agencies and corporations, the patronage of which offered many advantages and created a wide public, yet held the danger of mechanization and commercialization."

It is the "formidable assignment" of the artist to meet these destructive forces full tilt and to "break away from the banality of mere 'enjoyment' to the realm of pure joy to which music belongs." And then "the ultimate support of the arts to which the evolution of life points, must come from the democratic state."

For a Fine Arts Bureau

Dr. Koussevitzky holds strongly the conviction shared by constantly increasing numbers of citizens the nation over that a bureau of fine arts is essential to the cultural development of a modern state.

"America, the holder of the great democratic ideals and traditions, who gave the world that immortal and unsurpassed human document—the Declaration of Independence—must awaken to this consciousness."

These and related observations of Dr. Koussevitzky might appear to the students, he said, "as extending beyond the scope and objective aims of our school." He need not have been apprehensive. They are even more needed, in the writer's opinion, by students of an art than its practical definitions.

The Virginia Quarterly Review
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.
JUN - 1947

Koussevitzky, by Moses Smith.

Although Koussevitzky may have been ill advised in his attempt to prohibit the sale of this book, it is easy to understand why the subject of such a biography should resent it. For in spite of its entertaining moments the book is not a fair, nor even a particularly honest biography. The chapters on Koussevitzky's early life are based chiefly on information gathered from, as the author puts it, "those who knew Koussevitzky 'when' . . . ." Such information, though colorful, could not be particularly objective. Much source material is available for Koussevitzky's later life. But here the author's critical estimate of his subject is still far from unbiased. His writing is too influenced by the quarrel which he once carried on with the conductor. Koussevitzky may have been hypersensitive to his critics, but an old feud scarcely excuses Mr. Smith for writing as he does, unless he intended to revive the feud. The publishers, a new house which "will dedicate itself to the music lovers of America," have produced a handsome volume for their first offering. It is regrettable that the contents do not quite live up to the format.

Allen, Towne & Heath $4

SPECIAL CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival," Overture, the Introduction to Act Three of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Cloe" second suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

Springfield Free Press

SUBSCRIBE TO THE FREE PRESS

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 7 - 1947

Honegger Here To Take Post At Tanglewood

French-Swiss Composer In by Plane; Says He Plans No More Major Works

By Francis D. Perkins

Arhur Honegger, noted French-Swiss composer, arrived at La Guardia Field on a Trans World Airline plane from Paris at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and left at noon for Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where he will join Aaron Copland in teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center.

This is his second visit to the United States; the first was in the winter of 1929, when he appeared here as guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, presenting his already famous "Pacific 231," inspired by an express locomotive, and his then new "Rugby," of football inspiration. At that time he was known as one of the most prominent members of the "Groupe des Six," a label applied to six young French composers shortly after World War I.

Mr. Honegger was born at Le Havre fifty-five years ago; his parents were from Zurich. At breakfast yesterday, before leaving for Tanglewood, he said he could be considered both as a Swiss and a French musician, with musical associations in both countries. He has long lived in Paris, where he remained throughout the war. During the German occupation his studio was a center for the Front National des Musiciens, one of the elements of the resistance movements. The Germans, who had first regarded his music as bordering on "degenerate" modernism, later showed more interest in it and urged him to conduct for the German-controlled radio, or in Germany. Such invitations he declined, and, on the whole, was not interfered with during the occupation.

At that time the general atmosphere of national misfortune was not encouraging toward composition, but a tendency to look inward as a distraction from distressing external circumstances was an inducement for composing. One of the works which he completed early in the war was his Symphony for String Orchestra, which was first played in Switzerland, and had a war-time London performance, since the Zurich conductor, Paul Sacher, had succeeded in having a microfilm score smuggled to England. It was first played in America by the Boston Symphony under Charles Muench on Dec. 27, 1946, and will be heard in the first major concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 24.

Among his other new works and compositions of recent years are film and dramatic scores, including music for "The Suppliants" of Aeschylus and for Paul Claudel's "The Silver Slipper" (produced in Paris in the fall of 1944), a sonata for violin alone, which Yehudi Menuhin is planning to introduce, and music for a Passion Play in the small Swiss town of Selzach. This was composed just before the war, which prevented its performance; the play, which will occupy a morning and an afternoon, requires about four hours of music. He said yesterday he intended to compose no more major works, considering four symphonies quite enough.

Mr. Honegger named the French National Radio as the principal source of performances of contemporary music in Paris; in privately sponsored concerts, owing to questions of expense and limited rehearsal time, programs were inclined to be conservative and traditional.

After the close of the Tanglewood season, Aug. 10, Mr. Honegger, before returning to Europe, will go to Mexico City, where his "Liturgical" symphony will be played under the direction of Carlos Chaves, and then to South America, where his "Jeanne d'Arc" will be performed on Sept. 15 at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1947

'FIELD DAY' AT LENOX TO BE HELD ON JULY 29

A musical "field day" featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, and various instruments for musical reproduction, will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, July 29.

The field day, which is not part of the regular festival, has been designed to show the three scientific developments by which a greatly widened public has been introduced to symphonic music: the phonograph, the radio and sound motion pictures. Before the evening concert, visitors will have an opportunity to hear and see excerpts from films the background music of which has been composed by contemporary composers, including Copland, Honegger, Prokofieff, Thompson and Walton. The showing will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

The evening concert will take place in the Music Shed and will be divided into two portions: the weekly broadcast, which will feature Ella Goldstein, pianist, and a musical demonstration called "The March of Fidelity." The latter will be a comparison of the sound of the live orchestra with phonograph records of the same music. Recordings dating back to 1915 will be played on phonographs of the period, and then the orchestra will perform the same music. The final number in this demonstration will be Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture in a recent recording by the Boston Symphony, played on a newly designed custom-made machine.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advance in all forms of musical reproduction. The program will cover recording radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to these already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales. The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

* * *

Volume XXXI.

Jul 17

'Music For All' Field Day Announced By Koussevitzky

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature ...gs by the Boston ...rchestra of ten- ...back to 1915 when ...first full-size sym...ization to play for ...aph.

...a film to be distri... Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, ...ures will be made of the ... audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Miss Manning

MONDAY, JUNE 30, 1947.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY IN PLEA FOR ARTS

Director at the Tanglewood Opening Sees Support of Culture as Peace Aid

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., June 29—Speaking to an audience of 800 this afternoon at the opening of the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that a part of the duty of the democratic state should be "the ultimate support of the arts."

"This Government," he continued, "while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace; they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The director said the nation had reached a "dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of the Friends of Tanglewood, presided. Other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school. In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theatre hall, a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Me. to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrollment of 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries for six weeks of study.

As Bach Might Have Played It

2 Concertos Recorded By Boston Symphony

Music by Bach as a modern symphony director believes it was played at the time Bach lived is offered in a new album by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, masterful transcriptions have been made of the Brandenburg Concertos No. 2 in F and No. 5 in D.

In recording the concertos, Dr. Koussevitzky used an orchestra approximately the size of the orchestra used by Bach. The recordings were made in the Boston Symphony's concert theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the Berkshire Music festival.

A Noteworthy Performance

Noteworthy in the second Brandenburg concerto is the featuring of an unusually small D flat brass trumpet, nine inches long and weighing 20 ounces. A similar type of small valveless trumpet was popular in Bach's time, but is practically extinct today. The trumpet is owned by Roger Voison of the Boston Symphony who plays the trumpet part in the concerto.

Exquisite solo obligatos are performed in the two concertos by other Boston Symphony artists: Roger Burgin, violin; Georges Laurent, flute; Fernand Gillet, oboe, and Lukas Foss, piano.

This is a well-recorded work, technically. (Four 12-inch Red Seal Records, RCA Victor album DM-1118.)

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
TIMES
JUN 26 1947

At Berkshire Music Center

Mrs. Mary Hartley Wells of 553 Grove Street, Upper Montclair, will leave Saturday morning to attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which starts July 13. Mrs. Wells will study in the opera school and the department of choral directing. She will return to Montclair Aug. 12.

* * *

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
5 - 1947

The Boston symphony orchestra few measures ~~by the same~~ orchestra—an will try to identify the original and th The instrument will be called the "Ber hundred will be sold to raise funds to 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 28 1947

THREE CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS SCHEDULED

Three concerts of Chamber Music be given at Tanglewood, home of Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Berkshire Music Center~~, Serge Koussevitzky, director, on three ~~Wednesday~~ evenings, July 2, 9 and at the theater-concert hall. These concerts have been made possible by generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the ~~Library of Congress, and~~ are open guests by invitation. Members of Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The programs will be as follows (at 8.15):

Wednesday Evening, July 2
The Gordon String Quartet
(Jascha Veissi, viola, assisting)
...rtet No. 2, opus 45 — D'Indy
...rtet No. 10, opus 90 — David Stanley Smith
(...dicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge)
...intet for 2 violins, 2 violas, and 'cello — Martinu
(...dicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge)

Wednesday Evening, July 9
Albeneri Trio
(Milton Katims, viola, assisting)
...o (Violin, 'Cello, Piano) — Arthur Schnabel
...o (Violin, Viola, 'Cello) — H. Villa-Lobos
...o (Violin, 'Cello, Piano) in E Flat — Schubert (op. 100)

Wednesday Evening, July 16
The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble
(Bernard Zighera, harp and piano, assisting) Concertante Quartet — Mozart
for Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon and Horn
(Piano accompaniment)
Fantasy Quintet (1946) — Kornsand
for Flute, English Horn, Clarinet, Viola, and Harp
La Cheminee du Roi Rene — Milhaud
Suite for Wood Wind Quintet
(Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon)
Rapsodie (1917) — Honegger
for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will play tonight at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall. The program will be the last of three weekly concerts presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Coolidge Foundation. Members of the Friends Society are invited to sit in the reserved section. The public is invited.

Concert Postponed

The program planned for tomorrow afternoon by the chorus of Department 5 has been postponed until Monday afternoon at 4.30.

Opera Tomorrow Night

Scenes from the following operas will be presented tomorrow evening at 8.15 by students of the opera department: The forest scene from "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; grave-yard scene from "Don Giovanni," Mozart; Air de Lia from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; excerpt from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; the dungeon scene from "Fidelio," Beethoven.

Bernstein To Conduct

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the concert by the student orchestra Friday evening. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to hear the program, to be announced in tomorrow's Eagle.

Festival Concert Broadcast

A second performance of the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival was given last evening by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff soloists in the two concertos for two pianos.

Despite the rain, the concert was heard by an overflow audience of 1500 and was carried by WBEC and the ABC network over a nationwide hook-up. The first 15 minutes of the program was missed by the radio audience, due, it was said, to trouble with the lines.

Afternoon Program Well Attended

Nearly 1000 students and members of the Friends Society attended the joint concert of the orchestra and chorus of Department 5 yesterday afternoon, under the direction of Robert Shaw.

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center for the first time in America Monday evening, Aug. 4, in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood. A second performance will be given Wednesday evening, Aug. 6. Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The production, which will be the major activity of the opera department, will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky, and sets will be designed by Richard Rychtarik. The orchestra and singers will be Berkshire Music Center pupils, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780 at the age of 24. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but, owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Mr. Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

Radio — Jul 16
City Edition

Weekly Paper Issued at Tanglewood

First Publication To Give News Of Music Center

The first issue of a weekly paper, the Tanglewood Trumpet, appeared yesterday. The first student publication in the history of the Berkshire Music Center, it will give news of activities of students and faculty.

Among the items was the report of the election of a students' council, "to organize numerous activities among the students and to act as liaison between the students and the staff." Members were chosen to represent each department and dormitory. The first activity was a party at the Barrington School Saturday night, when students, faculty and office staff danced to a student orchestra improvised for the occasion.

In an editorial on "The Spirit of Tanglewood," the writer takes for granted a certain "distinctive spirit or mood" because the students have heard of "the reverence towards great music, skill in performance, high calibre of the staff, fine buildings and equipment, green lawns, elms and hills," but comments on "the general attitude of friendliness and co-operation shown by all, especially the staff."

The writer is impressed because the "staff members," meaning the faculty, "obviously hold high opinions of one another," attending each other's rehearsals and lectures and "assist with such lowly tasks as running the phonograph and moving chairs." He is also impressed because students "competing for highly prized assignments remain fast friends."

A news item was the formation of an orchestra by the auditors in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class. Dr. Stanley Chapple, dean of the school and an assistant in teaching conducting, at the request of the auditors, has formed a group to enable them to practise conducting.

The paper starts with a message from Dr. Koussevitzky in which he congratulates them for the paper and trusts that they will "do their utmost to achieve a standard in the field of musical journalism comparable to that which we have come to expect from the other activities at Tanglewood."

Jul 15

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach concert tonight in the theatre-concert hall, repeating the program heard by an over-flow audience of 2000 Sunday afternoon. Starting at 8.30, it will be the first of four Tuesday evening programs to be carried over WBEC and the ABC network.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will be solosists for concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos. Other numbers will be the suite No. 1 in C major, and Brandenburg concertos No. 6 for strings and No. 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon, with strings. Tickets are on sale at the box office.

Tomorrow Night's Concert

The last of a series of three chamber music concerts, the gift to the Berkshire Music Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, will be given by the Berkshire Wood-Wind Ensemble tomorrow evening at 8.15. The program follows:

Sinfonia Concertante Quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn (with piano accompaniment) .... Mozart
Fantasy Quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp .... Kornsand
La Cheminee du Roi Rene, suite for wood-wind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon) .... Milhaud
Rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet .... Honegger
Sextet, Op. 39, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano .... Hill

The quintet and the rhapsody have been dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge. The latter will be performed for the first time.

Members of the ensemble are: James Pappoutsakis, flute; William Valkenier, French horn; Viktor Polatschek, clarinet; Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn; Raymond Allard, bassoon; assisted by Emil Kornsand, viola; and Bernard Zighera, piano and harp.

The public is invited. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will have seats in the reserved section.

STRAND

[22]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1947

'FIELD DAY' AT LENOX TO BE HELD ON JULY 29

A musical "field day" featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky and various instruments for musical reproduction, will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, July 29.

The field day, which is not part of the regular festival, has been designed to show the three scientific developments by which a greatly widened public has been introduced to symphonic music: the phonograph, the radio and sound motion pictures. Before the evening concert, visitors will have an opportunity to hear and see excerpts from films the background music of which has been composed by contemporary composers, including Copland, Honegger, Prokofieff, Thompson and Walton. The showing will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

The evening concert will take place in the Music Shed and will be divided into two portions: the weekly broadcast, which will feature Ella Goldstein, pianist, and a musical demonstration called "The March of Fidelity." The latter will be a comparison of the sound of the live orchestra with phonograph records of the same music. Recordings dating back to 1915 will be played on phonographs of the period, and then the orchestra will perform the same music. The final number in this demonstration will be Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture in a recent recording by the Boston Symphony, played on a newly designed custom-made machine.

The Boston Symphony and its music director, S… sevitzky, announce a "… All" field day at Tanglew… day, July 29, showing lates… in all forms of musical rep…uction. The program will cover recording radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales. The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

* * *

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
5 - 1947

The Boston symphony orchestra … few measures by the same orchestra—an… will try to identify the original and the… The instrument will be called the "Ber… hundred will be sold to raise funds to 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

Volume XXXI. Jul 17

'Music For All' Field Day Announced By Koussevitzky

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

As Bach Might Have Played It

2 Concertos Recorded By Boston Symphony

Music by Bach as a modern symphony director believes it was played at the time Bach lived is offered in a new album by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, masterful transcriptions have been made of the Brandenburg Concertos No. 2 in F and No. 5 in D.

In recording the concertos, Dr. Koussevitzky used an orchestra approximately the size of the orchestra used by Bach. The recordings were made in the Boston Symphony's concert theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the Berkshire Music festival.

A Noteworthy Performance

Noteworthy in the second Brandenburg concerto is the featuring of an unusually small D flat brass trumpet, nine inches long and weighing 20 ounces. A similar type of small valveless trumpet was popular in Bach's time, but is practically extinct today. The trumpet is owned by Roger Voison of the Boston Symphony who plays the trumpet part in the concerto.

Exquisite solo obligatos are performed in the two concertos by other Boston Symphony artists: Roger Burgin, violin; Georges Laurent, flute; Fernand Gillet, oboe, and Lukas Foss, piano.

This is a well-recorded work, technically. (Four 12-inch Red Seal Records, RCA Victor album DM-1118.)

Miss Manning

…NDAY, JUNE 30, 1947

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY IN PLEA FOR ARTS

Director at the Tanglewood Opening Sees Support of Culture as Peace Aid

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., June 29—Speaking to an audience of 800 this afternoon at the opening of the fifth season of the Tanglewood Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, said that a part of the duty of the democratic state should be "the ultimate support of the arts."

"This Government," he continued, "while extending aid to countries wrecked and ravaged by war, must be reminded that the light of art and culture, with which America is blessed, can and will prevent future world catastrophies. Art and culture are the guardians of peace; they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man.

"Today of all times the people of America and we artists, especially, must devote our lives to serve humanity, ready to sacrifice material welfare in the presence of the profound economic crisis of the world."

The director said the nation had reached a "dangerous impasse" in music. Its rapid spread among the masses "at too rapid a pace" has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment.

Dr. Lewis Perry, president of The Friends of Tanglewood, presided. Other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley Chapple, dean of the school. In closing the program which was given in the pine-sheathed concert-theatre hall, a chorus of 200 students sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

In the audience was Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, who flew by amphibian plane from Portland, Me. to Stockbridge Bowl. She is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Berkshire Music Center has an enrollment of 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries for six weeks of study.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
TIMES
JUN 26 1947

At Berkshire Music Center

Mrs. Mary Hartley Wells of 553 Grove Street, Upper Montclair, will leave Saturday morning to attend the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, and will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival which starts July 13. Mrs. Wells will study in the opera school and the department of choral directing. She will return to Montclair Aug. 12.

* * *

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 28 1947

THREE CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS SCHEDULED

Three concerts of Chamber Music will be given at Tanglewood, home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the ~~Berkshire Music Center~~, Serge Koussevitzky, director, on three ~~Wednesday~~ evenings, July 2, 9 and 16, at the theater-concert hall. These concerts have been made possible by the generosity of the ~~Elizabeth~~ Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the ~~Library of Congress, and~~ are open to guests by invitation. Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The programs will be as follows (at 8.15):

Wednesday Evening, July 2
The Gordon String Quartet
(Jascha Veissi, viola, assisting)
Quartet No. 2, opus 45 — D'Indy
Quartet No. 10, opus 90 — David Stanley Smith
(dedicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge)
Quintet for 2 violins, 2 violas, and 'cello — Martinu
(dedicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge)

Wednesday Evening, July 9
Albeneri Trio
(Milton Katims, viola, assisting)
Trio (Violin, 'Cello, Piano) Arthur Schnabel
Trio (Violin, Viola, 'Cello) H. Villa-Lobos
Trio (Violin, 'Cello, Piano) in E Flat — Schubert (op. 100)

Wednesday Evening, July 16
The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble
(Bernard Zighera, harp and piano, assisting) Concertante Quartet — Mozart
for Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon and Horn
(Piano accompaniment)
Fantasy Quintet (1946) — Kornsand
for Flute, English Horn, Clarinet, Viola, and Harp
La Cheminee du Roi Rene — Milhaud
Suite for Wood Wind Quintet
(Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon)
Rapsodie (1917) — Honegger
for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet
Sextet, Op. 39 — Hill for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Horn and Piano

Canaan, N. Y.

Music … Foundation. Mem… Friends Society are invited to … in the reserved section. The public is invited.

Concert Postponed

The program planned for tomorrow afternoon by the chorus of Department 5 has been postponed until Monday afternoon at 4.30.

Opera Tomorrow Night

Scenes from the following operas will be presented tomorrow evening at 8.15 by students of the opera department: The forest scene from "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; grave-yard scene from "Don Giovanni," Mozart; Air de Lia from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; excerpt from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; the dungeon scene from "Fidelio," Beethoven.

Bernstein To Conduct

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the concert by the student orchestra Friday evening. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to hear the program, to be announced in tomorrow's Eagle.

Festival Concert Broadcast

A second performance of the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival was given last evening by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff soloists in the two concertos for two pianos.

Despite the rain, the concert was heard by an overflow audience of 1500 and was carried by WBEC and the ABC network over a nationwide hook-up. The first 15 minutes of the program was missed by the radio audience, due, it was said, to trouble with the lines.

Afternoon Program Well Attended

Nearly 1000 students and members of the Friends Society attended the joint concert of the orchestra and chorus of Department 5 yesterday afternoon, under the direction of Robert Shaw.

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center for the first time in America Monday evening, Aug. 4, in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood. A second performance will be given Wednesday evening, Aug. 6. Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The production, which will be the major activity of the opera department, will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky, and sets will be designed by Richard Rychtarik. The orchestra and singers will be Berkshire Music Center pupils, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780 at the age of 24. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but, owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Mr. Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

Radio Jul 16

City Edition

Weekly Paper Issued at Tanglewood

First Publication To Give News Of Music Center

The first issue of a weekly paper, the Tanglewood Trumpet, appeared yesterday. The first student publication in the history of the Berkshire Music Center, it will give news of activities of students and faculty.

Among the items was the report of the election of a students' council, "to organize numerous activities among the students and to act as liaison between the students and the staff." Members were chosen to represent each department and dormitory. The first activity was a party at the Barrington School Saturday night, when students, faculty and office staff danced to a student orchestra improvised for the occasion.

In an editorial on "The Spirit of Tanglewood," the writer takes for granted a certain "distinctive spirit or mood" because the students have heard of "the reverence towards great music, skill in performance, high calibre of the staff, fine buildings and equipment, green lawns, elms and hills," but comments on "the general attitude of friendliness and co-operation shown by all, especially the staff."

The writer is impressed because the "staff members," meaning the faculty, "obviously hold high opinions of one another," attending each other's rehearsals and lectures and "assist with such lowly tasks as running the phonograph and moving chairs." He is also impressed because students "competing for highly prized assignments remain fast friends."

A news item was the formation of an orchestra by the auditors in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class. Dr. Stanley Chapple, dean of the school and an assistant in teaching conducting, at the request of the auditors, has formed a group to enable them to practise conducting.

The paper starts with a message from Dr. Koussevitzky in which he congratulates them for the paper and trusts that they will "do their utmost to achieve a standard in the field of musical journalism comparable to that which we have come to expect from the other activities at Tanglewood."

Jul 15

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach concert tonight in the theatre-concert hall, repeating the program heard by an over-flow audience of 2000 Sunday afternoon. Starting at 8.30, it will be the first of four Tuesday evening programs to be carried over WBEC and the ABC network.

Pierre Lubosnutz and Genia Nemenoff will be solosists for concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos. Other numbers will be the suite No. 1 in C major, and Brandenburg concertos No. 6 for strings and No. 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon, with strings. Tickets are on sale at the box office.

Tomorrow Night's Concert

The last of a series of three chamber music concerts, the gift to the Berkshire Music Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, will be given by the Berkshire Wood-Wind Ensemble tomorrow evening at 8.15. The program follows:

Sinfonia Concertante Quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn (with piano accompaniment) .... Mozart
Fantasy Quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp .... Kornsand
La Cheminee du Roi Rene, suite for wood-wind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon) .... Milhaud
Rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet .... Honegger
Sextet, Op. 39, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano .... Hill

The quintet and the rhapsody have been dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge. The latter will be performed for the first time.

Members of the ensemble are: James Pappoutsakis, flute; William Valkenier, French horn; Viktor Polatschek, clarinet; Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn; Raymond Allard, bassoon; assisted by Emil Kornsand, viola; and Bernard Zighera, piano and harp.

The public is invited. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will have seats in the reserved section.

STRAND

[22]

2000 Hear Bach Program At Tanglewood Opening

Jul 14

Theatre-Concert Hall Filled and Crowd Overflows Onto Lawn—Luboshutz and Nemenoff Are Soloists

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Tanglewood season opened officially yesterday afternoon when an orchestra of some 30 men from the first chairs of Boston Symphony Orchestra and led by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, played a Bach program to an audience of 2000, only half of whom could find seats within the theatre-concert hall. This was one of the series of two programs to be given on consecutive Sunday afternoons and repeated on the respective following Tuesday evenings in continuation of the wartime established custom which proved so successful. In those days when transportation was such a major problem, the Bach-Mozart concerts, started really as a substitute, supplied such great satisfaction that they have become an indispensable and integral part of the season.

The program consisted of the first suite, in C major, the first and last of the Brandenburg concertos and the C minor and the C major concertos for two pianos in which the soloists were the famed duo-pianists Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz.

Koussevitzky's Reins Loose

Dr. Koussevitzky wisely allowed Bach's fluency to play itself. He held the ensemble with an easy discipline but with a loose rein, which was aptly reflected in the performance. The allegro following the introductory Grave of the Suite was announced with clear and firm conviction and the succeeding dance movements were played without exaggeration nor undue stress, a gratifyingly welcome procedure, albeit a dangerous one, for there is a desired middle ground in Bach between excess and banality. Koussevitzky with his conceded wont found it exactly yesterday afternoon.

The sixth Brandenburg, in B flat, is written for violas and cellos, with a piano playing the thorough bass. The solos were played by the first desk men of the orchestra's viola section, Di Pasquale and Cauhape. This, our favorite among the Brandeburgs, did not always attain its stirring potentialities. The beseeching appeal of the second theme of the first movement was not realized. After the vigor of the opening, Bach writes a lovely sensitive contrasting phrase which provides a perfect foil and balance. Nor did the final movement receive the memorably incisive rhythmic attack it usually receives in the same hands. The F major concerto (the first), provided the expert small wind instrument section an occasion to show their flawless prowess and artistry.

Soloists Recalled Many Times

The orchestral accompaniment to the two-piano concertos is full and complementary, often spreading to fairly elaborate polyphony but the balance was beautifully maintained so that the soloists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff with exemplary authority and confident facility made their statements in the true Bach style. With no little aid from the con-

Tanglewood

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

ductor the whole performance was inspired with a vital cogency. This was conspicuously noteworthy in both final movements. The fugue of the C major concerto was proclaimed with fearless and secure verve. The slow-movement, the only one in which the accompanying orchestra is silent, was a bit too much according to plan. Its lack of spontaneity made it seem long, whereas a trifle more variety, still within the confines of accepted tradition, might have lifted it to the high plane of all its surrounding pages. The soloists played without deviation with a beautiful and unforced tone and with a ductile line. With an excelling sense of tone values they consistently ma tained the proper relations with the orchestra which so of has more of importance to than mere support. The audie accorded them a vehement dem stration of their unreserved proval and they were reca many times.

This program will be repea tomorrow evening. The other gram in this particular set will devoted to Mozart and will played next Sunday afternoon repeated the following Tues evening.

Jul 14

Tanglewood

To Meet Thursday

Miss Martha E. Hick of Pittsfield, who is in charge of the program girl division on the Tanglewood staff, announced today that no further applications for program girls will be accepted because the quota has been filled. Miss Hick has called a meeting of all girls accepted to be held in the Shed Thursday evening at 7.

Celebrities at Concert

Among those who attended the all-Bach program in the theatre-concert hall yesterday afternoon were Clifton Fadiman, widely known master of ceremonies of the radio program "Information Please," and David Brooks, who is playing the lead in "Brigadoon," now playing on Broadway. A prominent baritone, Brooks previously appeared in "Bloomer Girl."

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUN 30 1947

Chamber Music For Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., June 29.—The Gordon String Quartet, the Albeneri Trio, the Berkshire Wood-Wind Ensemble, respectively, will give the three chamber music concerts made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Libary of Congress at the Berkshire Music Center, July 2, 9 and 16.

Jascha Veissi, violinist, will assist the Gordon group in a quintet by Bohuslav Martinu, on a program which also will include works by Vincent D'Indy and David Stanley Smith. The Albeneri Trio will be assisted by Milton Katims, violist, in a Villa-Lobos. Bernard Zighera will assist the wood-wind ensemble at harp and piano.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER

JUN 29 1947

Sponsor for 'Red House'

Mrs. Harry Elliott, of San Francisco, has been named California sponsor for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs. She takes the place of the late Charles Wakefield Cadman. Another San Francisco sponsor is Leonora Wood Armsby.

The project is to rebuild the historic Little Red House in Lenox, Mass., as practice studios for the famous Tanglewood summer music school directed by Serge Koussevitsky. The house was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850-1851. He wrote some of his most famous works there. It burned down in 1890.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

JUN 29 1947

Student Events

TEN MUSIC students from the Detroit area will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tenglewood, Lenox, Mass. The school, conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will open Sund~~ay afterno~~on. It will run concurrently with the Berkshire Festival, which starts July 13.

The students are Francis L. Travis, 8603 Mendota; Charles Weiner, 9809 Dexter; Harry Beglian, 5026 Third; Joel H. German, 3217 Fullerton; John P. Callagham, 3864 Lillibridge; Robert V. Fay, 4652 Springle; William M. Flanagan, 11639 Appoline; John Mac L. Johns, 12616 Frankfort; Eleanor Lipkin, 3260 Webb; Frank G. Murch, 2612 Montgomery, and Gwendolyn Brockmiller, Grosse Pointe.

Eagle Jul 12

7.

TANGLEWOOD GUIDES: These students know all the answers for visitors to the Berkshire Music Center. They are, left to right, Richard Judge of Milwaukee, Princeton pre-medical student; Charles Bailey 2d of Cambridge, Harvard; William Barnes, Pittsfield High, only aspirant to a musical career; Rodman Henry of Pittsfield, American International College, Springfield; Sanford Sistare of Pittsfield, Bowdoin; Charles Callanan of Loudonville, N.Y., Princeton, a former Berkshire Music Center student; William Hearn of Pittsfield, Yale; Walter deK. Palmer of Tyringham and New York, Harvard; George E. Judd Jr. of Norwell, Harvard.

Tanglewood

Calendar for Next Week

Tuesday, 4.30—Concert by orchestra and chorus of Department 5.
8.30—Berkshire Festival concert. All-Bach program.
Wednesday, 8.15—Concert by Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble (Gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation).
Thursday, 4.30—Department 5 chorus.
8.15—Opera scenes.
Friday, 8.15—Department 2 orchestra concert.

Tomorrow's Concert

A complete performance of "The Musical Offering of Bach" will be given Sunday morning at 10.30 by 15 students of Department 2 in the theatre-concert hall.

Prepared under the direction of William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music division and Ralph Berkowitz, assistant to Dean Stanley Chapple, the program will include all 13 movements of the work on a single theme. Though one of Bach's greatest compositions, it is seldom heard. It is dedicated to Frederick the Great. There will be introductory remarks by Julius Herford.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

Concert Program

The program for the special concert at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky on Tuesday, July 29, was announced today. It follows:

Concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor .... Vivaldi Piano concerto, No. 1 .... Tchaikovsky
Ella Goldstein, soloist.
Overture—Roman Carnival .... Berlioz
Lohengrin (introduction to Act 3)..Wagner
General dance—Daphnis and Chloe..Ravel
March—The Love for Three Oranges.. Prokofieff
Overture to Egmont .... Beethoven

The event, entitled "music for all," is designed to show the three developments of science by which spmphonic music has grown popular—the phonograph, radio and motion pictures. Two of these aims will be accomplished by a nationwide broadcast and in the latter part of the program by a comparison of phonographic recordings made by the orchestra with the direct playing of the same music by the orchestra itself.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture while motion picture cameras are photographing the audience for a film to be called "The Story of Tanglewood."

A special showing of outstanding films, to which contemporary composers have contributed the musical scores, will be given two performances in the theatre-music hall, the first starting at 7 PM.

2000 at Concert

An audience of more than 2000 attended the concert by the advanced student orchestra last evening, when Serge Koussevitzky opened the program with a Bach suite and conducted Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini" that formed the second half of the program. Fine and Claude Frank, members of the director's conducting class. The other conductors were Irving

The orchestra will give a third concert for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center next Friday evening at 8.15, conducted by faculty and students.

Mrs. Luboshutz Here

Mrs. Leah Luboshutz, teacher of violin at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, arrived Thursday to visit her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Boris Goldovsky, who are occupying the home of Dr. and Mrs. Richard V. Pelton for the summer. Mrs. Luboshutz is the sister of Pierre Luboshutz, who with his wife, Genia Nemenoff, will be the soloists for the opening Festival concert tomorrow afternoon and Tuesday evening.

District Court

Guides Find Festival Visitors Think the Bowl Is a Stadium

Eight college students and one from Pittsfield High School escort visitors about the grounds at Tanglewood. Every day from 8.30 to 5.30 and evenings when there are concerts, they act as guides, and guard the south gate and the water front on Stockbridge Bowl. Those whose homes are in Berkshire County are assigned to day duty, out-of-towners to evening hours.

Before taking an examination on the facts that they should know, the corps was given a reading list, including Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," "The Tale of Tanglewood" and the "History of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" by M. A. deWolfe Howe, "Mobey Dick" and other books about the region. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and Ward Gaston, Tanglewood's superintendent, instructed them.

They Know the Answers

The first part of the examination included such questions as, "How do the Berkshires, past and present, deserve a reputation as a cultural center?" "What are the physical attributes of the Berkshire region that would attract visitors?" "How does the Berkshire Festival compare with other summer festivals and in what way is it unique?" The guides were asked to summarize the history of the Boston orchestra and the development of the Berkshire Festival.

The second half of the paper tested the boys' resourcefulness by asking what they would do in certain situations. Other questions related to what would they do if a person without a car, at 4 in the afternoon, wished to know the best way to get to New York; how to hear student concerts; what to do if a parent of a student wished to attend rehearsals. All passed the test, though the answers to the second section differed widely.

Work is heaviest on Saturdays and Sundays and before concerts, when the boys walk miles. Visitors arrive in swarms, wanting to see every last nook and corner of Tanglewood, and ask questions that Solomon couldn't answer, many of them unrelated to either music or the Berkshires. Stockbridge Bowl seems to be the major mystery. Many tourists expect it to be an athletic stadium. Others are surprised at the absence of evidence that music is the business of the school. They say, "It doesn't look musical," but most of the time it sounds musical.

THE HARTFORD TIMES, WEDNESDAY,

Ten Aural Treats, Starting with Mozart

Tanglewood Menu

JUL 16 1947

With the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds", Symphony in C major ('Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program, seats remain.

* * *

THE FIRST CONCERT by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master of he Boston Orchestra. It will be followed on Thursday afternon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by Department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

* * *

SERIES A OF THE Festival start on Thursday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Henegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahm's 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

[23]

Amer
13

MUSIC

'Music for All' Field Day In Tanglewood July 29; Elgar Festival

By E. V. W.

"My song will touch your forehead like a kiss of blessing . . . it will be like a pair of wings to your dreams . . . it will be like a faithful star overhead when dark night is over your road . . . my songs will sit in the pupils of your eyes and will carry your sight into the heart of things."—Tagore.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in forms of musical reproduction. The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those recently announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract newspaper critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country. For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare a symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The Center, organized in 1940 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young music students, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

"A song will outlive all sermons in memory."

'March of Musical Fidelity'; Motion Pictures of Audience

THE SECOND HALF of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph. As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corp., the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources. For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday night series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff With Orchestra Today

STUDENTS AND FRIENDS of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood heard several concerts last week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival this afternoon, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions. The program includes the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall [illegible] for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen [illegible] or attend the performance Tuesday night, July 15, when the program will be repeated. Luboschutz and Nemenoff [illegible] 'Genie') to friends have played in Syracuse several [illegible] Syracuse Civic Music Association management.

"Music is the essence of order, and leads to all that is good, just and beautiful."

Elgar Music Festival in England To Open With Garden Fete

THE ELGAR MUSIC FESTIVAL gets under way this week in [illegible] England. Julius Harrison directs the program, with representative selections from works of the late Sir Edward Elgar, [illegible] performance of "The Dream of Gerontius" in Priory [illegible]. The Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra will play [illegible] Elgar masterpiece, will be sung by the Stoke-on-Trent Choral Society. This Society, under the old name of the Staffordshire Choral Society, was the first to sing the work with Elgar conducting. Elgar, who died in 1934, was [illegible] Malvern and for some time lived there. Next year's Music Festival will be dedicated to George Bernard Shaw, [illegible] feature a new play by G.B.S. as well as a new play by [illegible]. This year's Elgar Festival opens with a garden party [illegible] with a ball Saturday.

Dorothy Hubbard Here From Sodus; Other July Random Notes

AMONG THOSE NOTED at the Civic University Orchestra [illegible] in Thornden Park in midweek was Miss Dorothy Hubbard of the University College of Fine Arts voice faculty. Miss Hubbard is on the staff of Normandy Inn, Sodus, for the summer and has organized a Girls' Chorus group among employes . . . Miss May McChesney, formerly of the piano department of the University, was noted with Mr. and Mrs. Augustus MacGrath-Beauchat . . . Miss Alice McNaught sat with Mrs. William S. O'Brien, wife of the Orchestra business manager, and Mrs. Frank Gamboni (Alice Berwald), wife of the guest artist of the evening . . . Myron Levee, concertmaster, enjoyed his cigar up to the last second before entrance . . . Mrs. J. Franklin Barak and Mrs. Andre Polah were together . . . Mrs. Conrad L. Becker, Miss Anna W. Olmsted, Museum director; Prof. and Mrs. A. E. Johnson were among regulars in attendance.

American Opera Stars and Musicians In Edinburgh Summer Festival

AMERICAN SOLOISTS and opera stars will feature prominently at the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and Drama this summer. From Aug. 24 to Sept. 13, Edinburgh, capital city of Scotland, will become a center of international music and drama. The Festival will be the most important event of its kind to take place since prewar years. The interest of these programs will consist of the internationalism of enduring masterpieces. John Barbirolli, who, in 1936, succeeded Arturo Toscanini as musical director and permanent conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, will conduct the Halle Orchestra at a concert during the Festival with the violin virtuoso from America, Szigeti, as soloist. Lotte Lehman, world famous soprano, first was acclaimed in America in 1930 when she sang with the Chicago Civic Opera Company, and since heard in the opera houses of New York and San Francisco, will give Brahms and Schubert recitals with Bruno Walter and Todd Duncan, celebrated American, who will include Negro spirituals in his program. Miss Lehman's home now is in the United States.

GEORGE SZELL, recently appointed musical director and conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will conduct the Scottish Orches-

---

NEW YORK TIMES
JUN 8 - 1947

BERKSHIRE FETE LISTS 14 CONCERTS

2 Programs Added to Original Schedule—All 9 Beethoven Symphonies to Be Played

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced yesterday that there would be fourteen instead of twelve concerts at the 1947 Berkshire Festival and that all nine of Beethoven's symphonies would be played in the four-concert Beethoven cycle.

The two extra concerts will be repetitions of the first two programs. They will be given because already the first two have been sold out. They will be concerts of chamber proportions to be conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky in the Theatre Concert Hall.

The first program on Sunday afternoon, July 13, will be given an additional performance on Tuesday evening, July 15. It is devoted to Bach and will include the first and sixth Brandenburg concertos, the Suite No. 1 in C major and the concertos for two pianos in C minor and C major, with Perre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as the assisting artists.

The second program to be repeated, an all-Mozart one, will be given Sunday afternoon, July 20, and Tuesday evening, July 22. It will consist of the B flat major Serenade for Wind Instruments (K. 361), the B flat major Divertimento for Violin, Two Horns and Strings (K. 287), the "Jupiter" Symphony and the Symphony No. 26.

The Beethoven Cycle will be given over the July 31-Aug. 3 week-end, with the fourth extra concert falling Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. The first seven symphonies will be given Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, with the "Emperor" Concerto played by Jacob Lateiner and the Fourth Piano Concerto played by Joseph Battista added. The eighth and ninth symphonies will be given at the extra concert, with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, singing the "Ode to Joy."

Some of the other programs have been re-arranged, three pieces originally announced have been dropped and four new ones have been added. Rachmaninoff's Third Symphony and Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony are not on the revised programs, and Ravel's "Bolero" will be given in place of his "La Valse." The other new works are a Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger, a Chorus by Poulenc and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

The Honegger Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' Second Symphony" will comprise the first full orchestra program for Thursday night, July 24. On Saturday night, July 26, the orchestra will play Samuel Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal." Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" with William Primrose, violinist, as soloist, and Aaron Copland's Third Symphony, which recently received the 1947 award of the New York Music Critics Circle.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the first of the two concerts entrusted to him on Sunday afternoon, July 27. His program will consist of Schubert's Seventh Symphony and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." For his second program on August 7 he will play Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 and a Hindemith Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Mr. Shaw will conduct the last concert but one on Aug. 9. The Festival Chorus will assist the orchestra in Mozart's Requiem, the Poulenc Chorus and the Stravinsky "Symphony of Psalms."

Mr. Koussevitzky will close the festival the afternoon of Sunday, Aug. 10, with a program consisting of Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra and Two Pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The season sale is closed, but reserved seats for single concerts are on sale at Tanglewood, the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the festival will be held. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program.

Another feature of the festival will be three invitation chamber music concerts to be given at the Theatre Concert Hall through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The Gordon String Quartet will play July 2, the Albeneri Trio July 9 and the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble July 16.

Use of Music in Four Nations

The use of the music of four nations, the United States, France, Russia, and England, will be represented in the program of motion pictures that will illustrate the use of original scores by important contemporary composers at the "music for all" field day at Tanglewood July 29.

At least one reel will be shown from "Our Town," with music by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center and holder of the Pulitzer Prize and Critics' Circle Award for his recent compositions. Mr. Copland himself chose the closing scenes of the play as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama.

The midnight carriage ride of Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera from "Mayerling" will represent the work of Arthur Honegger, who arrived from France July 5 to teach composition at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at the invitation of the director, Serge Koussevitzky. The stars are Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux.

The other movies from which scenes will be shown are "Alexander Nevsky" with score by Prokofieff; "The Youth of Maxim," a story of the 1905 revolution, with music by Shostakovitch; "The Plainsman," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, with score by George Antheil; "The River," a government documentary film, for which Virgil Thomson draws on American folk themes for his score, and "Henry V," with music by William Walton, played by the London Symphony Orchestra.

Assembled under the title, "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 and again at 11, following the special concert at 8.30 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The event, illustrating "New Horizons in Music," will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood. The audience is invited to come early and bring a picnic supper. A door prize of a full set of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be given.

Improvement Of Comm

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUN 15 1947

14 Concerts in Berkshire Festival

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, Mass., of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are announced by Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's music director, as follows:

Sunday Afternoon, July 13, and
Tuesday Night, July 15:
Bach.... Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for two horns, three oboes, and bassoon, with strings
Branderburg Concerto No. 6 for strings
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C Minor
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C Major
Suite No. 1 in C Major
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo pianists

Sunday Afternoon, July 20, and
Tuesday Night, July 22:
Mozart....Serenade in B-flat Major, for wind instruments
Divertimento in B-flat Major, for violin, two horns and strings
Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 26
Symphony in C Major, "Jupiter," No. 41

SERIES "A"
Thursday Night, July 24:
Honegger..Symphony for Strings
Debussy..."The Sea," three orchestral sketches
Brahms....Symphony No. 2 in D Major

Saturday Night, July 26:
Barber....Overture, "School for Scandal"
Copland...Symphony No. 3
Berlioz...."Harold in Italy," symphony with viola solo
Soloist: William Primrose

Sunday Afternoon, July 27:
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Schubert..Symphony in C Major, No. 7
Stravinsky."Le Sacre du Printemps"

SERIES "B"
Thursday Night, July 31:
Beethoven Symphony No. 1 in C Major
Symphony No. 2, in D Major
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday Night, Aug. 2:
Beethoven.Symphony No. 4, in B-flat Major
Piano Concerto No. 5, in E-flat Major, "Emperor"
Symphony No. 5, in C Minor
Soloist: Jacob Lateiner

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3:
Beethoven.Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"
Piano Concerto No. 4, in G Major
Symphony No. 7, in A Major
Soloist: Joseph Battista

Tuesday night, Aug. 5:
Extra Concert
Beethoven.Symphony No. 8, in F Major
Symphony No. 9, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy"

SERIES "C"
Thursday Night, Aug. 7:
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Haydn.....Symphony in B-flat, No. 102
Hindemith.Violin Concerto
Schumann.Symphony No. 2, in C Major
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Saturday Night, Aug. 9:
Robert Shaw, conducting
Mozart....Requiem
Poulenc...Chorus
Stravinsky.Symphony of Psalms

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10:
Martinu...Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two pianos
Ravel.....Pavane
Ravel.....Bolero
Tchaikovsky.Symphony No. 4, in F Major

Soloists for Aug. 5th and 9th will be announced. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will assist.

* * *

Amer
Jul 13

MUSIC

'Music for All' Field Day In Tanglewood July 29; Elgar Festival

By E. V. W.

"My song will touch your forehead like a kiss of blessing . . . it will be like a pair of wings to your dreams . . . it will be like a faithful star overhead when dark night is over your road . . . my songs will sit in the pupils of your eyes and will carry your sight into the heart of things."—Tagore.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA and its music director, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, announce a "Music for All" field day in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction. The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country. For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

"A song will outlive all sermons in memory."

'March of Musical Fidelity'; Motion Pictures of Audience

THE SECOND HALF of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph. As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corp., the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources. For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday night series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff With Orchestra Today

STUDENTS AND FRIENDS of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood heard several concerts last week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival this afternoon, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions. The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday night, July 15, when the program will be repeated. Luboschutz and Nemenoff and 'Genie') to friends have played in Syracuse several Syracuse Civic Music Association management.

"Music is the essence of order, and leads to all that is good, just and beautiful."

Elgar Music Festival in England To Open With Garden Fete

THE ELGAR MUSIC FESTIVAL gets under way this week in Malvern, England. Julius Harrison directs the program, with representative selections from works of the late Sir Edward Elgar, a performance of "The Dream of Gerontius" in Priory Malvern. The Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra will play "Dream," Elgar masterpiece, will be sung by the Stoke-on-Choral Society. This Society, under the old name of the Staffordshire Choral Society, was the first to sing the work with Elgar conducting. Elgar, who died in 1934, was Malvern and for some time lived there. Next year's Music Festival will be dedicated to George Bernard Shaw, feature a new play by G.B.S. as well as a new play by Bridie. This year's Elgar Festival opens with a garden party closes with a ball Saturday.

Dorothy Hubbard Here From Sodus; Other July Random Notes

AMONG THOSE NOTED at the Civic University Orchestra Concert in Thornden Park in midweek was Miss Dorothy Hubbard of the University College of Fine Arts voice faculty. Miss Hubbard is on the staff of Normandy Inn, Sodus, for the summer and has organized a Girls' Chorus group among employes . . . Miss May McChesney, formerly of the piano department of the University, was noted with Mr. and Mrs. Augustus MacGrath-Beauchat . . . Miss Alice McNaught sat with Mrs. William S. O'Brien, wife of the Orchestra business manager, and Mrs. Frank Gamboni (Alice Berwald), wife of the guest artist of the evening . . . Myron Levee, concertmaster, enjoyed his cigar up to the last second before entrance . . . Mrs. J. Franklin Barak and Mrs. Andre Polah were together . . . Mrs. Conrad L. Becker, Miss Anna W. Olmsted, Museum director; Prof. and Mrs. A. E. Johnson were among regulars in attendance.

American Opera Stars and Musicians In Edinburgh Summer Festival

AMERICAN SOLOISTS and opera stars will feature prominently at the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and Drama this summer. From Aug. 24 to Sept. 13, Edinburgh, capital city of Scotland, will become a center of international music and drama. The Festival will be the most important event of its kind to take place since prewar years. The interest of these programs will consist of the internationalism of enduring masterpieces. John Barbirolli, who, in 1936, succeeded Arturo Toscanini as musical director and permanent conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, will conduct the Halle Orchestra at a concert during the Festival with the violin virtuoso from America, Szigeti, as soloist. Lotte Lehman, world famous soprano, first was acclaimed in America in 1930 when she sang with the Chicago Civic Opera Company, and since heard in the opera houses of New York and San Francisco, will give Brahms and Schubert recitals with Bruno Walter and Todd Duncan, celebrated American, who will include Negro spirituals in his program. Miss Lehman's home now is in the United States.

GEORGE SZELL, recently appointed musical director and conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will conduct the Scottish Orches-

---

NEW YORK TIMES
JUN 8 - 1947

BERKSHIRE FETE LISTS 14 CONCERTS

2 Programs Added to Original Schedule—All 9 Beethoven Symphonies to Be Played

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced yesterday that there would be fourteen instead of twelve concerts at the 1947 Berkshire Festival and that all nine of Beethoven's symphonies would be played in the four-concert Beethoven cycle.

The two extra concerts will be repetitions of the first two programs. They will be given because already the first two have been sold out. They will be concerts of chamber proportions to be conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky in the Theatre Concert Hall.

The first program on Sunday afternoon, July 13, will be given an additional performance on Tuesday evening, July 15. It is devoted to Bach and will include the fir sixth Brandenburg con- C major "Emperor" Concerto played by Jacob Lateiner and the Fourth Piano Concerto played by Joseph Battista added. The eighth and ninth symphonies will be given at the extra concert, with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, singing the "Ode to Joy."

Some of the other programs have been re-arranged, three pieces originally announced have been dropped and four new ones have been added. Rachmaninoff's Third Symphony and Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony are not on the revised programs, and Ravel's "Bolero" will be given in place of his "La Valse." The other new works are a Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger, a Chorus by Poulenc and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

The Honegger Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' Second Symphony" will comprise the first full orchestra program for Thursday night, July 24. On Saturday night, July 26, the orchestra will play Samuel Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal." Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" with William Primrose, violinist, as soloist, and Aaron Copland's Third Symphony, which recently received the 1947 award of the New York Music Critics Circle.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the first of the two concerts en- on Sunday after- will anos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The season sale is closed, but reserved seats for single concerts are on sale at Tanglewood, the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the festival will be held. General admission to the grounds will be sold at the box office three hours before each program.

Another feature of the festival will be three invitation chamber music concerts to be given at the Theatre Concert Hall through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The Gordon String Quartet will play July 2, the Albeneri Trio July 9 and the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble July 16.

MANUS—Irving. Members of Noah Benevolent Society are requested to attend the funeral of our late Brother, Irving Manus on Monday, June 9, 1947, at 10 A. M. from Midtown Chapel, 171 West 85th St.
SAMUEL ABRAHAMS, Pres.
LEO GOLDFINGER, Secty.

MASSETT—Harriet B., at Westfield, N. J., on June 6, 1947, beloved wife of Francis E. Massett and mother of Edward C., Norman F. and Joan L. Massett, all of Westfield. Service at Gray's Funeral Home, 318 East Broad St., Westfield, on Monday, June 9, at 2 P. M.

MATHEWS—On June 6, 1947, Winifred Munroe;

ERNEST BLOCK, Secretary.

WEXLER—Adolf. Brooklyn Jewish Center announces with deep sorrow the sudden death of our member, Adolf Wexler. Members of Center are urged to attend funeral services Sunday at 1 o'clock, Boulevard Funeral Chapel, Empire Boulevard and Nostrand Ave.
EMANUEL GREENBERG, Pres.

WILSON—Thomas H., father of George S. Stuart and Dorothy Wilson Culley, in his ninetieth year, after a short illness, in Binghamton, N. Y.

WINKLER—Max, beloved brother of Regina Winkler, Sarah Goldsmith, Tessie Weinberger and Nick Winkler, dear uncle of Stanley Winkler, Charlotte and Harold Weinberger. Services 1 P. M., Sunday, June 8, at Temple

---

16—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 17, 1947 ★★

Festival Movies To Feature Use of Music in Four Nations

The use of the music of four nations, the United States, France, Russia, and England, will be represented in the program of motion pictures that will illustrate the use of original scores by important contemporary composers at the "music for all" field day at Tanglewood July 29.

At least one reel will be shown from "Our Town," with music by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center and holder of the Pulitzer Prize and Critics' Circle Award for his recent compositions. Mr. Copland himself chose the closing scenes of the play as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama.

The midnight carriage ride of Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera from "Mayerling" will represent the work of Arthur Honegger, who arrived from France July 5 to teach composition at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at the invitation of the director, Serge Koussevitzky. The stars are Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux.

The other movies from which scenes will be shown are "Alexander Nevsky" with score by Prokofieff; "The Youth of Maxim," a story of the 1905 revolution, with music by Shostakovitch; "The Plainsman," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, with score by George Antheil; "The River," a government documentary film, for which Virgil Thomson draws on American folk themes for his score, and "Henry V," with music by William Walton, played by the London Symphony Orchestra.

Assembled under the title, "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 and again at 11, following the special concert at 8.30 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The event, illustrating "New Horizons in Music," will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood. The audience is invited to come early and bring a picnic supper. A door prize of a full set of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be given.

Improvement Of Comm Re

Phone

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUN 15 1947

14 Concerts in Berkshire Festival

Complete programs for the 14 concerts of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, summer home in Lenox, Mass., of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are announced by Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's music director, as follows:

Sunday Afternoon, July 13, and
Tuesday Night, July 15:
Bach......Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for two horns, three oboes, and bassoon, with strings
Branderburg Concerto No. 6 for strings
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C Minor
Concerto for Two Pianos, in C Major
Suite No. 1 in C Major
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo pianists

Sunday Afternoon, July 20, and
Tuesday Night, July 22:
Mozart....Serenade in B-flat Major, for wind instruments
Divertimento in B-flat Major, for violin, two horns and strings
Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 26
Symphony in C Major, "Jupiter," No. 41

SERIES "A"

Thursday Night, July 24:
Honegger..Symphony for Strings
Debussy..."The Sea," three orchestral sketches
Brahms....Symphony No. 2 in D Major

Saturday Night, July 26:
Barber....Overture, "School for Scandal"
Copland...Symphony No. 3
Berlioz...."Harold in Italy," symphony with viola solo
Soloist: William Primrose

Sunday Afternoon, July 27:
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Schubert..Symphony in C Major, No. 7
Stravinsky."Le Sacre du Printemps"

SERIES "B"

Thursday Night, July 31:
Beethoven.Symphony No. 1, in C Major
Symphony No. 2, in D Major
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday Night, Aug. 2:
Beethoven.Symphony No. 4, in B-flat Major
Piano Concerto No. 5, in E-flat Major, "Emperor"
Symphony No. 5, in C Minor
Soloist: Jacob Lateiner

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3:
Beethoven.Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"
Piano Concerto No. 4, in G Major
Symphony No. 7, in A Major
Soloist: Joseph Battista

Tuesday night, Aug. 5:
Extra Concert
Beethoven.Symphony No. 8, in F Major
Symphony No. 9, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy"

SERIES "C"

Thursday Night, Aug. 7:
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Haydn.....Symphony in B-flat, No. 102
Hindemith.Violin Concerto
Schumann.Symphony No. 2, in C Major
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Saturday Night, Aug. 9:
Robert Shaw, conducting
Mozart....Requiem
Poulenc....Chorus
Stravinsky.Symphony of Psalms

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10:
Martinu...Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two pianos
Ravel......Pavane
Ravel......Bolero
Tchaikovsky.Symphony No. 4, in F Major

Soloists for Aug. 5th and 9th will be announced. The Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will assist.

* * *

[24]

ARTHUR HONEGGER

Creator of Noted Scores Asks Why He Should Continue to Compose

NY Times Jul 12

By OLIN DOWNES

ARTHUR HONEGGER arrived in America last week, en route between Paris and Tanglewood. He is now 55. We remember him twenty-odd years ago, in Paris, his exuberant youth, his laughter, echoed in the pages of "Pacific 231," the steam-engine piece which remains, for this writer, one of the wittiest musical creations of the century.

Honegger is still astonishingly youthful, in appearance, manner, vigor. A touch only of gray in the dark hair, a ruddy, vigorous figure. In the Nineteen Twenties he was an outstanding individuality of the "Groupe des Six." He has kept that position in the group, which is now scattered, with Milhaud at present established in America, and the other four variously dispersed and engaged.

Honegger is more prominently on the map, following the second World War, than he was in the aftermath of the first. And yet it would seem that he was sad, even a pessimist.

What was he writing? "I have written four symphonies. I have done enough.

"The work of serious composing," he continued with a perceptible dash of irony, "is for young men. From time to time a little piece, perhaps. And I will write film music for a little money."

Could he really be serious? In America, with his creative product, he has a big year before him. He now teaches at Tanglewood. Next winter Charles Muench will give the North American première of his "Jeanne d'Arc au Bucher," with the Philharmonic-Symphony; a work following freely the musical distribution of earlier scores for orchestra and voices which have spread Honegger's fame.

Lipnitzki, Paris

Arthur Honegger

"Jeanne d'Arc" will be given with Zorina in the speaking title role, Mr. Muench will also give the first New York performance of Honegger's Symphony for Strings. The Boston Symphony will program other of Honegger's works and certainly will not remain oblivious of his visit. He goes after his teaching season of the summertime southward through Mexico to Buenos Aires, where the South American première of "Jeanne d'Arc au Bucher" will be given Sept. 15.

No Inspiration

Why, then, did Mr. Honegger not intend to compose?

"I feel an old man. There was a war. And more—the aftermath. It's all going so badly."

Was he working on a long score now?

"No," he said. During the war he had written a sonata for violin alone; a few film scores; music for Aeschylus' "The Suppliants"; "The Satin Slipper," text by Paul Claudel, and finishing touches to incidental music to go with a Passion Play to be given at Zelzach in Switzerland.

The war was "such a shame for humanity" that it did not inspire one to compose, he added. On the other hand, one did compose, and quite a lot, since there was nothing else to do but work!

Often in the winter his studio was cold—which, after all, was a condition not unknown, even to gifted composers of Paris, before any world wars. But he had enough to eat and enough to live on. "When the war began," he said, "my music was not considered 'degenerate,' but I was not played in Germany." It seemed, he continued with a grin, that he was only at "the border line of degeneracy."

Later on, the Germans wanted to play Honegger. And Ernest Ansermet did play his Symphony for Strings in Frankfort. To this he was compelled to assent because Switzerland was neutral in the war. This symphony, which will be played at Tanglewood, was smuggled out of France during the war and played in England.

What had happened to the other members of the brave band of "Les Six" during the war?

"Les Six" Disbanded

Milhaud Mr. Honegger had not yet greeted, of course, having just arrived in America. The other four were all in Paris; he had seen them from time to time. Evidently the Six were no longer the combination for offense and defense that they were in the day when their publicity was stirring up Paris and pitting camp against camp. They all have gone their ways, artistically speaking.

Poulenc has done a new piece for the Opéra Comique and a big work for chorus alone called "Figure Humaine." Louis Durey, he said, had stopped composing. Georges Auric? He, said Mr. Honegger oracularly, had become "le grand musicien politique."

Meaning just what? He said Auric was a Communist. On this point Mr. Honegger appeared ironic, if not a little scornful, changing the subject by remarking that as for himself he "hated politics." As for the only lady of the group, Germaine Tailleferre, she had written a film score or two, but very little else.

Had Mr. Honegger considered remaining in America? He had not. "There's not a country where you can go and say, 'Here I live without war.'"

All of this was not said with despondency, but rather with that gayety and ironism which might have been considered Gallic. But stay! This reminded us of what, to a visitor, could only be considered a chauvinism, of which the French have seldom been guiltless. In the days of early acquaintance, after "Horace victorieux"—still, to our mind, a magnificently strong and modern piece; after the masterly "blague" of "Pacific 231," when Honegger was emerging in Paris as one of the most successful of the youthful Six, the Parisians would say, "Ah, yes. But he's not a Frenchman. He's Swiss."

So we asked Mr. Honegger whether, since he was born of Swiss parents, he considered himself a Swiss or a French composer.

"Je suis les deux," said he.

War Years in Paris

He had gone to Switzerland shortly after the outbreak of the war in 1939, but he returned to Paris in April of the following year—1940—it was "the baddest time" for France. He stayed in Paris through the war. The Germans did not persecute him. "They were always asking me to conduct for the radio," he said, "but I would not do it. Repeatedly I refused them." He would do nothing to serve them. Then they tried to palm him off as a German-Swiss composer. He would not consent to that either.

When it comes to composing we doubt if Mr. Honegger could refrain from that if he wanted to. But it is not easy to misconstrue the pessimism implicit in all his remarks. This led one to remember the singular manner in which the great majority, even of the significant composers of the first half of the twentieth century, had seemed to experience a premature sterility in their creative development. Not only in the cases of Strauss, alive today, but, for many years, an extinct volcano as a composer, and Debussy whose death, brought about by cancer, might well account for enfeeblement, was such a decline of creative energy apparent. Was the decline only in themselves or in a disintegrating society about them? What of the great musicians who have followed? Contemporaneous estimates of their production are, of course, controversial and of debatable authority. We are of those who find that not only Stravinsky but practically his generation of creative musicians are at best echoing their former and less sterile selves. And now the words of Honegger, physicaly robust, for the moment at least, secure and successful. He visits America from a disheartened Europe. He finds, as yet, no place, no haven of faith to which the artist may turn. And what of America? Where will it lead? Mr. Honegger is not to be blamed if at the moment he discovers little of which the composers can sing.

Presence of Three Composers Marks Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The presence of three composers whose works appeared on the program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night lent special glamour to the final chamber music concert presented by the Berkshire Music Center with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. They were Emil Kornsand, who is a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who also took part in his own new fantasy quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp; Arthur Honegger, whose early rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet was played, and Edward Burlinghame Hill, whose sextet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano was the closing number on the program.

Speyer Directs Ensemble

The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, of which Louis Speyer is director and performer on the oboe and English horn, consists of James Pappoutsakis, flute, Victor Polatschek, clarinet, Willem Valkenier, French horn, Raymond Allard, bassoon, assisted by Bernard Zighera, piano and harp. The program opened with the Mozart sinfonia concertante quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, to which the piano supplied the accompaniment. Later there was a suite for woodwind quintet by Darius Milhaud. These were both beautifully prepared, and served to show the timbre and blending possibilities of these instruments in such supremely able hands. The Mozart was an outstanding example of refinement and grace, while the Milhaud, like music written for the screen, was expertly effective. The tonal variations and inflections achieved by these artists on instruments so rarely heard outside the confines of the complete orchestration made an especially gratifying part to the over-all programs of the season.

But the greatest interest centered in the compositions by the men who were present and who were obliged to stand and acknowledge personally the approval expressed by the large audience. Kornsand's fantasy quintet, written last year, is dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge and this was its premier performance. His choice of instruments produces a rich texture, and one which the composer exploited with uncommon adroitness. He used the device often of easing one instrument in unison on the last note of another's phrase, thereby deftly changing the tone color without making the substitution abrupt. There was a romantic glow to his harmonic and melodic structure, in which his personal viola-playing was a very substantial contribution to the fantasy's success.

Honegger Acclaimed

Mr. Honeggar is on the composition faculty of the Center and is just arrived from France. His rapsodie dates from 1917 when he was still a young student in the Conservatory at Paris. It has idyllic charm and unmistakable identity as the product of the composer's background. Its three movements are played without pause and are too quickly over. His acclaim was notably cordial and hearty.

Mr. Hill is professor emertius of the music department of Harvard. His sextet written and played for the first time in 1934 at the Ninth Festival of Chamber Music organized by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain was performed at that time by the Laurent wind quintet of which two of last night's artists, Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Allard, were also members. Mr. Hill is the dean of the contemporary composers represented on last night's list, but there is no intimation of his age in the music. Indeed, it has the syncopation so typical of our musical idols of a decade or two ago, so much so that the composer, as he renewed his own acquaintance with it last night, remarked that he had forgotten how much jazz there was in it. The four movements all seem to take their place in the derivative categories which were so much in favor with American musical thought of a generation and more ago.

Mr. Hill used considerable ingenuity in his rhythmic idioms, so that they flow along completely naturally, while he remains, without pretention, within the recognizable domain of harmonic procedure. The vitality of all four movements is its outstanding feature, and it served to close the program, and this series, with a gay fillip.

As the performers graciously indicated the respective composers at the completion of the various works, they rose and then relayed the gesture to the lady who has been the inspiration of the series. Mrs. Coolidge, now for the second year, has made these chamber concerts available free at the Center, and they have filled a niche not provided by the fare of the orchestra or its divisions. The programs, too, have contributed a list of music which the students at the school nor the music-loving public would not ordniarily encounter. Its educational role, therefore, as well as its enjoyment function, has made it a valuable addition to the unique enterprise at Tanglewood, and one of which the enthusiastic audience was eager to show its deep appreciation.

United Cigar Store
Fountain—Luncheonette
309 Main St., Gt. Barr.

To Our Visitors in the Berkshires

Choose a Gif

N.Y. CIO Accepts

PIANISTS SHARE HONORS: Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff, who played with equal acclaim in the concerto for two pianos at the opening of the Berkshire Festival yesterday, will give repeat performances in the all-Bach program at Tanglewood tomor

---

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN - 1947

June Calendar

Records. Berkshire conductors and composers (see pp. 154-5) have made albums of their music for Tanglewood concerts at home. Shut your eyes, see the listening crowd overflowing the cavernous Shed, feel the gentle hills, the plumed elms, the oversized invading mosquitoes—while on the phonograph Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony give the quiet classicism of Beethoven's Second and Eighth the vitality they need to stand against the master's more showy symphonies. Their performance of Stravinsky's Capriccio is in brilliant contrast, balancing the orchestra neatly with the pianistic rompings of Jesús María Sanromá. Koussevitzky presents a Prokofieff festival in three albums, the inventively condensed Classical Symphony, the sprightly Lieutenant Kije suite and the magnificently strong new Fifth Symphony (all Victor).

Koussevitzky has recorded the music of his associate, Aaron Copland: the rhythmic El Salón México and the austerely simple Appalachian Spring. Other conductors have waxed Copland's music: Music for the Theatre, by the Eastman-Rochester Symphony, conducted by Howard Hanson (all Victor); Artur Rodzinski, the New York Philharmonic and Columbia collaborate with narrator Kenneth Spencer on A Lincoln Portrait: and the Concert Hall Society plays the Our Town suite with homely warmth.

Koussevitzky favors his protégé Leonard Bernstein with a recording of his spacious, melancholy Jeremiah Symphony (Victor). Decca has recorded Bernstein's impudently ingratiating ballet, Fancy Free. And the Victor Chorale, directed by another Berkshirite, Robert Shaw, gives a folk-opera treatment to the Bernstein musical, On the Town. Shaw and his group turn from catchy jazz to Bach's Cantata No. 4, Christ Lay in the Bonds of Death. The complete rightness and nobility of the music is brought out by the chorus who sing with heart as well as voice (Victor).

44-45 x

vals. While headlines still hang heavy, than ever the time for folk the grass, and music pen-air stadiums. In ost as hallowed

---

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT
JUN 28 1948

TWO ST. LOUISANS TO STUDY AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Two St. Louisans will begin studies at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school next Sunday at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Miss Susanne Wilmers, 19-year-old Washington University student, 5588 Chamberlain avenue, and Raymond Jones, 5338 Jamieson avenue, a war veteran, were awarded six-week scholarships under the R.C.A.-Victor Berkshire Revolving Scholarship Fund, it was announced today.

Miss Wilmers was first cellist with the St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Stanley Chapple last season, and plans to return to Washington University in September to enter her junior year. Jones, a former Army engineer, has conducted concerts for the St. Louis Sinfonietta Society and will continue his studies as an orchestra conductor.

Students this year at the summer school will represent 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and 13 foreign countries. Of 262 men students about half of the number are former service men.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUN 28 1948

Going To Music Center

Robert Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Jenkins, 5111 Carrollton Avenue, will leave tomorrow for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The center is under the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Sergei Koussevitzky.

Mr. Jenkins, who has been attending Indiana University, will study scenic designing and lighting for grand opera.

Tanglewood

July

To Meet Thursday

Miss Martha E. Hick of Pittsfield, who is in charge of the program girl division on the Tanglewood staff, announced today that no further applications for program girls will be accepted because the quota has been filled. Miss Hick has called a meeting of all girls accepted to be held in the Shed Thursday evening at 7.

Celebrities at Concert

Among those who attended the all-Bach program in the theatre-concert hall yesterday afternoon were Clifton Fadiman, widely known master of ceremonies of the radio program "Information Please," and David Brooks, who is playing the lead in "Brigadoon," now playing on Broadway. A prominent baritone, Brooks previously appeared in "Bloomer Girl."

Parking Petition

ARTHUR HONEGGER

Creator of Noted Scores Asks Why He Should Continue to Compose

NY Times Jul 12

By OLIN DOWNES

ARTHUR HONEGGER arrived in America last week, en route between Paris and Tanglewood. He is now 55. We remember him twenty-odd years ago, in Paris, his exuberant youth, his laughter, echoed in the pages of "Pacific 231," the steam-engine piece which remains, for this writer, one of the wittiest musical creations of the century.

Honegger is still astonishingly youthful, in appearance, manner, vigor. A touch only of gray in the dark hair, a ruddy, vigorous figure. In the Nineteen Twenties he was an outstanding individuality of the "Groupe des Six." He has kept that position in the group, which is now scattered, with Milhaud at present established in America, and the other four variously dispersed and engaged.

Honegger is more prominently on the map, following the second World War, than he was in the aftermath of the first. And yet it would seem that he was sad, even a pessimist.

What was he writing? "I have written four symphonies. I have done enough.

"The work of serious composing," he continued with a perceptible dash of irony, "is for young men. From time to time a little piece, perhaps. And I will write film music for a little money."

Could he really be serious? In America, with his creative product, he has a big year before him. He now teaches at Tanglewood. Next winter Charles Muench will give the North American première of his "Jeanne d'Arc au Bucher," with the Philharmonic-Symphony; a work following freely the musical distribution of earlier scores for orchestra and voices which have spread Honegger's fame.

Lipnitzki, Paris

Arthur Honegger

"Jeanne d'Arc" will be given with Zorina in the speaking title role, Mr. Muench will also give the first New York performance of Honegger's Symphony for Strings. The Boston Symphony will program other of Honegger's works and certainly will not remain oblivious of his visit. He goes after his teaching season of the summertime southward through Mexico to Buenos Aires, where the South American première of "Jeanne d'Arc au Bucher" will be given Sept. 15.

No Inspiration

Why, then, did Mr. Honegger not intend to compose?

"I feel an old man. There was a war. And more—the aftermath. It's all going so badly."

Was he working on a long score now?

"No," he said. During the war he had written a sonata for violin alone; a few film scores; music for Aeschylus' "The Suppliants"; "The Satin Slipper," text by Paul Claudel, and finishing touches to incidental music to go with a Passion Play to be given at Zelzach in Switzerland.

"The war was "such a shame for humanity" that it did not inspire one to compose, he added. On the other hand, one did compose, and quite a lot, since there was nothing else to do but work!

Often in the winter his studio was cold—which, after all, was a condition not unknown, even to gifted composers of Paris, before any world wars. But he had enough to eat and enough to live on. "When the war began," he said, "my music was not considered 'degenerate,' but I was not played in Germany." It seemed, he continued with a grin, that he was only at "the border line of degeneracy."

Later on, the Germans wanted to play Honegger. And Ernest Ansermet did play his Symphony for Strings in Frankfort. To this he was compelled to assent because Switzerland was neutral in the war. This symphony, which will be played at Tanglewood, was smuggled out of France during the war and played in England.

What had happened to the other members of the brave band of "Les Six" during the war?

"Les Six" Disbanded

Milhaud Mr. Honegger had not yet greeted, of course, having just arrived in America. The other four were all in Paris; he had seen them from time to time. Evidently the Six were no longer the combination for offense and defense that they were in the day when their publicity was stirring up Paris and pitting camp against camp. They all have gone their ways, artistically speaking.

Poulenc has done a new piece for the Opéra Comique and a big work for chorus alone called "Figure Humaine." Louis Durey, he said, had stopped composing. Georges Auric? He, said Mr. Honegger oracularly, had become "le grand musicien politique."

Meaning just what? He said Auric was a Communist. On this point Mr. Honegger appeared ironic, if not a little scornful, changing the subject by remarking that as for himself he "hated politics." As for the only lady of the group, Germaine Tailleferre, she had written a film score or two, but very little else.

Had Mr. Honegger considered remaining in America? He had not. "There's not a country where you can go and say, 'Here I live without war.'"

All of this was not said with despondency, but rather with that gayety and ironism which might have been considered Gallic. But stay! This reminded us of what, to a visitor, could only be considered a chauvinism, of which the French have seldom been guiltless. In the days of early acquaintance, after "Horace victorieux"—still, to our mind, a magnificently strong and modern piece; after the masterly "blague" of "Pacific 231," when Honegger was emerging in Paris as one of the most successful of the youthful Six, the Parisians would say, "Ah, yes. But he's not a Frenchman. He's Swiss."

So we asked Mr. Honegger whether, since he was born of Swiss parents, he considered himself a Swiss or a French composer.

"Je suis les deux," said he.

War Years in Paris

He had gone to Switzerland shortly after the outbreak of the war in 1939, but he returned to Paris in April of the following year—1940—it was "the baddest time" for France. He stayed in Paris through the war. The Germans did not persecute him. "They were always asking me to conduct for the radio," he said, "but I would not do it. Repeatedly I refused them." He would do nothing to serve them. Then they tried to palm him off as a German-Swiss composer. He would not consent to that either.

When it comes to composing we doubt if Mr. Honegger could refrain from that if he wanted to. But it is not easy to misconstrue the pessimism implicit in all his remarks. This led one to remember the singular manner in which the great majority, even of the significant composers of the first half of the twentieth century, had seemed to experience a premature sterility in their creative development. Not only in the cases of Strauss, alive today, but, for many years, an extinct volcano as a composer, and Debussy whose death, brought about by cancer, might well account for enfeeblement, was such a decline of creative energy apparent. Was the decline only in themselves or in a disintegrating society about them? What of the great musicians who have followed? Contemporaneous estimates of their production are, of course, controversial and of debatable authority. We are of those who find that not only Stravinsky but practically his generation of creative musicians are at best echoing their former and less sterile selves. And now the words of Honegger, physicaly robust, for the moment at least, secure and successful. He visits America from a disheartened Europe. He finds, as yet, no place, no haven of faith to which the artist may turn. And what of America? Where will it lead? Mr. Honegger is not to be blamed if at the moment he discovers little of which the composers can sing.

Presence of Three Composers Marks Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The presence of three composers whose works appeared on the program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night lent special glamour to the final chamber music concert presented by the Berkshire Music Center with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. They were Emil Kornsand, who is a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who also took part in his own new fantasy quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp; Arthur Honegger, whose early rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet was played, and Edward Burlinghame Hill, whose sextet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano was the closing number on the program.

Speyer Directs Ensemble

The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, of which Louis Speyer is director and performer on the oboe and English horn, consists of James Pappoutsakis, flute, Victor Polatschek, clarinet, Willem Valkenier, French horn, Raymond Allard, bassoon, assisted by Bernard Zighera, piano and harp. The program opened with the Mozart sinfonia concertante quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, to which the piano supplied the accompaniment. Later there was a suite for woodwind quintet by Darius Milhaud. These were both beautifully prepared, and served to show the timbre and blending possibilities of these instruments in such supremely able hands. The Mozart was an outstanding example of refinement and grace, while the Milhaud, like music written for the screen, was expertly effective. The tonal variations and inflections achieved by these artists on instruments so rarely heard outside the confines of the complete orchestration made an especially gratifying part to the over-all programs of the season.

But the greatest interest centered in the compositions by the men who were present and who were obliged to stand and acknowledge personally the approval expressed by the large audience. Kornsand's fantasy quintet, written last year, is dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge and this was its premier performance. His choice of instruments produces a rich texture, and one which the composer exploited with uncommon adroitness. He used the device often of easing one instrument in unison on the last note of another's phrase, thereby deftly changing the tone color without making the substitution abrupt. There was a romantic glow to his harmonic and melodic structure, in which his personal viola-playing was a very substantial contribution to the fantasy's success.

Honegger Acclaimed

Mr. Honeggar is on the composition faculty of the Center and is just arrived from France. His rapsodie dates from 1917 when he was still a young student in the Conservatory at Paris. It has idyllic charm and unmistakable identity as the product of the composer's background. Its three movements are played without pause and are too quickly over. His acclaim was notably, cordial and hearty.

Mr. Hill is professor emertius of the music department of Harvard. His sextet written and played for the first time in 1934 at the Ninth Festival of Chamber Music organized by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain was performed at that time by the Laurent wind quintet of which two of last night's artists, Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Allard, were also members. Mr. Hill is the dean of the contemporary composers represented on last night's list, but there is no intimation of his age in the music. Indeed, it has the syncopation so typical of our musical idols of a decade or two ago, so much so that the composer, as he renewed his own acquaintance with it last night, remarked that he had forgotten how much jazz there was in it. The four movements all seem to take their place in the derivative categories which were so much in favor with American musical thought of a generation and more ago.

Mr. Hill used considerable ingenuity in his rhythmic idioms, so that they flow along completely naturally, while he remains, without pretention, within the recognizable domain of harmonic procedure. The vitality of all four movements is its outstanding feature, and it served to close the program, and this series, with a gay fillip.

As the performers graciously indicated the respective composers at the completion of the various works, they rose and then relayed the gesture to the lady who has been the inspiration of the series. Mrs. Coolidge, now for the second year, has made these chamber concerts available free at the Center, and they have filled a niche not provided by the fare of the orchestra or its divisions. The programs, too, have contributed a list of music which the students at the school nor the music-loving public would not ordniarily encounter. Its educational role, therefore, as well as its enjoyment function, has made it a valuable addition to the unique enterprise at Tanglewood, and one of which the enthusiastic audience was eager to show its deep appreciation.

United Cigar Store
Fountain—Luncheonette
309 Main St., Gt. Barr.

To Our Visitors in the Berkshires

Choose a Gi

N.Y. CIO Accepts

Jul 18

PIANISTS SHARE HONORS: Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff, who played with equal acclaim in the concerto for two pianos at the opening of the Berkshire Festival yesterday, will give repeat performances in the all-Bach program at Tanglewood tomor

L... Rearming

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN - 1947

June Calendar

Records. Berkshire conductors and composers (see pp. 154-5) have made albums of their music for Tanglewood concerts at home. Shut your eyes, see the listening crowd overflowing the cavernous Shed, feel the gentle hills, the plumed elms, the oversized invading mosquitoes—while on the phonograph Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony give the quiet classicism of Beethoven's Second and Eighth the vitality they need to stand against the master's more showy symphonies. Their performance of Stravinsky's Capriccio is in brilliant contrast, balancing the orchestra neatly with the pianistic rompings of Jesús María Sanromá. Koussevitzky presents a Prokofieff festival in three albums, the inventively condensed Classical Symphony, the sprightly Lieutenant Kije suite and the magnificently strong new Fifth Symphony (all Victor).

Koussevitzky has recorded the music of his associate, Aaron Copland: the rhythmic El Salón México and the austerely simple Appalachian Spring. Other conductors have waxed Copland's music: Music for the Theatre, by the Eastman-Rochester Symphony, conducted by Howard Hanson (all Victor); Artur Rodzinski, the New York Philharmonic and Columbia collaborate with narrator Kenneth Spencer on A Lincoln Portrait; and the Concert Hall Society plays the Our Town suite with homely warmth.

Koussevitzky favors his protégé Leonard Bernstein with a recording of his spacious, melancholy Jeremiah Symphony (Victor). Decca has recorded Bernstein's impudently ingratiating ballet, Fancy Free. And the Victor Chorale, directed by another Berkshirite, Robert Shaw, gives a folk-opera treatment to the Bernstein musical, On the Town. Shaw and his group turn from catchy jazz to Bach's Cantata No. 4, Christ Lay in the Bonds of Death. The complete rightness and nobility of the music is brought out by the chorus who sing with heart as well as voice (Victor).

44-45 X

vals. While headlines still hang heavy, … than ever the time for folk … the grass, and music … pen-air stadiums. In … ost as hallowed

---

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT
JUN 28 1948

TWO ST. LOUISANS TO STUDY AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Two St. Louisans will begin studies at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school next Sunday at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Miss Susanne Wilmers, 19-year-old Washington University student, 5588 Chamberlain avenue, and Raymond Jones, 5338 Jamieson avenue, a war veteran, were awarded six-week scholarships under the R.C.A.-Victor Berkshire Revolving Scholarship Fund, it was announced today.

Miss Wilmers was first cellist with the St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Stanley Chapple last season, and plans to return to Washington University in September to enter her junior year. Jones, a former Army engineer, has conducted concerts for the St. Louis Sinfonietta Society and will continue his studies as an orchestra conductor.

Students this year at the summer school will represent 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and 13 foreign countries. Of 262 men students about half of the number are former service men.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUN 28 1948

Going To Music Center

Robert Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Jenkins, 5111 Carrollton Avenue, will leave tomorrow for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The center is under the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Sergei Koussevitsky.

Mr. Jenkins, who has been attending Indiana University, will study scenic designing and lighting for grand opera.

Tanglewood

Jul 14

To Meet Thursday

Miss Martha E. Hick of Pittsfield, who is in charge of the program girl division on the Tanglewood staff, announced today that no further applications for program girls will be accepted because the quota has been filled. Miss Hick has called a meeting of all girls accepted to be held in the Shed Thursday evening at 7.

Celebrities at Concert

Among those who attended the all-Bach program in the theatre-concert hall yesterday afternoon were Clifton Fadiman, widely known master of ceremonies of the radio program "Information Please," and David Brooks, who is playing the lead in "Brigadoon," now playing on Broadway. A prominent baritone, Brooks previously appeared in "Bloomer Girl."

Parking Petition

[25]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, JULY 13, 1947.

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY AND STUDENTS AT THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Koussevitzky (left), director of the Center, explains a point to a student in his conducting class.

rage on the Tanglewood estate is used as a classroom by Jacob Raichman (right), who teaches trombone.

Ruth Orkin and H. S. Babbitt Jr.

A class in composition is conducted by Aaron Copland (right), composer and assistant director. Students at the Berkshire Music Center will be heard in a number of instrumental, choral and operatic performances during the six-week session.

NEWS
6/22/47

Living With Music

By ROGER BAER

Op. 1 No. 6
By ROGER BAER
Music During The Summer

he question, "Where shall we to hear good music during the mmer months?" I doubt if a great mber of the people of our county e ever heard of the Berkshire tival, located at Tanglewood, ss., a two hour drive from Kingn by the way of Hudson, Great rington, Lennox, and then, Tanwood. Due to the fact that the ority of the concerts are given nite, to enjoy the drive by dayt, I suggest to start from here o'clock. This will give you am- time to curb the traffic jam ch starts about two miles from music center. This is the story Tangle od.

he word Tanglewood has two d associations in the mind of American public. The first is Hawthorne's "Tanglewood . The second, with a series usic festivals conducted by Koussevitzky at the country hat bears the same name.

nning in 1934 with open air s given under the direction nry Harley and an orchestra led from New York, the Festerformances became identifih Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra in t the invitation of Miss Ger- Robinson Smith, President of rkshire Music Festival Assoc- In 1937 the beautiful and his-10-acre Tanglewood site was ted as a gift to Dr. Kousse- and the Boston Symphony tra by Mrs. Andrew H. Hepnd Miss Mary Aspinwall Tap- The establishment of the ire Music Center in 1940, as ol where young musicians [illegible] portunity to [illegible] in the world. Altho it is impossible to see the orchestra, you will certainly enjoy every note played by this great organization. A suggestion at this point—if you desire to seat yourself take a camp folding chair along. There are hundreds of people using them.

If you feel [illegible]

had an unparalleled op develop their talents in an inspi tional atmosphere and at a nomina cost, gave an even broader cultura character to the festivals.

"Today in a period of unprecedented crisis in history, when men find no common contact and means of understanding each other, when all notions and values have lost their former significance, music is an element of unity among men. More than any other art, music has the driving force, the facility and freedom of crossing social, political, geographical, racial, and religious barriers, and speaks a language acceptable to all. It is a deep blessing and great joy to be serving music at a time when its radiant influence is revealed to the world with such conviction, and when the meaning of music is justifying also he meaning of man's existence." These words were spoken by Dr. Koussevitzky at the opening of the 946 Berkshire Festival and Music enter. They eloquently sum up the ast accomplishments and future opes of this typically native enterise which has been truly called a ational institution of art.

ils.yf' Rg 999999 fln1999

At this late date it is impossible secure tickets for the "shed", pen air concert hall) but hundreds pread a blanket over the lawn here they may choose to relax, nd listen to the greatest symphony

---

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

JUN 12 1947

Berkshire Music Fete Set July 13

Reservations are rapidly being made for the famous Berkshire Music Festival, to open on Sunday afternoon, July 13, with a concert by a section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This will be an extra concert, when a Bach program will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions, which will also perform at the extra Mozart concert on July 20.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear on July 13.

The three groups of concerts will begin with Series A, on July 24, 26 and 27, when the works are expected to include symphonies by Brahms, Schubert, Rachmaninoff, Copland and Berlioz, with William Primrose as the viola soloist for "Harold in Italy."

Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for Hindemith's violin concerto, and works by Barber, Ravel and Martinu also will be heard.

Series B, on July 31, August 2 and 3, will be presented as a Beethoven cycle, to be followed by an extra concert, on the fifth, to include the Ninth Symphony.

The program for Series C, on August 7, 9, and 10, are planned to include symphonies by Haydn, Tschaikowsky, Mendelssohn, and Schumann, with briefer works by Debussy and Stravinsky, and Mozart's "Requiem," with chorus and soloists.

Guest conductors invited are

---

e Baltimore News-Post
hursday, June 12, 1947—31

eonard Bernstein and Rober haw, both on the faculty of th Berkshire Music Centre, at Tan glewood.

H. A. F. P.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1947

THE LATEST of the announcements from the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival was a ttle late in arriving. It concerns hree concerts of chamber music, ne of which has already been layed, which are in addition to ll that has previously been anounced.

The Gordon String Quartet with n assisting violist played on Wednesday evening, July 2. On Wednesday evening, July 9, the Albeneri Trio with the assistance of Milton Katime, violist, will play rom the works of Schnabel, Villa-Lobos and Schubert. On Wednesday evening, July 16, the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Bernard Zighera, harpist and pianist of the Boston Orchestra, assisting, will play music of Mozart, Kornsand, Milhaud, Honneger and Hill.

MIAMI FLA.
NEWS

JUL 6 - 1947

* * *

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-producing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

* * *

SCIENCE DEPT.: In the Stork Club the other night Charles Cambridge Green, the jeweler, was expressing his customary skepticism about all people and people's behavior. "But take a man like Einstein," said Paul Stewart, the director. "In 1903 Einstein predicted that in the last week of June, 1947, a new star would appear in the sky" . . . "So?" Green scoffed . . . "So," said Stewart, "last week the scientists looked in the sky with their big glasses, and there was the star" . . . "Proves nothing," Green stated. "The kid was guessin'."

* * *

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD

JUL 6 - 1947

TIBOR TO TANGLEWOOD

Violinist Tibor Horn will be at the head of the usual Bridgeport delegation going to the Tanglewood Music festival which opens at Lenox, Mass., with the concert next Sunday conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

[26]

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 7 - 1947

ive Concerts nox This Week

ms for Music Center ents and Friends to ede First Public t.

ncerts for members of the f Friends of the Berkshire enter and for students at er will be given this week ewood, Lenox, preceeding public performance of the season to be presented there hy.

e concerts for students and f the Music Center will h a chamber music program ven Wednesday evening by neri trio as the second of mber music concerts sponsored during the Tanglewood season by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress. Milton Kalims, viola, will assist the trio in a performance of compositions by Arthur Schnabel, Villa-Lovos and Schubert. The other concerts will be given: by chorus department students on Thursday afternoon at 4.30, by operatic department students who will perform scenes from the operas on Thursday evening at 8.15, by orchestra department students on Friday evening at 8.15, and by a chamber music orchestra Sunday morning at 10.30.

The first public concert on next Sunday afternoon will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions drawn from the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting and with

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, JULY 13, 1947.

MUSIC

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY AND STUDENTS AT THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Koussevitzky (left), director of the Center, explains a point to a student in his conducting class.

rage on the Tanglewood estate is used as a classroom by Jacob Raichman (right), who teaches trombone.

Ruth Orkin and H. S. Babbitt Jr.

A class in composition is conducted by Aaron Copland (right), composer and assistant director. Students at the Berkshire Music Center will be heard in a number of instrumental, choral and operatic performances during the six-week session.

[illegible]
NEWS
6/22/47

Living With Music

By

ROGER BAER

Op. 1 No. 6
By ROGER BAER
Music During The Summer

he question, "Where shall we to hear good music during the mmer months?" I doubt if a great nber of the people of our county e ever heard of the Berkshire tival, located at Tanglewood, ss., a two hour drive from Kingn by the way of Hudson, Great rington, Lennox, and then, Tanwood. Due to the fact that the ority of the concerts are given nite, to enjoy the drive by dayt, I suggest to start from here o'clock. This will give you am- time to curb the traffic jam ch starts about two miles from music center. This is the story Tanglewood he word Tanglewood has two l associations in the mind of American public. The first is Hawthorne's "Tanglewood . The second, with a series usic festivals conducted by Koussevitzky at the country that bears the same name.

nning in 1934 with open ai ts given under the directio ry Harley and an orchestr led from New York, the Fes performances became identif h Dr. Koussevitzky and th Symphony Orchestra t the invitation of Miss Ge Robinson Smith, President rkshire Music Festival Ass In 1937 the beautiful and h 10-acre Tanglewood site w ed as a gift to Dr. Kous and the Boston Sympho a by Mrs. Andrew H. H Miss Mary Aspinwall T e establishment of Music Center in 1940, where young musici portunity to inspira in the world. Altho it is impossible to see the orchestra, you will certainly enjoy every note played by this great organization. A suggestion at this point—if you desire to seat yourself take a camp folding chair along. There are hundreds of people using them.

If you feel [illegible]

had an unparalleled op develop their talents in an inspi tional atmosphere and at a nomina cost, gave an even broader cultura character to the festivals.

"Today in a period of unprecedented crisis in history, when men find no common contact and means of understanding each other, when all notions and values have lost their former significance, music is an element of unity among men. More than any other art, music has the driving force, the facility and freedom of crossing social, political, geographical, racial, and religious barriers, and speaks a language acceptable to all. It is a deep blessing and great joy to be serving music at a time when its radiant influence is revealed to the world with such conviction, and when the meaning of music is justifying also the meaning of man's existence." These words were spoken by Dr. Koussevitzky at the opening of the 1946 Berkshire Festival and Music Center. They eloquently sum up the past accomplishments and future hopes of this typically native enterprise which has been truly called a national institution of art.

99lls.yf' Rg 999999 flnl999

At this late date it is impossible to secure tickets for the "shed", open air concert hall) but hundreds spread a blanket over the lawn where they may choose to relax, and listen to the greatest symphony

---

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

JUN 12 1947

Berkshire Music Fete Set July 13

Reservations are rapidly being made for the famous Berkshire Music Festival, to open on Sunday afternoon, July 13, with a concert by a section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This will be an extra concert, when a Bach program will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions, which will also perform at the extra Mozart concert on July 20.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear on July 13.

The three groups of concerts will begin with Series A, on July 24, 26 and 27, when the works are expected to include symphonies by Brahms, Schubert, Rachmaninoff, Copland and Berlioz, with William Primrose as the viola soloist for "Harold in Italy."

Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for Hindemith's violin concerto, and works by Barber, Ravel and Martinu also will be heard.

Series B, on July 31, August 2 and 3, will be presented as a Beethoven cycle, to be followed by an extra concert, on the fifth, to include the Ninth Symphony.

The program for Series C, on August 7, 9, and 10, are planned to include symphonies by Haydn, Tschaikowsky, Mendelssohn, and Schumann, with briefer works by Debussy and Stravinsky, and Mozart's "Requiem," with chorus and soloists.

Guest conductors invited are

---

e Baltimore News-Post 31
hursday, June 12, 1947—

eonard Bernstein and Rober haw, both on the faculty of th Berkshire Music Centre, at Tanglewood.

H. A. F. P.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1947

THE LATEST of the announcements from the Boston Symhony's Berkshire Festival was a ttle late in arriving. It concerns hree concerts of chamber music, ne of which has already been layed, which are in addition to ll that has previously been anounced.

The Gordon String Quartet with n assisting violist played on Wednesday evening, July 2. On Wednesday evening, July 9, the Albeneri Trio with the assistance of Milton Katime, violist, will play rom the works of Schnabel, Villa-Lobos and Schubert. On Wednesday evening, July 16, the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Bernard Zighera, harpist and pianist of the Boston Orchestra, assisting, will play music of Mozart, Kornsand, Milhaud, Honneger and Hill.

MIAMI FLA.
NEWS

JUL 6 - 1947

* * *

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-producing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

* * *

SCIENCE DEPT.: In the Stork Club the other night Charles Cambridge Green, the jeweler, was expressing his customary skepticism about all people and people's behavior. "But take a man like Einstein," said Paul Stewart, the director. "In 1903 Einstein predicted that in the last week of June, 1947, a new star would appear in the sky" . . . "So?" Green scoffed . . . "So," said Stewart, "last week the scientists looked in the sky with their big glasses, and there was the star" . . . "Proves nothing," Green stated. "The kid was guessin'."

* * *

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD

JUL 6 - 1947

TIBOR TO TANGLEWOOD

Violinist Tibor Horn will be at the head of the usual Bridgeport delegation going to the Tanglewood Music festival which opens at Lenox, Mass., with the concert next Sunday conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

[26]

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 7 - 1947

ive Concerts nox This Week

ms for Music Center ents and Friends to ede First Public t.

ncerts for members of the f Friends of the Berkshire enter and for students at er will be given this week ewood, Lenox, preceding public performance of the season to be presented there hy.

e concerts for students and f the Music Center will h a chamber music program ven Wednesday evening by eneri trio as the second of mber music concerts sponsored during the Tanglewood season by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress. Milton Kalims, viola, will assist the trio in a performance of compositions by Arthur Schnabel, Villa-Lovos and Schubert. The other concerts will be given: by chorus department students on Thursday afternoon at 4.30, by operatic department students who will perform scenes from the operas on Thursday evening at 8.15, by orchestra department students on Friday evening at 8.15, and by a chamber music orchestra Sunday morning at 10.30.

The first public concert on next Sunday afternoon will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions drawn from the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting and with rage on the Tanglewood estate is used as a classroom by Jacob Raichman (right), who teaches trombone.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY AND STUDENTS AT THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Koussevitzky (left), director of the Center, explains a point to a student in his conducting class.

Ruth Orkin and H. S. Babbitt Jr.

A class in composition is conducted by Aaron Copland (right), composer and assistant director. Students at the Berkshire Music Center will be heard in a number of instrumental, choral and operatic performances during the six-week session.

KI[illegible]
NEWS
6/22/47

Living With Music

By ROGER BAER

Op. 1 No. 6
By ROGER BAER
Music During The Summer

he question, "Where shall we to hear good music during the mer months?" I doubt if a great ber of the people of our county e ever heard of the Berkshire tival, located at Tanglewood, s., a two hour drive from King- by the way of Hudson, Great rington, Lennox, and then, Tan- wood. Due to the fact that the ority of the concerts are given nite, to enjoy the drive by day- t, I suggest to start from here o'clock. This will give you am- time to curb the traffic jam ch starts about two miles from music center. This is the story Tanglewood.

he word Tanglewood has two d associations in the mind of American public. The first is Hawthorne's "Tanglewood . The second, with a series sic festivals conducted by Koussevitzky at the country hat bears the same name.

nning in 1931 with open ai s given under the directio ry Harley and an orchestr led from New York, the Fes erformances became identif h Dr. Koussevitzky and th Symphony Orchestra t the invitation of Miss Ge Robinson Smith, President rkshire Music Festival Ass n 1937 the beautiful and h 0-acre Tanglewood site w ed as a gift to Dr. Kous and the Boston Sympho a by Mrs. Andrew H. H Miss Mary Aspinwall T e establishment of Music Center in 1940, where young musici portunity to [illegible] in the world. Altho it is impossible to see the orchestra, you will certainly enjoy every note played by this great organization. A suggestion at this point—if you desire to seat yourself take a camp folding chair along. There are hundreds of people using them.

If you feel [illegible]

had an unparalleled opp[illegible] develop their talents in an inspi tional atmosphere and at a nomina cost, gave an even broader cultura character to the festivals.

"Today in a period of unprecedented crisis in history, when men find no common contact and means of understanding each other, when all notions and values have lost their former significance, music is an element of unity among men. More than any other art, music has the driving force, the facility and freedom of crossing social, political, geographical, racial, and religious barriers, and speaks a language acceptable to all. It is a deep blessing and great joy to be serving music at a time when its radiant influence is revealed to the world with such conviction, and when the meaning of music is justifying also the meaning of man's existence." These words were spoken by Dr. Koussevitzky at the opening of the 1946 Berkshire Festival and Music Center. They eloquently sum up the past accomplishments and future hopes of this typically native enterprise which has been truly called a national institution of art.

99ils.yf' Rg 999999 flnl999

At this late date it is impossible to secure tickets for the "shed", open air concert hall) but hundreds spread a blanket over the lawn where they may choose to relax, and listen to the greatest symphony

---

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

JUN 12 1947

Berkshire Music Fete Set July 13

Reservations are rapidly being made for the famous Berkshire Music Festival, to open on Sunday afternoon, July 13, with a concert by a section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

This will be an extra concert, when a Bach program will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions, which will also perform at the extra Mozart concert on July 20.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear on July 13.

The three groups of concerts will begin with Series A, on July 24, 26 and 27, when the works are expected to include symphonies by Brahms, Schubert, Rachmaninoff, Copland and Berlioz, with William Primrose as the viola soloist for "Harold in Italy."

Ruth Posselt will be the soloist for Hindemith's violin concerto, and works by Barber, Ravel and Martinu also will be heard.

Series B, on July 31, August 2 and 3, will be presented as a Beethoven cycle, to be followed by an extra concert, on the fifth, to include the Ninth Symphony.

The program for Series C, on August 7, 9, and 10, are planned to include symphonies by Haydn, Tschaikowsky, Mendelssohn, and Schumann, with briefer works by Debussy and Stravinsky, and Mozart's "Requiem," with chorus and soloists.

Guest conductors invited are

---

e Baltimore News-Post — 31
hursday, June 12, 1947

eonard Bernstein and Rober haw, both on the faculty of th Berkshire Music Centre, at Tan glewood.

H. A. F. P.

MIAMI FLA.
NEWS

JUL 6 - 1947

MUSIC DI

Festival in T Serge Kousse of eminent m participate in ord-producing chine, built by for fidelity of orchestra . . . T tra will play a chine will play measures by th critics will try the recording. T the "Berkshire." to raise funds vitzky scholarshi other night Cha jeweler, was exp ticism about all vior. "But take Paul Stewart, the predicted that in a new star would "So?" Green scoff "last week the so with their big gl star" . . . "Prove "The kid was gue

SCIENCE DE

F. LANIGAN
ent and Trust Offi

ODISON BAKE
WARD BALL
RT C. BROW

THE

F

eral Reserve

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1947

THE LATEST of the announcements from the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival was a ttle late in arriving. It concerns hree concerts of chamber music, ne of which has already been layed, which are in addition to ll that has previously been announced.

The Gordon String Quartet with n assisting violist played on Wednesday evening, July 2. On Wednesday evening, July 9, the Albeneri Trio with the assistance of Milton Katime, violist, will play rom the works of Schnabel, Villa-Lobos and Schubert. On Wednesday evening, July 16, the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Bernard Zighera, harpist and pianist of the Boston Orchestra, assisting, will play music of Mozart, Kornsand, Milhaud, Honneger and Hill.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD

JUL 6 - 1947

TIBOR TO TANGLEWOOD

Violinist Tibor Horn will be at the head of the usual Bridgeport delegation going to the Tanglewood Music festival which opens at Lenox, Mass., with the concert next Sunday conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 7 - 1947

List Five Concerts At Lenox This Week

Programs for Music Center Students and Friends to Precede First Public Event.

Five concerts for members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and for students at the Center will be given this week at Tanglewood, Lenox, preeeding the first public performance of the current season to be presented there on Sunday.

The five concerts for students and friends of the Music Center will open with a chamber music program to be given Wednesday evening by the Albeneri trio as the second of the chamber music concerts sponsored during the Tanglewood season by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress. Milton Kalims, viola, will assist the trio in a performance of compositions by Arthur Schnabel, Villa-Lovos and Schubert. The other concerts will be given: by chorus department students on Thursday afternoon at 4.30, by operatic department students who will perform scenes from the operas on Thursday evening at 8.15, by orchestra department students on Friday evening at 8.15, and by a chamber music orchestra Sunday morning at 10.30.

The first public concert on next Sunday afternoon will be given by an orchestra of chamber proportions drawn from the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting and with in some more imaginative character.

[26]

RARE OPERA TO BE DONE

Premiere in U. S. of Mozart's 'Idomeneo' Set for Tanglewood

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will receive its American première at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on the evenings of Aug. 4 and 6. The performances will be the major activity of the Opera Department, directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Sets were designed by Richard Rychtarik. The orchestra and singers will consist of pupils at the Music Center.

"Idomeneo" was composed in 1780, when Mozart was 24, but, owing to the absence of printed parts, the work has been performed only occasionally in Europe. The Tanglewood production will be sung in the original Italian.

CAN. JULY 17, 1947.

'Idomeneo' To Have Premiere At Tanglewood

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director. The production is announced as the major activity of the Opera Department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky; Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances in the Theatre-Concert Hall during the last week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Boris Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

JUL 6 - 1947

DeFrank To Study With Koussevitsky

Memphis Symphony Conductor At Berkshire Center

VINCENT DE FRANK, dynamic young conductor of the Memphis Symphony Orchestra, left last week for the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., to study conducting under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire Festival Concerts held annually by the Orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills. The presence of this world famous musical organization, the distinguished musicians connected with it, and the unusual loveliness of the location furnish a unique opportunity for the study and observation of music as it is created and prepared for performance.

This will be the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center. There will be a six-week session from June 30 to Aug. 10 under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, with a faculty of 45 distinguished musicians including the principal players of the Boston Symphony. All members of the Music Center are entitled to attend the 12 concerts of the 1947 Berkshire Festival, many rehearsals for these concerts, and all student concerts and operatic performances.

In orchestral conducting a small group is accepted for active participation. All will be present at Dr. Koussevitsky's rehearsals with the active participants, attending daily lectures and sessions in score analysis and instruction in the technique of conducting, and at rehearsals of the Boston Symphony for the Festival. Assistants to Dr. Koussevitsky in orchestral conducting are Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and Eleazar de Carvalho.

Tanglewood, whose extensive grounds were presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was once the meeting place of Emerson, Holmes and Melville. It was here that Hawthorne lived for a year, imagined his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." For the uses of the school there are the original house, the converted barn on the lake road, the large Shed where the Festival concerts are given, the Theatre-Concert Hall, and a number of studio units. The spacious grounds with meadowland, gardens and shade trees, will be at the disposal of the students.

cians including the principal players of the Boston Symphony. All members of the Music Center are entitled to attend the 12 concerts of the 1947 Berkshire Festival, many rehearsals for these concerts, and all student concerts and operatic performances.

In orchestral conducting a small group is accepted for active participation. All will be present at Dr. Koussevitsky's rehearsals with the active participants, attending daily lectures and sessions in score analysis and instruction in the technique of conducting, and at rehearsals of the Boston Symphony for the Festival. Assistants to Dr. Koussevitsky in orchestral conducting are Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and Eleazar de Carvalho.

Tanglewood, whose extensive grounds were presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was once the meeting place of Emerson, Holmes and Melville. It was here that Hawthorne lived for a year, imagined his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." For the uses of the school there are the original house, the converted barn on the lake road, the large Shed where the Festival concerts are given, the Theatre-Concert Hall, and a number of studio units. The spacious grounds with meadowland, gardens and shade trees, will be at the disposal of the students.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

JUL 6 - 1947

DeFrank To Study With Koussevitsky

Memphis Symphony Conductor At Berkshire Center

VINCENT DE FRANK, dynamic young conductor of the Memphis Symphony Orchestra, left last week for the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., to study conducting under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire Festival Concerts held annually by the Orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills. The presence of this world famous musical organization, the distinguished musicians connected with it, and the unusual loveliness of the location furnish a unique opportunity for the study and observation of music as it is created and prepared for performance.

This will be the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Center. There will be a six-week session from June 30 to Aug. 10 under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, with a faculty of 45 distinguished musi-

---

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

JUL 7 - 1947

Leonard Lyons

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall St. bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up." . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

OBIT: George Summerlin, the State Department's chief of protocol—who died this week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

"My friends tell me I look just like Ingrid Bergman'—or sometimes it's Betty Grable—'and that I should go to Hollywood'."

That, Miss Royle said, is a tragic conviction.

"The movies don't want newcomers who look like some established star," she said. "The only reason for seeking newcomers is to get new faces and new personalities.

Good Advice

"The screen doesn't need 'another Shirley Temple' or 'another Betty Hutton' or 'another Cass Daley'," she said. "One is enough."

Resemblances to established stars are so fatal, she added, that many actors and actresses of real merit have had to work hard to overcome them.

She even discouraged youngsters from coming to Hollywood hoping to get jobs as doubles or stand-ins for stars they resemble.

"My friends tell me I look just like Ingrid Bergman'—or sometimes it's Betty Grable—'and that I should go to Hollywood'."

That, Miss Royle said, is a tragic conviction.

"The movies don't want newcomers who look like some established star," she said. "The only reason for seeking newcomers is to get new faces and new personalities.

Good Advice

"The screen doesn't need 'another Shirley Temple' or 'another Betty Hutton' or 'another Cass Daley'," she said. "One is enough."

Resemblances to established stars are so fatal, she added, that many actors and actresses of real merit have had to work hard to overcome them.

She even discouraged youngsters from coming to Hollywood hoping to get jobs as doubles or stand-ins for stars they resemble.

JUL 7 [illegible]

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording to the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 8 - 1947

ANOTHER ALBUM born at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire festivals, takes a bow as RCA Victor presents Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra in Bach Suites Nos. 2 and 3. George Laurent is the solo flutist.

The 10-sided set follows by less than a month this same group's album of Brandenburg Concertos. Both merit the same criticism: correct in performance but somewhat on the unimaginative side. Incidentally, Suite No. 3 contains the "Air for the G String," one of the best known to the listening public of all Bach melodies.

. . .

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 8 - 1947

Special Symphonic Recording Program Planned at Festival

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer To Make Motion Picture of Tanglewood Audience for First Time—Nationwide Broadcast July 29

A "music for all" field day will be held at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, its music director, will show the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

Covering radio, recording, television and motion pictures, the program will conclude with a special program by the orchestra, not already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. Music critics and other special guests will be invited from all parts of the country.

To Compare Recordings

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself, when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named the "Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizable gift from these initial sales.

Entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity," the second half of the program will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915, when it was the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

To Show Movies

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, members of the Tanglewood faculty, and other important contemporary composers. The films will be loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art and other sources.

The regular Tuesday evening broadcast by the orchestra over WBEC and the American Broadcasting Company's coast-to-coast network will be made in full view of the audience, with the Shed a vast studio, including engineers and announcers.

Tickets for the event will be on sale at Tanglewood.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 8 - 1947

Field Day at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitsky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced by the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of the coming motion picture, films will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and other contemporary composers. For the occassion the music shed will became a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

JUL 8 - 1947

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording.

Koussevitzky

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUL 8 - 1947

During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a feew measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

In the Stork Club the other night Charles Cambridge Green, the jeweler, was expressing his customary skepticism about all people and people's behavior. "But take a man like Einstein," said Paul Stewart, the director. "In 1903 Einstein predicted that in the last week of June, 1947, a new star would appear in the sky" . . . "So?" Green scoffed . . . "So," said Stewart, "last week the scientists looked in the sky with their big glasses, and there was the star" . . . "Proves nothing," Green stated. "The kid was guessin'."

[27]

Boston Sunday Globe
Published by GLOBE NEWSPAPER COMPANY
Boston 7, Mass.
242 Washington St.
(Established March 4, 1872. Evening edition first issued March 7, 1878. Sunday edition first issued Oct. 14, 1877.)
SUNDAY, JULY 13, 1947

BEYOND HATE AND FEAR

Tanglewood is as American as corn-on-the-cob. The time has gone by for comparing it with Bayreuth or even with Salzburg. In one decade, and that decade including a second world war, these Berkshire music festivals have developed into something unique.

Our soil must have been ready. Tanglewood is now a national institution, the ten thousand people who roll in to its concerts come from everywhere and the four hundred students of its Music Center are from forty States of the Union and a dozen foreign countries. A school in the strict sense of course it is not, for these young musicians are already proficient technically, many of them to the point of virtuosity. What brings them to Tanglewood is ensemble performance and professional coaching by eminent conductors, composers, orchestral players, choirmasters, and operatic instructors. When it is remembered that this "Center," as it is termed, is a war-baby, born in 1940, and that it continued through the dark Summers of 1941 and 1942, it will be seen that the infant was robust. As Dr. Koussevitzky said at the opening of this season: "While the fury of destruction was in full operation on other continents, here, in Tanglewood, a new creative cultural venture was born."

Scenically alone Tanglewood is a great impression. Those who go there not knowing what they are to see are astounded by the grandeur of the mountain landscape. Forests, lawns, groves, the lake, amethyst in a setting of emerald, the luxuriant meadows abloom with field flowers, elms that stand like sculpture, the scenery is so fine that even some who know, or supposed they knew, the place well are astonished all over again each season and inclined to doubt that such a place exists. These landscapes seem to have been created on purpose to make mortals gape.

* * *

Massachusetts has three regional cultures; one centering in Boston and Cambridge, a second in the Connecticut Valley, a third in the Berkshires. All three are old, having taken from one to three centuries for their growth. In the Connecticut Valley is a college for men, Amherst; two for women, Holyoke and Smith; and one for men and women, Massachusetts State College, now somewhat prematurely styled university; three secondary schools for boys, Deerfield Academy, Williston, and the Mt. Hermon School, and one for girls at Northfield.

The Berkshire soil is equally rich. Pittsfield is the seat of an old and dignified culture. A look into its Athenaeum and its Art Museum tells the visitor that. Williams College is now, with returned soldiers, in session the year round, and Summer brings to Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield two resident theatrical companies, a resident school and theatre of the dance at "Jacob's Pillow" in Lee, the theatre being the first of its kind in existence; the Boston Museum School of Fine Arts this year inaugurates its Summer session at the Pittsfield Museum, and overarching all is Tanglewood, its symphonic festivals and Berkshire Music Center. A State does well if it have one flourishing regional culture. Three such is a high score, and higher if we count Worcester as a unit distinct from Boston, which of course it is, with a college, preparatory schools, an important art museum and an annual music festival of imposing dimensions. A decade ago it was being said that New England's future was to be a boarding school in Winter and in Summer a boarding house. In the Berkshires and elsewhere the two are so uniting as to suggest the remark of Thucydides that Athens was "the school of Hellas." What has been true for three centuries was never more true than it is today: New England is the schoolmaster of America.

* * *

Such then is the schoolroom, such the view from its windows, and such the eminence of some of its schoolmasters; but buildings and teachers are only the start of it. What is to be the central meaning, the animating purpose of the things taught? He was speaking of music, but in so doing, as he well knew, Dr. Koussevitzky was voicing a truth universal to the creative arts when at the opening of this Summer's session at Tanglewood he said:

"The grave and tragic instances of present-day life have shown that an artist is also a leader in society: he cannot withdraw from the open strife into his ivory tower. For art is a creative process. Art is the result of the creative act of man."

A good many reflective persons must have searched their hearts asking: "In a time when the future not alone of civilization but of man himself seems to be wavering in a precarious balance, what right have we to enjoy art, or even to enjoy nature? Should we not throw every ounce of our energies into trying to avert another, the final, disaster?"

You may say that these creative arts rest on the economic foundations of the society which cultivates them and cannot survive its dissolution. To say that would be to say man's immortality is of his body and not of his spirit. The cultural heritage from the past thirty centuries by which our lives today are enriched and, if we will, ennobled, has survived the collapse of two great civilizations, Greece and Rome; has survived the Dark Ages, those dreadful "Nine Silent Centuries," and lives again in us. What is more, "the great ages of creation have been unstable ages," says Whitehead in Science and the Modern World; and Murray, in his book on Homer:

"Every Greek community was like a garrison of civilization amid wide hordes of barbarians; a picked body of men, of whom each individual had in some sense to live up to a higher standard than can be expected of the common human animal. . . . Hellenism was represented everywhere by a handful of men holding an outpost, men who wrought their wonderful day's work in political and moral wisdom, in speculation, in beauty of outward form and inward imagining, with an ear ever open to the sternest of life's calls." A thousand years later, the monks, in a Europe peopled with wolves, worked as copyists of classical manuscripts, as builders, as musicians; and, after them, the artists of the Renaissance wrought their masterpieces amidst the brawls of princes and the broils of the theologians. "In the history of the world, tranquillity has been rare; nor is it in a tranquil environment that the greatest souls have been fashioned."

* * *

While one world dies, another is being born. Warriors, and not seldom statesmen also, destroy; artists create. The same, or similar, men who made war are sent to make peace. They are not making it. The reason is that they do not represent the whole of what constitutes man, nor even the whole of what constitutes their own nations. They represent a nation's material existence, not its spiritual life; they speak and act for the nation's property interests, its acquisitive instincts, not its creative ones: they act on behalf of that which divides human beings—material ownership—not on behalf of that which unites mankind, namely, the worlds of thought, beauty, art, science, and all creative activity—the deep and abiding subsoil of human sanity. Koussevitzky has said it at Tanglewood on June 30th:

"Art and culture are the guardians of peace: they abhor war and revolution as disrupting the peaceful development, the advance and happiness of man."

Can the souls of men be strengthened in time to control this dreadful scientific enginery of military destruction? Such is the riddle of our epoch. Among those things which strengthen the soul of man is the cultivation of his creative faculties.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

The Boston Globe
Published by GLOBE NEWSPAPER COMPANY
242 Washington St. Boston 7, Mass.
(Established March 4, 1872. Evening edition first issued March 7, 1878. Sunday edition first issued Oct. 14, 1877.)
TUESDAY, JULY 22, 1947

PIT OR PARADISE

This is the story of something which came out right. Such stories, as you know, are not too common in this perhaps-too-modern modern world. When, therefore, a hopeful one does come along, it had better be told.

Forty years ago there was an article of the very greatest value which was almost the exclusive possession of a privileged class. That class itself was not exclusive, nearly anybody could break into it regardless of money, birth, rearing, race, color, creed, nationality, age or anything else, if they knew how. But that was just the trouble. So few knew how, and how were they to be told? People with tender social consciences who enjoyed that special privilege did so not seldom with twinges of guilt. "Everybody," went their thought, "should be in here, the hall only holds 2000; but even if it would hold everybody and everybody had the money, the hitch is that multitudes wouldn't care to come."

That was forty years ago and nobody then in his wildest fantasies ever dreamed this thing could happen. Well, it has happened. That inestimably valuable article, once the possession of a small privileged class, now belongs to the multitude, and millions of people are enjoying it who know its worth.

The place forty years ago was Symphony Hall, and the possession was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that is, in the sense of its pouring out to us the bounteous heritage of music. Such music was always meant for the multitude; it is the testament of men of genius bequeathing their greatness to the human race. It is ours, it was ours from the beginning; and a way has been found for us to claim it—in person, at public concerts, many of them free, and in solitude either by broadcast or from phonograph records. This literature of music, one of the great literatures of all time, is rapidly on its way to become a universal possession.

At this point enter: scientific technology. From Tanglewood one week from tonight, July 29, at 8:30 will be broadcast a concert celebrating this epochal event in the aesthetic history of man. They are too modest to call it that, but that is what it is. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in there pitching from the first. It was the first to record a symphonic work in its entirety, and since that time it has been first to be heard in two of the most important advances in the art of recording. Recordings made over the past three decades will be played at this concert side by side with actual performances of the same music by the orchestra itself, to show the advance of the recording art. At the same time the Music Shed, audience included, will be a vast motion picture studio for making the first shots of a film, "The Story of Tanglewood," by one of the big Hollywood companies which has been and gone and got religion! Radio, phonograph, motion pictures, television, F M, such are the "New Horizons in Music" which, like nature's own, are endless, and thus, as next Tuesday night's concert is entitled, is "Music For All." Well does Dr. Koussevitzky know the infinite possibilities of this creative force:

"In a time" (he says), "when men seem unable to find a common contact and means of understanding one another, the Berkshire Music Center and its fine young student body are dedicated to an art which, more than any other, speaks a language accessible to all."

What precisely does this event mean? It is a specimen case, and a most overwhelming one, of what modern scientific technology can do to enrich and ennoble the lives of all people when used creatively. This, too, at the very time when its use by the forces of competitive greed threatens to obliterate our lives, our very civilization itself. The most eminent of living philosophers has said: "Man stands either on the threshold of the most brilliant period in his history, or on the brink of an appalling disaster." Of that disaster the atom bomb (acquisitive statecraft) is symbol: and its counter-symbol is the free broadcast from Tanglewood of symphonic music (creative art) bringing access to the good life "which shall be for all people."

UNCLE DUDLEY.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1947

INTERNATIONAL GROUP AT TANGLEWOOD: Fifteen of 19 students from foreign countries with Aaron Copland (left) composer and assistant director of Berkshire Music Center. First row, in the usual order: Aldo Parisot, Brazil; Carlos Riesco, Chile; Donna Grescoe and Brock McElheran, Canada; Sybil Willey, Australia; second row: Hans Grubar, Canada; Hector Tosar, Uruguay; Alexander Kougell, Beirut, Lebanon; William McDermott, Chile; standing: Mr. Copland; Victor Feldbrill, Canada; Jan Novak, Czechoslovakia; Oscar Buenaventura, Colombia; Samuel Hersenhoren, Canada; Jacques Henri Moolenyzer, Holland; Knut Nystedt, Norway.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 9 - 1947

Boston Symphony Plans Field Day At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity," and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert, there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion, the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 9 - 1947

Eight Concerts Set Next Week At Berkshire Music Festival

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Duo-Pianists, Guest Artists Sunday; Orchestra in All Bach Program

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

Wednesday Evening

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1947

Tanglewood Opens Sunday

Full Week of Programs

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, July 13, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3:30 with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8:15. Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of department 5.

* * *

WEDNESDAY evening at 8:15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rhapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; anl Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

* * *

THE CHORUS of department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4:30 and at 8:15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

BANGOR, MAINE
COMMERCIAL

JUL 9 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By Leonard Lyons

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall St. bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up." . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

OBIT: George Summerlin, the State Department's Chief of Protocol—who died this week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its Ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the Ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians ~~and critics who will~~ participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise f for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

SCIENCE DEPT.: In the Stork Club bridge Green, the jeweler, was expressi about people and people's behavio stei Stewart, the di of June

ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 28 1948

Wilfinger to Enter Summer Music Center

Gottfried Wilfinger, 1541 Warren St., will be among the 36 Pennsylvania musicians to study at the Boston symphony Orchestra's summer school at Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Directed by its founder, Serge Koussevitzky, the school will open ~~July 1~~ for a 6-week session.

Speaker at the opening ceremonies at 3:30 p.m. will be Mr. Koussevitzky; Aaron Copeland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friend of the Berkshire Music Center, who also will represent the trustees of the orchestra.

The 200-acre estate between Lenox and Lockbridge has undergone several innovations. One of these is an entirely plate-glass reception and exhibition room which will house the book and music store.

The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-concert hall. The first concert in the remodelled music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

JUL 9 - 1947

Eight Concerts Set Next Week At Berkshire Music Festival

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Duo-Pianists, Guest Artists Sunday; Orchestra in All Bach Program

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

Wednesday Evening

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUN 28 1948

Six Bartok Quartets On Berkshire Agenda

Special to The News

BOSTON, Mass., June 27.—Bela Bartok's six string quartets, covering a period from 1907 to 1939, will be performed by the Juilliard String Quartet at the Berkshire Music Center July 10 and [illegible] theater-concert-hall at Tanglewood.

There will also be a series of Shubert chamber music, including performances of the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone.

The Albeneri Trio also will participate in this series, which is the personal gift to the music center of

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1947

INTERNATIONAL GROUP AT TANGLEWOOD: Fifteen of 19 students from foreign countries with Aaron Copland (left) composer and assistant director of Berkshire Music Center. First row, in the usual order: Aldo Parisot, Brazil; Carlos Riesco, Chile; Donna Grescoe and Brock McElheran, Canada; Sybil Willey, Australia; second row: Hans Grubar, Canada; Hector Tosar, Uruguay; Alexander Kougell, Beirut, Lebanon; William McDermott, Chile; standing: Mr. Copland; Victor Feldbrill, Canada; Jan Novak, Czechoslovakia; Oscar Buenaventura, Colombia; Samuel Hersenhoren, Canada; Jacques Henri Moolenyzer, Holland; Knut Nystedt, Norway.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 9 - 1947

Boston Symphony Plans Field Day At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity," and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert, there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion, the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 9 - 1947

Eight Concerts Set Next Week At Berkshire Music Festival

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Duo-Pianists, Guest Artists Sunday; Orchestra in All Bach Program

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

Wednesday Evening

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tic[illegible] will be on sale at the box office [illegible] hours before each program.

BANGOR, MAINE
COMMERCIAL

JUL 9 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By Leonard Lyons

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall St. bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it [illegible] up." . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to th[illegible] ic problems of the world. It's this: You work and pr[illegible] ll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

OBIT: George Summerlin, the [illegible] Protocol—who died th[illegible] wa[illegible] ief of [illegible] lomatic probl[illegible] dip- difficult [illegible] most its Amba[illegible] as you gre[illegible] Summ[illegible] thing[illegible]

Ma[illegible] em[illegible]

ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 28 1948

Wilfinger to Enter Summer Music Center

Gottfried Wilfinger, 1541 Warren St., will be among the 36 Pennsylvania musicians to study at the Boston symphony Orchestra's summer school at Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Directed by its founder, Serge Koussevitzky, the school will open ~~July 1~~ for a 6-week session.

Speaker at the opening ceremonies at 3:30 p.m. will be Mr. Koussevitzky; Aaron Copeland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friend of the Berkshire Music Center, who also will represent the trustees of the orchestra.

The 200-acre estate between Lenox and Lockbridge has undergone several innovations. One of these is an entirely plate-glass reception and exhibition room which will house the book and music store.

The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-concert hall. The first concert in the remodelled music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1947

Tanglewood Opens Sunday

Full Week of Programs

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, July 13, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3:30 with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8:15. Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of department 5.

* * *

WEDNESDAY evening at 8:15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rhapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; anl Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

* * *

THE CHORUS of department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4:30 and at 8:15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 9 - 1947

Eight Concerts Set Next Week At Berkshire Music Festival

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Duo-Pianists, Guest Artists Sunday; Orchestra in All Bach Program

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

Wednesday Evening

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUN [illegible]

Six Bartok Quartets On Berkshire Agenda

Special to The News

BOSTON, Mass., June 27.—Bela Bartok's six string quartets, covering a period from 1907 to 1939, will be performed by the Juilliard String Quartet at the Berkshire Music Center July 10 and [illegible] the theater-concert-hall at Tanglewood.

There will also be a series of Shubert chamber music, including performances of the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone.

The Albeneri Trio also will participate in this series, which is the personal gift to the music center of

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 9 - 1947

Special Tanglewood Program on July 29

Phonograph, Radio and Motion Pictures to be Demonstrated in Unique Event.

A unique program which will demonstrate three scientific developments contributing to the popularization of symphonic music, will be presented on Tuesday evening, July 29, at Tanglewood, Lenox, by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The scientific developments to be stressed are the phonograph, motion picture and radio. During the early part of the evening excerpts from sound films which contain scores by several contemporary composers including Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will be shown in the theater-concert hall. From 8:30 to 9:30 the regular broadcast of the Boston Symphony will take place in the music shed, and while it is under way motion pictures of the audience will be made. After this program, at 9:30, a series of records made by the orchestra in the last 30 years will be played on reproducing instruments of the same periods and will be compared with the actual music of the orchestra. Finally a newly designed radio phonograph which is to be called the Berkshire in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, will be introduced, playing the orchestra's latest recording, again beside the orchestra itself, to show the clarity and fidelity of tone of the modern instrument and recording. The first 200 Berkshire sets are to be sold on a subscription basis to benefit the Music center scholarship fund.

The evening's program, separate from the Festival and Music Center programs, will be open to the public and tickets will be sold.

This evening at 8:15 o'clock, the second of three weekly chamber music concerts presented to the music center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress will be given in the concert hall. This also will be open to the public.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUN 9 - 1947

Technical Advances To Be Shown At Tanglewood, July 29

The Boston Symphony orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event is expected to attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the firs time.

Great Barrington,
Mass.
Courier
7/10/47

Musical Field Day Set for Tanglewood

Unusual Program Planned for July 29th

Will Show Latest Advances In All Forms of Musical Reproduction, Including Recording, Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.—Audience Can Compare Recordings With Actual Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year intervals back to 1915, when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metra-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being located by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

Students and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts this week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 13, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the concertos for two pianos and string orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and Suite No. 1 in C. Major. While all seats in the theatre concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

The chorus of department 5 will give a concert at 4:30 this afternoon, and in the evening at 8:15 the students of department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department 2 will give its second program Friday evening at 8:15 in the festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

Tanglewood Tales

The Tanglewood festival in the Berkshires is to have a "Music for All" field day July 29, illustrating advances in various forms of musical reproduction. Present day broadcasting will be demonstrated in a concert by the Boston orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and the orchestra also will compare the real thing with reproduction on a new custom built radio-phonograf called the "Berkshire" in honor of the festival, which is to get scholarship fund benefits from the sale of the first 200 sets. The improvement in recording will be illustrated by Boston orchestra records from 1915 to the present, and music in motion pictures will be presented in films with scores by contemporary composers of note, including Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the Tanglewood faculty.

"Red Mill" Closing

C. C.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 10 1947

Berkshire Festival Will Open Sunday

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hilk.

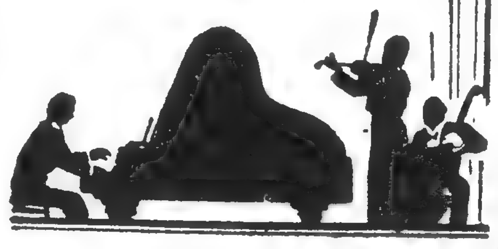
The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 11 1947

Week-End Listening For Music Lovers



The Boston Symphony will move to Tamgelwood for its Berkshire Music Festival series Tuesday. A group of four broadcasts will cover the event, over WSUN, from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m Tuesday. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will lead the orchestra in a special program featuring the duo-pianists Pierre Luboshut and Genis Nemenoff. They wil play "Concerto for Two Piano and String Orchestra in C Minor", and two other works o Bach—"Suite No. 1 in C Major" and "Concerto No. 2 in C Major". These artists were heard here a few years ago with the Civic Music series.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 1 1 1947

* * *

The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra.

* * *

The critics will then try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

CORNING, N. Y.
LEADER

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's New York

Marriage and Music Thrive In Berkshire Music Center

Wish I could have been in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This Summer 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumentalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

In his school dedication address Dr. Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. Its spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a sideswipe at disk jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Music Festival, assures me all the Maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

The music at the Berkshire Music Center, which is in Lenox, Mass., never fails to soothe my spirit. The Summer school, too, is an uplifting insitution. But I must admit the romantic undercurrents absorb me as much as the musical savvy. Located on the idyllic Tanglewood estate which figured in some of Hawthorne's tales, it was willed to Koussy by some adoring old ladies, for the purpose to which he has put it. What better place for love to flourish than under blue skies in a green valley shaded with trees and perfumed with flowers? Is it any wonder that ten per cent of the students come out of the six-weeks school musically inspired and matrimonially betrothed?

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
JUL 1 2 1947

Boston Symphony In 'Field Day' At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., July 11.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, have announced a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood, Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Mr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year intervals back to 1915, when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 11 1947

Woman's New York

Marriage and Music Thrive in Berkshire Koussevitzky School

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, July 10—Wish I could have been in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This summer 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumentalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

Alice Hughes

In his school dedication address Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. Its spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a sideswipe at disc jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Music Festival, assures me all the maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, say Koussy.

The music at the Berkshire Music Center, which is in Lenox, Mass., never fails to soothe my spirit. The Summer school, too, is an uplifting institution. But I must admit the romantic undercurrents absorb me as much as the musical savvy. Located on the idyllic Tanglewood estate which figured in some of Hawthorne's tales, it was willed to Koussy by some adoring old ladies, for the purpose to which he has put it. What better place for love to flourish than under blue skies in a green valley shaded with trees and perfumed with flowers? Is it any wonder that 10 per cent of the students come out of the six-weeks school musically inspired and matrimonially betrothed?

HAIRSTY

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 12 1947

Special Tanglewood Concert Slated at Lenox the 29th

Unusual Event, 'Music for All,' to Feature Development Of Phonograph, Radio and Motion Picture

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will ~~give a special concert~~ in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Tuesday evening, the 29th. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, and orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnval" Overture, the introduction to Act Three of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" second suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

This event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public—the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures. Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the Orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonographic recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the Orchestra itself.

The motion picture cameras will photograph the audience in shots for a forthcoming film "The Story of Tanglewood." Before the concert there will be a special showing from outstanding films to which contemporary composers have contributed the musim of the opera department in the Berkshire Music Center, this Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood.

The first portion of the program by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be broadcast (8:30-9:30 E.D.S.T.) on the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network. He will conduct Berlioz' Overture "The Roman Carnival" while the motion pictures are made of the listening audience. The remainder of the program is called "The March of Fidelity," and will be devoted to a comparison of Victor phonograph records and the Orchestra in actual performance.

Each disc will be played on a phonograph of its own period. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the Introduction to Act III from "Lohengrin." The same music will then be heard in the recording of 1915 when the Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for discs.

The Orchestra's first orthophonic electrical recordings of 20 years ago and the increased volume and fidelity of 1935 will be demonstrated in the next numbers. The most recent recordings yet to be released and capturing the orchestral range and dynamics to a greater degree than ever before, is Beethoven's Overtrue to "Egmont." It will be played on the newly designed custom-made RCA Victor radio phonograph called "The Berkshire" which will be introduced to the public for the first time at this concert and will be compared with the sound of the Orchestra itself.

The program of films will include music by Honegger, Prokofieff, Walton, Copland, and Virgil Thompson.

PARKERSBURG, W.VA
NEWS
7/13/47

Berkshire Music Festival Will Be Aired by ABC

From the theatre-concert hall, on the spacious grounds of the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company on Tuesday, July 15, will present the first of a series of four programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the four Tuesday broadcasts, which will be heard over Station WLW from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m., EDT.

This will be the seventh season of the festival, which is part of the activities of the Berkshire Music Centre where students in a six week session meet a distinguished faculty of 45, including the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for advanced work in their specialties. The students are chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for the five departments of instruction after consideration of their qualifications.

The ABC broadcasts this year will include one of Bach, one of Mozart, a special broadcast and a concluding program which will be devoted to the presentation of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" in its entirety.

The opening broadcast will feature duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff in two numbers.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

JUL 13 1947

From the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass., on the spacious grounds of the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, WBIR on Tuesday, will present the first of a series of four programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the four Tuesday broadcasts, which will be heard at 8:30 p. m.

Selections to be heard on the All-Bach program are "Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C-Minor," "Suite No. 1 in C-Major," and "Concerto No. 2 in C-Major for Two Pianos and String Orchestra."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 13 1947

Bach Program Opens Series In Berkshires

Luboshutz and Nemenoff Soloists With Ensemble Under Dr. Koussevitzky

The annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opens today at 3:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in a Bach program, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists in the concertos for two claviers in C major and D major. This will be repeated next Tuesday night at 8:15. The second program devoted to Mozart's music will be played next Sunday afternoon and the following Tuesday night, July 20 and 22, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The first of the three regular subscription series with the full orchestra will be held on Thursday night, July 24.

In addition to the concerts already announced, there will be a special event titled "Music for All" at Tanglewood on Tuesday, July 29, when an evening concert by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be prefaced by a showing of parts of films with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, members of this summer's Berkshire Music Center faculty; Virgil Thomson, William Walton and Serge Prokofieff. The concert will be broadcast from 8:30 to 9:30. During the opening number Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, motion pictures will be made of the audience; these will form part of a film called "The Story of Tanglewood."

The rest of the program includes Tchaikovsky's piano concerto in B flat minor, with Ella Goldstein as soloist, Vivaldi's organ concerto in D minor, the introduction to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," part of Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite and music from Prokofieff's "Love of Three Oranges." Playing of a 1915 recording of the "Lohengrin" music by the Boston Symphony under Karl Muck will precede the performance of this work; other works will be prefaced by recordings made by this orchestra in 1915, and the "Egmont" overture will be heard both in actual performance and in one of the Bostonians' latest records.

The Berkshire Music Center will present the following events, open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center:

Today, 10:30 a. m., Chamber music group. Tuesday, 4:30, Department 5 orchestra and chorus. Wednesday, 8:15 (presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress), Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, Mozart, Sinfonia Concertante; Kornsand, Fantasy Quintet (first performance); Milhaud, La Cheminee du Roi Rene; Honegger, Rhapsody for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet; E. B. Hill, Sextet, Op. 39. Thursday, 4:30, Department 5 chorus; 8:15, Opera scenes. Friday, 8:15, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Full information is obtainable from the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

VALLEJO, CALIF.
MORNING TIMES-HERALD

[illegible]

ABOUT MUSIC
ELLEN M. RIVET, Editor

1947 Berkshire Festival Will Open Today

Fourteen concerts will be given at the 1947 Berkshire Festival opening today in Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, and closing August 10. Two of these will be repeats of the Bach and Mozart programs scheduled for July 13 and 20, and these concerts, on July 15 and 22, will be broadcast over ABC.

They will be performed by an orchestra of chamber proportions under Serge Koussevitzky in the Theatre-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Center. The other concerts of the series will be played by the full orchestra in the Music Shed. All nine of Beethoven's symphonies will be heard in the Beethoven cycle of four concerts.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 14 1947

Bach Program Opens Berkshire Festival

Lenox, Mass., July 14—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood Concert Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 P. M.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
JUL 13 1947

AT TANGLEWOOD: Conductor Serge Koussevitzky (center) chats with duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff on the porch of his home near Lenox, Mass. The piano team will appear with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in performances of the Bach Concertos in C major and C minor at the opening concerts of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening.

Photo by Ruth Orkins

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 14 1947

Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Festival

Lenox, Mass., July 14.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2000 yesterday at the Tanglewood Concert Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood tomorrow evening in the theater concert hall.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All."

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 13 1947

MUSIC

'Music for All' Field Day In Tanglewood July 29; Elgar Festival

By E. V. W.

> "My song will touch your forehead like a kiss of blessing . . . it will be like a pair of wings to your dreams . . . it will be like a faithful star overhead when dark night is over your road . . . my songs will sit in the pupils of your eyes and will carry your sight into the heart of things."—Tagore.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA and its music director, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, announce a "Music for All" field day in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction. The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country. For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

> "A song will outlive all sermons in memory."

'March of Musical Fidelity'; Motion Pictures of Audience

THE SECOND HALF of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph. As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corp., the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources. For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday night series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

Record Audience of 2600 Hears All-Mozart Concert

Jy. 14

Many of the 1400 Who Hear Music From the Lawn at Tanglewood Bring Picnic Lunches; Program To Be Repeated Tomorrow Night

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A record audience of 2600 heard the Mozart program in the Theatre Concert-Hall at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Many of the 1400 who listened from the lawn arrived early and installed themselves on the benches surrounding the auditorium, and on cushions and blankets with which they had come prepared. At 2 o'clock many picnic parties had availed themselves of the lawns and gardens and shade.

The briskish clear air may have had something to do with the attendance figures but we would guess that the tradition established by these more intimate concerts devoted to Bach and Mozart, even in their short span, was the attraction. The performance proved without the question of a doubt why these concerts have become such an important part of the Berkshire Festival.

Koussevitzky at Best

The program was mainly of familiar and favorite selections, but they were presented with a brilliance which has surely never been surpassed and questionably equalled by this peerless organization. Serge Koussevitzky, the distinguished conductor of the Boston orchestra, led some 30 men selected from the first desks of the symphony in the serenade in B flat for wind instruments, in the divertimento in the same key for strings and two horns, and then, after intermission, in two symphonies, one a very early one and the other, the last, the Jupiter.

The wind serenade had not proceeded beyond the first three notes when it became apparent what would be the nature of the fare of the afternoon. The luscious sonority of the Boston orchestra's famed wind section proclaimed itself in the opening chord, the mellifluous blending of the bassoons and the horns under the suave clarinets and oboes produced a tone not easily forgotten, and when they suddenly dropped to the dolce dominant, they revealed the accomplishment of a lifetime. The whole serenade abounded with instance after instance of such precious details. The whole afternoon was a succession of the most refined and subtle nuances, inflections and contrasts, deftly indicated by the unerring artistic taste of the peerless conductor and mirrored with instant and complete sensitivity by the members of the ensemble.

Atmosphere Helps

The Divertimento for the strings was as scintillating as its predecessor. The atmosphere was especially favorable to the strings, as it had been to the reeds, and in the spirited passages, the various figures, runs and scales came off with immaculate perfection, without ever sacrificing the limpid grace and flexibility which was constantly inspired from the podium. The slow movement was an example of tonal splendor. Dr. Koussevitzky inclines to take his adagios with premeditated deliberation, but there can be no cavil when the musical result becomes so undebatable as was yesterday's performance.

The Koussevitzky "Jupiter" is a well-known opus by now, but we cannot remember when the eminent conductor and the men seemed to be more in the vein. Even the undistinguished and boyish little E flat symphony, No. 26, acquired a finish beyond its inherent worth. The tender melancholy of the slow movement became a poignant morsel in their hands. The symphony, in three movements, is played without pause and is fortunately short. However, the spirit of the afternoon was such that they would have decorated anything they touched. The program will be repeated tomorrow evening.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 14 1947

DUO-PIANISTS, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, who played at the opening Tanglewood concert, Sunday, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program will be repeated ~~tomorrow evening.~~

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 14 1947

Initial Bach Program Heard at Tanglewood

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., July 13.—An audience of more than 2,000 this afternoon heard the initial Bach program, forerunner of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The theater concert hall, which seats 1,200, was filled, and there were 800 general admissions sold to outside benches, with hundreds more out on the lawn.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted thirty pieces from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and shared honors with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists. They received an ovation and were recalled four times at the conclusion of the Concerto in C Major No. 2.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will be seventy-three on July 26, revealed undiminished vigor, and the Tanglewood audience was thrilled, especially in two Brandenburg concertos. Suite No. 1 in C Major also was played. The program will be repeated Tuesday evening.

MUSKEGON, MICH.
CHRONICLE

JUL 15 1947

Boston Symphony To Star Pianists

From the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, WENR tonight will broadcast the first in a series of four programs from the Berkshire Music Festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting an all-Bach program. Duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Memenoff will be featured artists on the 7:30 program.

MUNCIE, IND.
EVENING PRESS

[illegible]

Music-Minded and Fight For Big Evenings

NEW YORK, July 15.—(AP)—Two important minorities, the music-minded and fight fans, have important evenings this week.

The first segement of the Berkshire Music Festival will be played tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:30 over ABC. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct an all-Bach program. Subsequent broadcasts will be all-Mozart and all Beethoven.

The big sports broadcast will be the Tony Zale-Rocky Graziano middle-weight championship fight, tomorrow night. The fisticuffs go on the air from Chicago at 10 over NBC.

Chilling thought for a July evening: Boris Karloff will star in the [illegible]-year-old "Lights Out" when the [illegible] succeeds the Henry [illegible] show at 10:30 tomorrow on ABC.

[illegible] Symphony has been [illegible] continue on the ABC Sunday [illegible] hour in October, Dr. [illegible] conducting.

[illegible] tonight: NBC—7:00, Mil[illegible]; 8:00, Call the Police; [illegible] Waring Music; 9:00, [illegible] Adventures.

CBS — [illegible] Big Town; 7:30, Mr. [illegible]th; 8:30, Studio One, [illegible]; 9:30, Open Hearing Discussion; 10:15, Earl Bunting [illegible] the Nation."

ABC — 7:30, Green Hornet; 8:00, [illegible] and Abner; 9:30, Summer Serenade; 10:30, Hoosier Hop.

MBS —7:00, (repeat 10.00) Warden's Cases; 7:30, The Falcon; 8:30, American Forum, "Latin-American Policy;" 9:30, Dance Time.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 16 1947

RARE OPERA TO BE DONE

Premiere in U. S. of Mozart's 'Idomeneo' Set for Tanglewood

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will receive its American première at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on the evenings of Aug. 4 and 6. The performances will be the major activity of the Opera Department, directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Sets were designed by Richard Rychtarik. The orchestra and singers will consist of pupils at the Music Center.

"Idomeneo" was composed in 1780, when Mozart was 24, but, owing to the absence of printed parts, the work has been performed only occasionally in Europe. The Tanglewood production will be sung in the original Italian.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
EVENING STAR-TELEGRAM

JUL 16 1947

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

Marriage and Music Thrive At Berkshire Music Center

BY ALICE HUGHES.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Wish I could have been in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge ~~Koussevitsky, di~~rector of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war.

This summer 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumentalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN.

In his school dedication address Dr. Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. ts spread among the masses at oo rapid a pace has resulted in misconception of music as a neans of entertainment and enoyment." I pondered these words nd decided he must be taking a deswipe at disk jockeys. But ill Judd, son of the manager of e Berkshire Musical Festival, asures me all the maestro meant as that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

The music at the Berkshire Music Center, which is in Lenox, Mass., never fails to soothe my spirit. The summer school, too, is an uplifting institution. But I must admit the romantic undercurrents absorb me as much as the musical savvy. Located on the idyllic Tanglewood estate which figured in some of Hawthorne's tales, it was willed to Koussy by some adoring old ladies, for the purpose to which he has put it. What better place for love to flourish than under blue skies in a green valley shaded with trees and perfumed with flowers? Is it any wonder that 10 per cent of the students come out of the six-weeks school musically inspired and matrimonially betrothed?

HAIR STYLE REVOLT.

The long hemline isn't the only fashion change women are beefing about. Now come the milliners who say they want women's ears covered in order to wear the new hat styles. Ears have enjoyed freedom for several years to contribute that "well-scrubbed" look that's been so popular. Now they're due for retirement, and some women, particularly the top glamor models, don't like it.

Here's what raven-haired Pat Ryan has to say on the subject: "The hound dog drape? It makes a girl look years older when her ears are covered. Not for me." But red-headed Rosemary Craig is more amenable. She's decided to muffle her ears for fashion: "My husband likes me to keep up with the latest style trends. Covered ears are age-making, but as long as my husband likes me that way, I'll do it." Blond Elaine Bassett holds out: "Not a chance, not even for a hat show." Elaine wears her hair drawn back sleek and smooth, coiled at the back of her neck and with her pretty pink ears showing. "If I wear my hair over my ears my husband will leave me." Will you wear the new doggy hair style? I won't.

MUSIC BOX CONCERT.

Every time I have ever been in Paris I have always brought home a music box to give to some child. I used to pick them up in the Flea Market real cheap. The best one I got, to whose sweet tinkle my niece Barbara went to sleep every night as a child, was only $5. This week I saw an exhibit of 40 music boxes owned Mr. and Mrs. George R. Brown Chatham, N. J., a pair of avid music box collectors. Some of theirs date back to 1800 and some of them are worth thousands of dollars. All have a particular charm that is not present in more perfected musical instruments. This music box exhibit is at Ra City's Museum of Science dustry.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 16 1947

Mozart Opera Premiere

"Idomeneo's" First Performance in U. S. at Tanglewood Aug. 4

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" will be performed for the first time in the United States on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 4 and 6, by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Boris Goldovsky, who has edited the score for this production, will conduct, and Richard Rychtarik is designing the sets. As in the production of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" at Tanglewood last summer, the orchestra and singers will consist of students at the Center. Admission will be by invitation to members of the Society of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart composed "Idomeneo" in 1780, at the invitation of the Bavarian court, and it was first performed in Munich on Jan. 29, 1781, two days after Mozart's twenty-fifth birthday. The original Italian text by Giambattista Varesco will be used in the Tanglewood performances, which take place during the last week of the Berkshire Festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 15 1947

Initial Bach Program Heard at Tanglewood

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., July 13.—An audience of more than 2,000 Sunday afternoon heard the initial Bach program, forerunner of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The theater concert hall, which seats 1,200, was filled, and there were 800 general admissions sold to outside benches, with hundreds more out on the lawn.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted thirty pieces from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and shared honors with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists. They received an ovation and were recalled four times at the conclusion of the Concerto in C Major No. 2.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will be seventy-three on July 26, revealed undiminished vigor, and the Tanglewood audience was thrilled, especially in two Brandenburg concertos. Suite No. 1 in C Major also was played. The program will be repeated Tuesday evening.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN-NEWS

[illegible] 1947

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky wil conduct the first of four Berkshire Music Festival concerts from Tanglewood, Mass., the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at 6:30 over KECA. Duo pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Memenoff will perform Bach's Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C mino and Concerto No. 2 in C Major fo Two Pianos and String Orchestra

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN - 1947

Something to talk about

MUSIC OF TANGLEWOOD

By Herbert Kubly

All summer long the mighty elms and firs of Tanglewood reverberate with the trills of warblers and finches and the chatter of chipping sparrows. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, is certain they sing more than warblers and sparrows elsewhere. Said he, cocking his head to one side in imitation of a bird: "They listen to us and are inspired then to sing too."

Ornithologists take a dim view of Dr. Koussevitzky's firm faith that Tanglewood's birds are deeply stirred by man-made music. If the birds were, however, it would be easy to see why they are sent into a feathery frenzy of song. There is no place on earth where so much music is crowded into such a short time and into so small an acreage as during the six weeks of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Massachusetts.

To the casual visitor, Tanglewood, swarming with pretty copper-skinned girls in dirndls and sweaters and skirts and tawny youths in basque shirts and sandals, seems like an idyllic summer playground. Even pink-faced, white-haired Koussevitzky dresses like a natty summer sportsman in blue flannel jackets, gray flannel trousers, white shoes and a white felt beret. But Tanglewood is a playground with a very serious purpose. The boys and girls fiddle and blow, bang and sing, until the flat little plateau between Bald Head Mountain and inky Lake Mahkeenac, rings like a musical Babel.

Last year Tanglewood's Music Center reopened after a three-year wartime layoff. Outside and from a dozen buildings the

HERBERT KUBLY

Ned Rorem, young composer, picks raspberries on the grounds between rehearsals

Music floats out even over the Music Center pier where students sun-bathe

Students line up by the mobile commissary for the picnic-style lunches

36-37X

Figaro, and behind another hedge a section of cellos rehearsed a Beethoven minuet. On the second floor of Tanglewood's Victorian-gabled main house, assistant director Aaron Copland listened to a student composer named Ned Rorem play his homework on the piano. The spirit of song even caught up the hired help. A gardener lustily sang the Perry Como top ballad, Surrender, while he steered a power mower across the grass. . . .

Daily at 12:45, students and instructors gather on the greensward for a picnic of soup, sandwiches and ice cream served from a canteen lunch wagon and eaten on the grass. Koussevitzky usually lunches at Sernak, his home on Bald Head Mountain, but Copland is on hand, surrounded by a bevy of students who babble, of course, about music.

By two o'clock everyone is back at work. In the chamber music hall on a knoll below the main house, string ensembles saw through Schubert quintets and Beethoven quartets. Guernsey cows, unmindful of the bedlam, graze amiably in a green meadow which surrounds the red barn. In the stalls of the barn a lone pianist races through the Bach-Busoni Toccata in C Major and in the loft upstairs a chorus wrestles with Purcell's seventeenth-century masque opera, King Arthur. Late in the afternoon, students become capricious. Hidden in a birch grove, a lone flutist pipes the wistful theme of Ravel's Daphnis et Chloë, and in the clubhouse down by Lake Mahkeenac, twenty-three-year-old Lukas Foss, Koussevitzky's official pianist for the Boston Symphony, beats out a hep boogie woogie on an old piano. Several students in swimming suits begin to jitterbug until the pier, which is floated on huge drums, bobs precariously and two couples splash in.

For six weeks of this, four hundred students pay a tuition of $120, plus from $18 to $25 a week for room and board in the villages of Lenox, Stockbridge, Great Barrington and Pittsfield. Chartered buses carry them to and from Tanglewood. Evenings they folk-dance, listen to chamber music at Tanglewood or go to the Lenox public library for forums on themes like, "What relevance does popular music have in today's world of serious music?" About ten o'clock, buses haul the students back to their dormitories. Those students lucky enough to have cars put to good use the Berkshires' moonlit nights. As everywhere else, romance is mechanized at Tanglewood.

This year about a quarter of Tanglewood's students are there under the GI Bill of Rights. With his characteristic confusion of genders and syntax, Russian-born Koussevitzky has this to say of the veterans: "They give us all their eagerness, all her attention, all her youth. If she not serious, we don't accept."

Koussevitzky's trio of bright youths, Bernstein, Shaw and Foss, are all young enough to be indistinguishable from their students. To the girls they bring infinite heartaches and wistful sighings. On this point Shaw made his position quite clear when he boasted in a lecture, "My boy, aged two, sings Beethoven's choral movement—in German." The maturer faculty this year includes composers Copland and Arthur Honegger of France; Hugh Ross, director of New York's Schola Cantorum, and violist William Primrose, who is in charge of the chamber-music section. Koussevitzky, assisted by his most famous protégé, "Lenyushka" Bernstein, teaches conducting to a handful of advanced students. On Fridays Koussevitzky listens carefully to his students' conducting efforts. "I see if they adapt what I tell them," he said, "or whether they not. Then we begin again."

[33]

Above, Dr. Koussevitzky mounts the stage of the Music Shed to discuss tempi with a student conductor leading a student orchestra. Right, trio of Tanglewood greats—Bernstein, Copland, Koussy—watch impromptu fun sounds poured forth. In the great Music Shed a Brazilian student conductor who couldn't speak English gesticulated a student orchestra through Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun. Across the green in the opera theatre, dark, curly-haired Leonard Bernstein rehearsed a fuguelike chorus for Benjamin Britten's fine opera, Peter Grimes. "Old Joe has gone fishing and young Joe has gone fishing," the cast sang in uneven seven-four rhythm. "Come on," Bernstein pleaded, "now let's all go fishing."

RUTH ORKIN

In a rehearsal room, opera instructor Boris Goldovsky was losing patience with a student soprano. "No, Miss," he told her, "you are still acting operatic. Stop acting Amneris. Be Amneris, instead of an operatic mezzo-soprano." Outdoors Sylvia Pfeiffer, eighteen-year-old stepdaughter of the Buffalo Philharmonic's conductor William Steinberg, and Burton Bernstein, Leonard's fourteen-year-old brother, dabbed black paint on scenery.

In Tanglewood's garage, choral director Robert Shaw, sandy-haired and nervous, was also having soprano trouble as he conducted forty gum-chewing singers through a Hindemith chanson. "Oh, girls," Shaw exclaimed, "what a horrible C-sharp! I want no women's and no men's voices—just a great big C-sharp." Wearing moccasins and standing on a wooden soap crate from which he occasionally fell, Shaw flailed his arms like Don Quixote's windmill as he steered the singers through some of the choral movement from Beethoven's Ninth. "All mankind, ye. . ." Shaw wailed. "You make it sound like a kind of jabberwocky."

Outdoors behind some boxed hemlock hedges two sopranos sang a duet from The Marriage of [Continued on page 218]

Lenny Bernstein forsakes the classics for a ~~jazz jam~~ session in the Chamber Music Hall

---

Each season is climaxed with the three-week Berkshire Music Festival when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Tanglewood. As many as ten thousand music-bent visitors fill the shed and sprawl on the lawns to hear each concert. This summer's major events will be the first outdoor performance of Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3 and performances with a student chorus of Mozart's Requiem and Beethoven's great Ninth Symphony. The latter, which Koussevitzky describes as "the voice of Tanglewood singing Schiller's words calling all nations to the brotherhood of man," will conclude a four-concert, all-Beethoven cycle.

The Pastoral Symphony, No. 6, with its happy sweet-humored melodies and the violent musical thunderstorm of its fourth movement, is a Tanglewood favorite. The native population especially feels an affinity for that musical storm, for the Berkshire heavens rage frequently with thunderous cloudbursts. One Berkshire downpour in 1937, the first year of the festival, made Koussevitzky swear that never again would he conduct in a tent.

Wealthy patrons quickly raised $80,000 for a more substantial structure, and the next season Koussevitzky's fan-shaped Music Shed, an acoustical dream which seats almost 6,000 persons, was ready for the festival. In 1940 Koussevitzky realized another dream. With a $60,000 Rockefeller grant he opened the Berkshire Music Center. The first season's 312 students studied orchestral and chamber music as well as opera, oratorio and ballet.

Critics like to flatter Dr. Koussevitzky by calling Tanglewood an American Salzburg. The maestro considers it no compliment. Mere mention of Salzburg brings the blue veins out on his sunburned face, and he pounds his angry fist on the closest furniture. "Why a Salzburg?" he snaps. "Salzburg is Salzburg—a very old historical city where you could go forty years ago to enjoy beauty of Mozart. Today let's have courage to face it—Salzburg is most commercialized thing you can imagine. The whole people who come to Salzburg are snobs who come to say they have been in Salzburg. Worst snobs from the whole world. They must rehearse too quick, in a week, maybe less. Never a real great performance.

"Why not a Tanglewood, U.S.A.? We here play something that is as perfect as we can. Never in Salzburg an orchestra like the Boston

---

Tanglewood's choral director, Robert Shaw, looks as young as his students, conducts and coaxes his singers with the dynamic energy of an acrobat Symphony. To make great art, great artists have to rehearse."

Actually, the difference between Salzburg and Tanglewood runs deeper than Koussevitzky has indicated. Salzburg, built on the music of Mozart, is a show place for famous artists who appear in the traditional repertoire. Like a gallery of great old paintings, Salzburg looks into the past.

Tanglewood looks into the future. It trains young musicians, gives young conductors and composers a hearing. It brought Leonard Bernstein to the fore when he was twenty-four. It gave the first American concert performance of Shostakovitch's epochal Seventh Symphony in 1942 and the first American performance of Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes last year. All this is the work not of glamorous prima donnas and well-known instrumentalists, but of unknowns, most of them under thirty years old. Serge Koussevitzky, who will celebrate his seventy-third birthday this summer at Tanglewood, is in spirit and enthusiasm as young as any of them. He is still not satisfied. He wants a great theatre which in the style of the ancient Greeks will bring drama, literature and painting to the Berkshires. Tanglewood, he hopes, will set a pattern for many Tanglewoods to sprout throughout the land. This must come about, says Koussevitzky, because, "there are so many gifted boys and girls. One day, maybe, we will give them all a chance."

BAY CITY, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUL 3[illegible] 1947

BACK-STAGE
with Don Sterling

NOTES FROM THE MUSICAL WORLD

By UNITED PRESS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzy, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestr in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces it first custom-made radio-phonograph.

The new instrument has bee named "The Berkshire" in hono of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 17 1947

Presence of Three Composers Marks Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The presence of three composers whose works appeared on the program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night lent special glamour to the final chamber music concert presented by the Berkshire Music Center with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. They were Emil Kornsand, who is a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who [illegible] his own new fantasy quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp; Arthur Honegger, whose early rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet was played, and Edward Burlinghame Hill, whose sextet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano was the closing number on the program.

Speyer Directs Ensemble

The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, of which Louis Speyer is director and performer on the oboe and English horn, consists of James Pappoutsakis, flute, Victor Polatschek, clarinet, Willem Valkenier, French horn, Raymond Allard, bassoon, assisted by Bernard Zighera, piano and harp. The program opened with the Mozart sinfonia concertante quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, to which the piano supplied the accompaniment. Later there was a suite for woodwind quintet by Darius Milhaud. These were both beautifully prepared, and served to show the timbre and blending possibilities of these instruments in such supremely able hands. The Mozart was an outstanding example of refinement and grace, while the Milhaud, like music written for the screen, was expertly effective. The tonal variations and inflections achieved by these artists on instruments so rarely heard outside the confines of the complete orchestration made an especially gratifying part to the over-all programs of the season.

But the greatest interest centered in the compositions by the men who were present and who were obliged to stand and acknowledge personally the approval expressed by the large audience. Kornsand's fantasy quintet, written last year, is dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge and this was its premier performance. His choice of instruments produces a rich texture, and one which the composer exploited with uncommon adroitness. He used the device often of easing one instrument in unison on the last note of another's phrase, thereby deftly changing the tone color without making the substitution abrupt. There was a romantic glow to his harmonic and melodic structure, in which his personal viola-playing was a very substantial contribution to the fantasy's success.

Honegger Acclaimed

Mr. Honeggar is on the composi on faculty of the Center and is ust arrived from France. His apsodie dates from 1917 when he as still a young student in the Conservatory at Paris. It h idyllic charm and unmistakab identity as the product of the con poser's background. Its thre movements are played withou pause and are too quickly over. Hi acclaim was notably cordial an hearty.

Mr. Hill is professor emertius o the music department of Harvard His sextet written and played for the first time in 1934 at the Ninth Festival of Chamber Music organized by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain was performed at that time by the Laurent wind quintet of which two of last night's artists, Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Allard, were also members. Mr. Hill is the dean of the contemporary composers represented on last night's list, but there is no intimation of his age in the music. Indeed, it has the syncopation so typical of our musical idols of a decade or two ago. so much so that the composer, as he renewed his own acquaintance with it last night, remarked that he had forgotten how much jazz there was in it. The four movements all seem to take their place in the derivative categories which were so much in favor with American musical thought of a generation and more ago.

Mr. Hill used considerable ingenuity in his rhythmic idioms, so that they flow along completely naturally, while he remains, without pretention, within the recognizable domain of harmonic procedure. The vitality of all four movements is its outstanding feature, and it served to close the program, and this series, with a gay fillip.

As the performers graciously indicated the respective composers at the completion of the various works, they rose and then relayed the gesture to the lady who has been the inspiration of the series. Mrs. Coolidge, now for the second year, has made these chamber concerts available free at the Center, and they have filled a niche not provided by the fare of the orchestra or its divisions. The programs, too, have contributed a list of music which the students at the school nor the music-loving public would not ordniarily encounter. Its educational role, therefore, as well as its enjoyment function, has made it a valuable addition to the unique enterprise at Tanglewood, and one of which the enthusiastic audience was eager to show its deep appreciation.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 17 1947

Symphonic Festival Concerts Open Next Week at Lenox

First of Nine Major Programs by Boston Orchestra Under Koussevitzky Will Take Place Thursday Evening—Public to be Admitted to Four Others Among Nine Musical Events of Week at Tanglewood—Second Major Concert, Second "Preliminary" Concert and Its Repetition, and Rehearsal Are Open.

The first of the major Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra, to be given Thursday evening in the vast music shed will be the main attraction among nine musical events scheduled to take place next week at Tanglewood, it was announced there today.

Events Open to Public

In addition to the first and second concerts in the Symphonic festival Series "A" there are three other public events on the week's schedule. Among these are the second of the preliminary concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, to be given in the theater-concert hall on Sunday afternoon, and its repetition Tuesday evening. Finally, on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, a rehearsal of the Boston symphony orchestra will be thrown open to the public, the proceeds to go to the orchestra's pension fund. Other activities on the week's schedule are for Berkshire Music Center students and for members of the Society of Friends of the Music Center.

For the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival season, which embraces three series of three concerts each, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra will perform on Thursday evening the Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger who flew from Paris last week to join the Music Center faculty, the three orchestral sketches which Debussy grouped under the inclusive title "The Sea," and Brahm's Second symphony. The second concert in Series "A" on Saturday evening will be composed entirely of contemporary works, Barber's "School for Scandal" overture, Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony, with a violin solo by William Primrose.

All-Mozart Program

The first of the preliminary concerts last Sunday was devoted to Bach's compositions, and Mozart's works will exclusively comprise the program for the second preliminary concert this Sunday afternoon, the program to be repeated Tuesday evening. Included are the Serenade for Winds, the "Jupiter" symphony, in C major, the E flat major symphony and the Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats have been sold for this concert but for the repetition of the program Tuesday evening some are available.

The forward section of the music shed has also been sold out for all three Series "A" major concerts, but a few remain in the rear section and lawn space is unlimited.

The activities for Music Center students and members of the Society of Friends next week are student orchestra concerts Tuesday afternoon, and Friday evening, a students' choral concert Thursday afternoon and on Wednesday evening a program of American music by the Juillard String quartet.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 18 1947

American Premier Of Mozart Opera In Lenox Soon

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director. The production is announced as the major activity of the opera department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will comprise pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances in the Theatre-Concert hall during the last week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but, owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Boris Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)

JUL 17 1947

56

• • Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reportedly will have a hand in introducing the RCA Victor new custom-made line during the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass. Before a group of eminent musicians and critics, one of the firm's sets will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra with both the recorder and orchestra playing identical bars of the same number.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 18 1947

TANGLEWOOD TO HAVE PREMIER OF MOZART

Opera "Idomeneo" to be Given by Students

The first American performance of Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will be presented Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and Aug. 6, at Tanglewood bowl in Lenox by pupils of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as director.

The performance will be the major activity of the opera department and will be open only to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and the pupils. Considered one of Mozart's greatest works, the opera never has been heard in America, and the full score has been copied for the Tanglewood production, which will be sung in the original Italian during [illegible] Berkshire Mu-

---

Ouvertüre in Tanglewood

Berkshire Music Festival

Tanglewood im Juli.

Während die vorjährige Festspielzeit noch die Nachwehen des Krieges zeigte, haben sich diese Schatten jetzt ganz verflüchtigt. Schon zu den Aufführungen, die in einer früher nicht gekannten Zahl den Hauptzyklen vorausgehen, finden sich solche Scharen von Musikfreunden ein, dass mehrere Wiederholungen eingeschoben werden mussten. Die von 420 Studierenden besuchten Kurse des "Music Center" haben noch nie ein so internationales Bild geboten wie diesmal, und die Auslese ist naturgemäss strenger denn je geworden. Wie hoch das Niveau der Leistungen jetzt liegt, liess sich in zwei Veranstaltungen erkennen, in denen die Grenzen zwischen berufstätigen Musikern hohen Ranges und noch Studierenden in erstaunlichem Masse verwischt waren.

Orchesterkonzert des "Music Center"

Nicht nur in den Werken, die Serge Koussevitzky selbst dirigierte, in Bachs Suite No. 3 D-Dur und Tschaikowskys "Francesca Da Rimini"-Phantasie, hatte das grosse Schulorchester höchste rhythmische Präzision und Fülle und Wärme der Tongebung, sondern auch unter der Leitung von Studierenden, unter denen Claude Frank als Dirigent des "Second Essay" von Samuel Barber als ungewöhnlich befähigt hervorstach, erinnern fast nur noch die jugendlichen Gesichter an Konservatoriums-Jahrgänge.

"Das Musikalische Opfer"

Früheren Generationen junger Komponisten wurde neben Bachs "Kunst der Fuge" noch "Das Musikalische Opfer" als die beste Anleitung zum Erlernen des strengen kontrapunktischen Stils empfohlen. Ausgezeichnete Neuausgaben, von denen die Bearbeitung von Hans Th. David auch diesmal benutzt wurde, haben selbst die verwirrendsten Irrgärten Bachscher Satzkunst klargelegt und dem allgemeinen Konzertleben zugängig gemacht. Die musikalisch von William Primrose und Ralph Berkowitz vorbereitete, von Julius Herford dem nicht orientierten Hörer historisch und theoretisch nähergebrachte Aufführung war ein Meisterstück sorgfältiger Studienarbeit des Centers. Unter den vielen, am Spiel Beteiligten seien nur, durch konzertmässig gerundete Leistungen auffallend, Norman Carol (Violine) und Lilian Kallir (Klavier) hervorgehoben.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Als erste grosse "offizielle" Veranstaltung am Sonntag nachmittags, in der sich New Yorks musikalische Kreise ungewöhnlich zahlreich eingefunden hatten, wieder ein Bach-Programm. Um den 1200 Plätze fassenden Theatersaal lagerten sich im Rasen noch viele hunderte von Bachverehrern, die bei den weit geöffneten Türen der Halle nicht sehr benachteiligt waren. Zwei Brandenburgische Konzerte, von denen das erste, F-Dur, die unüberbietbare Virtuosität der Bläser des Orchesters bewundern liess, und die Suite No. 1 C-Dur umrahmten, die Konzerte für zwei Klaviere in c-moll und C-Dur. In beglückend gelöstem Musizieren boten Pierre Luboshutz und Genia Nemenoff eine vollendet delikate und beschwingte Wiedergabe.

"New Horizons in Music"

Unter diesem Titel wird Tanglewood am Dienstag, 29. Juli, zwei Aufführungen veranstalten, in denen Radio, Schallplatte, Film, Television und "FM" (Frequency Modulation) kombiniert sein werden. Das grosse "shed" wird in ein Film- und Radio-Studio umgewandelt sein, in dem Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer unter Einbeziehung des Publikums Aufnahmen für den in Vorbereitung befindlichen Film "The Story of Tanglewood" machen will. RCA-Victor wird ausserdem einen neuen Radio-Grammophon-Apparat "The Berkshire" zum ersten Male in der Oeffentlichkeit demonstrieren.

Artur Holde.

BAY CITY, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUL 17 1947

BACK-STAGE
with Don Sterling

NOTES FROM THE MUSICAL WORLD

By UNITED PRESS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzy, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestr in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces it first custom-made radio-phonograph.

The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 17 1947

Presence of Three Composers Marks Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The presence of three composers whose works appeared on the program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night lent special glamour to the final chamber music concert presented by the Berkshire Music Center with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. They were Emil Kornsand, who is a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who [illegible] his own new fantasy quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp; Arthur Honegger, whose early rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet was played, and Edward Burlinghame Hill, whose sextet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano was the closing number on the program.

Speyer Directs Ensemble

The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, of which Louis Speyer is director and performer on the oboe and English horn, consists of James Pappoutsakis, flute, Victor Polatschek, clarinet, Willem Valkenier, French horn, Raymond Allard, bassoon, assisted by Bernard Zighera, piano and harp. The program opened with the Mozart sinfonia concertante quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, to which the piano supplied the accompaniment. Later there was a suite for woodwind quintet by Darius Milhaud. These were both beautifully prepared, and served to show the timbre and blending possibilities of these instruments in such supremely able hands. The Mozart was an outstanding example of refinement and grace, while the Milhaud, like music written for the screen, was expertly effective. The tonal variations and inflections achieved by these artists on instruments so rarely heard outside the confines of the complete orchestration made an especially gratifying part to the over-all programs of the season.

But the greatest interest centered in the compositions by the men who were present and who were obliged to stand and acknowledge personally the approval expressed by the large audience. Kornsand's fantasy quintet, written last year, is dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge and this was its premier performance. His choice of instruments produces a rich texture, and one which the composer exploited with uncommon adroitness. He used the device often of easing one nstrument in unison on the last iote of another's phrase, thereby leftly changing the tone color vithout making the substitution ibrupt. There was a romantic low to his harmonic and melodic tructure, in which his personal iola-playing was a very substanial contribution to the fantasy's uccess.

Ioneggar Acclaimed

Mr. Honeggar is on the composion faculty of the Center and is ist arrived from France. His apsodie dates from 1917 when he as still a young student in the Conservatory at Paris. It h idyllic charm and unmistakab identity as the product of the con poser's background. Its thre movements are played withou pause and are too quickly over. Hi acclaim was notably cordial an hearty.

Mr. Hill is professor emertius o the music department of Harvard His sextet written and played for the first time in 1934 at the Ninth Festival of Chamber Music organized by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain was performed at that time by the Laurent wind quintet of which two of last night's artists, Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Allard, were also members. Mr. Hill is the dean of the contemporary composers represented on last night's list, but there is no intimation of his age in the music. Indeed, it has the syncopation so typical of our musical idols of a decade or two ago. so much so that the composer, as he renewed his own acquaintance with it last night, remarked that he had forgotten how much jazz there was in it. The four movements all seem to take their place in the derivative categories which were so much in favor with American musical thought of a generation and more ago.

Mr. Hill used considerable ingenuity in his rhythmic idioms, so that they flow along completely naturally, while he remains, without pretention, within the recognizable domain of harmonic procedure. The vitality of all four movements is its outstanding feature, and it served to close the program, and this series, with a gay fillip.

As the performers graciously indicated the respective composers at the completion of the various works, they rose and then relayed the gesture to the lady who has been the inspiration of the series. Mrs. Coolidge, now for the second year, has made these chamber concerts available free at the Center, and they have filled a niche not provided by the fare of the orchestra or its divisions. The programs, too, have contributed a list of music which the students at the school nor the music-loving public would not ordniarily encounter. Its educational role, therefore, as well as its enjoyment function, has made it a valuable addition to the unique enterprise at Tanglewood and one of which the enthusiastic audience was eager to show its deep appreciation.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 17 1947

Symphonic Festival Concerts Open Next Week at Lenox

First of Nine Major Programs by Boston Orchestra Under Koussevitzky Will Take Place Thursday Evening—Public to be Admitted to Four Others Among Nine Musical Events of Week at Tanglewood—Second Major Concert, Second "Preliminary" Concert and Its Repetition, and Rehearsal Are Open.

The first of the major Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra, to be given Thursday evening in the vast music shed will be the main attraction among nine musical events scheduled to take place next week at Tanglewood, it was announced there today.

Events Open to Public

In addition to the first and second concerts in the Symphonic festival Series "A" there are three other public events on the week's schedule. Among these are the second of the preliminary concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, to be given in the theater-concert hall on Sunday afternoon, and its repetition Tuesday evening. Finally, on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, a rehearsal of the Boston symphony orchestra will be thrown open to the public, the proceeds to go to the orchestra's pension fund. Other activities on the week's schedule are for Berkshire Music Center students and for members of the Society of Friends of the Music Center.

For the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival season, which embraces three series of three concerts each, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra will perform on Thursday evening the Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger who flew from Paris last week to join the Music Center faculty, the three orchestral sketches which Debussy grouped under the inclusive title "The Sea," and Brahm's Second symphony. The second concert in Series "A" on Saturday evening will be composed entirely of contemporary works, Barber's "School for Scandal" overture, Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony, with a violin solo by William Primrose.

All-Mozart Program

The first of the preliminary concerts last Sunday was devoted to [illegible] to be [illegible] evening. Included are the [illegible] de for Winds, the "Jupiter" symphony, in C major, the E flat major symphony and the Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats have been sold for this concert but for the repetition of the program Tuesday evening some are available.

The forward section of the music shed has also been sold out for all three Series "A" major concerts, but a few remain in the rear section and lawn space is unlimited.

The activities for Music Center students and members of the Society of Friends next week are student orchestra concerts Tuesday afternoon, and Friday evening, a students' choral concert Thursday afternoon and on Wednesday evening a program of American music by the Juillard String quartet.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 18 1947

American Premier Of Mozart Opera In Lenox Soon

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director. The production is announced as the major activity of the opera department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will comprise pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances in the Theatre-Concert hall during the last week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but, owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, t has only occasionally been perormed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Boris Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all he important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italan language.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 18 1947

TANGLEWOOD TO HAVE PREMIER OF MOZART

Opera "Idomeneo" to be Given by Students

The first American performance of Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," will be presented Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and Aug. 6, at Tanglewood bowl in Lenox by pupils of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as director.

The performance will be the major activity of the opera department and will be open only to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and the pupils. Considered one of Mozart's greatest works, the opera never has been heard in America, and the full score has been copied for the Tanglewood production, which will be sung in the original Italian during the last week of the Berkshire Music festival.

Ouvertüre in Tanglewood

Berkshire Music Festival

Tanglewood im Juli.

Während die vorjährige Festspielzeit noch die Nachwehen des Krieges zeigte, haben sich diese Schatten jetzt ganz verflüchtigt. Schon zu den Aufführungen, die in einer früher nicht gekannten Zahl den Hauptzyklen vorausgehen, finden sich solche Scharen von Musikfreunden ein, dass mehrere Wiederholungen eingeschoben werden mussten. Die von 420 Studierenden besuchten Kurse des "Music Center" haben noch nie ein so internationales Bild geboten wie diesmal, und die Auslese ist naturgemäss strenger denn je geworden. Wie hoch das Niveau der Leistungen jetzt liegt, liess sich in zwei Veranstaltungen erkennen, in denen die Grenzen zwischen berufstätigen Musikern hohen Ranges und noch Studierenden in erstaunlichem Masse verwischt waren.

Orchesterkonzert des "Music Center"

Nicht nur in den Werken, die Serge Koussevitzky selbst dirigierte, in Bachs Suite No. 3 D-Dur und Tschaikowskys "Francesca Da Rimini"-Phantasie, hatte das grosse Schulorchester höchste rhythmische Präzision und Fülle und Wärme der Tongebung, sondern auch unter der Leitung von Studierenden, unter denen Claude Frank als Dirigent des "Second Essay" von Samuel Barber als ungewöhnlich befähigt hervorstach, erinnern fast nur noch die jugendlichen Gesichter an Konservatoriums-Jahrgänge.

"Das Musikalische Opfer"

Früheren Generationen junger Komponisten wurde neben Bachs "Kunst der Fuge" noch "Das Musikalische Opfer" als die beste Anleitung zum Erlernen des strengen kontrapunktischen Stils empfohlen. Ausgezeichnete Neuausgaben, von denen die Bearbeitung von Hans Th. David auch diesmal benutzt wurde, haben selbst die verwirrendsten Irrgärten Bachscher Satzkunst klargelegt und dem allgemeinen Konzertleben zugängig gemacht. Die musikalisch von William Primrose und Ralph Berkowitz vorbereitete, von Julius Herford dem nicht orientierten Hörer historisch und theoretisch nähergebrachte Aufführung war ein Meisterstück sorgfältiger Studienarbeit des Centers. Unter den vielen, am Spiel Beteiligten seien nur, durch konzertmässig gerundete Leistungen auffallend, Norman Carol (Violine) und Lilian Kallir (Klavier) hervorgehoben.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Als erste grosse "offizielle" Veranstaltung am Sonntag nachmittags, in der sich New Yorks musikalische Kreise ungewöhnlich zahlreich eingefunden hatten, wieder ein Bach-Programm. Um den 1200 Plätze fassenden Theatersaal lagerten sich im Rasen noch viele hunderte von Bachverehrern, die bei den weit geöffneten Türen der Halle nicht sehr benachteiligt waren. Zwei Brandenburgische Konzerte, von denen das erste, F-Dur, die unüberbietbare Virtuosität der Bläser des Orchesters bewundern liess, und die Suite No. 1 C-Dur umrahmten die Konzerte für zwei Klaviere in c-moll und C-Dur. In beglückend gelöstem Musizieren boten Pierre Luboshutz und Genia Nemenoff eine vollendet delikate und beschwingte Wiedergabe.

"New Horizons in Music"

Unter diesem Titel wird Tanglewood am Dienstag, 29. Juli, zwei Aufführungen veranstalten, in denen Radio, Schallplatte, Film, Television und "FM" (Frequency Modulation) kombiniert sein werden. Das grosse "shed" wird in ein Film- und Radio-Studio umgewandelt sein, in dem Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer unter Einbeziehung des Publikums Aufnahmen für den in Vorbereitung befindlichen Film "The Story of Tanglewood" machen will. RCA-Victor wird ausserdem einen neuen Radio-Grammophon-Apparat "The Berkshire" zum ersten Male in der Oeffentlichkeit demonstrieren.

Artur Holde.

NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)

JUL 17 1947

26

● ● Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reportedly will have a hand in introducing the RCA Victor new custom-made line during the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass. Before a group of eminent musicians and critics, one of the firm's sets will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra with both the recorder and orchestra playing identical bars of the same number.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 18 1947

Festival Patrons to See Program of Noted Movies

'Music for All' Field Day at Tanglewood the 29th Will Feature 'Our Town,' 'Alexander Nevsky,' 'The River,' 'Henry V,' in Unusual Attraction

[illegible] program [illegible] noted to [illegible] musical [illegible] contemporary [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra's [illegible] field day [illegible] the 29th. [illegible] France, Russia, England, and [illegible] will be [illegible].

[illegible] with [illegible] "Mayerling," [illegible] "Alexander Nevsky," [illegible] Max- [illegible] "The River," [illegible] music of Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who [illegible] on [illegible] of the Berkshire Music Center [illegible] Tanglewood, Prokofieff, [illegible] George Antheil, [illegible] Walton. [illegible] cartoon [illegible] will be the [illegible].

[illegible] for [illegible] of the Berkshire Music Center [illegible] being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Paramount Pictures. Assembled under the [illegible] "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 p.m. in the Theatre-Concert Hall before the special concert and broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For those who are unable to be accommodated at the first showing the program will be repeated at 11 p.m.

All of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Mr. Copland, holder of both the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thorton Wilder drama. The sequence to be shown at Tanglewood begins in the cemetery of Grover's Corners and was made available by Paul Lazarus of United Artists.

A French film with Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux as the star-crossed Hapsburg lovers, "Mayerling" for more than 10 years has been an acknowledged cinema masterpiece. The selected passage is the memorable carriage ride in which the Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera tear through the night.

Two sections from "Alexander Nevsky" will be shown, first the beginning of the picture, where the medieval Russians mobilize to defend their homeland against the invading Teutonic knights, and the Battle on the Ice, the clash on a frozen lake which wrote one of the most stirring pages in Russian history. In both scenes Prokofieff made telling use not only of the orchestra but introduced a tremendous chorus as well.

"The Youth of Maxim" is the story of the 1905 revolution and is thinly veiled Soviet propaganda. Shostakovitch wrote very little original music for this sound track but made expert use of the workers songs of the period. A mild surprise for younger movie-goers comes when they hear a tune called "Danube Waves" which is a hit tune from "The Jolson Story." The same music, however, was played on the piano by Marlene Dietrich in a film which antedates "The Youth of Maxim" called "Dishonored."

When one remembers "The Plainsman" he usually thinks of the torture scene but the passage to be shown at Tanglewood will be quieter, the moment when Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickok shows his watch equipped with musical alarm to Jean Arthur (Calamity Jane). Antheil's score rated raves from the critics and it still holds up as some of the best written for films by music's confessed "bad boy." "The Plainsman" is by courtesy of Ben Washer, Paramount Pictures, Inc. For "The River," a government documentary film from the early days of the Roosevelt administration, Virgil Thomson begins with the hymn tune "How Firm a Foundation" and draws richly on American folk themes.

The finest orchestra and recording on the bill will be heard in William Walton's score for "Henry V" played by the London Symphony Orchestra. The excerpt from Laurence Olivier's magnificent film of the Shakespeare play will be the Battle of Agincourt. The film is being shown at Tanglewood by special arrangment with Capt. Harold Auten, the British producer's representative in the United States.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 19 1947

STUDENTS TO HEAR CONCERT

The entire student body of the Music Department of the Randall School is going with its faculty to the July 24th concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

No room on a ticket to tell you

TANGLEWOOD
TUESDAY, JULY 29
Music for All
TOTAL COST $2.00

KEEP THIS STUB DOOR PRIZE
7515 what you get in addition to a full concert by the

BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conducting BENEFIT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

New Horizons in Music

Not yet released recordings of the Boston Symphony on a sensational new radio-phonograph, side by side with the orchestra itself. Television!

Movies of you . . . and for you

At 7:00 p.m. in the Theatre-Concert Hall: Scenes with great music from outstanding film hits. Shots will be made of the festival audience for the first time.

Radio At 8:30 p.m. in the Shed: Take part in the broadcast over the American Broadcasting Company's coast-to-coast network.

Complete set of RCA Victor Records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Door Prize

COME EARLY BRING PICNIC SUPPER NO SEATS RESERVED

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
JUL 19 1947

BACH: Suites No. 2 and 3—Boston Symphony: Serge Koussevitsky (Victor DM-1123)

For those who enjoy the Bach musical forms, Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony gives an excellent performance for two of the master's suites, all sonorously scored and played as originally written for small chamber ensemble groups. Suites No. 2, in B Minor, a collection of dance movements for flute and strings, gives Georges Laurent full opportunity to show his musical prowess in carrying the flute lead. The Suite 3, with more festive qualities to the music, includes the famous Air for G String. Album of five 12-inch records was recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., where the Boston Symphony plays its annual summer schedule. Cover makes for an attractive title page with notes on the master and his music for the inside page.

MADISON, WIS.
STATE JOURNAL
JUL 18 1947

Notes from Bill Doudna

ROUNDUP: Leo McCarey's 1947-48 Rainbow production will be "Good Sam," with Gary Cooper and Ann Sheridan co-starring.

Milwaukee is mildly excited about having a theater showing foreign-made films regularly. We aren't. The Play Circle at the Memorial Union has been doing it for y'ars and y'ars.

Columbia Pictures are building the largest outdoor set in their history for "Royal Mail." It's a 19th century English village.

Janet Blair will return to her first screen love—musicals—in "Let's Fall in Love."

Bob Ritter, WHA sportscaster (5:55 p. m. daily), did all right on the Zale-Graziano fight. He predicted that Zale would make Graziano look bad in the first three rounds, that the fourth would be pretty even, and that Graziano would win by a knockout in the fifth. He missed, as you know, by one round.

Columbia network will have exclusive broadcast rights at the National Air race in Cleveland from Aug. 30 through Sept. 1.

Sammy Kaye's new simile: "As two-faced as a new Studebaker."

"Ever the Beginning" will be something of a family affair. Sam Wanamaker is one of the stars. His wife, Charlotte Holland, and their 5-year-old daughter, Abbey, also will have roles.

HERSHFIELD

Mozart's "Idomoneo" will have its first American performance Aug. 4 and 6 at Tanglewood, in western Massachusetts. The opera is being prepared by the Berkshire Music center, school of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Edward Tomlinson will cover the Pan-American treaty conference in Rio de Janeiro for NBC stations.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 18 1947

Serge Koussevitzky

Hugo Leichtentritt's "Serge Koussevitzky" is not a personal biography of the famous conductor; it is a history of American music during his life in this country, which has been so influenced, so dominated by his tremendous vitality and creative outlook that the volume is, in a sense, a critical biography of him. His work abroad, the foundation of his work here in America, is sketched briefly. Sailing "with his orchestra down the Volga River nearly a thousand miles to the Caspian Sea" so that the masses, who could not come to Moscow, could hear symphonic music highlights his Russian experiences.

In showing Koussevitzky's sympathy toward new composers, the author reviews and discusses the various American composers whose works he has conducted. The last two chapters present the great artistry of Koussevitzky shown in his conducting, and his broad vision for musical education shown in his plans for the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The subtitle, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New American Music," is significant of the theme and purpose of the book.

(Library No. 780.21 L53)

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 19 1947

Music for All Program To Feature 4 Nations

The most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29. Four nations, France, Russia, England and the United States will be represented.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River" and "Henry V" with music of Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson and William Walton. The now historic Disney cartoon "Micky's Grand Opera" will be the curtain-raiser.

HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 19 1947

There is nation-wide interest in the Berkshire Music Festival soon to get under way at Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The summer concerts began on Tuesday with a Bach program and will be followed on July 20 and 22 by a Mozart program. Several unusual works will be on the list of the succeeding concerts such as Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" which, with Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2" will constitute the July 24 concert. Copland's "Symphony No. 3" on July 26 with Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" and Barber's "School for Scandal," and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" which Leonard Berstein will conduct on July 27 together with Schubert's "Symphony No. 7." Mr. Bernstein will conduct also the concert of August 7 when Ruth Posselt will play the Hindemith "Violin Concerto." A choral program on August 9, directed by Robert Shaw, will include Mozart's "Requiem," Poulene's "Chorus" and Stravinsky's. "Symphony of Psalms." The last concert will open with Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra with Two Pianos" followed by Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and the Tschaikowsky "Symphony No. 4."

A feature of the Boston Symphony programs at Tanglewood is the performance of the nine symphonies of Beethoven, one after the other. The first three will be played the evening of July 31; the next two, with the "Emperor Concerto," Jacob Lateiner, soloist, on August 2; the sixth and seventh symphonies, with Joseph Battista as soloist in the piano "Concerto No. 4," on August 3 and the two last symphonies on August 5. So seldom is the symphonic output of a composer given in its entirety and in a manner to make apparent his gradual development in this line, that these events alone should be of great importance to all music lovers.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 19 1947

Berkshire Festival's Mozart Series Opens Tomorrow Afternoon

The next major concert in the Berkshire Music Festival series Tanglewood will be the opening of the Mozart cycle tomorrow afternoon. This concert will start at 3.30 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, offering the following program, which will be repeated on Tuesday evening at 8.30.

Serenade in B-Flat Major for wind instrument (K. 361); Divertimento in B-Flat Major for Strings with Two Horns (K 287); Symphony in E-Flat Major, No. 26, and Symphony in C-Major (Jupiter) No. 41.

MONTREAL, CANADA STAR

JUL 19 1947

Musical Affairs

Films and Television As Helpers of Music

AMONG the varieties of music which are usual at the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, there is to be this year, in a program of "Music for all," a performance of music specially written for films, each excerpt being given on the film, with the scene to which it belongs. Films of four countries, the United States, England, France and Russia, are to be shown, and the composers are Aaron Copland, Virgil Thomson, William Walton, George Antheil, Prokofieff and Shostakovitch. The English film to be shown is the battle of Agincourt scene from "Henry V". This performance is an acknowledgement of the important standing to which film music has risen.

* * *

In all the films which are to be shown the pictures take first place, with music in support; and it is not suggested that the music can stand by itself without its pictures. The opposite to this was presented in "Fantasia" in which Walt Disney's pictures were made to illustrate the music; which it did more or less well; but in this many of the scenes could have been quite worth seeing without the music. In most cases however it is evident that either music or picture must take the lead over the other.

* * *

EVIDENTLY films, or in the future television, can be useful in explaining program music, since music by itself can not tell a story. Some people want to take it much farther than this, and make pictures explain music of every kind; and there are suggestions, which seem rather misplaced, of combining explanation and education. No doubt plenty of audiences need education, but we do not care much about being told so, or about paying for it. It is suggested that films, or television, should show the members of the orchestra as they play, as has already been done with more than one film. This can be very good entertainment, but not of a really musical kind; and to many people it would be a very annoying distraction, taking their attention away from the music. Not a few people complained of "Fantasia" that there was too much of Mr. Stokowski in it.

* * *

THE effect which this pictorial treatment might have on the players should also be taken into account; and it would be as well not to forget Mr. Petrillo, who will surely have something to say about it. On the whole, it seems best to keep this illustrative treatment for teaching children or for amusing people who only tolerate music and want something added to make it more bearable. There will still be plenty of listeners who prefer their music by and for itself, without any such additions.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. HERALD

JUL 20 1947

Special Show For Listeners In Berkshires

All the latest advances in musical reproduction will be demonstrated at the Music For All field day of the Boston symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at the Tanglewood Berkshire music center on Tuesday, July 29.

Recording, radio, television and motion picture sound reproductions will be compared with the live orchestra.

The improvement in recordng methods wll be demonstrated by the Boston symphony with records dating back at 10-year intervals to 1915, when the Boston became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

Movies will be made of the festival audience for the first time in the history of the Tanglewood center at Lenox, Mass

These Tanglewood concerts are one of the brightest lights of the musical year.

Music in all its forms and variations is offered to summer listeners.

There's nothing exclusive or highbrow about the concerts. They are highly informal and relaxing. Most of the audience sits on the ground, or lies on blankets, in front of the music shed.

Pine trees surround the open lawn where the audience sits, and there's a lake on one side.

The program that will be presented July 29—the Boston symphony field day—will open with excerpts from several motion pictures, compositions by Aaron Copeland, Arthur Honegger and other recent composers.

DALLAS, TEX. NEWS

Records in Review:

Koussevitzky Does Job for Shostakovitch

The most searching and revelatory performance we have heard of Shostakovich's new Ninth Symphony is that of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The first movement is less a frolic and more a deeply felt celebration of something or other. The second movement with its novel harmonic contrivances is poignant. Three other movements are in typical vein. The whole symphony runs but twenty-five minutes (some Shostakovich first movements are twice as long) and Koussevitzky gives it depth and form. (Victor Album 1134, three 12-inch disks.) . . . Columbia's recording, out a month earlier, is by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under Efrem Kurtz, permanent conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic. This is well-played, spirited, and somewhat superficial, as have been all other performances of the work we have heard, excepting Koussevitzky's. (Columbia Album 688, four 12-inch disks.)

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO VINDICATOR

JUL 20 1947

Superb Playing Marks Records Of Bach Suites Nos. 2 and 3

By Col. L. R. Boals

RCA Victor's issue of the Bach Suites No. 2, in B minor, and No. 3 in D major is an important addition to the series of recordings of the German master's works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival last year.

These two suites complement each other very nicely. In the No. 2 superb playing is done by the solo flutist of the orchestra, Georges Laurent. In the No. 3, a relatively larger orchestra is used, trumpets and tympani being added. Also in the No. 3 is the famous movement called "Air," made familiar by its adaptation as a violin solo and called "Air for G String." Dr. Kaussevitzky has endeavored to achieve authenticity by using relatively the same size orchestra available in Bach's time, over 225 years ago. Performance and recording are excellent. Five-disk set DM-1123.

Schumann's Fourth Symphony

A new recording of Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor, has been made for RCA Victor by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Eugene Goossens in three-disk set DM-1124. Schumann composed this symphony in 1841, shortly after his First Symphony, but the first version was laid aside for about 10 years, when it was revised and published as No. 4—the Nos. 2 and 3 having been published meanwhile.

This symphony is an excellent example of Schumann's preoccupation with problems of symphonic form. He instructed that the introduction and four movements be performed continuously as one movement. Incidentally, with his Scotch Symphony, completed shortly after the first version of Schumann's D Minor Mendelssohn left the same instruction. Goossens brings out the lovely Schumann melodies and maintains fine balance between the various orchestral choirs.

Boston American Jul 19 '47

Tanglewood First To Offer 'Idomeneo'

LENOX, Mass., July 19—"Idomeneo," often described as one of the greatest operas by Mozart, yet hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood, this summer.

The opera is being prepared by the Berkshire Music Center, the school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Center, will direct ad conduct. The mis-en-scene will be by Richard Rychtarik.

The opera will be performed in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, for the Court Opera in Munich, in his 24th year. It is, in the opinion of Mozart authorities, his greatest "Opera Seria" or classical grand opera.

Goldovsky has brought the opera to performable length by omitting extraneous subplots, shortening the recitatives, and reordering scenes for the sake of dramatic continuity, but he has scrupulously respected Mozart's score.

ALBANY, N. Y. TIMES UNION

JUL 20 1947

Music

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The second prelimiary concert by the string and woodwind section of the Boston Symyhony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will take place this afternoon in the theatre-concert hall at 3:30 o'clock. The orchestra will offer an all-Mozart pdogram, consisting of "Serenade" for wind instruments; "Divertimento" for violins and horns; the Symphony in E-flat major and the "Jupiter" symphony.

The major festival will be inaugurated next Thursday night in the large orchestra shell, when the full orchestra will play Honegger's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "The Sea" and Brahms' symphony, No. 2. General admission to the grounds will be on sale this afternoon on and after 12:30 o'clock.

TROY, N. Y. OBSERVER & BUDGET

JUL 20 1947

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29; showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio - phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

Berkshire Festival

Ha Jul 20 19

Starting with three concerts today, including the third of the subscription series for the Berkshire Festival, the coming week promises to be a busy one at Tanglewood. It will include the special concert at the "Music for all" field day on Tuesday, July 29, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the opening of the Beethoven cycle on Thursday evening. This morning there will be a chamber music concert, and this evening the opera department will present scenes from operas. Monday afternoon at 4:30 the orchestra and chorus of department 5 will give a concert; Wednesday evening orchestral students will present an all-Stravinsky concert; Thursday at 4:30 the chorus of department 5 will sing in the Festival shed, and the student orchestra will play in the shed Friday evening.

The remaining concerts open to the public are as follows:

This afternoon at 3:30

Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Symphony in C major, No. 7....Schubert
"Le Sacre du Printemps"......Stravinsky

Series B—Beethoven Cycle

Thursday Evening, July 31, at 8:15
Symphony No. 1 in C major
Symphony No. 2, in D major
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday Evening, August 2, at 8:15
Symphony No 4 in B flat major
Piano Concerto No. 5, in E flat major "Emperor"
Symphony No. 6, in C major
Soloist: Jacob Lateiner

Sunday Afternoon, August 3, at 3:30
Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G major
Symphony No 7, in A major

Extra Concert

Tuesday Evening: August 5
Symphony No. 8, in F major. Beethoven
Symphony No. 9, with Final Chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." Beethoven

Series C

Thursday Evening, August 7, at 8:15
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
Symphony in B flat, No. 102.........Haydn
Violin Concerto.................Hindemith
Symphony No. 2 in C major...Schumann
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Saturday Evening, August 9, at 8:15
Robert Shaw, conducting
Requiem ....Mozart
Symphony of Psalms..........Stravinsky

Sunday Afternoon, August 10, at 3:30
Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two pianos......Martinu
Pavane ....Ravel
Bolero ....Ravel
Symphony No. 4 in F major Tchaikovsky

Mozart's "Idomeneo" At Tanglewood

Mozart's three act opera, "Idomeneo," will have its first performance in this country at Tanglewood on Aug. 4 and 6. It will be under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, and will be staged by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Scenery has been designed by Richard Rychtarik. Mr. Goldovsky will be assisted by Frederic Cohen, Felix Wolfes, Elsa Kahl, and Frederic Waldman of the opera department.

NEWBURGH, N. Y. NEWS

JUL 19 1947

World of Music

NEW YORK — (UP) — The annual report of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association for the 1946-47 season showed that the orchestra played to almost the greatest number of people on record.

Yet the deficit was $20,922 for the season, making an accumulated deficit of $127,285. What the deficit would have been without the added revenue from broadcasting and phonograph recording would have been sad to contemplate.

The ordinary listener often wonders why a big orchestra cannot pay its own way under present conditions. The following condensed balance sheet from the Philadelphians' annual report sheds some light on where the money comes from and where it goes.

Revenue
Sale of Tickets, Philadelphia and other cities	$570,150.51
Programs	2,500.00
Broadcasting Fees and Record Royalties	314,093.87
Miscellaneous	12,529.17
TOTAL REVENUE	$907,273.55
Expenses
Office Salaries, Rent, etc.	$ 55,973.07
Salaries of Orchestra Members	447,028.90
Broadcasting and Recording Expenses	121,941.89
Conductor, Guest Conductors and Soloists	87,931.55
Pension Payments	15,991.69
Insurance, Orchestra Music, Interest, Miscellaneous	18,595.09
Rent of Concert Halls and Stage Help	71,902.56
Transportation and Travel Allowances to Orchestra Men	99,893.90
Printing and Selling Tickets Advertising, etc.	56,504.71
Loss Account of Transcontinental Tour Season 1945-46	9,677.31
TOTAL EXPENSES	$985,440.67
Revenue	$907,273.55
Expenses	985,440.67
	78,167.12
Endowment Fund Income	57,245.05
Deficit	20,922.07
Accumulated Deficit	$127,285.03

WORLD OF MUSIC take two reilly

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and his music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom - made radio - phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

---

ductive dances.

* * *

There is nation-wide interest in the Berkshire Music Festival soon to get under way at Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The summer concerts began on Tuesday with a Bach program and will be followed on July 20 and 22 by a Mozart program. Several unusual works will be on the list of the succeeding concerts such as Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" which, with Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2" will constitute the July 24 concert. Copland's "Symphony No. 3" on July 26 with Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" and Barber's "School for Scandal," and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" which Leonard Berstein will conduct on July 27 together with Schubert's "Symphony No. 7." Mr. Bernstein will conduct also the concert of August 7 when Ruth Posselt will play the Hindemith "Violin Concerto." A choral program on August 9, directed by Robert Shaw, will include Mozart's "Requiem," Poulene's "Chorus" and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." The last concert will open with Martinu's Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra with Two Pianos" followed by Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero" and the Tschaikowsky "Symphony No. 4."

A feature of the Boston Symphony programs at Tanglewood is the performance of the nine symphonies of Beethoven, one after the other. The first three will be played the evening of July 31; the next two, with the "Emperor Concerto," Jacob Lateiner, soloist, on August 2; the sixth and seventh symphonies, with Joseph Battista as soloist in the piano "Concerto No. 4," on August 3 and the two last symphonies on August 5. So seldom is the symphonis output of a composer given in its entirety and in a manner to make apparent his gradual development in this line, that these events alone should be of great importance to all music lovers.

* * *

KNOXVILLE, TENN. JOURNAL

JUL 20 1947

An all-Mozart program will comprise the second WBIR broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m. As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, has selected works without soloists. The following week the broadcast will be heard from the larger music shed.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. JOURNAL

JUL 20 194

Koussevitzky Plans Novel Program at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself.

[37]

MINNEAP[illegible]NN.
MORNING [illegible]NE

Recorded Music

KOUSSEVITZKY POLISHES GREAT BACH WORKS

RECENT Bach performances by Serge Koussevitzky and his Bostonians give symphonic lustre to SUITES NOS. 2 AND 3 (Victor M-1123, $6.14) and BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS NOS. 2 AND 5 (Victor M-1118, $5.09) without taking the music too far out of the baroque orchestra frame.

Purists doubtless will prefer the Busch recordings of these works, because they are more strictly "18th century" in their smaller orchestra, more intimate expression, and use of the harpsichord instead of piano. But it cannot be said that Koussevitzky inflates the music, and with his rhythmic vigor and technical polish go a bigger, more solid sound and more realism and brilliance in instrumental colors and blends.

What should stand for a long time as an authoritative performance of SYMPHONY NO. 9 in C MAJOR (Schubert)—sometimes termed the Seventh—is Bruno Walter's recording for Columbia (M-679, $7.40). The orchestra is the New York Philharmonic, and Walter's approach is altogether winning—sensitive, poetic, and with that tonal transparency which allows the inner voices to be heard. Schubert's great "swan song" is beautifully done in this set, and well reproduced.

Jeanette MacDonald will be a best-seller in her latest disc, offering the chief arias of Puccini's two pathetic heroines—MI CHIAMANO MIMI from "La Boheme" and UN BEL DI, VEDREMO from "Madam Butterfly" (Victor 119599, $1.05). Good tone and style, and the orchestra is under the opera-wise Frieder Weissmann. —J.K.S.

POPULAR: Fritz Kreisler, an old hand at popular music (remember his musical, "Apple Blossoms"?) must get a kick out of Charlie Spivak's album KREISLER FAVORITES. First reason is because arranger Russ Case has cleverly used a concert hall flavor with dance tempo and second, Spivak's sweet trumpeting is entirely sympathetic to the tunes selected. In other words no actual violence is done Kreisler's work in transcribing it to 4/4 beat and dance band. Caprice Viennois, Liebesfreud and Liebeslied will probably top the seven favorites recorded (Victor P-179) . . . Alvino Rey's dripping-faucet saga, Bloop-Bleep, will nettle light sleepers (Capitol) . . . Billy Butterfield, no back-seat trumpeter, shines with some impeccable muted work in Billy's Boogie (Capitol).

—KEN BRITZIUS.

BEST-SELLING RECORDS

CLASSICAL — Symphony No. 9 (Schubert) by New York Philharmonic under Bruno Walter; Les Sylphides (Chopin) by Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

POPULAR — How Soon? by Jack Owens; The Old Chaperone, by Bing Crosby.

Your Attention Please! — All announcements intended for publication on the Sunday music page of The Times should reach this office not later than noon Monday. Thank you!

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will sponsor a "Music for All" field day July 29 at Tanglewood. The idea is to demonstrate the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction, and the program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, concluding with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to the scheduled festival programs. Symphonic recording will be compared with the actuality when the Boston Symphony plays side by side with R.C.A.-Victor's first custom-made radio-phonograph called "The Berkshire," in honor of the Tanglewood festivals. The first 200 of the new instruments will be sold on subscription to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. Other features of the "Music for All" program will be the playing of recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra back to 1915, when the first records were made, and a program of excerpts from motion-picture scores by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and others.

MUSIC FESTIVAL

Full Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays at Tanglewood Beginning Thursday

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in full swing, with a notable addition to the faculty in the person of the Swiss-French composer, Arthur Honegger, who will teach composition, along with Aaron Copland, the associate director. The concerts of the Berkshire Festival have already begun: a Bach program on Sunday and Tuesday of last week, to be followed by a Mozart program this afternoon and Tuesday evening, both in the smaller auditorium. The Festival proper will begin this coming Thursday evening, with the first of the concerts by the full orchestra in the huge music shed.

On his opening program Dr. Koussevitzky has appropriately placed Mr. Honegger's Symphony for Strings, a strong and striking work disclosed to us last season by Charles Muench. After it will come Debussy's "The Sea" and the Second Symphony of Brahms. Saturday evening's concert will offer Barber's Overture to "A School for Scandal," Copland's Third Symphony and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Next Sunday afternoon, as guest conductor, Leonard Bernstein gives the first of his two programs. Dr. Koussevitzky will devote the concerts of the second week to the music of Beethoven, whose Eighth and Ninth Symphonies will be performed at an extra concert on Tuesday evening. Mr. Bernstein and Robert Shaw, respectively, will take the first two concerts of the last week and Dr. Koussevitzky will end the Festival on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10.

Nothing Spectacular

This year's Festival will offer nothing as spectacular as last season's American premier of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." The orchestral programs are, as usual, on the conservative side and drawn largely from the works played at Symphony Hall in the preceding season. Nevertheless, the current Festival will not be without its special attractions, chief of which will be the Music for All field day on Tuesday, July 29, designed to show the advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

An evening concert will bring matters to a close and the first hour of it will go on the air as one of the regular series of Boston Symphony broadcasts. While this concert is in progress, motion pictures will be made of the listening audience. These will be included in a forthcoming film, "The Story of Tanglewood," to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Prior to this there will be a showing in the Theatre-Concert Hall of excerpts from outstanding films, the music for which was composed by the Messrs. Honegger, Prokofieff, Walton, Copland and Virgil Thomson.

"March of Fidelity"

The ensuing broadcast will be, so far as I know, a unique musical occasion. It will be called "The March of Fidelity" and will offer comparisons between the actual performances of the orchestra and the Victor phonograph recordings over a period of years. This remarkable demonstration will commence with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Introduction to Act III of "Lohengrin," to be followed by the recording made in 1915, when the orchestra under Dr. Muck became the first full size symphonic organization to enter the phonograph field. Those who have not heard this antique lately will be in for the shock that I received when Arthur Fiedl[illegible] last [illegible] will demonstrate successively the first orthophonic electrical reproduction of 20 years ago and the improvements made in the matter of increased volume and fidelity in 1935. Finally wil come the latest Boston Symphony record to be released, that of Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont." It will be played on a newly designed, custom-made radio phonograph, called "The Berkshire." The first 200 sets of this instrument will be sold on a subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Centre's scholarship fund. The school, which Dr. Koussevitzky organized eight years ago, stands to profit considerably by this arrangement. To add the final touch to this exhibition of canned music in its various forms, the music shed will be turned into a vast studio, with engineers and announcers working in ful view of the audience.

More and more European musicians are identifying themselves with this country. Arthur Honegger, now teaching at Tanglewood was a member of the Group of Six, five bad boys and one charming girl, Germaine Tailleferre. Another member of this Parisian coterie, sworn foes at the time of German Romanticism and French Impressionism, Darius Milhaud has for some time been at Mills College in California and we had him in Symphony Hall last season as conductor of his fine Second Symphony. Mr. Honegger came here in 1929 and gave a program of his own works. Included, naturally, was the then celebrated locomotive piece "Pacific 2-3-1." As a publicity stunt he rode in a locomotive cab from here to Providence. It would be fun to hear "Pacific" again and even more profitable to hear again his fine oratorio, "King David."

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 20 1[illegible]

Special Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting will also give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, on Tuesday evening July 29. The event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public—the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures.

The Berkshire Festival

With the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program, this to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds," Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program, seats remain.

The first concert by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin. It will be followed on Thursday afternoon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with the Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea," Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahms' Second Symphony.

The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copeland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture to 'The Magic Flue'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

JUL 20 1947

Out of town: Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., offers the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival, to Aug. 10; four Sing Weeks, each a week and a half long, began early this month under the direction of the Trapp Family Singers at Stowe, Vt.; the Salzburg Festivals are scheduled July 27 to Aug. 31; the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and Drama runs from Aug. 24 to Sept. 13; the Saratoga Spa Music Festival will be held in September.

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER

JUL 20 1947

MUSIC

New York, July 19 (U.P.)—The annual report of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association for the 1946-47 season showed that the orchestra played to almost the greatest number of people on record.

Yet the deficit was $20,922 for the season, making an accumulated deficit of $127,285. What the deficit would have been without the added revenue from broadcasting and phonograph recording would have been sad to contemplate.

The ordinary listener often wonders why a big orchestra cannot pay its own way under present conditions. The following condensed balance sheet from the Philadelphia's annual report sheds some light on where the money comes from and where it goes:

Revenue
Sale of Tickets, Philadelphia and other cities	$570,150.51
Programs	2,500.00
Broadcasting Fees and Record Royalties	314,093.87
Miscellaneous	12,529.17
Totals revenue	$997,273.55
Expenses
Office Salaries, Rent, etc.	$ 55,973.07
Salaries, Orchestra Members	447,028.90
Broadcasting and Recording Expenses	121,941.89
Conductor, Guest Conductors and Soloists	87,931.55
Pension Payments	15,991.69
Insurance, Orchestra Music, Interest, Miscellaneous	18,595.09
Rent of Concert Halls and Stage Help	71,902.56
Transportation and Travel Allowances to Orchestra Men	99,893.90
Printing and Selling Tickets, Advertising, etc.	56,504.71
Loss Account of Transcontinental Tour Season 1945-46	9,677.31
Total Expenses	$985,440.67
Revenue	$907,273.56
Expenses	985,440.67
	78,167.12
Endowment Fund Income	57,245.05
Deficit	20,922.07
Accumulated Deficit	$127,285.03

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

Mona Paulee, Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano, and her pianist husband, Dean Holt, who do concert work together, have announced their intention of introducing some original songs by American composers next season.

With a view to encouraging native talent, they are inviting musicians from anywhere in the United States to submit works before next September 1. The songs, it is stipulated, must lie within the range of a mezzo-soprano and the climax is not to exceed B-flat. Songs chosen, they announced, will be heard at an average of about 20 times during the season.

The Internationale Opera Company, which gave a summer season at Carnegie Hall, New York, will return there for a fall season beginning September 15. Standford E. Erwin, director of the company, said fall repertoire will include "Turandot," "Francesca da Rimini," "Iris," "Pearl Fishers," "Girl of the Golden West," "Tristan and Isolde" and a new American work, "Cynthia Parker," by Julia Smith.

A series of auditions will be held at the Ethel Barrymore theatre in New York for singers to fill understudy roles in the New York company of the Gian-Carlo Menotti musical plays, "The Medium" and "The Telephone," and for a second company which is being prepared for a fall road tour. The New York company calls for three understudies, one for Marie Powers, a general understudy for the female singers and one for the single male role now being sung by Frank Rogier.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 20 1947

Tanglewood Extra

Apart from the Berkshire Festival itself, a concert will be given by the Boston Symphony conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Tuesday evening, July 29, titled "Music For All."

This event will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public — the phonograph, radio, and motion pictures. Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonograph recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the orchestra itself.

Motion picture cameras will photograph the audience for a forthcoming film "The Story of Tanglewood." Before the concert there will be a special showing from outstanding films to which contemporary composers have contributed musical scores. They will be shown at the Theater-Concert Hall, the auditorium of the opera department in the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra Summer school.

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

"IDOMENEO"

. . . often described as one of the greatest operas by Mozart, but hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts on Aug. 4 and 6. It is being prepared by the Berkshire Music Center and is part of the Berkshire Music festival now in progress. Mozart wrote the opera "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 for the court opera in Munich, where he was 24 years old. Mozart authorities consider it his finest classical grand opera and it is said that Mozart himself was exceptionally fond of it.

MINNEAPO[illegible] NN.
MORNING [illegible] NE

Recorded Music

KOUSSEVITZKY POLISHES GREAT BACH WORKS

RECENT Bach performances by Serge Koussevitzky and his Bostonians give symphonic lustre to SUITES NOS. 2 AND 3 (Victor M-1123, $6.14) and BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS NOS. 2 AND 5 (Victor M-1118, $7.00) without taking the music too far out of the chamber orchestra frame.

Purists doubtless will prefer the Busch recordings of these works, because they are more strictly "18th century" in their smaller orchestra, more intimate expression, and use of the harpsichord instead of piano. But it cannot be said that Koussevitzky inflates the music, and with his rhythmic vigor and technical polish go a bigger, more solid sound and more realism and brilliance in instrumental colors and blends.

What should stand for a long time as an authoritative performance of SYMPHONY NO. 9 in C MAJOR (Schubert)—sometimes termed the Seventh—is Bruno Walter's recording for Columbia M-679, $7.40). The orchestra is the New York Philharmonic, and Walter's approach is altogether winning—sensitive, poetic, and with that tonal transparency which allows the inner voices to be heard. Schubert's great "swan song" is beautifully done in this set, and well reproduced.

Jeanette MacDonald will be a best-seller in her latest disc, offering the chief arias of Puccini's two pathetic heroines—MI CHIAMANO MIMI from "La Boheme" and UN BEL DI, VEDREMO from "Madam Butterfly" (Victor 119599, $1.05). Good tone and style, and the orchestra is under the opera-wise Frieder Weissmann. —J.K.S.

POPULAR: Fritz Kreisler, an old hand at popular music (remember his musical, "Apple Blossoms"?) must get a kick out of Charlie Spivak's album KREISLER FAVORITES. First reason is because arranger Russ Case has cleverly used a concert hall flavor with dance tempo and second, Spivak's sweet trumpeting is entirely sympathetic to the tunes selected. In other words no actual violence is done Kreisler's work in transcribing it to 4/4 beat and dance band. Caprice Viennois, Liebesfreud and Liebeslied will probably top the seven favorites recorded (Victor P-179) . . . Alvino Rey's dripping-faucet saga, Bloop-Bleep, will nettle light sleepers (Capitol) . . . Billy Butterfield, no back-seat trumpeter, shines with some impeccable muted work in Billy's Boogie (Capitol).

—KEN BRITZIUS.

BEST-SELLING RECORDS

CLASSICAL — Symphony No. 9 (Schubert) by New York Philharmonic under Bruno Walter; Les Sylphides (Chopin) by Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

POPULAR — How Soon? by Jack Owens; The Old Chaperone, by Bing Crosby.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 20 1

Special Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will also give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, on Tuesday evening July 29. The event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public—the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures.

The Berkshire Festival

With the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program, this to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds," Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program, seats remain.

The first concert by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin. It will be followed on Thursday afternoon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with the Symphony for Strings by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea," Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahms' Second Symphony.

The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copeland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture to 'The Magic Flue' "; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

Your Attention Please! — All announcements intended for publication on the Sunday music page of The Times should reach this office not later than noon Monday. Thank you!

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serg Koussevitzky, will sponsor "Music for All" field day July 2 at Tanglewood. The idea is t demonstrate the latest advance in all forms of musical reproduction, and the program will cove recording, radio, television an motion pictures, concluding with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to the schedule festival programs. Symphoni recording will be compared with the actuality when the Bosto Symphony plays side by sid with R.C.A.-Victor's first custom-made radio-phonograph called "The Berkshire," in hono of the Tanglewood festivals. Th first 200 of the new instrument will be sold on subscription t benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. Other features of the "Music for All" program will be the playing of recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra back to 1915, when the first records were made, and a program of excerpts from motion-picture scores by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and others.

MUSIC FESTIVAL

Full Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays at Tanglewood Beginning Thursday

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in full swing, with a notable addition to the faculty in the person of the Swiss-French composer, Arthur Honegger, who will teach composition, along with Aaron Copland, the associate director. The concerts of the Berkshire Festival have already begun: a Bach program on Sunday and Tuesday of last week, to be followed by a Mozart program this afternoon and Tuesday evening, both in the smaller auditorium. The Festival proper will begin this coming Thursday evening, with the first of the concerts by the full orchestra in the huge music shed.

On his opening program Dr. Koussevitzky has appropriately placed Mr. Honegger's Symphony for Strings, a strong and striking work disclosed to us last season by Charles Muench. After it will come Debussy's "The Sea" and the Second Symphony of Brahms. Saturday evening's concert will offer Barber's Overture to "A School for Scandal," Copland's Third Symphony and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Next Sunday afternoon, as guest conductor, Leonard Bernstein gives the first of his two programs. Dr. Koussevitzky will devote the concerts of the second week to the music of Beethoven, whose Eighth and Ninth Symphonies will be performed at an extra concert on Tuesday evening. Mr. Bernstein and Robert Shaw, respectively, will take the first two concerts of the last week and Dr. Koussevitzky will end the Festival on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10.

Nothing Spectacular

This year's Festival will offer nothing as spectacular as last season's American premier of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." The orchestral programs are, as usual, on the conservative side and drawn largely from the works played at Symphony Hall in the preceding season. Nevertheless, the current Festival will not be without its special attractions, chief of which will be the Music for All field day on Tuesday, July 29, designed to show the advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

An evening concert will bring matters to a close and the first hour of it will go on the air as one of the regular series of Boston Symphony broadcasts. While this concert is in progress, motion pictures will be made of the listening audience. These will be included in a forthcoming film, "The Story of Tanglewood," to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Prior to this there will be a showing in the Theatre-Concert Hall of excerpts from outstanding films, the music for which was composed by the Messrs. Honegger, Prokofieff, Walton, Copland and Virgil Thomson.

"March of Fidelity"

The ensuing broadcast will be, so far as I know, a unique musical occasion. It will be called "The March of Fidelity" and will offer comparisons between the actual performances of the orchestra and the Victor phonograph recordings over a period of years. This remarkable demonstration will commence with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Introduction to Act III of "Lohengrin," to be followed by the recording made in 1915, when the orchestra under Dr. Muck became the first full size symphonic organization to enter the phonograph field. Those who have not heard this antique lately will be in for the shock that I received when Arthur Fiedler played it for me last winter. The next numbers will demonstrate successively the first orthophonic electrical reproduction of 20 years ago and the improvements made in the matter of increased volume and fidelity in 1935. Finally wil come the latest Boston Symphony record to be released, that of Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont." It will be played on a newly designed, custom-made radio phonograph, called "The Berkshire." The first 200 sets of this instrument will be sold on a subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Centre's scholarship fund. The school, which Dr. Koussevitzky organized eight years ago, stands to profit considerably by this arrangement. To add the final touch to this exhibition of canned music in its various forms, the music shed will be turned into a vast studio, with engineers and announcers working in ful view of the audience.

More and more European musicians are identifying themselves with this country. Arthur Honegger, now teaching at Tanglewood was a member of the Group of Six, five bad boys and one charming girl, Germaine Tailleferre. Another member of this Parisian coterie, sworn foes at the time of German Romanticism and French Impressionism, Darius Milhaud has for some time been at Mills College in California and we had him in Symphony Hall last season as conductor of his fine Second Symphony. Mr. Honegger came here in 1929 and gave a program of his own works. Included, naturally, was the then celebrated locomotive piece "Pacific 2-3-1." As a publicity stunt he rode in a locomotive cab from here to Providence. It would be fun to hear "Pacific" again and even more profitable to hear again his fine oratorio, "King David."

---

week [illegible] this month under the direction of the Trapp Family Singers at Stowe, Vt.; the Salzburg Festivals are scheduled July 27 to Aug. 31; the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and Drama runs from Aug. 24 to Sept. 13; the Saratoga Spa Music Festival will be held in September.

[38]

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER

JUL 20 1947

MUSIC

New York, July 19 (U.P.)—The annual report of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association for the 1946-47 season showed that the orchestra played to almost the greatest number of people on record.

Yet the deficit was $20,922 for the season, making an accumulated deficit of $127,285. What the deficit would have been without the added revenue from broadcasting and phonograph recording would have been sad to contemplate.

The ordinary listener often wonders why a big orchestra cannot pay its own way under present conditions. The following condensed balance sheet from the Philadelphia's annual report sheds some light on where the money comes from and where it goes:

Revenue
Sale of Tickets, Philadelphia and other cities	$570,150.51
Programs	2,500.00
Broadcasting Fees and Record Royalties	314,093.87
Miscellaneous	12,529.17
Totals revenue	$997,273.55
Expenses
Office Salaries, Rent, etc.	$ 55,973.07
Salaries, Orchestra Members	447,028.90
Broadcasting and Recording Expenses	121,941.89
Conductor, Guest Conductors and Soloists	87,931.55
Pension Payments	15,991.69
Insurance, Orchestra Music, Interest, Miscellaneous	18,595.09
Rent of Concert Halls and Stage Help	71,902.56
Transportation and Travel Allowances to Orchestra Men	99,893.90
Printing and Selling Tickets, Advertising, etc.	56,504.71
Loss Account of Transcontinental Tour Season 1945-46	9,677.31
Total Expenses	$985,440.67
Revenue	$907,273.56
Expenses	985,440.67
	78,167.12
Endowment Fund Income	57,245.05
Deficit	20,922.07
Accumulated Deficit	$127,285.03

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

Mona Paulee, Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano, and her pianist-husband, Dean Holt, who do concert work together, have announced their intention of introducing some original songs by American composers next season.

With a view to encouraging native talent, they are inviting musicians from anywhere in the United States to submit works before next September 1. The songs, it is stipulated, must lie within the range of a mezzo-soprano and the climax is not to exceed B-flat. Songs chosen, they announced, will be heard at an average of about 20 times during the season.

The Internationale Opera Company, which gave a summer season at Carnegie Hall, New York, will return there for a fall season beginning September 15. Standford E. Erwin, director of the company, said fall repertoire will include "Turandot," "Francesca da Rimini," "Iris," "Pearl Fishers," "Girl of the Golden West," "Tristan and Isolde" and a new American work, "Cynthia Parker," by Julia Smith.

A series of auditions will be held at the Ethel Barrymore theatre in New York for singers to fill understudy roles in the New York company of the Gian-Carlo Menotti musical plays, "The Medium" and "The Telephone," and for a second company which is being prepared for a fall road tour. The New York company calls for three understudies, one for Marie Powers, a general understudy for the female singers and one for the single male role now being sung by Frank Rogier.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 20 1947

Tanglewood Extra

Apart from the Berkshire Festival itself, a concert will be given by the Boston Symphony conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Tuesday evening, July 29, titled "Music For All."

This event will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public — the phonograph, radio, and motion pictures. Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonograph recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the orchestra itself.

Motion picture cameras will photograph the audience for a forthcoming film "The Story of Tanglewood." Before the concert there will be a special showing from outstanding films to which contemporary composers have contributed musical scores. They will be shown at the Theater-Concert Hall, the auditorium of the opera department in the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra Summer school.

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

"IDOMENEO"

. . . often described as one of the greatest operas by Mozart, but hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts on Aug. 4 and 6. It is being prepared by the Berkshire Music Center and is part of the Berkshire Music festival now in progress. Mozart wrote the opera "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 for the court opera in Munich, where he was 24 years old. Mozart authorities consider it his finest classical grand opera and it is said that Mozart himself was exceptionally fond of it.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD

JUL 20 1947

Mozart's Opera to Have Premiere at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera Idomeneo will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood. The production is announced as the major activity of the opera department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of Peter Grimes last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6.

Mozart wrote his Idomeneo, King of Crete in 1780, in his 24th year. It is generally considered one of his greatest works, but owing to its length and the absence of printed parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe.

MIAMI FLA.
HERALD
JUL 20 1947

Recordings In Review

Koussevitsky Scores

THE masters and the Russians seemed to be in charge of affairs on our unreviewed shelves this week — works of Bach, Schumann, Schubert, Tchaikovsky and Rachmaninoff looming largest on the horizon.

After several playings of the most important of the works, we beg to express particular partiality for the Boston Symphony's reading of two of the four Bach orchestral suites, the Second and Third, which RCA-Victor has added to its recent issues of four of the six Brandenburg Concertos performed by the same organization. We suppose the intention is to complete both sets eventually.

We consider that Serge Koussevitsky has a special talent for unveiling the clarities and perfection of Bachian forms and features, and that he is particularly apt at assigning just the right players, and the right number of them, to these chamber-orchestra works.

He doesn't argue with Bach about how many players the master wanted, but creates perfection with the number indicated on the scores. The B minor Suite is scored for flute, strings and basso continuo for the keyboard; the D major one for two oboes, three trumpets, tympani, strings and basso continuo.

Proportion and balance have been maintained throughout both suites (they come in one album), and the recordings are clear and luminous.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 20

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., July 19.—"Idomeneo" by Mozart, called one of his greatest operas but hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced by the Berkshire Music Center with Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, as conductor and mis-en-scene by Richard Rychtarik. Performances will be Aug. 4 and 6 at the Theater-Concert Hall. The Music Center is the school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home and site of the Berkshire Festivals.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 20 1947

All-Mozart List From Tanglewood

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second WORC-ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival Tuesday night.

The program will come from the theater-concert hall on the grounds in Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. ~~Serge Koussevitz~~ky, conducting, has selected works without soloists.

MUSEMENTS

MOZART PROGRAM FOR TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Conducts Part of His Orchestra for 4,000 Enthusiastic Listeners

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 20—An all-Mozart four-number program was presented this afternoon at Tanglewood before an audience of 2,600 persons by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and a portion of his Boston Symphony Orchestra. Every seat in the theatre-concert hall had been sold weeks in advance, and the box office announced an overflow crowd of 1,400 on outside benches and the lawn. It was a perfect mid-summer afternoon.

The first selection was the Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments. The second was the Divertimento in B flat major for strings and two horns.

After the intermission the thirty-piece orchestra played the Symphony in E flat major, and for the final number the popular Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), which literally "brought down the house." The maestro was recalled four times by his highly demonstrative friends.

Mozart is a favorite composer of Dr. Koussevitzky, and his works have been played often in recent years by him at Tanglewood. The beautiful compositions are especially appreciated in a concert hall like that at Tanglewood, the acoustics of which are perfect. The stage had been contracted since last week's Bach concerts.

Today's program will be repeated Tuesday evening, and on Thursday night the initial concert of the main festival will be given in the music shed, which already is sold out. Many hotels are filled to capacity throughout Berkshire, from Great Barrington to Williamstown.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 20 1947

Born of humble parents in Tsarist Russia, Koussevitsky worked his way through a conservatory in Moscow, became a celebrated conductor in Russia, founded his own orchestra to bring symphonic music to thousands who had never heard it before, and eventually came to America as conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra. His life story is told by Moses Smith in ~~KOUSSEVITSKY~~.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 20 1947

Out-of-town: Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., offers the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire ~~Festival, to August~~ 10; four "sing weeks," each a week and a half long, began early this month under the direction of the Trapp Family Singers at Stowe, Vt.; the Salzburg festivals are scheduled July 27 to August 31; the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and Drama runs from August 24 to September 13; the Saratoga Spa Music Festival will be held in September.

The Met's mezzo soprano Mona Paulee and her husband-pianist, Dean Holt, want new songs for their 1947-48 country-wide tour. The 12 best ones submitted to them at 200 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York, before September 1, will be incorporated in their programs next season and may be published in a Paulee album.

The closing date of the $500 Florence Mercur contest for an American piano concerto has been advanced to next January 31. Fourteen concerti have been submitted, and nearly 200 inquiries received at contest headquarters, care of Paul Burton, 246 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
JUL 20 1947

Tanglewood Makes Its Plans For Field Day In Recording

NEW YORK, JULY 19—(AP).

THE ~~BOSTON~~ Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music For All" field day at Tanglewood ~~July~~ 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction. The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Fund.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 21 1947

3000 AT LENOX CONCERT

Lenox, Mass., July 20.—(AP)—A crowd of 3000 turned out today to hear an all Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Kousse~~vitzky in~~ the second of a series of Berkshire festival concerts at Tanglewood.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
JUL 21 1947

* * *

OUT OF TOWN: Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., offers the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire ~~Festi~~val, to August 10; four "sing weeks," each a week and a half long, began early this month under the direction of the Trapp family singers at Stowe, Vt.; the Salzburg Festivals are scheduled July 27 to August 31; the Edinburgh International Festival of Music and drama runs from August 24 to September 13; the Saratoga Spa Music Festival will be held in September.

* * *

---

n.y. Daily News — July 21 1947

Koussevitzky Isn't Raising Potatoes in the Berkshires

By ROBERT WAHLS

Take the Hutchinson River Parkway and the Merritt Parkway to U. S. Route 7. Follow Route 7 to Lenox, Mass., and 141 miles from Manhattan you'll find Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Festival, where Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is NOT raising potatoes.

By way of welcoming 425 embryonic composers, vocalists and instrumentalists from 40 states and 14 foreign countries, George Judd, orchestra manager, reminded the youngsters that their professional careers would be a titanic battle between art and commercialism. "You'll find yourselves a commodity on the market," he said, "like potatoes."

Dr. Koussevitzky listened quietly to this sound advice from a veteran of the music wars and then added his own epilogue. "A commodity you may become," he purred, "but potatoes—nevaire!" And so the battle cry of this year's Summer school has become "Potatoes—nevaire!"

Tanglewood is a lovely 210-acre estate given to the Boston Symphony in 1936 by two Boston Brahmins, Mrs. Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn. Designed as a hot weather haven for the orchestra, the early concerts were held in a huge side show tent pitched on the lawn.

Rain on the Roof.

During the first season's concerts Poobah Koussevitzky found himself competing with the roar of rain on the tent roof. Most of the thunderstorms sweeping down Tyringham Valley broke into crescendo over the tent, drowning even the most spirited all-Wagner concerts. In 1938 the 6,000-seat music shed was built. In it the Berkshire Music Festival will open Thursday with an expected overflow audience of 6,000 to 7,000 listening on the lawn.

Today Tanglewood, in addition to the shed where acoustics are perfect for listeneres within a city block's radius, has a Theatre Concert Hall for opera and small orchestra seating 1,200. There is also a small Chamber Music Hall holding 300. Your reporter caught a preliminary all-Bach afternoon in the concert hall last week. A crowd of about 1,500 picnicked on the grass and license plates in the parking lot indicated they had come from all over the East and Middle West.

The Center school for aspiring music makers, largely financed by the Festival, runs for six weeks, the last three are concurrent with the Festival winding up on Aug. 10. The students are hand picked and many of them, their tuition paid by scholarship, work at odd jobs to pay their board.

The aspiring Traubels, Toscaninis, and whatnot sweat out the Summer under such eminent taskmasters as conductors Koussevitzky, and Leonard Bernstein, choral trainers Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross, composers Aaron Copland and Arthur Honneger, and opera commentator Boris Goldovsky of the sibilant Met Opera intermission delivery.

Honegger Gets Star Billing.

This season's star attraction is probably 55-year-old August Arthur Honegger, the Swiss-French composer, on leave from Paris and the Montmartre. Old friend Koussevitzky drafted the composer of "Le Roi David" and "Pacific 231" for service at Tanglewood. There his particular pet is a course in advanced composition for nine students, four of them ex-GIs.

Like most Europeans, this chubby cheerful musician is gorging himself, this second visit to the U. S., on citrus fruits. He greeted a reporter recently with an old fashioned lemon squeezer in his hand. "We have had no fresh fruit in France," he said, "and I'm adding a lemon a day to my diet until I get up to 12 a day. Then I'll taper off. It's a cure." Honegger didn't say for what.

Although most of the Center's students are from New York and New England, some have come from Greece, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Sweden, Palestine, Australia, Canada and South America to justify Dr. Kossevitzky's contention that a musician doesn't have to go to Europe to get "finished."

Most of the girls are billeted at the Lenox School, an Episcopal prep school for boys during other seasons. The boys live for the most part at Tracy Hall, a red sandstone mansion of many turrets built in 1892 by George Hall Morgan, first cousin of the late J. P. Morgan. The ghosts of society dowagers would wince to see the double decker bunks which fill the once luxurious bedrooms. The dining room and library are a cafeteria. And lone pianos furnish the other salons, now rehearsal halls.

The Berkshire Music Center and its annual Festival are dreams come true for Serge Koussevitzky. He considers them America's long-delayed answer to the monopolies held by European festivals at Salzburg in Austria and Bayreuth, Germany. Plans for the future include expansion in all departments and perhaps an added drama festival.

Cupped in the Berkshires, Tanglewood is certainly worth a spot on your New England weekend or vacation schedule. And don't forget, picnic parties on the lawn are welcome. If Bach gives you indigestion—there's always Beethoven!

BSO Violinist To Play at Church Service

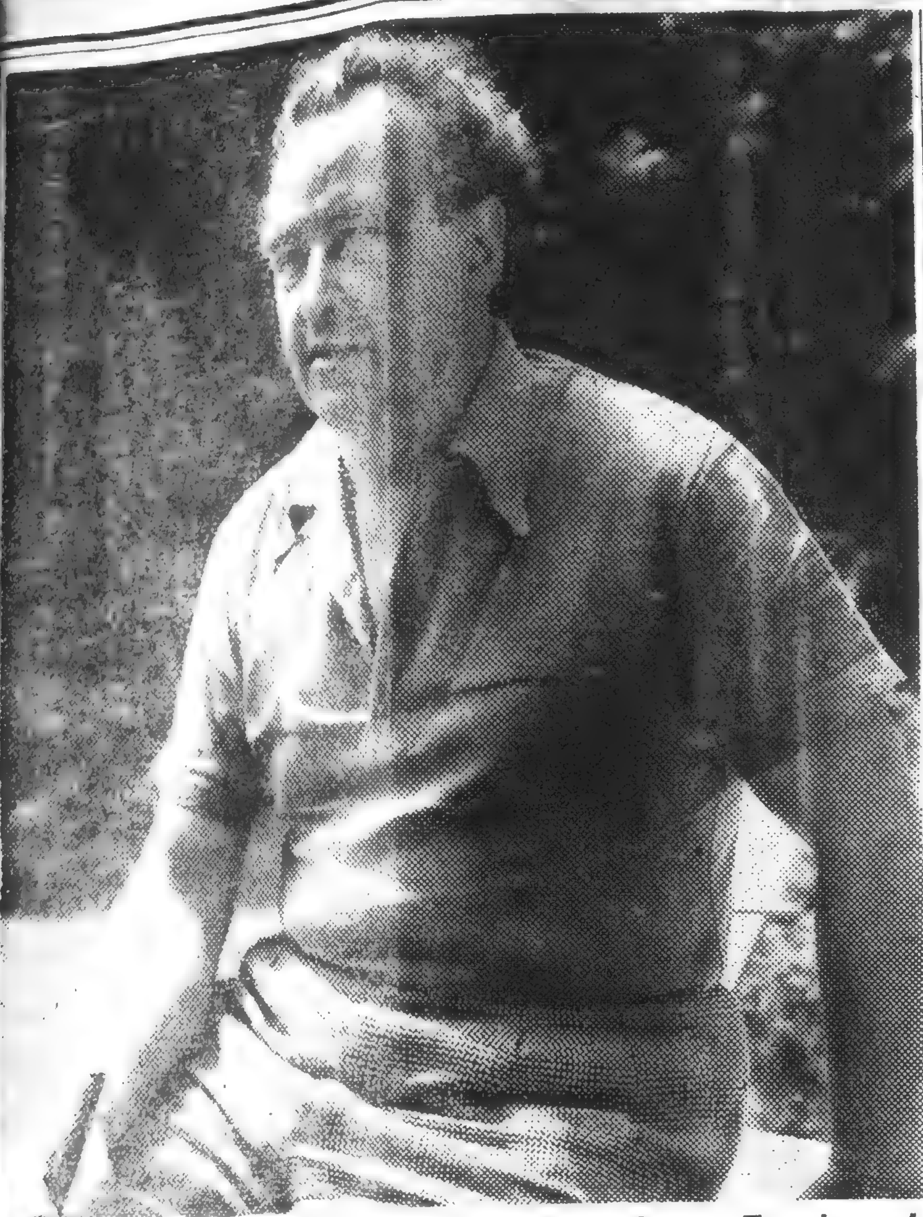
LENOX — Frank Zecchino, violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the soloist at the service of morning worship of the Church-on-the-Hill, Congregational, tomorrow at 11. He will play "Romance" by Wieniawski and "Andante" by Edward Lalo. He will be accompanied at the organ by Miss Harriett Parsons who will also play "Credo" by Hayden and "Cum Sancto" by Mozart. Mr. Zecchino began to study the violin with his father in Boston at the age of seven. Later he studied under Emmuel Ondricek. At the age of 11 he gave his first concert in Jordan Hall and at 15 was soloist with the Chicago Symphony. At 16 he gave a concert in Town Hall, New York City. He has also played as soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. He gave concerts and recitals until joining the Boston Symphony Orchestra last October. He is its youngest member. The pastor of the church, Rev. J. Herbert Owen, will preach at the morning worship on "The Unchanging Christ."

Laderoute at St. Ann's Tomorrow

LENOX—Joseph V. Laderoute of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, organist and soloist, will be assisted at the 8.30 and 10.30 masses at St. Ann's Church tomorrow by Walter Spolar, violinist, also of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Laderoute was organist and soloist at St. Ann's last summer.

21 THE HARTFORD TIMES, MONDAY, JULY



ARTHUR HONEGGER, French composer who flew to Tanglewood from Paris, to teach composition at Berkshire Music Center. Series A of the Festival will open with his "Symphony for Strings" July 24.

ELEAZAR deCARVALHO, Brazilian conductor who studied at the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky last season, conducts the student orchestra as assistant to him in teaching conducting this season.

HUGH ROSS teaches choral conducting in the barn at Tanglewood.

All-Mozart Program Draws Tanglewood Crowd

More than 2,700 persons gathered at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon for an all-Mozart program in the Theater-Concert Hall. Of these about half found places on the surrounding lawns. It was a cool, bright day. Berkshire at its best.

I don't know of anywhere a person can go to hear such a composition as Mozart's Serenade in B flat for Wind Instruments except at this festival. It will never find place on a regular symphony program and your average chamber music concert cannot implement the piece. Here are required two oboes, two clarinets, four horns, two bassoons, a contrabassoon and two bassett horns, the latter parts taken on this occasion by bass clarinets.

And, of course, they have to be good. The very character of woodwinds, inclining by nature to staccato utterance and a sameness of timbre would make so long a work a complete bore unless expertly done. The quality of Sunday's performance was a joy to the most fastidious heart.

* * *

INTRINSICALLY, this serenade is not the best Mozart by any means. But that is the virtue of such a festival performance. It presents rather pedestrian compositions like this in contrast to such inspired pages as the B flat Divertimento for strings and two horns. This makes for discrimination and even Mozart calls for a discriminating ear.

Even with the "Jupiter" and the E flat Symphonies on the program, the divertimento was [illegible] the peak of this two-and-[illegible]-hour interlude of Mozart. The [illegible] was, in the vernacular, out of this world and Koussevitzky and his men were plainly [illegible] by their own interpretation. The moment which followed was as precious a moment as imagination can contrive.

It is a pleasure to hear the "Jupiter" performed by an orchestra [illegible] down to proper size. In spite of its nickname, there is really nothing Olympian about it; clarity and sparkle are a good deal more germane than force of numbers. Koussevitzky played it with 36 men.

The only heaven-storming episode was the finale which must be placed on a par with the previously mentioned slow movement of the Divertimento.

* * *

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE to sit in that hall listening to such a program without a thought about the suggested orchestra of classical size for Hartford. Here we had two Mozart symphonies and two other large-scale works and all afternoon only forty players set foot on the platform.

It doesn't take 110 men for a symphony orchestra. What are we waiting for?

C. E. L.

HUDSON, N. Y., DAILY STAR, MONDAY, JULY 21, 1947.

FESTIVAL MOVIES TO FEATURE USE OF MUSIC IN FOUR NATIONS

The use of the music of four nations, the United States, France, Russia and England, will be represented in the program of motion pictures that will illustrate the use of original scores by important contemporary composers at the "music for all" field day at Tanglewood, July 29.

At least one reel will be shown from "Our Town," with music by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center and holder of the Pulitzer Prize and Critics' Circle Award for his recent compositions. Mr Copland himself chose the closing scenes of the play as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama.

The midnight carriage ride of Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera from "Mayerling" will represent the work of Arthur Honegger, who arrived from France July 5 to teach composition at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at the invitation of the director, Serge Koussevitzky. The stars are Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux.

The other movies from which scenes will be shown are "Alexander Nevsky" with score by Prokofieff; "The Youth of Maxim," a story of the 1905 revolution, with music by Shostakovitch; "The Plainsman," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, with score by George Antheil; "The River," a government documentary film, for which Virgil Thomson draws on American folk themes for his score, and "Henry V," with music by William Walton, played by the London Symphony Orchestra.

Asembled under the title, "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 and again at 11, following the special concert at 8:30 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The event, illustrating "New Horizons in Music," will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Genter. Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood. The audience is invited to come early and bring a picnic supper. A door prize of a full set of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be given.

Ham & Pineapple

It was early in Tanglewood's season, and the sounds that came out of the Berkshire woods were more cacophonous than symphonic. In the vast Music Shed, a student orchestra was rehearsing; in a nook of the carefully pruned gardens, a student agonized in solitude with his French horn. Strolling amid these sights & sounds was a short chunk of a man with a square face and a wild mane, who looked like a composer. He was—he was also guest of honor at Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Festival. His name: Arthur Honegger.

Composer Honegger, now 55, had been, 30 years ago, one of the noisiest of the famed French Six (only two others, Milhaud and Poulenc, ever amounted to anything). In those days in Paris, Swiss Composer Honegger had spent as much time talking as composing, and his talk was mainly directed against the pernicious influence of jazz and the "street fair." He wanted his music to be austere.

In five years he had turned out the two works on which his fame still rests: Le Roi David and Pacific 231, a huffing, chuffing orchestral description of a locomotive getting under way. In his oratorio-like Le Roi David he perfected his own trick of plaiting two huge, serpentine strands of melody into a dissonant, sometimes arid, fabric of harmony. He went on to write some 60 works, including four symphonies, also twenty-odd French and English movie scores (Mayerling, Pygmalion), a medium which he prefers to opera.

Last week, between teaching classes in composition at Tanglewood, Composer Honegger toyed with a lunch of roast ham and pineapple (a gastronomic dissonance he had never encountered in France) and talked about his music. He had no favorites: "Our works are rather like our children, children that are grown up and married. Once completed, they start on a life of their own." The Boston Symphony scheduled one of the children, Symphony for Strings, for its first major Berkshire concert next week.

Honegger's next project is music for a stage production of Sophocles' Oedipus Rex, with sets by Picasso, to be given in Paris next winter. Said he: "That is, I am trying to work on it. They keep me very busy here—lessons both morning and afternoon with one hour for lunch. . . ."

Robert W. Kelley

HONEGGER & TANGLEWOOD STUDENTS
Gastronomic dissonances.

TIME, JULY 21, 1947

MUSKEGON, MICH.
CHRONICLE

JUL 22 1947

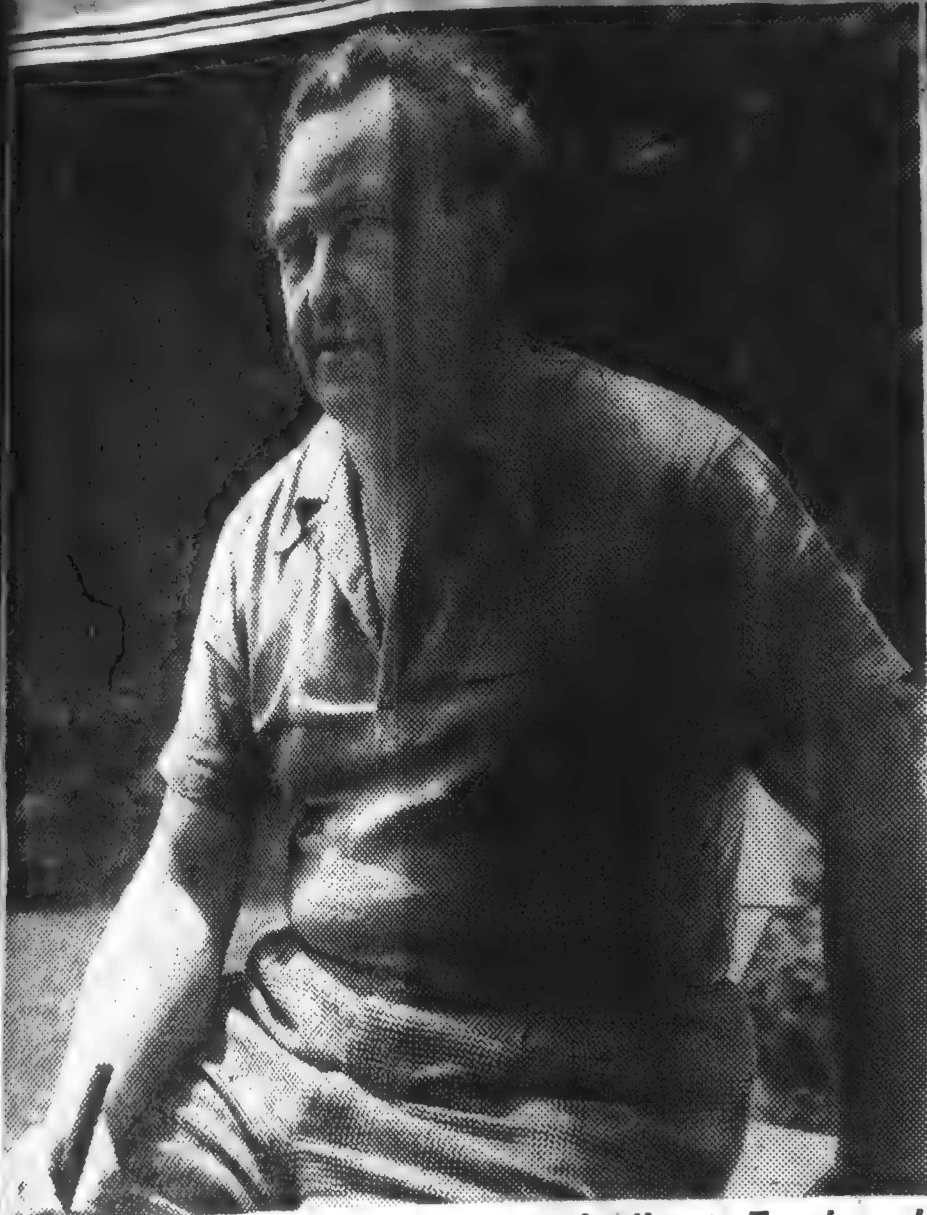
All-Mozart Program Aired

The Boston S[illegible] orchestra, in its se[illegible] from Tanglewood, M[illegible] all-Mozart [illegible] p. [illegible] WKBZ at [illegible] Koussevitzky [illegible] the se- [illegible] Symphony [illegible] the "Jupiter"

[illegible]

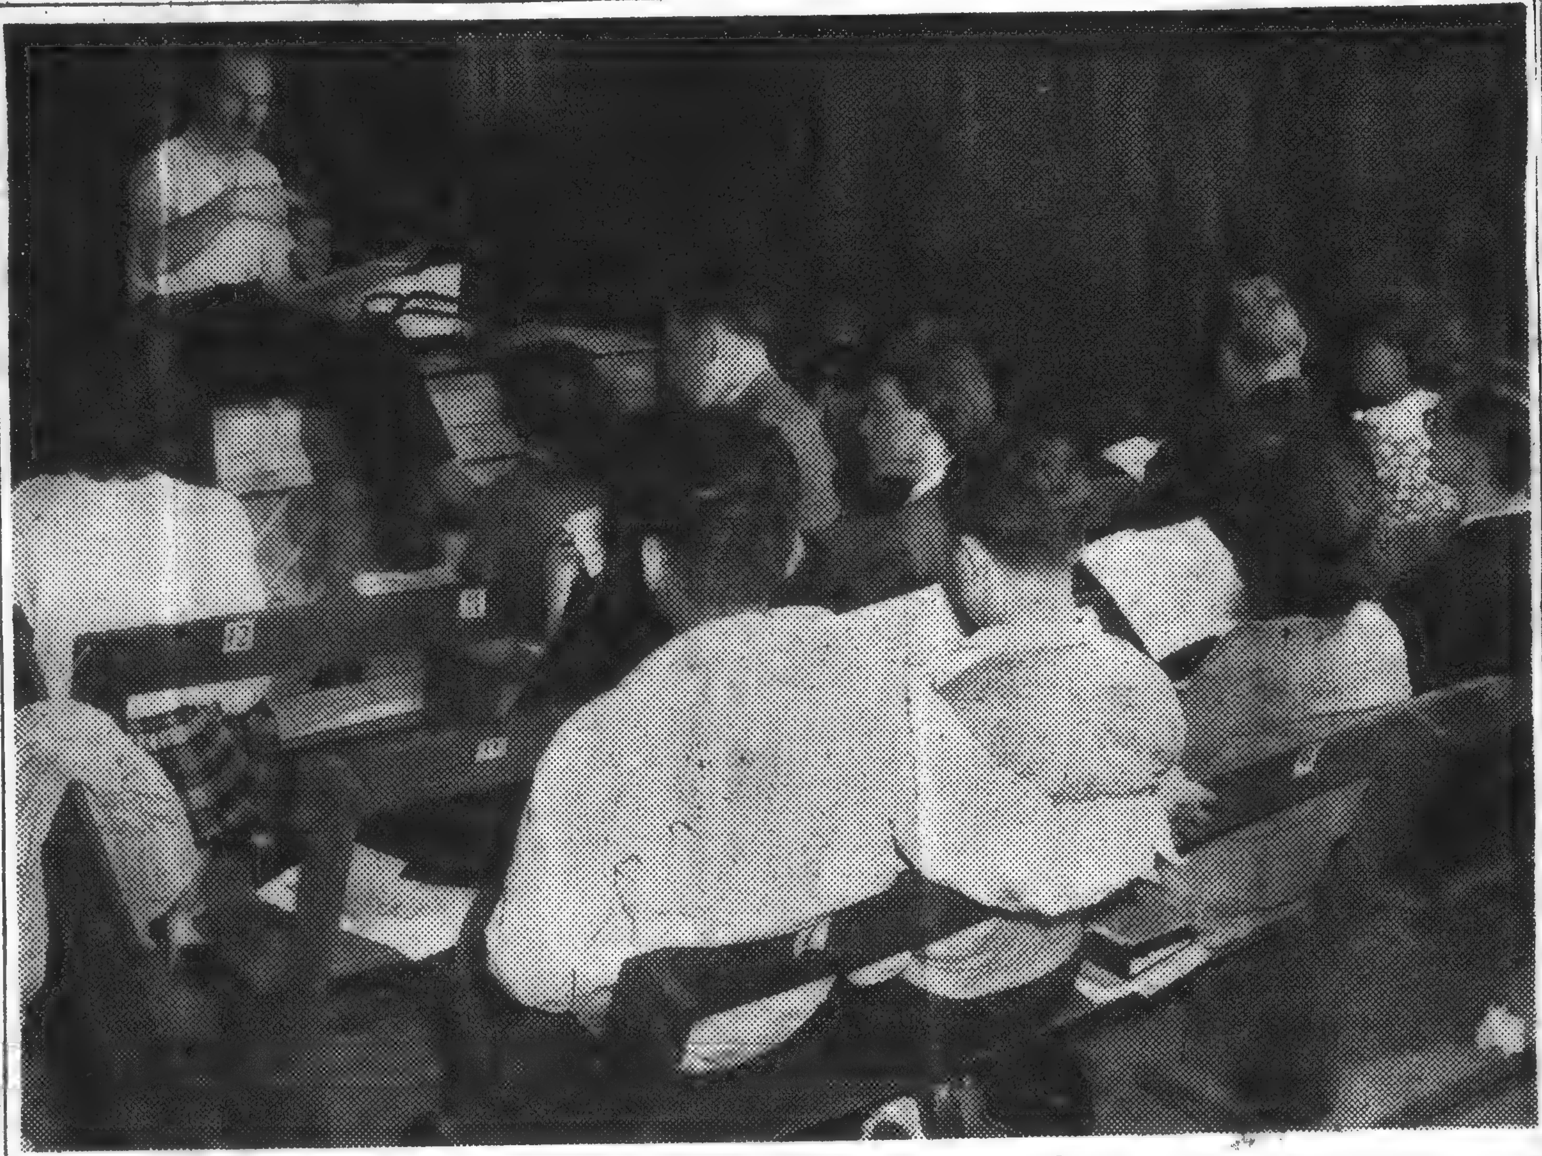
[illegible] WKBZ at 9:30 p. m.; the [illegible] Chicago Philharmonic in a program to include Brahm's Symphony No. 1 over WGN at 8:30 p. m. and a [illegible] session about the current [illegible] session in American Forum of the Air over Mutual at 8:30 p. m.

[40]



ARTHUR HONEGGER, French composer who flew to Tanglewood from Paris, to teach composition at Berkshire Music Center. Series A of the Festival will open with his "Symphony for Strings" July 24.

ELEAZAR deCARVALHO, Brazilian conductor who studied at the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky last season, conducts the student orchestra as assistant to him in teaching conducting this season.



HUGH ROSS teaches choral conducting in the barn at Tanglewood.

All-Mozart Program Draws Tanglewood Crowd

More than 2,700 persons gathered at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon for an all-Mozart program in the Theater-Concert Hall. Of these about half found places on the surrounding lawns. It was a cool, bright day, Berkshire at its best.

I don't know of anywhere a person can go to hear such a composition as Mozart's Serenade in B flat for Wind Instruments except at this festival. It will never find place on a regular symphony program and your average chamber music concert cannot implement the piece. Here are required two oboes, two clarinets, four horns, two bassoons, a contrabassoon and two bassett horns, the latter parts taken on this occasion by bass clarinets.

And, of course, they have to be good. The very character of woodwinds, inclining by nature to staccato utterance, and a sameness of timbre would make so long a work a complete bore unless expertly done. The quality of Sunday's performance was a joy to the most fastidious heart.

* * *

INTRINSICALLY, this serenade is not the best Mozart by any means. But that is the virtue of such a festival performance. It poses a rather pedestrian composition like this in contrast to such inspired pages as the B flat Divertimento for strings and two horns. This makes for discrimination and even Mozart calls for a discriminating ear.

Even with the "Jupiter" and the E flat Symphonies on the program, the divertimento was easily the peak of this two-and-a-half-hour interlude of Mozart. The Adagio was, in the vernacular, out of this world and Koussevitzky and his men were plainly exalted by their own interpretation. The minuet which followed was as precious a moment as imagination can contrive.

It is a pleasure to hear the "Jupiter" performed by an orchestra cut down to proper size. In spite of its nickname, there is really nothing Olympian about it; clarity and sparkle are a good deal more germane than force of numbers. Koussevitzky played it with 36 men.

The only heaven-storming episode was the finale which must be placed on a par with the previously mentioned slow movement of the Divertimento.

* * *

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE to sit in that hall listening to such a program without a thought about the suggested orchestra of classical size for Hartford. Here we had two Mozart symphonies and two other large-scale works and all afternoon only forty players set foot on the platform.

It doesn't take 110 men for a symphony orchestra. What are we waiting for?

C. E. L.

HUDSON, N. Y., DAILY STAR, MONDAY, JULY 21, 1947.

FESTIVAL MOVIES TO FEATURE USE OF MUSIC IN FOUR NATIONS

The use of the music of four nations, the United States, France, Russia and England, will be represented in the program of motion pictures that will illustrate the use of original scores by important contemporary composers at the "music for all" field day at Tanglewood, July 29.

At least one reel will be shown from "Our Town," with music by Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center and holder of the Pulitzer Prize and Critics' Circle Award for his recent compositions. Mr Copland himself chose the closing scenes of the play as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama.

The midnight carriage ride of Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera from "Mayerling" will represent the work of Arthur Honegger, who arrived from France July 5 to teach composition at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at the invitation of the director, Serge Kousevitsky. The stars are Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux.

The other movies from which scenes will be shown are "Alexander Nevsky" with score by Prokofieff; "The Youth of Maxim," a story of the 1905 revolution, with music by Shostakovitch; "The Plainsman," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, with score by George Antheil; "The River," a government documentary film, for which Virgil Thomson draws on American folk themes for his score, and "Henry V," with music by William Walton, played by the London Symphony Orchestra.

Asembled under the title, "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 and again at 11, following the special concert at 8:30 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The event, illustrating "New Horizons in Music," will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood. The audience is invited to come early and bring a picnic supper. A door prize of a full set of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be given.

MUSKEGON, MICH.
CHRONICLE

JUL 22 1947

All-Mozart Program Aired

The Boston Symphony orchestra, in its second [illegible] from Tanglewood, Mass., will offer an all-Mozart program over WKBZ at 8:30 p. m. Dr. Serge Kousevitzky will conduct the orchestra, the selections to include the "Jupiter Symphony."

Philip Barry's delightful comedy "Holiday" will be adapted for studio One over WBBM at 8:30 p. m.

Other highlights tonight will include Sara Ann McCabe, "The Red Mill" star, on Melody Lane over WBBM at 8 p. m.; Van Heflin in another adventure story over WMAQ, at 9 p. m.; Edmond Hockridge, Canadian baritone, in a new musical show over WKBZ at 9:30 p. m.; the Chicago Philharmonic in a program to include Brahm's "Symphony No. 1 over WGN at 8:30 p. m., and a discussion about the current congressional session on American Forum of the Air over Mutual at 8:30 p. m.

Ham & Pineapple

It was early in Tanglewood's season, and the sounds that came out of the Berkshire woods were more cacophonous than symphonic. In the vast Music Shed, a student orchestra was rehearsing; in a nook of the carefully pruned gardens, a student agonized in solitude with his French horn. Strolling amid these sights & sounds was a short chunk of a man with a square face and a wild mane, who looked like a composer. He was—he was also guest of honor at Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Festival. His name: Arthur Honegger.

Composer Honegger, now 55, had been, 30 years ago, one of the noisiest of the famed French Six (only two others, Milhaud and Poulenc, ever amounted to anything). In those days in Paris, Swiss Composer Honegger had spent as much time talking as composing, and his talk was mainly directed against the pernicious influence of jazz and the "street fair." He wanted his music to be austere.

In five years he had turned out the two works on which his fame still rests: Le Roi David and Pacific 231, a huffing, chuffing orchestral description of a locomotive getting under way. In his oratorio-like Le Roi David he perfected his own trick of plaiting two huge, serpentine strands of melody into a dissonant, sometimes arid, fabric of harmony. He went on to write some 60 works, including four symphonies, also twenty-odd French and English movie scores (Mayerling, Pygmalion), a medium which he prefers to opera.

Last week, between teaching classes in composition at Tanglewood, Composer Honegger toyed with a lunch of roast ham and pineapple (a gastronomic dissonance he had never encountered in France) and talked about his music. He had no favorites: "Our works are rather like our children, children that are grown up and married. Once completed, they start on a life of their own." The Boston Symphony scheduled one of the children, Symphony for Strings, for its first major Berkshire concert next week.

Honegger's next project is music for a stage production of Sophocles' Oedipus Rex, with sets by Picasso, to be given in Paris next winter. Said he; "That [illegible] am trying to work on it. They keep me very busy here—lessons both morning and afternoon with one hour for lunch. . . ."

Robert W. Kelley

HONEGGER & TANGLEWOOD STUDENTS
Gastronomic dissonances.

TIME, JULY 21, 1947

Tanglewood to Produce 'Idomeneo'

"Idomeneo," often described as one of the greatest operas by Mozart, but hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts. The opera is being prepared by the Berkshire Music Center, the school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this the orchestra's summer home at Lenox where the Berkshire Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will still be in progress. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, will direct and conduct the performance. The mis-en-scene will be by Richard Bychtarik.

* * *

THE OPERA will be performed twice, in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, on Monday and Wednesday evening, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 for the Court Opera in Munich, in his 24th year. It is, in the opinion of Mozart authorities, his greatest "opera seria" or classical grand opera, and this opinion is borne out by Mozart's devotion to his task and his pride in the result as explained in his letters to his father at the time.

* * *

MR. GOLDOVSKY has brought the opera to performable length by omitting extraneous subplots in the original text of the Abbé Varesco, shortening the recitatives, and re-ordering scenes for the sake of dramatic continuity. In doing this he has scrupulously respected Mozart's score, and in cutting, has sacrificed none of its great moments. The part of Idamante, written for a castrato, has not been transposed, and will be sung by a soprano. The opera will be given in the original Italian.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE

7:30 p. m.: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the all-Mozart program on the second program from the Berkshire Music Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 22 1947

Mozart Concert At Tanglewood On Air Tonight

Sunday Afternoon's Program to Be Repeated in Concert Hall at 8.30

The all-Mozart [illegible] played Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be repeated this evening at 8.30. It will be [illegible] by the ABC network over [illegible] Sunday it was heard by an audience of 2,600, a record for the theater-concert hall, of whom 1,400 were seated on benches and the lawn surrounding the auditorium.

The program [illegible] the Serenade [illegible] Winds, "Jupiter" Symphony [illegible] Symphony [illegible] E Flat [illegible]

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS

JUL 22 1947

Music Festival Broadcast Will Feature Mozart

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. today over [illegible]. As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, has selected works without soloists. The following week the broadcast will be heard from the larger Music Shed. For today's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen two Mozart numbers, Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments, Symphony in C major, No. 41.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUL 21 1947

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play Music from the Movies At Field Day at Tanglewood

The most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra~~ "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Jul 29. Four nations, France, Russia, England, and the United States will be represented.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V" with music of Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson, and William Walton. The now historic Disney cartoon "Micky's Grand Opera" will be the curtain-raiser.

Prints for this special event for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Paramount Pictures. Assembled under the title "Music in the Movies" the one-hour program will be screened at 7 P.M. in the Theatre-Concert Hall before the special concert and broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For those who are unable to be accommodated at the first showing the program will be repeated at 11 P.M.

All of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Mr. Copland, holder of both the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama. The sequence to be shown at Tanglewood begins in the cemetery of Grover's Corners and was made available by Paul Lazarus of United Artists.

A French film with Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux as the star-crossed Hapsburg lovers, "Mayerling" for more than ten years has been an acknowledged cinema masterpiece. The selected passage is the memorable carriage ride in which the Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera tear through the night.

Two sections from "Alexander Nevsky" will be shown, first the beginning of the picture, where the medieval Russians mobilize to defend their homeland against the invading Teutonic knights, and the Battle on the Ice, the clash on a frozen lake which wrote one of the most stirring pages in Russian history. In both scenes Prokofieff made telling use not only of the orchestra but introduced a tremendous chorus as well.

"The Youth of Maxim" is the story of the 1905 revolution and is thinly veiled Soviet propaganda. Shostakovitch wrote very little original music for this sound track but made expert use of the workers songs of the period. A mild surprise for younger movie-goers comes when they hear a tune called "Danube Waves" which is a hit tune from "The Jolson Story." The same music, however, was played on the piano by Marlene Dietrich in a film which antedates "The Youth of Maxim" called "Dishonored."

When one remembers "The Plainsman" he usually thinks of the torture scene but the passage to be shown at Tanglewood will be quieter, the moment when Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickok shows his watch equipped with musical alarm to Jean Arthur (Calamity Jane). Antheil's score rated raves from the critics and it still holds up as some of the best written for films by music's confessed "bad boy." "The Plainsman" is by courtesy of Ben Washer, Paramount Pictures, Inc. For "The River," a government documentary film from the early days of the Roosevelt administration, Virgil Thomson begins with the hymn tune "How Firm a Foundation" and draws richly on American folk themes.

The finest orchestra and recording on the bill will be heard in William Walton's score for "Henry V" played by the London Symphony Orchestra. The excerpt from the Laurence Olivier's magnificent film of the Shakespeare play will be the Battle of Agincourt. The film is being shown at Tanglewood by special arrangement with Captain Harold Auten, the British producer's representative in the United States.

---

and the Divertimento for Strings and Horns.

The last of four weekly chamber music programs will be presented tomorrow evening at 8.15 by the Juilliard String Quartet of New York. The program includes the String Quartet No. 3 by William Schuman; two pieces for String Quartet by Aaron Copland; and Quartets by Wallingford Riegger and Harold Shapero. Mr. Shapero's piece will be given its first public performance.

Members of the group are Robert Mann, and Robert Koff, violins; Raphael Hillyer, viola and Arthur Winograd, violoncello. The event is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The concert planned for Thursday afternoon by the chorus of department 5 has been cancelled, but an evening of opera, with orchestral accompaniment, has been added to the list of events for Sunday evening a .15.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 22 1947

MOZART PROGRAM:

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival at 8:30 tonight over WOKO.

As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theatre-concert hall on the grounds here Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, ~~has selected works without~~ soloists. The following week the broadcast will be heard from the larger Music Shed.

For tonight's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following Mozart numbers, one in the smaller form and the other familiar to concertgoers: Serenade in B Flat major for wind instruments, Symphony in C Major, No. 41 (Jupiter).

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

JUL 22

Music—An all-Mozart program is scheduled for presentation tonight by the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The list includes the ~~"Jupiter" sym~~phony and "Serenade in B Flat Major for Wind Instruments" (KGO—9 p. m.).

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 21 1947

2500 At Concert In Tanglewood

By Gazette Staff Correspondent

LENOX, July 21—The second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival drew an audience of 2500 to Tanglewood yesterday. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, played a program devoted entirely to music by Mozart.

The Theater-Concert Hall, second largest auditorium at this Summer home of the Boston Symphony, was jammed to capacity with 1200 listeners who came to this world-famed retreat from all parts of the country and abroad. Among them were many celebrities from the music, social, and professional worlds. Another 1300 auditors crowded near the entrances and sprawled about on blankets within hearing distance.

While this concert was not intended to test audience reaction to Mozart compared to the warm reception accorded the Bach program of a week ago, yesterday there was an unmistakable rise of enthusiasm.

The orchestra was again reduced to chamber music proportions and for the "Serenade in B-flat Major" was decreased to 13 wind instruments. The "Divertimento in B-flat" employed the services of a small string orchestra and two horns. A well-proportioned oorchestra of 40 was required for the "Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 26," and the "Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter") No. 41."

Thursday night the festival will transfer its activities to the Tanglewood Shed, which seats 6000 and is noted for its amazing acoustical properties. The program will include Honegger's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's pictorial tone-poem "La Mer," and "Symphony No. 2," by Brahms.

Saturday night's program will be Samuel Barber's "A School for Scandal," Copland's "Symphony No. 3," and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct both concerts.

Sunday afternoonn, the following will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein "Symphony No. 7 in C Major," by Schubert, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps."

This week there will be extra-curriculum events by students from the Berkshire Music Center, beginning Tuesday afternoon. Concerts will be given by the student orchestra, chamber groups, and chorus. These daily events are open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center by invitation only.

Tickets may be obtained to attend the public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony in the Shed at 10 Saturday morning.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 21 1947

Orchestra Gives Mozart Program at Tanglewood

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Accorded Ovation at Close of Concert That Included First and Last Symphonies

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

In a program designed to show the glittering facets of an extra-ordinary musical personality, and the versatility of one of the world's top symphony orchestras, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon treated the Tanglewood audience to a superb reading of four compositions of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Mozart wrote his first symphony when he was 17; his last at 32. Woven into this tragically short span was a richly colored variety of music that could only have been the product of an incomparable gift and titanic labor.

There is no use in trying to make points of comparison in yesterday's program, for each of the four compositions represented a new aspect of genius, and each received a masterful treatment at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra's string and wind sections.

Serenade Opens Program

The afternoon began with the lovely and bewildering Serenade in B Flat Major for Wind Instruments; lovely as only perfection can be, and bewildering because of the tremendous variety of thematic propositions.

The "Serenade" employs two oboes, two bassett horns, two clarinets, who present the original theme, four horns, two bassoons and double bassoon.

Most moving of the five parts, is the graceful and lively Andantino, a theme with variations, and at the close of the final breezy "Rondo" yesterday's audience was all but on its feet, shouting "brava's," and cheering.

Next came the Divertimento in B Flat Major for Strings With Two Horns, which Dr. Koussevitzky delivered in brisk bravura fashion. This piece does not have the melodic strain of other Mozart divertimenti, and of the five movements, the Minuet is to me the most attractive.

The "Little Symphony" in E Flat Major, Mozart's first, opened the second half of the program. It is as true today as it was then, that most early, serious composition, whether music, painting or poetry, seems to underscore the tragic aspects of life. Gloom, pain, forebodings of death, intense preoccupation and introspection are quite typical and the young Mozart was no exception. It is only remarkable that the "Little Symphony" contains such passion of maturity, regardless of its content, and Dr. Koussevitzky gave it a grave and thoughtful exposition yesterday afternoon.

The C Major Symphony, styled the "Jupiter" brought the afternoon to a thundering close. The "Jupiter" was Mozart's fin de siecle, the crowning achievement of a glorious career; the challenge of a lofty spirit rising above a mean environment.

Yesterday's concert will be repeated in the theater and concert hall tomorrow evening at 8.30.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 21

MOZART CONCERT PLEASES THRONG AT TANGLEWOOD

Dr. Koussevitzky Is Recalled Four Times by Highly Appreciative Audience

By Willard M. Clark

Lenox, July 20 [illegible] Wolfgang Amadeus [illegible] by members of the Boston [illegible] Orchestra directed by [illegible] Koussevitzky, drew an [illegible] 2500 to Tanglewood [illegible] Eleven hundred [illegible] every seat in [illegible] building, while [illegible] lawns around the building [illegible] perfect day to hear [illegible] superbly played.

Appreciative Audience

Pierre Luboshutz and [illegible] inoff, two-piano [illegible] with the Springfield [illegible] season, sat next to [illegible] away, sat William P[illegible] violist, who also [illegible] symphony. It was an [illegible] included many [illegible] music but best of it, it was an [illegible] ence which came for the [illegible] sic itself.

They heard [illegible] from the [illegible] too young, [illegible] sied output of extraor[illegible] mazing in the [illegible] ideas, all testifying [illegible] scope of the com[illegible] invention.

Dr. Koussevitzky [illegible] He opened the program [illegible] table performance of [illegible] nade in B-flat major for W[illegible] struments." Seldom is one [illegible] to hear such virtuoso [illegible] soaring notes of [illegible] sweet competition from [illegible] well as less sweet [illegible] the planes which [illegible]

[illegible]

Second Part

[illegible]

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH

An all-Mozart list w[illegible] the program for the s[illegible] broadcast from the B[illegible] sic Festival, 8:30 P. M. [illegible] Koussevitzky, conducting, ~~selected works without~~ so[illegible] has chosen the follow[illegible] numbers, one in the sm[illegible] and the other famili[illegible] goers: Serenade in B [illegible] for wind instruments, Symphony in C ma[illegible] piter), (K. 551).

CHICAGO,
TRIBUNE

JUL 22 19

Music Fes
at Tangle Draws Cr

BY JUDITH

THOSE Chicagoans
summer homes
Pittsfield, Mass., taken houses in
for the season will find bulging during the next while the Berkshire m is in full swing at his wood, in Pittsfield. The start Thursday, with th concerts by the Boston
orchestra and a Moza which many of the 425
the Berkshire Music cen part. The average at two Bach concerts in Concert hall last week
and two Mozart program
Sunday and one planne
are sell-outs.

Next Saturday will birthday of Dr. Serge K conductor of the Boston and he will conduct a Barber, Copeland, and night. Demonstrative ov ences hail his every app correspondent writes.

New Tanglewood b
clude a rehearsal stage,
for stagecraft, and a cafeteria. Under cons
Hawthorne av. is a re
Hawthorne cottage whic
novelist occupied for tw
1850. The new building site of the "Hawthor which was burned in building is being finan
American Federation o t a reported cost of
will be dedicated next y

Other Pittsfield Ne

With its century old wide stretches of lawn
he south across Lake owards Monument m
Mount Everett, Tanglew
o thousands of visitors ear after year. Willia Tappan, Boston banke
hant, founded Tanglew
His granddaughter, M
Hopewell Hepburn of C
er aunt, the late Mar
Tappan, gave the prop
Boston Symphony orche

The Chicago Berkshir
rranging dinners and ies for their friends, so re coming especially f al, while others will oast.

Staying with Mrs. Do
Pherson at historic C
Pittsfield will be Mr. an ard D. Bokum, Mr. and man Hinckley, Mr. and
B. Wolf, Mrs. Walter
Charles B. Goodspeed,
Philip Wyman of Made
Logan G. Thomson of
Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Re
nut Hill, Pa.; Mr. and
Tinker [Frances McK
York, and Leander McC
hart of Washington.

Mrs. John L. Senior
guests at High Wick,
James Ward Thorne, M
Swift, Mrs. Gustavus
Mrs. James E. Baum of

Mrs. Welch Dickinson supper party at her summer home Sunday
the Tanglewood conc house party guests, who
Mr. and Mrs. John W
Evanston and Mr. and von Ammon of Winnetk

Mr. and Mrs. William rett will do a lot of
during the festival.
guests at Sky farm, Nort will include Mrs. Giova
Mrs. Francis King of ford, N. Y., onetime
the Garden Club of A
Harold McBixby of St.
and Mrs. Lyman Bliss,
Mrs. Frederic Haines
Charles River, Mass.

Mrs. Clarence M. W ent of the Philadelphia
Vocal Arts, and Mr. ave taken a villa at L eason, were guests o cent dinner given by arrett. Others prese
rs. George O. Forbes
d her sister, Mrs. H att of New York;
binson, U. S. A., reti binson of Washingt
s. Walter Prichard
. and Mrs. William
New York.

Mrs. Clyde Mitchell n Inn, Stockbridge, f od fete.

Tanglewood to Produce 'Idomeneo'

"Idomeneo," often described as one of the greatest operas by Mozart, but hitherto unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts. The opera is being prepared by the Berkshire Music Center, the school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this the orchestra's summer home at Lenox where the Berkshire Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will still be in progress. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, will direct and conduct the performance. The mis-en-scene will be by Richard Bychtarik.

* * *

THE OPERA will be performed twice, in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, on Monday and Wednesday evening, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 for the Court Opera in Munich, in his 24th year. It is, in the opinion of Mozart authorities, his greatest "opera seria" or classical grand opera, and this opinion is borne out by Mozart's devotion to his task and his pride in the result as explained in his letters to his father at the time.

* * *

MR. GOLDOVSKY has brought the opera to performable length by omitting extraneous subplots in the original text of the Abbé Varesco, shortening the recitatives, and re-ordering scenes for the sake of dramatic continuity. In doing this he has scrupulously respected Mozart's score, and in cutting, has sacrificed none of its great moments. The part of Idamante, written for a castrato, has not been transposed, and will be sung by a soprano. The opera will be given in the original Italian.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE

7:30 p. m.: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the all-Mozart program on the second program from the Berkshire Music Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 22 1947

Mozart Concert At Tanglewood On Air Tonight

Sunday Afternoon's Program to Be Repeated in Concert Hall at 8.30

The all-Mozart program played Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be repeated this evening at 8.30. It will be carried by the ABC network over a nation wide hook-up. Sunday it was heard by an audience of 2,600, a record for the theatre-concert hall, of whom 1,400 were seated on benches and the lawn surrounding the auditorium.

The program includes the Serenade for Winds, "Jupiter" Symphony in C Major, Symphony in E Flat Major and the Divertimento for Strings and Horns.

The last of four weekly chamber music programs will be presented tomorrow evening at 8.15 by the Juilliard String Quartet of New York. The program includes the String Quartet No. 3 by William Schuman; two pieces for String Quartet by Aaron Copland; and Quartets by Wallingford Riegger and Harold Shapero. Mr. Shapero's piece will be given its first public performance.

Members of the group are Robert Mann, and Robert Koff, violins; Raphael Hillyer, viola and Arthur Winograd, violoncello. The event is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The concert planned for Thursday afternoon by the chorus of department 5 has been cancelled, but an evening of opera, with orchestral accompaniment, has been added to the list of events for Sunday evening at 8.15.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS

JUL 22 1947

Music Festival Broadcast Will Feature Mozart

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. today over WELL. As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, has selected works without soloists. The following week the broadcast will be heard from the larger Music Shed. For today's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen two Mozart numbers, Serenade in B flat major for wind instruments, Symphony in C major, No. 41.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

JUL 22

Music—An all-Mozart program is scheduled for presentation tonight by the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The list includes the "Jupiter" Symphony and "Serenade in B Flat Major for Wind Instruments" (KGO—9 p. m.).

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUL 21 1947

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play Music from the Movies At Field Day at Tanglewood

The most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29. Four nations, France, Russia, England, and the United States will be represented.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V" with music of Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson, and William Walton. The now historic Disney cartoon "Micky's Grand Opera" will be the curtain-raiser.

Prints for this special event for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Paramount Pictures. Assembled under the title "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 P.M. in the Theatre-Concert Hall before the special concert and broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For those who are unable to be accommodated at the first showing the program will be repeated at 11 P.M.

All of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Mr. Copland, holder of both the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama. The sequence to be shown at Tanglewood begins in the cemetery of Grover's Corners and was made available by Paul Lazarus of United Artists.

A French film with Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux as the star-crossed Hapsburg lovers, "Mayerling" for more than ten years has been an acknowledged cinema masterpiece. The selected passage is the memorable carriage ride in which the Crown Prince Rudolf and the Baroness Vetsera tear through the night.

Two sections from "Alexander Nevsky" will be shown, first the beginning of the picture, where the medieval Russians mobilize to defend their homeland against the invading Teutonic knights, and the Battle on the Ice, the clash on a frozen lake which wrote one of the most stirring pages in Russian history. In both scenes Prokofieff made telling use not only of the orchestra but introduced a tremendous chorus as well.

"The Youth of Maxim" is the story of the 1905 revolution and is thinly veiled Soviet propaganda. Shostakovitch wrote very little original music for this sound track but made expert use of the workers songs of the period. A mild surprise for younger movie-goers comes when they hear a tune called "Danube Waves" which is a hit tune from "The Jolson Story." The same music, however, was played on the piano by Marlene Dietrich in a film which antedates "The Youth of Maxim" called "Dishonored."

When one remembers "The Plainsman" he usually thinks of the torture scene but the passage to be shown at Tanglewood will be quieter, the moment when Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickok shows his watch equipped with musical alarm to Jean Arthur (Calamity Jane). Antheil's score rated raves from the critics and it still holds up as some of the best written for films by music's confessed "bad boy." "The Plainsman" is by courtesy of Ben Washer, Paramount Pictures, Inc. For "The River," a government documentary film from the early days of the Roosevelt administration, Virgil Thomson begins with the hymn tune "How Firm a Foundation" and draws richly on American folk themes.

The finest orchestra and recording on the bill will be heard in William Walton's score for "Henry V" played by the London Symphony Orchestra. The excerpt from the Laurence Olivier's magnificent film of the Shakespeare play will be the Battle of Agincourt. The film is being shown at Tanglewood by special arrangement with Captain Harold Auten, the British producer's representative in the United States.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 22 1947

MOZART PROGRAM:

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival at 8:30 tonight over WOKO.

As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theatre-concert hall on the grounds here. Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, has selected works without soloists. The following week the broadcast will be heard from the larger Music Shed.

For tonight's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following Mozart numbers, one in the smaller form and the other familiar to concertgoers: Serenade in B Flat Major for wind instruments, Symphony in C Major, No. 41 (Jupiter).

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 21 1947

Orchestra Gives Mozart Program at Tanglewood

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Accorded Ovation at Close of Concert That Included First and Last Symphonies

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

In a program designed to show the glittering facets of an extra-ordinary musical personality, and the versatility of one of the world's top symphony orchestras, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon treated the Tanglewood audience to a superb reading of four compositions of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Mozart wrote his first symphony when he was 17; his last at 32. Woven into this tragically short span was a richly colored variety of music that could only have been the product of an incomparable gift and titanic labor.

There is no use in trying to make points of comparison in yesterday's program, for each of the four compositions represented a new aspect of genius, and each received a masterful treatment at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra's string and wind sections.

Serenade Opens Program

The afternoon began with the lovely and bewildering Serenade in B Flat Major for Wind Instruments; lovely as only perfection can be, and bewildering because of the tremendous variety of thematic propositions.

The "Serenade" employs two oboes, two bassett horns, two clarinets, who present the original theme, four horns, two bassoons and double bassoon.

Most moving of the five parts, is the graceful and lively Andantino, a theme with variations, and at the close of the final breezy "Rondo" yesterday's audience was all but on its feet, shouting "brava's," and cheering.

Next came the Divertimento in B Flat Major for Strings With Two Horns, which Dr. Koussevitzky delivered in brisk bravura fashion. This piece does not have the melodic strain of other Mozart divertimenti, and of the five movements, the Minuet is to me the most attractive.

The "Little Symphony" in E Flat Major, Mozart's first, opened the second half of the program. It is as true today as it was then, that most early, serious composition, whether music, painting or poetry, seems to underscore the tragic aspects of life. Gloom, pain, forebodings of death, intense preoccupation and introspection are quite typical and the young Mozart was no exception. It is only remarkable that the "Little Symphony" contains such passion of maturity, regardless of its content, and Dr. Koussevitzky gave it a grave and thoughtful exposition yesterday afternoon.

The C Major Symphony, styled the "Jupiter" brought the afternoon to a thundering close. The "Jupiter" was Mozart's fin de siecle, the crowning achievement of a glorious career; the challenge of a lofty spirit rising above a mean environment.

Yesterday's concert will be repeated in the theater and concert hall tomorrow evening at 8.30.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 21 1947

2500 At Concert In Tanglewood

By Gazette Staff Correspondent

LENOX, July 21—The second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival drew an audience of 2500 to Tanglewood yesterday. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, played a program devoted entirely to music by Mozart.

The Theater-Concert Hall, second largest auditorium at this Summer home of the Boston Symphony, was jammed to capacity with 1200 listeners who came to this world-famed retreat from all parts of the country and abroad. Among them were many celebrities from the music, social, and professional worlds. Another 1300 auditors crowded near the entrances and sprawled about on blankets within hearing distance.

While this concert was not intended to test audience reaction to Mozart compared to the warm reception accorded the Bach program of a week ago, yesterday there was an unmistakable rise of enthusiasm.

The orchestra was again reduced to chamber music proportions and for the "Serenade in B-flat Major" was decreased to 13 wind instruments. The "Divertimento in B-flat" employed the services of a small string orchestra and two horns. A well-proportioned oorchestra of 40 was required for the "Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 26," and the "Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter") No. 41."

Thursday night the festival will transfer its activities to the Tanglewood Shed, which seats 6000 and is noted for its amazing acoustical properties. The program will include Honegger's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's pictorial tone-poem "La Mer," and "Symphony No. 2," by Brahms.

Saturday night's program will be Samuel Barber's "A School for Scandal," Copland's "Symphony No. 3," and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct both concerts.

Sunday afternoonn, the following will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein "Symphony No. 7 in C Major," by Schubert, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps."

This week there will be extra-curriculum events by students from the Berkshire Music Center, beginning Tuesday afternoon. Concerts will be given by the student orchestra, chamber groups, and chorus. These daily events are open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center by invitation only.

Tickets may be obtained to attend the public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony in the Shed at 10 Saturday morning.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 21 1947

MOZART CONCERT PLEASES THRONG AT TANGLEWOOD

Dr. Koussevitzky Is Recalled Four Times by Highly Appreciative Audience

By Willard M. Clark

Lenox, July 20 Th[illegible] Wolfgang Amadeus Moza[illegible] by members of the Boston S[illegible] Orchestra directed by D[illegible] Koussevitzky, drew an audience [illegible] 2500 to Tanglewood this [illegible] Eleven hundred persons [illegible] every seat in the con[illegible] building, while the rest occ[illegible] lawns around the building. It w[illegible] perfect day to hear sublime m[illegible] superbly played.

Appreciative Audience

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, two-piano duo, who played with the Springfield Symphony [illegible] season, sat next to us, while [illegible] away, sat William Primrose, the violaist, who also appeared with the symphony. It was an audience which included many names important in music but best of it, it was an audience which came for the sake of music itself.

They heard great music. It was music from the pen of one who died too young, but left the world a musical output of extraordinary quality, amazing in the originality of [illegible] ideas, all testifying to the [illegible] scope of the composer's [illegible] invention.

Dr. Koussevittzky was in fine form. He opened the program with a delectable performance of the "Serenade in B-flat major for Wind Instruments." Seldom is one privileged to hear such virtuoso playing. The soaring notes of the [illegible] sweet competition from the [illegible] as well as less sweet competition from the planes which circled the ground-

[illegible]

Next came [illegible] B-flat major [illegible] and strings." This [illegible] entirely [illegible] less virtuoso [illegible] could one find [illegible] equal that of the B[illegible] The performance was [illegible] flawless exposition [illegible]

Second Portion

The second portion [illegible] first and [illegible] namely the "Symphony [illegible] major" written when M[illegible] years old, and the [illegible] in C Ma[illegible]

[illegible]

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH

An all-Mozart list will comprise the program for the second ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival, 8:30 P. M. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting has selected works without soloists. He has chosen the following Mozart numbers, one in the smaller form and the other familiar to concert-goers: Serenade in B flat major (K. 361) for wind instruments, Symphony in C major, No. 41 (Jupiter), (K. 551).

* * *

CHICAGO,
TRIBUNE

JUL 22 19

Music Fes
at Tangle Draws Cr

BY JUDITH

THOSE Chicagoans
summer homes
Pittsfield, Mass., taken houses in
for the season will find bulging during the next
while the Berkshire m is in full swing at his wood, in Pittsfield. The start Thursday, with th concerts by the Boston
orchestra and a Moza which many of the 425
the Berkshire Music cen part. The average at two Bach concerts in Concert hall last week
and two Mozart program
Sunday and one planne
are sell-outs.

Next Saturday will
birthday of Dr. Serge K conductor of the Bosto and he will conduct a Barber, Copeland, and night. Demonstrative ov
ences hail his every app
correspondent writes.

New Tanglewood b
clude a rehearsal stage,
for stagecraft, and a cafeteria. Under cons
Hawthorne av. is a re
Hawthorne cottage whic
novelist occupied for tw
1850. The new building site of the "Hawthor
which was burned in building is being finan
American Federation o at a reported cost of
will be dedicated next y

Other Pittsfield Ne

With its century old wide stretches of lawn
the south across Lake towards Monument mo
Mount Everett, Tanglew to thousands of visitors year after year. Willian
Tappan, Boston banke
chant, founded Tanglew
His granddaughter, M
Hopewell Hepburn of C
her aunt, the late Mar
Tappan, gave the prop
Boston Symphony orche

The Chicago Berkshir arranging dinners and ies for their friends, so are coming especially val, while others will coast.

Staying with Mrs. Do
Pherson at historic Co
Pittsfield will be Mr. an ard D. Bokum, Mr. and man Hinckley, Mr. and
B. Wolf, Mrs. Walter
Charles B. Goodspeed,
Philip Wyman of Made
Logan G. Thomson of
Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Re
nut Hill, Pa.; Mr. and
Tinker [Frances McK
York, and Leander McC
hart of Washington.

Mrs. John L. Senior
guests at High Wick,
James Ward Thorne, M
Swift, Mrs. Gustavus
Mrs. James E. Baum of

Mrs. Welch Dickinson
supper party at her summer home Sunday
the Tanglewood conc house party guests, who
Mr. and Mrs. John W Evanston and Mr. and von Ammon of Winnetk

Mr. and Mrs. William rett will do a lot of
during the festival.
guests at Sky farm, Nort
will include Mrs. Giova
Mrs. Francis King of ford, N. Y., onetime
the Garden Club of Am
Harold McBixby of St.
and Mrs. Lyman Bliss,
Mrs. Frederic Haines
Charles River, Mass.

Mrs. Clarence M. W ent of the Philadelphia
Vocal Arts, and Mr. V have taken a villa at L season, were guests of cent dinner given by arrett. Others prese
rs. George O. Forbes
nd her sister, Mrs. H att of New York; C
binson, U. S. A., reti binson of Washingto
rs. Walter Prichard
. and Mrs. William
New York.

Mrs. Clyde Mitchell C n inn, Stockbridge, fo
d fete.

ELD, MASS.
G UNION

1 1947

CONCERT
S THRONG
GLEWOOD

zky Is Recalled s by Highly ve Audience

d M. Clark

20—The music of Mozart, played
6 Boston Symphony
ed by Dr. Serge w an audience of ood this afternoon.
persons occupied the concert-theater
e rest occupied the building. It was a ear sublime music

ve Audience
z and Genia Nem-duto, who played eld Symphony last o us, while not far n Primrose, the vi-appeared with the an audience which ames important in it, it was an audifor the sake of mu-eat music. It was n of one who died

the world a muraordinary quality, originality of its ng to the copious nposer's source of

y was in fine form.
ogram with a de-ce of the "Serejor for Wind Inis one privileged uoso playing. The the clarinet had from the birds, as competition from circled the grounds

ble for clarity and s the performance Variations. A per-greatest sensitivity.
"Divertimento in violin, two horns provided a palette nt colors and n rformance. It is ers in the world string section to Boston symphony.
was a well-nigh
of its capacity.

Portion on of the program last symphonies, mphony in E-flat en Mozart was 17 final "Symphony n at the age of 32.
tranced and wonraordinary musical rly work, joyed in originality of the the three brief wondered at the d melancholy ex-dante coming from young.
ony, the "Jupiter", 17, now in the at 32 years of ann, in an evalu-
Major Symphony
hings in the world ing can be sa or Symphony wit eal of Shakespe Beethoven." D ded a superb ghted by a of the exquis rtainly one of th r to come it was the gi t, with its Bac bravura, w ce to its feet ack four times pplause.
pens the "A" S
The program wi
"Symphony for
"The Sea," and ony of Brahms
.15.

D, VA.
ATCH

1947 ist will comprise the second ABC

e Berkshire Mu-
P. M. Dr. Serge nducting, has sehout soloists. He following Mozart the smaller form miliar to concert-in B flat major ments (K. 361);
major, No. 41 (Ju-

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

22 1947

Music Festival at Tanglewood Draws Crowds

BY JUDITH CASS

THOSE Chicagoans who have summer homes in or near Pittsfield, Mass., or who have taken houses in that vicinity for the season will find their walls bulging during the next three weeks while the Berkshire music festival is in full swing at historic Tanglewood in Pittsfield. The festival will start Thursday with the first of 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and a Mozart opera, in which many of the 125 students at the Berkshire Music center will take part. The average attendance at two Bach concerts in the Theater-Concert hall last week was 2,000, and two Mozart programs, one held Sunday and one planned for today, are sellouts.

Next Saturday will be the 73d birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and he will conduct a program of Barber, Copeland, and Berlioz that night. Demonstrative overflow audiences hail his every appearance, our correspondent writes.

New Tanglewood buildings include a rehearsal stage, a workshop for stagecraft, and a kitchen and cafeteria. Under construction in Hawthorne av. is a replica of the Hawthorne cottage which the Salem novelist occupied for two years from 1850. The new building is on the site of the "Hawthorne Shrine," which was burned in 1890. The building is being financed by the American Federation of Musicians at a reported cost of $12,000 and will be dedicated next year.

Other Pittsfield News

With its century old trees and its wide stretches of lawn and view to the south across Lake Mahkeenac towards Monument mountain and Mount Everett, Tanglewood appeals to thousands of visitors who return year after year. William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston banker and merchant, founded Tanglewood in 1849. His granddaughter, Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, and her aunt, the late Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1938.

The Chicago Berkshire groups are arranging dinners and cocktail parties for their friends, some of whom are coming especially for the festival, while others will go on to the coast.

Staying with Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at historic Court Hill in Pittsfield will be Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Bokum, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman Hinckley, Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Wolf, Mrs. Walter R. Kirk, Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman of Madeira, O.; Mrs. Logan G. Thomson of Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Reath of Chestnut Hill, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Earl L. Tinker [Frances McKee] of New York, and Leander McCormick Goodhart of Washington.

Mrs. John L. Senior is having as guests at High Wick, Lenox, Mrs. James Ward Thorne, Mrs. Alden B. Swift, Mrs. Gustavus F. Swift, and Mrs. James E. Baum of Palm Beach.

Mrs. Welch Dickinson will give a supper party at her Stockbridge summer home Sunday night after the Tanglewood concert for her house party guests, who will include Mr. and Mrs. John W. Rogers of Evanston and Mr. and Mrs. Ernst von Ammon of Winnetka.

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett will [illegible] a lot of entertaining during the festival. Their house guests at Sky farm North Egremont will include Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli, Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., onetime president of the Garden Club of America; Mrs. Harold McBixby of St. Louis, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Bliss, and Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Hones Curtiss of [illegible], Mass.

Mrs. Clarence M. Warden, president of the Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts, and Mr. Warden, who have taken a villa at Lenox for the season, were guests of honor at a recent dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Barrett. Others present included Mrs. George O. Forbes of Rockford and her sister, Mrs. Harold Irving Pratt of New York; Col. James P. Robinson, U. S. A., retired, and Mrs. Robinson of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. W[illegible] Richard Eaton, and Mr. and Mrs. William A. Berridge of New York.

Mrs. Clyde Mitchell Carr is at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge for the Tanglewood fete.

CHICAGO TEL.
NEWS

JUL 22 1947

BY SAM LESNER.

The usual order of sponsoring on radio something you're trying to sell has been reversed in St. Louis by house hunters who have turned to sponsoring 15-minute radio programs in a desperate effort to find living quarters.

A spokesman for Radio Station WIL said the 15-minute segments on the all-night record shows are restricted to 300 words giving the sponsor's type of business, the size of his family, his qualifications as a tenant and his housing requirements. He is identified only by his telephone number.

Timing of the program, late Saturday night into the early Sunday morning hours was chosen to reach a diversified audience that could be expected to be in good spirits and "perhaps a little on the sentimental side," the station's spokesman explained.

If anything, the programs should throw a new light on much maligned landlords who can show a "sentimental side."

* * *

SPEAKING of the telephone, there's a 20-minute opera bouffe about that sometimes diabolical instrument and the CBS Symphony will air it on Aug. 10.

"The Medium," Gian-Carlo Menotti's new American opera will be given its first radio performance with "The Telephone," which is also a Menotti contribution to opera theater. The original Broadway cast will be heard in "The Medium."

* * *

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, offers an all-Mozart program tonight from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Jupiter Symphony is included, WLS, 7:30 p.m.

Movie music, incidentally, will be featured at the Berkshire Festival next week, preceding the regular concert.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V," to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers.

We have no news as to whether this portion of the program will be broadcast but this is the sort of programming that would delight television set owners, if we had nation-wide television hookups.

One good deed deserves another. While radio and the Boston Symphony are paying their respects to film music next Tuesday, M-G-M will be shooting "The Story of Tanglewood" on the spot.

* * *

TELEVISION set owners can see a demonstration of plastic restorations for veterans and civilians on WBKB, tonight at 8:20. . . . Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" program goes commercial Friday night, WBBM, 8:30 p.m. No change in format.

"Arthur's Place," also a Friday night show on CBS (WBBM, 8:00 p.m.), has hauled in the "welcome guests" mat. Extroverts among Arthur's staff and regular customers will get the funny lines.

Letters

Discrimination

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I just want to bring to your attention an unfortunate occurrence here, and perhaps with some air and light on the subject it will be cleared up.

It seems that the organization known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is badly lacking in management. The ghost of "Peter Grimes" hovers over Tanglewood. A lot of us last year made our donations to the "Friends" and went to many of the student concerts, but were left out of the student opera due to too many tickets being given out and not enough seats for the ticket-holders. Now this year they have another arrangement. The worst possible discrimination, that of money, is the rule in doling out tickets for the student opera.

I asked for tickets for the opera on Sunday, and was told they were available only to those "Friends" who donated five dollars or more. That is highly unfair. It should be first come, first served. There are some of us Berkshireites who are sincerely interested in music and in furthering the fund for students, but some of us cannot afford to pay five dollars. Why wasn't there some notice in the papers? Why couldn't there have been a deadline in joining the "Friends" and getting opera tickets? Perhaps they could have an extra concert for the "lesser contributors."

I think they are doing an excellent job, but couldn't we have better management?

KATHARINE B. CREER.
P.O. Box 633,
Lenox.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN

JUL 22 1947

Next Week's Programs At Berkshire Festival

Sunday afternoon's concert marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. The program includes the overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, No. 7.

"Music for All," the special added event Tuesday, July 29, is creating wide interest. The evening's program begins at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the Theatre-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

In a different vein the film program will have as a curtain-raiser the now historic Disney cartoon, "Micky's Grand Opera." For those unable to reach Tanglewood on time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the motion pictures at 11 p. m.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 p. m. in the shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company. Engineers, director, and announcers will be operating in full view of the audience.

The Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture first motion pictures of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood ultimately to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity." There will be examples of records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several of them landmarks in phonographic art, over the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," R.C.A. Victor's first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

Series B, which will cover all the Symphonies of Beethoven, will begin Thursday evening, July 31, with Nos. 1, 2, and 3, the "Eroica." Saturday evening, August 2, will bring Nos. 4 and 5 and the Fifth ("Emperor") Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist. The Sixth ("Pastorale") and Seventh Symphonies with Joseph Battista as soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 4 make up the program for Sunday afternoon, August 3. The final concert of the Beethoven series on Tuesday evening, August 5, will begin at 7:30 p. m., to allow complete performances of the Symphonies No. 8 and 9, the mighty "Choral" symphony. The other evening concerts in the series are at 8:15 o'clock.

The Berkshire Festival will con-

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

JUL 22 1947

Famous Fables

Interference: Will Rogers accompanied a Hollywood executive to a preview of a western movie.

"How did you like it?" asked the executive when the lights went up.

"It was great for the first three reels," replied Rogers. "The scenery was gorgeous, the horses were beautiful. I was all set to relax and have a good time. Then a bunch of actors got in front of the camera and spoiled everything!"

* * *

Tolerance: At rehearsal one afternoon, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, was dissatisfied with the orchestra's performance. When repeated correction had produced no improvement, he tossed his baton on the stand and cried:

"Gentlemen, after twenty years in Boston I have learned to tolerate beans, but I will not tolerate has-beens!"

[42]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 21 1947

2500 Enjoy Tanglewood Mozart Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday—The cultured and luxurious music of Mozart attracted an audience of 2500 to the theater-concert hall and its surrounding areas yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, reduced to forty men who played in diversified groups, was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. This was the second concert of the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival.

A week ago, the music of Bach held forth at Tanglewood. It was an afternoon of down-to-earth readings from the musical bible: It was music of pure substance, no frills but not closed to debate on matters of interpretation.

Beautiful Illusion

Yesterday's program was scintilating sound. It cavorted about sometimes with a note of resigned sorrow typical of Mozart. But always in the very best manners of the Eighteenth Century. Koussevitzky's concept of Mozart creates a beautiful illusion of an era of powdered wigs and lace, depicted with a high degree of musical intelligence.

The program read: "Serenade in B-Flat Major for Wind Instruments." "Divertimento in B-Flat Major for Strings with Two Horns." "Symphony in E-Flat Major No. 26." "Symphony in C Major (Jupiter) No. 41."

Comprises 20 Movements

This comprises nearly twenty movements (some with variations) and I certainly do not intend to subject you to a discussion of each, thereby drastically exceeding my space allotment, even for the satisfaction of recording impressions which were plentiful. As a matter of fact it is not necessary to do so. Because yesterday's Mozart can be catalogued by outstanding characteristics.

The entire program was detailed playing. It was as clear-cut in dynamics, balance, melody assignment, and fine points as a well-marked highway. Beneath the surface of these physical qualities Koussevitzky never allowed his Mozart to become lady-like or scented with excessive politeness even in the sensuous "Adagio" movement of the "Divertimento."

The "Allegro" and "Presto" movements of all four works were like hands of steel covered with silk gloves — ebullient, yes, but not phlegmatic.

Attacks were vigorous but not athletic. Melodies lingered without becoming sluggish. And details of phrasing would have withstood the most microscopic examination.

If you are content with tempered but expressive emotionalism you would have been impressed with the slow movements. Again speaking in terms of generalities the "Adagios" and "Andantes" were interpreted as sonnets of sound in which the rich tonal qualities of the instruments themselves were spokesmen of the underlying messages. The richly-voiced string section spoke its lines dulcetly but directed attention to the meaning behind the sound rather than to the nearly perfect bowing.

The "Themes and Variations" (Serenade and Divertimento) darted gracefully from idea to idea without jarring the continuity.

Minuet Charming

The "Minuet" movements (with which each but the "Symphony in E-Flat" was endowed) were graceful and charming. These minuets under the Koussevitzky baton accomplish the difficult task described in the program notes of "combining manly force with womanly grace." In the "Jupiter" the pompous main theme was fortified by horns, trumpets and kettledrums, challenged by an elegantly-expressed trio.

All of this may sound unduly metaphorical but yesterday's concert was interpretative Mozart and not mere approximation of the salient qualities of a classic composer.

Next Thursday evening the festival will shift scene to that mammoth structure conservatively referred to here as the "shed." The program will include Honngr's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "La Mer" and "Symphony No. 2" by Brahms.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 22 1947

Music Sequences From Movies Will Be Shown at Lenox

The most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood on Tuesday, July 29. France, Russia, England, and the United States will be represented.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V" with music of Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson, and William Walton. The Disney cartoon, "Micky's Grand Opera," will be the curtain-raiser.

Prints for this special event for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Paramount Pictures. Assembled under the title "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 P.M. in the Theatre-Concert Hall before the special concert and broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For those who are unable to be accommodated at the first showing the program will be repeated at 11 P.M.

All of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Mr. Copland, holder of both the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama. The sequence to be shown at Tanglewood begins in the cemetery of Grover's Corners and was made available by Paul Lazarus of United Artists.

JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

JUL 22 1947

Berkshire Festival Features All-Mozart On Program Tonight

By GLEN JOHNSON

An all-Mozart program will comprise tonight's WTJS-ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival at 7:30.

As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass.—summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, has selected works without soloists.

For tonight's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following Mozart numbers, one in the smaller form and the other familiar to concert goers: "Serenade in B-Flat Major for Wind Instruments" and "Symphony in C-Major.

IELD, MASS.
NG UNION

2 1 1947

T CONCERT
ES THRONG
NGLEWOOD

itzky Is Recalled nes by Highly tive Audience

lard M. Clark

20—The music of … played the Boston Symphony
… by Dr. Serge drew an audience of wood this afternoon.
d persons occupied the concert-theater
the rest occupied the he building. It was a hear sublime music

tive Audience

ntz and Genia Nemo duto, who played field Symphony last t to us, while not far am Primrose, the vio appeared with the
as an audience which names important in of it, it was an audie for the sake of mu-great music. It was pen of one who died left the world a mu-extraordinary quality, e originality of its ying to the copious omposer's source of

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
22 1947

Music Festival at Tanglewood Draws Crowds

BY JUDITH CASS

THOSE Chicagoans who have summer homes in or near Pittsfield, Mass., or who have taken houses in that vicinity for the season will find their walls bulging during the next three weeks while the Berkshire music festival is in full swing at historic Tanglewood, in Pittsfield. The festival will start Thursday, with the first of 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and a Mozart opera, in which many of the 125 students at the Berkshire Music center will take part. The average attendance at two Bach concerts in the Theater-Concert hall last week was 2,000, and two Mozart programs, one held Sunday and one planned for today are sell-outs.

Next Saturday will be the 73d birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and he will conduct a program of Barber, Copeland, and Berlioz that night. Demonstrative overflow audiences hail his every appearance, our correspondent writes.

New Tanglewood buildings include a rehearsal stage, a workshop for stagecraft, and a kitchen and cafeteria. Under construction in Hawthorne av. is a replica of the Hawthorne cottage which the Salem novelist occupied for two years from 1850. The new building is on the site of the "Hawthorne Shrine," which was burned in 1890. The building is being financed by the American Federation of Musicians at a reported cost of $12,000 and will be dedicated next year.

Other Pittsfield News

With its century old trees and its wide stretches of lawn and view to the south across Lake Mahkeenac towards Monument mountain and Mount Everett, Tanglewood appeals to thousands of visitors who return year after year. William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston banker and merchant, founded Tanglewood in 1849. His granddaughter, Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, and her aunt, the late Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1938.

The Chicago Berkshire groups are arranging dinners and cocktail parties for their friends, some of whom are coming especially for the festival, while others will go on to the coast.

Staying with Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at historic Court Hill in Pittsfield will be Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Bokum, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman Hinckley, Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Wolf, Mrs. Walter R. Kirk, Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman of Madeira, O.; Mrs. Logan G. Thomson of Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Reath of Chestnut Hill, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Earl L. Tinker [Frances McKee] of New York, and Leander McCormick Goodhart of Washington.

Mrs. John L. Senior is having as guests at High Wick, Lenox, Mrs. James Ward Thorne, Mrs. Alden B. Swift, Mrs. Gustavus F. Swift, and Mrs. James F. Baum of Palm Beach.

Mrs. Welch Dickinson will give a supper party at her Stockbridge summer home Sunday night after the Tanglewood concert for her house party guests, who will include Mr. and Mrs. John W. Rogers of Evanston and Mr. and Mrs. Ernst von Ammon of Winnetka.

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett will do a lot of entertaining during the festival. Their house guests at Sky farm, North Egremont, will include Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli, Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., onetime president of the Garden Club of America; Miss Harold McBixby of St. Louis; Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Bliss, and Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Haines Curtiss of Charles River, Mass.

Mrs. Clarence V. Warden, president of the Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts, and Mr. Warden, who have taken a villa at Lenox for the season, were guests of honor at a recent dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Barrett. Others present included Mrs. George O. Forbes of Rockford and her sister, Mrs. Harold Irving Pratt of New York; Col. James P. Robinson, U. S. A., retired, and Mrs. Robinson of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Prichard Eaton, and Mr. and Mrs. William A. Berridge of New York.

Mrs. Clyde Mitchell Carr is at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, for the Tanglewood fete.

CHICAGO TEL.
NEWS

JUL 22 1947

BY SAM LESNER.

The usual order of sponsoring on radio something you're trying to sell has been reversed in St. Louis by house hunters who have turned to sponsoring 15-minute radio programs in a desperate effort to find living quarters.

A spokesman for Radio Station WIL said the 15-minute segments on the all-night record shows are restricted to 300 words giving the sponsor's type of business, the size of his family, his qualifications as a tenant and his housing requirements. He is identified only by his telephone number.

Timing of the program, late Saturday night into the early Sunday morning hours was chosen to reach a diversified audience that could be expected to be in good spirits and "perhaps a little on the sentimental side," the station's spokesman explained.

If anything, the programs should throw a new light on much maligned landlords who can show a "sentimental side."

* * *

SPEAKING of the telephone, there's a 20-minute opera bouffe about that sometimes diabolical instrument and the CBS Symphony will air it on Aug. 10.

"The Medium," Gian-Carlo Menotti's new American opera will be given its first radio performance with "The Telephone," which is also a Menotti contribution to opera theater. The original Broadway cast will be heard in "The Medium."

* * *

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, offers an all-Mozart program tonight from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Jupiter Symphony is included, WLS, 7:30 p.m.

Movie music, incidentally, will be featured at the Berkshire Festival next week, preceding the regular concert.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V," to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers.

We have no news as to whether this portion of the program will be broadcast but this is the sort of programming that would delight television set owners, if we had nation-wide television hookups.

One good deed deserves another. While radio and the Boston Symphony are paying their respects to film music next Tuesday, M-G-M will be shooting "The Story of Tanglewood" on the spot.

* * *

TELEVISION set owners can see a demonstration of plastic restorations for veterans and civilians on WBKB, tonight at 8:20. . . . Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" program goes commercial Friday night, WBBM, 8:30 p.m. No change in format.

"Arthur's Place," also a Friday night show on CBS (WBBM, 8:00 p.m.), has hauled in the "welcome guests" mat. Extroverts among Arthur's staff and regular customers will get the funny lines. This change of policy cancels Beatrice Kay's scheduled guest appearance on Friday's broadcast.

I just want to bring to your attention an unfortunate occurrence here, and perhaps with some air and light on the subject it will be cleared up.

It seems that the organization known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is badly lacking in management. The ghost of "Peter Grimes" hovers over Tanglewood. A lot of us last year made our donations to the "Friends" and went to many of the student concerts, but were left out of the student opera due to too many tickets being given out and not enough seats for the ticket-holders. Now this year they have another arrangement. The worst possible discrimination, that of money, is the rule in doling out tickets for the student opera.

I asked for tickets for the opera on Sunday, and was told they were available only to those "Friends" who donated five dollars or more. That is highly unfair. It should be first come, first served. There are some of us Berkshireites who are sincerely interested in music and in furthering the fund for students, but some of us cannot afford to pay five dollars. Why wasn't there some notice in the papers? Why couldn't there have been a deadline in joining the "Friends" and getting opera tickets? Perhaps they could have an extra concert for the "lesser contributors."

I think they are doing an excellent job, but couldn't we have better management?

KATHARINE B. CREER.
P.O. Box 633,
Lenox.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN

JUL 22 1947

Next Week's Programs At Berkshire Festival

Sunday afternoon's concert marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. The program includes the overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, No. 7.

"Music for All," the special added event Tuesday, July 29, is creating wide interest. The evening's program begins at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the Theatre-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

In a different vein the film program will have as a curtain-raiser the now historic Disney cartoon, "Micky's Grand Opera." For those unable to reach Tanglewood on time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the motion pictures at 11 p. m.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 p. m. in the shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company. Engineers, director, and announcers will be operating in full view of the audience.

The Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture first motion pictures of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood ultimately to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity." There will be examples of records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several of them landmarks in phonographic art, over the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," R.C.A. Victor's first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

Series B, which will cover all the Symphonies of Beethoven, will begin Thursday evening, July 31, with Nos. 1, 2, and 3, the "Eroica." Saturday evening, August 2, will bring Nos. 4 and 5 and the Fifth ("Emperor") Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist. The Sixth ("Pastorale") and Seventh Symphonies with Joseph Battista as soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 4 make up the program for Sunday afternoon, August 3. The final concert of the Beethoven series on Tuesday evening, August 5, will begin at 7:30 p. m., to allow complete performances of the Symphonies No. 8 and 9, the mighty "Choral" symphony. The other evening concerts in the series are at 8:15 o'clock.

The Berkshire Festival will con-

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

JUL 22 1947

Famous Fables

Interference: Will Rogers accompanied a Hollywood executive to a preview of a western movie.

"How did you like it?" asked the executive when the lights went up.

"It was great for the first three reels," replied Rogers. "The scenery was gorgeous, the horses were beautiful. I was all set to relax and have a good time. Then a bunch of actors got in front of the camera and spoiled everything!"

* * *

Tolerance: At rehearsal one afternoon, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, was dissatisfied with the orchestra's performance. When repeated correction had produced no improvement, he tossed his baton on the stand and cried:

"Gentlemen, after twenty years in Boston I have learned to tolerate beans, but I will not tolerate has-beens!"

[42]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 21 1947

2500 Enjoy Tanglewood Mozart Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday—The cultured and luxurious music of Mozart attracted an audience of 2500 to the theater-concert hall and its surrounding areas yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, reduced to forty men who played in diversified groups, was conducted by Serge Koussevitsky. This was the second concert of the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival.

A week ago, the music of Bach held forth at Tanglewood. It was an afternoon of down-to-earth readings from the musical bible; It was music of pure substance, no frills but not closed to debate on matters of interpretation.

Beautiful Illusion

Yesterday's program was scintilating sound. It cavorted about sometimes with a note of resigned sorrow typical of Mozart. But always in the very best manners of the Eighteenth Century. Koussevitsky's concept of Mozart creates a beautiful illusion of an era of powdered wigs and lace, depicted with a high degree of musical intelligence.

The program read: "Serenade in B-Flat Major for Wind Instruments." "Divertimento in B-Flat Major for Strings with Two Horns." "Symphony in E-Flat Major No. 26." "Symphony in C Major (Jupiter) No. 41."

Comprises 20 Movements

This comprises nearly twenty movements (some with variations) and I certainly do not intend to subject you to a discussion of each, thereby drastically exceeding my space allotment, even for the satisfaction of recording impressions which were plentiful. As a matter of fact it is not necessary to do so. Because yesterday's Mozart can be catalogued by outstanding characteristics.

The entire program was detailed playing. It was as clear-cut in dynamics, balance, melody assignment, and fine points as a well-marked highway. Beneath the surface of these physical qualities Koussevitzky never allowed his Mozart to become lady-like or scented with excessive politeness even in the sensuous "Adagio" movement of the "Divertimento."

The "Allegro" and "Presto" movements of all four works were like hands of steel covered with silk gloves — ebullient, yes, but not phlegmatic.

Attacks were vigorous but not athletic. Melodies lingered without becoming sluggish. And details of phrasing would have withstood the most microscopic examination.

If you are content with tempered but expressive emotionalism you would have been impressed with the slow movements. Again speaking in terms of generalities the "Adagios" and "Andantes" were interpreted as sonnets of sound in which the rich tonal qualities of the instruments themselves were spokesmen of the underlying messages. The richly-voiced string section spoke its lines dulcetly but directed attention to the meaning behind the sound rather than to the nearly perfect bowing.

The "Themes and Variations" (Serenade and Divertimento) darted gracefully from idea to idea without jarring the continuity.

Minuet Charming

The "Minuet" movements (with which each but the "Symphony in E-Flat" was endowed) were graceful and charming. These minuets under the Koussevitzky baton accomplish the difficult task described in the program notes of "combining manly force with womanly grace." In the "Jupiter" the pompous main theme was fortified by horns, trumpets and kettledrums, challenged by an elegantly-expressed trio.

All of this may sound unduly metaphorical but yesterday's concert was interpretative Mozart and not mere approximation of the salient qualities of a classic composer.

Next Thursday evening the festival will shift scene to that mammoth structure conservatively referred to here as the "shed." The program will include Honngr's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "La Mer" and "Symphony No. 2" by Brahms.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 22 1947

Music Sequences From Movies Will Be Shown at Lenox

The most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood on Tuesday, July 29. France, Russia, England, and the United States will be represented.

At least one reel each will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V" with music of Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson, and William Walton. The Disney cartoon, "Micky's Grand Opera," will be the curtain-raiser.

Prints for this special event for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Paramount Pictures. Assembled under the title "Music in the Movies," the one-hour program will be screened at 7 P.M. in the Theatre-Concert Hall before the special concert and broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For those who are unable to be accommodated at the first showing the program will be repeated at 11 P.M.

All of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Mr. Copland, holder of both the Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama. The sequence to be shown at Tanglewood begins in the cemetery of Grover's Corners and was made available by Paul Lazarus of United Artists.

JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

JUL 22 1947

Berkshire Festival Features All-Mozart On Program Tonight

By GLEN JOHNSON

An all-Mozart program will comprise tonight's WTJS-ABC broadcast from the Berkshire Music Festival at 7:30.

As in the previous broadcast, the program will come from the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, Mass.,—summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conducting, has selected works without soloists.

For tonight's broadcast, Dr. Koussevitsky has chosen the following Mozart numbers, one in the smaller form and the other familiar to concert goers: "Serenade in B-Flat Major for Wind Instruments" and "Symphony in C-Major.

tsfield, Massachusetts. Wednesday, July 23, 19

IN SPOTLIGHT: At the invitation of his former instructor, Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein will occupy the podium in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening, Aug. 7.

Bernstein To Conduct At Festival Sunday

Dr. Koussevitzky's Former Pupil To Be First Guest Conductor at Tanglewood—Concert Series Opens Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open its 10th subscription season tomorrow night at Tanglewood.

Other Conductors

This year, for the first time since the Boston Orchestra came to the Berkshires, there will be guest conductors. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein, his former pupil and now assistant in teaching conducting at the Berkshire Music Center, to occupy the podium for the concert on Sunday, July 27, and on Thursday, Aug. 7, for the opening of the last series. On Saturday, Aug. 9, Robert Shaw, choral leader, will conduct.

Bernstein, who is a native New Englander, having been born in Lawrence 29 years ago, is a graduate of Harvard. He studied two years at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, conducting under Fritz Reiner, orchestration under Randall Thompson and piano under Isabella Verengerova. Last winter he was guest conductor at Symphony Hall for three weeks and led the orchestra on a week's tour of the East, including New York City, where he was the first guest conductor of the orchestra for a full program in Carnegie Hall.

In the spring he conducted in Palestine, Prague, Brussels, Paris and Holland. A student of conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1940 and 1941, he returned to Tanglewood in 1942 to assist him in teaching, as he has for the past two seasons. He led the orchestra for the American premiere of "Peter Grimes" at Tanglewood last August.

The Festival proper will include 10 concerts—on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sundav afternoons for the next three week ends, and an extra program at 7.30 Aug. 5, to complete the Beethoven cycle with the Eighth and Ninth Symphonies.

Field Day July 29

Not included in the regular series, but an important part of the Festival picture will be the "music for all" field day on Tuesday, July 29, when with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, there will be films showing the use of contemporary music, especially written for the movies, the taking of a film of the audience, and the turning of the Shed into a broadcasting station. In a portion of the program called, "The March of Fidelity," actual playing by the orchestra will be contrasted with the playing of recordings made by it at different periods within the past 25 years, and ending with a hitherto unheard recording on a machine about to be placed on the market. The proceeds of the event will be used for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Another feature of the season will be the first performance in

Tanglewood
Continued on Second Page

Tanglewood

America of the rarely heard ope by Mozart, "Idomoneo," on Aug. and 6 by students of the Center.

Few seats remain in the Sh seating 6000. The second seri has been sold out for weeks. Lar audiences are expected to list from the lawn, depending for th size upon the weather. The a vance sale far exceeds that of a other year.

The housing problem is acu especially for the coming week en Hundreds have written to ask f help in securing accommodatio These inquiries have been referr to the Berkshire Hills Conferen Information booths which ha been set up for the occasion Great Barrington, Lee and Stoc bridge report brisk business, a in Lee, at least, vacancies are r ported.

More than 60 music editors a critics have made reservations f tomorrow evening, representi nearly as many newspapers a magazines, and including Vir Thomson of the New York Hera Tribune, who will lecture befo Aaron Copland's class in compo tion at the school tomorrow afte noon, Ross Parmenter of the Ne York Times, Francis Perkins the Herald Tribune and Alfr Frankenstein of the San Francis Chronicle.

Many famous persons in music literary, philanthropic and soc fields are expected from all ov the country. A party of 40 is co ing from Toronto, Canada, a members of the personnel of least four embassies in Washin ton.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 22 1947

Of Music and Musicians

Tanglewood, the Mecca of music lovers, is opening its gates on Thursday for the first of the Berkshire Festival concerts in the big shed. Then the entire Boston Symphony will play works by Honegger, Debussy and Brahms. Tonight Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra in a repeat all-Mozart program in the theater-concert hall.

The program was heard by your columnist on Sunday afternoon and was a delight, not only in its impeccable performance but in the beauty of its planning. It included the Serenade in B-flat major for wind instruments (K. 361); Divertimento in B flat major for strings with two horns (K. 287); Symphony in E flat major, number 26 (K. 184) and Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), number 41 (K. 551).

The Serenade for wind instruments was performed by 13 wind players. It has a charm that is truly unique and was performed with finesse. Next came the equally charming Divertimento for strings and two horns and the program ended with two symphonies, the early number 26 and the final number 41.

It would be impossible to plan a program that would be more satisfying or one that would give the hearer a clearer conception of the magnitude of the genius of Mozart. The program will be played tonight beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

The program for the festival opening on Thursday night will include the Honegger' "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "The Sea," three orchestral sketches and the Brahms Symphonie number 2 in D major. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Other programs this week will be Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The program for Saturday includes Overture, "School for Scandal," Barber; Symphony number 3, Copland; and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Symphony with viola solo played by William Primrose. The Sunday concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein and will include the Schubert "Symphony in C major, number 7 and the Stravinsky "Le Sacre du Printemps."

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center has announced that its major activity this year will be the American premiere of Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo." It will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4 and 6 in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood and admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The performance will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky; sets will be designed by Richard Rychtark. The orchestra and singers will be made up of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

The opera was called Mozart, "Idomeneo, King of Crete" and was written in 1780. It has been given only occasional performances in Europe owing to its length and the absence of printed parts. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Mr. Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian.

Harvard University Press at Cambridge, Mass., has announced that "Music and Criticism," a symposium, will be published this fall. Orders for the book (which will cost $5) should be sent to the Press at 38 Quincy street. The book will include the nine papers presented at the symposium at Harvard on May 1, 2 and 3 under the sponsorship of the department of music at Harvard university. The papers were given by Archibald T. Davison, E. M. Forster, Roger Sessions, Edgar Wind, Olga Samaroff-Stokowski, Virgil Thomson, Otto Kinkeldey, Paul H. Lang and Huntington Cairns.

Tanglewood

Jul 24

Concert Today

The student orchestra of Department 5 will play in the Shed at 4.30.

Tonight at 8.15

The first Festival concert of the subscription season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at 8.15.

Carvalho To Conduct Tomorrow

The student orchestra of Department 2 will play the following program in the Festival Shed at 8.15:

Overture in C, The Consecration of the House .... Beethoven
Irving Fine, conducting.
Serenade for flute, harp and strings, Hanson
Lois Schaefer, flutist.
Mary Stemm, harpist.
Hary John Brown, conducting.
Symphony in three movements. .Stravinsky
(Third movement.)
Gerard Samuel, conducting.
Concerto in B flat for violoncello and orchestra .... Boccherini
(Three movements.)
Aldo Parisot, cellist.
Eleazar deCarvalho, conducting.
Death and Transfiguration ...... Strauss
deCarvalho, conducting.

OSTON POST, WEDNE

7/23

SCREEN GOSSIP

BY PRUNELLA HALL

and physical production begins to take shape ./../. Recognition of the value and importance of the original musical scores in films takes place at the Tanglewood Festival next Tuesday, when one hour of the special field day program will be devoted to showing films which illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers. "Music in the Movies" is the title of the hour-long program which is being showed before and after the main concert. "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River" and "Henry V" are the films. Music for them was written by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson and William Walton. All names to be reckoned with in the musical world. Someone with a sense of humor arranged for the Disney cartoon "Mickey's Grand Opera" to serve as the curtain raiser on the program. "The Youth of Maxim" is not noted so much for its Shostakovitch music, of which little is original, but for the use of the workers songs of the period incorporated into the score, one of which is a tune titled "Danube Waves" which soared to the number one spot in the affections of this nation after Al Jolson sang it as "The Anniversary Song" in "The Jolson Story."

RADIO & TELEVISION WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 23 1947

RCA WILL INTRODUCE FIRST CUSTOM-MADE COMBINATION MODEL

AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Instrument Will Be Presented in Conjunction With Concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

RCA Victor's first custom-made radio-phonograph instrument, named "The Berkshire," will make its world's debut at Tanglewood, Mass. on July 29 in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "New Horizons in Music" program during the premiere of this instrument. This concert will demonstrate the most recent achievements in music reproduction, and will be attended by officials of the Radio Corp. of America.

As a feature of the introduction of "The Berkshire," and also for the first time for any reproducing instrument anywhere, this receiver will match its capabilities for tone fidelity and range against those of a full symphony orchestra in concert.

A limited edition of these sets will be offered exclusively on a subscription basis to benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky has heard "The Berkshire" and finds it "unprecedented in the fidelity of its performance."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 23 1947

Next Week to Be Very Busy At Berkshire Music Festival

Three Concerts Slated for Sunday; 'Music for All. Tuesday Evening; Beethoven Cycle Starts Thursday

Starting with three concerts on Sunday, including the third of the subscription series for the Berkshire Festival, next week promises to be a busy one at Tanglewood. It will include the special concert at the "Music for All" field day on Tuesday, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the opening of the Beethoven cycle Thursday evening the 31st.

Following the opening Festival concert for series A tomorrow evening, when Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Honegger's "Symphony for Strings", Debussy's "The Sea" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2", and the Saturday program, when the music director will conduct Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's "Symphony No. 3" and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with viola solo by William Primrose, Leonard Bernstein will take the baton Sunday afternoon, to be the guest conductor at Tanglewood, leading the orchestra in Mozart's Overture to "The M Flute", Stravinsky's "Le Sa Printemps" and Schubert's phony in C major".

Sunday morning, the chambe sic group will give a concert and the evening the opera departm present scenes from operas, with chestral accompaniment, an even listed in the calendar. Monday noon at 4.30 the orchestra and of department 5 will give a co and Wednesday evening orche students of the Berkshire Music ter will present an all-Stravin chamber concert.

Thursday at 4.30 the chorus of partment 5 will sing in the F shed and Thursday evening Dr. Ko sevitsky and the Boston Symph Orchestra will open the Beethov cycle with the composer's first symphonies, to be followed Satu evening by the 4th and 5th sym nies and the 5th Piano Concerto "Em peror", with Jacob Lateiner, solois

The 6th and 7th symphonies and concerto will be played Sunday af noon, August 3, Joseph Battista, s loist, and the cycle will close with extra concert Tuesday evening, A gust 5 at 7.30, with the 8th and symphonies. The soloists will Miss Frances Yeend, soprano; M Eunice Alberts, contralto; Jam Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, ten

The student orchestra will play the shed Friday evening and Saturd morning the BSO rehearsal will open to the public for the benef the pension fund. Friends of th Berkshire Music Center are invi to all student concerts. Admission opera scenes will be by invitation.

The "field day" on the 29th start at 7 with the showing of from French, Russian, English American films, including Town", "Mayerling", "Alexander N sky", "The Youth of Maxim", Plainsman", "The River" and "He V", to illustrate the use of m especially written by contempo composers. During a special conc by the Boston Symphony Orches movies will be made of the audie who will see how a concert is br cast over ABC's coast-to-coast n work.

[43]

tsfield, Massachusetts, Wednesday, July 23, 19

IN SPOTLIGHT: At the invitation of his former instructor, Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein will occupy the podium in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening, Aug. 7.

Eagle

Bernstein To Conduct At Festival Sunday

Dr. Koussevitzky's Former Pupil To Be First Guest Conductor at Tanglewood—Concert Series Opens Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open its 10th subscription season tomorrow night at Tanglewood.

Other Conductors

This year, for the first time since the Boston Orchestra came to the Berkshires, there will be guest conductors. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited Leonard Bernstein, his former pupil and now assistant in teaching conducting at the Berkshire Music Center, to occupy the podium for the concert on Sunday, July 27, and on Thursday, Aug. 7, for the opening of the last series. On Saturday, Aug. 9, Robert Shaw, choral leader, will conduct.

Bernstein, who is a native New Englander, having been born in Lawrence 29 years ago, is a graduate of Harvard. He studied two years at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, conducting under Fritz Reiner, orchestration under Randall Thompson and piano under Isabella Verengerova. Last winter he was guest conductor at Symphony Hall for three weeks and led the orchestra on a week's tour of the East, including New York City, where he was the first guest conductor of the orchestra for a full program in Carnegie Hall.

In the spring he conducted in Palestine, Prague, Brussels, Paris and Holland. A student of conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1940 and 1941, he returned to Tanglewood in 1942 to assist him in teaching, as he has for the past two seasons. He led the orchestra for the American premiere of "Peter Grimes" at Tanglewood last August.

The Festival proper will include 10 concerts—on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for the next three week ends, and an extra program at 7.30 Aug. 5, to complete the Beethoven cycle with the Eighth and Ninth Symphonies.

Field Day July 29

Not included in the regular series, but an important part of the Festival picture will be the "music for all" field day on Tuesday, July 29, when with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, there will be films showing the use of contemporary music, especially written for the movies, the taking of a film of the audience, and the turning of the Shed into a broadcasting station. In a portion of the program called, "The March of Fidelity," actual playing by the orchestra will be contrasted with the playing of recordings made by it at different periods within the past 25 years, and ending with a hitherto unheard recording on a machine about to be placed on the market. The proceeds of the event will be used for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Another feature of the season will be the first performance in

Tanglewood
Continued on Second Page

Tanglewood

America of the rarely heard ope by Mozart, "Idomoneo," on Aug. and 6 by students of the Center.

Few seats remain in the Sh seating 6000. The second seri has been sold out for weeks. Lar audiences are expected to list from the lawn, depending for the size upon the weather. The a vance sale far exceeds that of a other year.

The housing problem is acu especially for the coming week en Hundreds have written to ask f help in securing accommodation
These inquiries have been referr to the Berkshire Hills Conferenc Information booths which ha been set up for the occasion
Great Barrington, Lee and Stoc bridge report brisk business, a in Lee, at least, vacancies are r ported.

More than 60 music editors a critics have made reservations f tomorrow evening, representi nearly as many newspapers a magazines, and including Vir
Thomson of the New York Hera
Tribune, who will lecture befo
Aaron Copland's class in compo tion at the school tomorrow afte noon, Ross Parmenter of the Ne York Times, Francis Perkins
the Herald Tribune and Alfr Frankenstein of the San Francis
Chronicle.

Many famous persons in music literary, philanthropic and soc fields are expected from all ov the country. A party of 40 is co ing from Toronto, Canada, a members of the personnel of least four embassies in Washin ton.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 22 1947

Of Music and Musicians

Tanglewood, the Mecca of music lovers, is opening its gates on Thursday for the first of the Berkshire Festival concerts in the big shed. Then the entire Boston Symphony will play works by Honegger, Debussy and Brahms. Tonight Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra in a repeat all-Mozart program in the theater-concert hall.

The program was heard by your columnist on Sunday afternoon and was a delight, not only in its impeccable performance but in the beauty of its planning. It included the Serenade in B-flat major for wind instruments (K. 361); Divertimento in B flat major for strings with two horns (K. 287); Symphony in E flat major, number 26 (K. 184) and Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), number 41 (K. 551).

The Serenade for wind instruments was performed by 13 wind players. It has a charm that is truly unique and was performed with finesse. Next came the equally charming Divertimento for strings and two horns and the program ended with two symphonies, the early number 26 and the final number 41.

It would be impossible to plan a program that would be more satisfying or one that would give the hearer a clearer conception of the magnitude of the genius of Mozart. The program will be played tonight beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

The program for the festival opening on Thursday night will include the Honegger' "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "The Sea," three orchestral sketches and the Brahms Symphonie number 2 in D major. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Other programs this week will be Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The program for Saturday includes Overture, "School for Scandal," Barber; Symphony number 3, Copland; and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Symphony with viola solo played by William Primrose. The Sunday concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein and will include the Schubert "Symphony in C major, number 7 and the Stravinsky "Le Sacre du Printemps."

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center has announced that its major activity this year will be the American premiere of Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo." It will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4 and 6 in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood and admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The performance will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky; sets will be designed by Richard Rychtark. The orchestra and singers will be made up of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

The opera was called Mozart, "Idomeneo, King of Crete" and was written in 1780. It has been given only occasional performances in Europe owing to its length and the absence of printed parts. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Mr. Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian.

Harvard University Press at Cambridge, Mass., has announced that "Music and Criticism," a symposium, will be published this fall. Orders for the book (which will cost $5) should be sent to the Press at 38 Quincy street. The book will include the nine papers presented at the symposium at Harvard on May 1, 2 and 3 under the sponsorship of the department of music at Harvard university. The papers were given by Archibald T. Davison, E. M. Forster, Roger Sessions, Edgar Wind, Olga Samaroff-Stokowski, Virgil Thomson, Otto Kinkeldey, Paul H. Lang and Huntington Cairns.

Tanglewood

Jul 24

Concert Today

The student orchestra of Department 5 will play in the Shed at 4.30.

Tonight at 8.15

The first Festival concert of the subscription season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at 8.15.

Carvalho To Conduct Tomorrow

The student orchestra of Department 2 will play the following program in the Festival Shed at 8.15:

Overture in C, The Consecration of the House .... Beethoven
Irving Fine, conducting.
Serenade for flute, harp and strings. Hanson
Lois Schaefer, flutist.
Mary Stemm, harpist.
Mary John Brown, conducting.
Symphony in three movements. .Stravinsky
(Third movement.)
Gerard Samuel, conducting.
Concerto in B flat for violoncello and orchestra .... Boccherini
(Three movements.)
Aldo Parisot, cellist.
Eleazar deCarvalho, conducting.
Death and Transfiguration ...... Strauss
deCarvalho, conducting.

BOSTON POST, WEDNE

Jul 23

SCREEN GOSSIP

BY PRUNELLA HALL

and physical production begins to take shape. . . . Recognition of the value and importance of the original musical scores in films takes place at the Tanglewood Festival next Tuesday, when one hour of the special field day program will be devoted to showing films which illustrate the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers. "Music in the Movies" is the title of the hour-long program which is being showed before and after the main concert. "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River" and "Henry V" are the films. Music for them was written by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Prokofieff, Shostakovitch, George Antheil, Virgil Thomson and William Walton. All names to be reckoned with in the musical world. Someone with a sense of humor arranged for the Disney cartoon "Mickey's Grand Opera" to serve as the curtain raiser on the program. "The Youth of Maxim" is not noted so much for its Shostakovitch music, of which little is original, but for the use of the workers songs of the period incorporated into the score, one of which is a tune titled "Danube Waves" which soared to the number one spot in the affections of this nation after Al Jolson sang it as "The Anniversary Song" in "The Jolson Story."

RADIO & TELEVISION WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 23 1947

RCA WILL INTRODUCE FIRST CUSTOM-MADE COMBINATION MODEL

AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Instrument Will Be Presented in Conjunction With Concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

RCA Victor's first custom-made radio-phonograph instrument, named "The Berkshire," will make its world's debut at Tanglewood, Mass. on July 29 in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "New Horizons in Music" program during the premiere of this instrument. This concert will demonstrate the most recent achievements in music reproduction, and will be attended by officials of the Radio Corp. of America.

As a feature of the introduction of "The Berkshire," and also for the first time for any reproducing instrument anywhere, this receiver will match its capabilities for tone fidelity and range against those of a full symphony orchestra in concert.

A limited edition of these sets will be offered exclusively on a subscription basis to benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky has heard "The Berkshire" and finds it "unprecedented in the fidelity of its performance."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 23 1947

Next Week to Be Very Busy At Berkshire Music Festival

Three Concerts Slated for Sunday; 'Music for All, Tuesday Evening; Beethoven Cycle Starts Thursday

Starting with three concerts on Sunday, including the third of the subscription series for the Berkshire Festival, next week promises to be a busy one at Tanglewood. It will include the special concert at the "Music for All" field day on Tuesday, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the opening of the Beethoven cycle Thursday evening the 31st.

Following the opening Festival concert for series A tomorrow evening, when Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Honegger's "Symphony for Strings", Debussy's "The Sea" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2", and the Saturday program, when the music director will conduct Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's "Symphony No. 3" and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with viola solo by William Primrose, Leonard Bernstein will take the baton Sunday afternoon, to be the guest conductor at Tanglewood, leading the orchestra in Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's "Symphony in C major".

Sunday morning, the chamber music group will give a concert and in the evening the opera department will present scenes from operas, with orchestral accompaniment, an event not listed in the calendar. Monday afternoon at 4.30 the orchestra and chorus of department 5 will give a concert and Wednesday evening orchestra students of the Berkshire Music Center will present an all-Stravinsky chamber concert.

Thursday at 4.30 the chorus of department 5 will sing in the Festival shed and Thursday evening Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Beethoven cycle with the composer's first three symphonies, to be followed Saturday evening by the 4th and 5th symphonies and the 5th Piano Concerto "Emperor", with Jacob Lateiner, soloist.

The 6th and 7th symphonies and 4th concerto will be played Sunday afternoon, August 3, Joseph Battista, soloist, and the cycle will close with an extra concert Tuesday evening, August 5 at 7.30, with the 8th and 9th symphonies. The soloists will be Miss Frances Yeend, soprano; Miss Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, tenor.

The student orchestra will play in the shed Friday evening and Saturday morning the BSO rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all student concerts. Admission to opera scenes will be by invitation.

The "field day" on the 29th will start at 7 with the showing of scenes from French, Russian, English and American films, including "Our Town", "Mayerling", "Alexander Novsky", "The Youth of Maxim", "The Plainsman", "The River" and "Henry V", to illustrate the use of music especially written by contemporary composers. During a special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, movies will be made of the audience, who will see how a concert is broadcast over ABC's coast-to-coast network.

[43]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER

SHOW MIRROR

by E. B. Radcliffe

The Enquirer's Theater Editor

ovie Music Given Concert Display n Koussevitzky Tanglewood Program

Movie music is being given special recognition next Tuesday in the [illegible] where Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony [illegible] compiled a special program of screen music to pre- [illegible] Tanglewood concert with radio, screen, and record- [illegible]

[illegible] screen music will be present- [illegible] from pictures for [illegible] background. The [illegible] in the Tanglewood [illegible] the concert in the [illegible] concert will give [illegible] opportunity to see the [illegible] take part in [illegible] called "The Story [illegible]anglewood" and duplicate per- [illegible]ance of the orchestra's best- [illegible] recordings.

E PROGRAM of movies will rate the use of original musi- scores by important contem- composers. Four nations, ce, Russia, England and the d States will be represented. least one reel each will be run "Our Town," "Mayerling," ander Nevsky," "The Youth axim," "The Plainsman," "The ," and "Henry V" with music aron pland and Arthur gger who are on the faculty Berkshire Music Center at lewood, Prokofieff, Shostako- George Antheil, Virgil Thom- and William Walton. The his- Disney cartoon, "Micky's

Movie Timetable

ALBEE: 10:15, 12:21, 2:27, 4:33, 6:39, 8:45, Preview.
PALACE: 10:12, 12:10, 2:08, 4:06, 6:04, 8:02, 10.
CAPITOL: 10:29, 12:53, 3:17, 5:31, 7:45, 9:59.
GRAND: 10:28, 12:23, 2:18, 4:13, 6:08, 8:02, 10.
KEITH'S: 10:20, 12:20, 2:20, 4:20, 6:20, 8:20, 10:20.
SHUBERT: 10, 12:02, 2:04, 4:06, 6:08, 8:10, 10:12.
LYRIC: 10:29, 12:24, 2:19, 4:14, 6:09, 8:04, 10.

Grand Opera," will be the curtain-raiser.

Prints for this special event for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art Film Library and Paramount Pictures.

* * *

ALL of the pictures chosen have been outstanding hits and no selection was made on the basis of the music alone. Copland, holder of both Pulitzer Prize and the Critics Circle Award for his recent compositions, himself chose the poignant closing scenes of "Our Town" as best representing his score for the Thornton Wilder drama. The sequence to [illegible] at Tangleood begins in the cemetery of rover's Corners and was made vailable by Paul Lazarus of United rtists.

A French film with Charles Boyer nd Danielle Darrieux as the starrossed Hapsburg lovers, "Mayer-ing" for more than 10 years has een an acknowledged cinema masterpiece. The selected passage is he memorable carriage ride in hich the Crown Prince Rudolf nd the Baroness Vetsera tear rough the night.

Two sections from "Alexander evsky" will be shown, first the eginning of the picture where the edieval Russians mobilize to de-nd their homeland against the in-ading Teutonic knights, and the attle on the Ice, the clash on a ozen lake which wrote one of the ost stirring pages in Russian his-ry. In both scenes Prokofieff ade telling use not only of the chestra but introduced a tre-endous chorus as well.

"The Youth of Maxim" is the ory of the 1905 revolution and is inly veiled Soviet propaganda. ostakovitch wrote very little iginal music for this sound track t made expert use of the work-, songs of the period. A mild rprise for younger movie-goers mes when they hear a tune called anube Waves," which is a hit e from "The Jolson Story." The me music, however, was played the piano by Marlene Dietrich a film which antedates "The uth of Maxim" called "Dishon-d."

hen one remembers "The insman," he usually thinks of torture scene, but the passage e shown at Tanglewood will be quieter, the moment when Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickok shows his watch equipped with musical alarm to Jean Arthur (Calamity Jane). Antheil's score rated raves from the critics and it still holds up as some of the best written for films by music's confessed "bad boy." "The Plainsman" is by courtesy of Ben Washer, Paramount Pictures, Inc. For "The River," a government documentary film, Virgil Thomson begins with the hymn tune "How Firm a Foundation" and draws richly on American folk themes.

William Walton's score for "Henry V," played by the London Symphony Orchestra, offers excerpt from the Battle of Agincourt. The film is being shown at the Tanglewood by special arrangement with Captain Harold Auten, the British producer's representative in the United States.

---

kshire Festival Open Thursday

[illegible] Berks[illegible] Fes[illegible] [illegible] night, 10 [illegible] beginning [illegible] program Sun- [illegible] was re- [illegible] Serge [illegible] members [illegible] Boston Symphony Orches- [illegible] for Winds [illegible] major [illegible] Strings and [illegible] students [illegible] Music Center [illegible] Berkshire [illegible] on Tuesday [illegible] orches- [illegible] the [illegible] con- [illegible] Boston Or- [illegible] be followed on [illegible] afternoon by a choral [illegible] by members of the same [illegible]partment and Friday evening [illegible] symphony concert in the Festival shed by department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

---

Wednesday evening the Juilliard String Quartet of New York played a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussey and Brahms' 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27 at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C Major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER

JUL 23 1947

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahms' 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27th at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Besnstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

MILWAUKEE WIS
JOURNAL

JUL 24 1947

Boston Orchestra Won't Visit City

The Boston symphony orchestra, it was disclosed Thursday, will not come to Milwaukee this season because there is no available place of suitable size for the orchestra to play.

The Auditorium, where the Boston organization, under Serge Koussevitzky, has played for the last two years to soldout houses, has been engaged for Dec. 6 and Dec. 7 by the International institute. The Boston orchestra makes its annual tour in December and could come to Milwaukee only Dec. 6. Under auspices of the Arion Musical club, the orchestra has made its annual concert one of the leading events of the musical season.

The Auditorium management explained that the Dec. 6 date could not be made available to the Arion club because the International institute, with its annual "fair," takes over practically the entire building for two full days.

The Arion club Thursday announced its series of concerts at the Auditorium for the coming season as follows: Rise Stevens, mezzo soprano, Nov. 7; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, Jan. 29; Yolanda Petris, soprano, Feb. 21; the Arions' presentation of the Bach B Minor Mass, Apr. 4, and Artur Rubinstein, pianist, Apr. 20. In addition, the club will present Serge Jaroff's Don Cossacks choir Dec. 4, its annual "Messiah concert Dec. 16 and its junior spring concert May 22.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
VILLAGER

JUL 24 1947

Mr. Bernstein Conducts

The Musical Festival at the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., reaches its height this week, with well-known Villager, Leonard Bernstein, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon. Mr. Bernstein follows Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the podium, the latter conducting tonight's first concert of the first regular subscription series.

Sunday afternoon's concert in the famous Music Shed will open with the overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart. It will be followed by Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and conclude with Schubert's Symphony No. 7, in C Major.

Mr. Bernstein, who was originally discovered as a pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, will again conduct on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, in the Festival's series C.

The local conductor will be back in the Village in the Fall, to prepare for his third season at the head of his own New York City Symphony. Prior to going to Tanglewood for the Summer season, he returned from a concert tour of the Near East and Europe.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 24 1947

LENOX FETE TO OPEN

Berkshire Festival Series Starts Tonight—Koussevitzky Leads

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will present the opening concert in the first regular series of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight at 8:15.

The program will include Honegger's "Symphony for Strings," Debussy's "La Mer" and the Second symphony of Brahms. Further concerts on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon will complete the week-end series. There will be two more series.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 24 1947

Music

U. S. a Natural Home For a U. N. of Music

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

With America's top summer festival getting under way at Tanglewood, some thought ought to be directed now to a super-Tanglewood, a kind of United Nations of Music.

So many global parleys are going on here that it may now be the time to sponsor a world pact of music. There could be no harm in saying what must be said with music.

To date, international music festivals have been an almost strictly European monopoly. Smaller editions of world reunions of musicians have been held here, but nothing on the Continental scale.

With the Berkshire Festival bulking larger each season, ways of converting it into a world symphonic league should be studied. So far it has been a New England observance, with few worldwide features.

Berkshire Dream.

Of course, Serge Koussevitzky's dream was some day to transform the Berkshire hillock into a Parnassus of the arts where musicians from all lands might bring their best wares.

That dream is still far short of fulfillment, though progress toward it may come overnight once the Boston batonist decides that what this country needs is a bigger and better Salzburg.

Though beaten and battered, Europe wasn't long in hitting its old festival stride again. Symphonic reunions are again the order of the day, and money is spent freely on summer seasons.

Of course travel is no real problem with Prague or Vienna as festival conters, that is, for countries on the Continent. It is no hardship there to round up 20 nations in a tabernacle of close harmony.

Handicaps Here.

Both distance and lack of tradition have acted against the growth of world music centers here. This, despite the fact that no country has played host to so many international concert artists.

Possibly a beginning might be made with an annual music festival on a hemisphere basis—a Pan-American Tanglewood, with ample scope for the variety of Indo-Hispanic styles.

This need not be the kind of random harvest we have been getting at Carnegie and elsewhere. Well planned programs with top notch artists and conductors from below the border would be on the agenda.

From there it ought to be an easy leap to building the festival on a world plan. Some sort of competition should be worked in, to keep home talent on the alert, besides promote healthy rivalry all around.

Programs might be planned on an even basis of classics and moderns. That is, concessions should be made to both camps. The three B's need not hog the repertory. Time enough for that in the winter.

Jog World Talent.

For, while the stress belongs on summer nourishment for music-hungry fans, other aims should not be lost sight of. Chief of them, perhaps, is the stimulus to world talent.

The better the facilities for hearing music, the greater the incentive for writing it. Moreover, festivals tend to encourage governments to sponsor home talent as a matter of pride. Musicians can always use that kind of help.

Then, there is the added attraction of bringing the least contentious elements of all lands together in a yearly round of peaceful endeavor. They might even show the way to improved world understanding.

Harmony, after all, began as a term of music.

BARRE, VT.
TIMES

JUL 24 1947

As We Live

By Gail Hood Helmer

New England Characteristics. Simplicity and practicality are claimed by the register of motor vehicles [illegible] Rhode Island, Mr. Lussier, to be the cause of Rhode Island reaching the goal of the lowest traffic [illegible] in the nation. Five steps [illegible] given as essential and these are [illegible] sound common [illegible] not confined to New England.

1. Appoint local safety committee to work with the state committee.
2. Inaugurate a drivers' training course [illegible].
3. Install safety features in new highway construction.
4. Establish minimum standards for driver licensing.
5. Provide courses in safe motor operation in secondary schools.

Mr. Lussier explains that three things are also needed—hard work, constant vigilance and a spirit of cooperation among all segments of the state's citizens.

Music For All field day will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on July 29, showing the latest forms of musical reproduction. The program will cover radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the Orchestra. Prominent people in the musical world are giving time and talent to make this festival a big success.

Fair Weather Is Promised For Opening at Tanglewood

Jul 24

With fair weather that promises to last through the evening, a large audience is expected for the opening concert of the subscription season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood tonight.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra members who have just finished a successful season on the Esplanade in Boston have joined Serge Koussevitzky, music director, the members on the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center and those who have been spending the summer in other places, to rehearse for the 11 concerts that they will play between now and Aug. 10.

During rehearsals the grounds at Tanglewood are closed to visitors, excepting on Saturday mornings, when the public may attend for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. Rehearsals start at 10 and continue until about 1.

First Series Program

Programs for the first series of concerts follow:

Tonight at 8.15

Symphony for Strings........ Honegger
The Sea, three orchestral sketches, Debussy
Symphony No. 2 in D major .. Brahms

Saturday Evening, July 26, at 8.15

Overture, School for Scandal .. Barber
Symphony No. 3 .... Copland
Harold in Italy, symphony with viola solo .... Berlioz
Soloist, William Primrose.

Sunday Afternoon, July 27, at 3.30

Leonard Bernstein, conducting.
Overture, the Magic Flute .... Mozart
Le Sacre du Printemps .... Stravinsky
Symphony in C major [illegible]

[44]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 24 1947

Symphonic Festival Concerts Begin at Tanglewood Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra Under Serge Koussevitzky's Direction, to Present Works of Honegger, Debussy and Brahms in Opening Program of First Series of 1947 Season—Opening Will Follow Four Musical Appetizers of Preliminary Concerts—Thousands of Music Lovers Are Expected.

After four musical appetizers in the form of concerts by smaller groups earlier this month, the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival presented by the famed Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will attain its true grandeur this evening when the first of the series of nine major concerts will be given at the Tanglewood music shed in Lenox.

Opening Program

The opening of the festival proper, which in the past has attracted audiences of as many as 12,000, including genuine music lovers and those lured by the pageantry of the festival, will feature the "Symphony for Strings," by the Swiss composer, Honegger, who is at Tanglewood in person this summer, the three orchestral sketches by Debussy titled "The Sea" and the Symphony No. 2 in D major by Brahms.

These three offerings will comprise the first concert in Series A, which will be followed Saturday evening by a concert of the works of contemporay composers, Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony with William Primrose as viola soloist, and Symphony No. 3, by Aaron Copland, assistant director at the Berkshire Music center.

The third concert in Series A will take place Sunday afternoon, with Leonard Bernstein conducting and will consist of such contrasting works as Schubert's Symphony in C major, No. 7, and "Le Sacre du Printemps," by Stravinsky.

Series "B" Concerts

Series B, beginning Thursday evening, July 31, and continuing Saturday evening, Aug. 2, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, as well as an "extra" concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 5, will consist of a Beethoven cycle. The first program in this series will include the Symphony No. 1 in C major, Symphony No. 2 in D major, and Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica"), while the second of the series will offer the Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, piano concerto No. 5 in E flat major from "Emperor," with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, and the Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

The Sunday afternoon concert in Series B will include the Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale"), piano concerto No. 4 in G major, with Joseph Battista as soloist, and Symphony No. 7 in A major. Heard at the "extra" concert will be the Symphony No. 8 in F major and Symphony No. 9, with the final chorus of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

Series C Programs

Series C, the final group in the 1947 festival, will open Thursday evening, Aug. 7, with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Ruth Posselt as soloist, when the audience will hear Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Hindemith's Violin concerto, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major. On Saturday evening, Aug. 9, Robert Shaw will conduct the orchestra in a program which will include Mozart's "Requiem," Poulenc's "Chorus," and the "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky.

The festival will close Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra, with two pianos, the "Pavane" and "Bolero" of Ravel, and the Symphony No. 4 in F major, by Tchaikovsky.

"Music For All" Program

Next Tuesday evening, in the interval between the Series A and Series B concerts, the Boston orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton will appear in the novel "Music for All' program which has been added as another extra feature this year.

It will start at 7 o'clock in the concert-theater hall with excerpts from several recent films demonstrating the contributions of contemporary composers to the motion picture medium of musical expression. At 8.30 o'clock the Boston orchestra, playing in the shed, will perform Vivaldi Concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor, Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist, and Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture. The first two selections will comprise the orchestra's regular Tuesday evening coast-to-coast broadcast which the shed audience will witness. During the third, the orchestra and the audience will be filmed in Tanglewood feature to be released by one of the major studios. After this will be presented "The March of Musical Fidelity" during which recordings made by the orchestra over a period of several years will be played along with the latest recording on one of the new model phonographs named the Berkshire in honor of Tanglewood to demonstrate the progress made in recording and reproducing techniques and equipment. The films will be repeated at 11 o'clock for late-comers.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 25 1947

Misses Own Big Show

By the Associated Press.

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—Although composer Arthur Honegger came here from Europe especially to hear Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conduct his "Symphony for Strings," illness kept him from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance in the Tanglewood music shed last night.

Tribune. Jul 25

NEW YORK

Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 24.—The Berkshire Music Festival entered its most intense stage tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of nine subscription concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

The program began with the "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, a member of this summer's faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. This work was introduced to America by the Boston Symphony last December under Charles Muench, but has not yet been heard in New York. This novelty was followed by familiar music, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms's "Second Symphony."

Good weather prefaced tonight's performance, and, as in pre-war summers and last summer, when the full scale festivals at Tanglewood were resumed, many listened to the music on the grounds outside the spacious music shed, in addition to the capacity audience under its roof. The officially estimated attendance was 7,000. Still larger audiences are expected for the week-end concerts Saturday night under Dr. Koussevitzky and Sunday afternoon under Leonard Bernstein.

Tonight's concert was the fifth of the 1947 festival which has offered a Bach and a Mozart program each played twice during the past fortnight, but the first to be played by the complete Boston Symphony which, besides the regular subscription programs, will give two extra concerts on the next two Tuesday evenings. The present festival in the tenth according to the official reckoning, not counting the 1942 series, when students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the programs, or the concerts given by a part of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1944 and 1945. The only war-time summer in which there was no musical activity at Tanglewood was 1943.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 25 1947

Guest Conductor For Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., July 25 (AP)—For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston Symphony orchestra next Sunday at the Tanglewood Music Shed.

He is 29 year old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival last night before about 7,000 persons.

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

A symphony concert by the orchestra of Department 2, conducted by members of Serge Koussevitzky's conducting class and his assistant in teaching, Eleazar deCarvalho, will be held tonight in the Festival Shed at 8.15. The program will include a Beethoven Overture, Hanson Serenade, a Stravinsky symphony, a cello concerto by Boccherini and will conclude with Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration."

Public Rehearsal

Tomorrow morning at 10 the public is invited to a rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the pension fund.

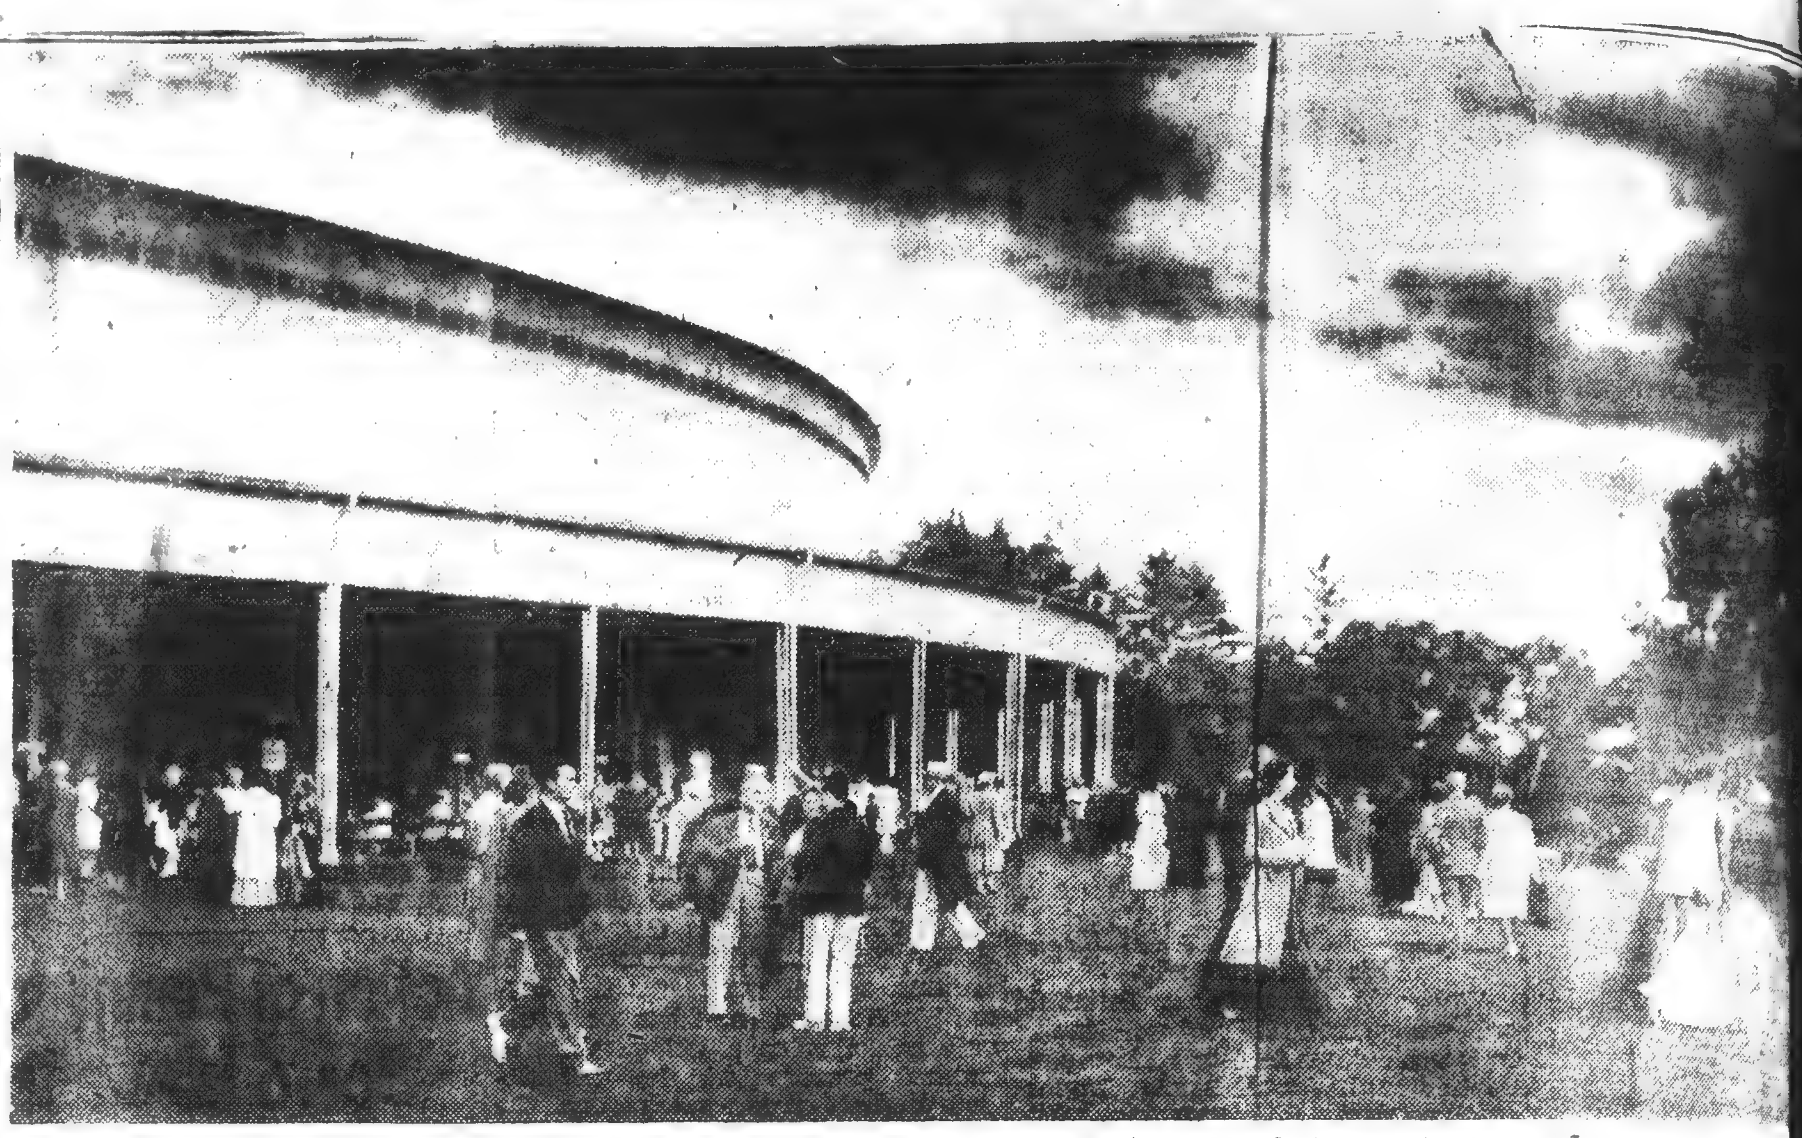
Next Festival Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the second program of the subscription season tomorrow night at 8.15.

Sunday Morning Concert

The chamber music group, under the direction of William Primrose will play the following program Sunday morning at 10.30:

Three Pieces .... Hindemith
Sonata .... Poulen
Sonata .... Hindemit
On Wenlock Edge .... Vaughan William
David Lloyd, tenor soloist.



TANGLEWOOD SCENE— Photo taken in a previous season shows part of one of the evening-concert crowds at the hug at Tanglewood, Lenox, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present this evening the fi the 1947 Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Berkshire County Eagl ttsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, July 25, 1947.

CONDUCTS TONIGHT: Eleazar de Carvalho, 32-year-old Brazilian conductor-co conduct a student orchestra in the Shed at Tanglewood tonight at 8.15. Carvalho, direct orchestra at rehearsal for tonight's program, is one of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's assistants conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. At the close of the Festival he will go to Brazil concerts in Rio de Janeiro.

Audience of 7000 Hears First Tanglewood Concert

Great Shed in Berkshires Filled as Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony

By Willard M. Clark

Tanglewood, July 24—A moonlit night and the promise of music superbly performed drew an audience of 7000 persons to Tanglewood tonight to hear the first in the series of Berkshire Festival concerts. Once again, the great shed was filled to capacity, while more than 100 persons were seated outside. The concert opened in traditional manner, as Dr. Koussevitzky strode onto the platform, his orchestra rose and, after a bit of hesitantcy, the audience followed suit. The greeting was enthusiastic and prolonged.

For the opening number, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to play the "Symphony for Strings" by Honegger. This work was first performed in this country in 1946. It is a powerful work, filled with strange harmonies and intriguing rythms. Written during the war in Paris, one felt that in it Honegger breathed his defiance against forces which, turned his beloved city into a wraith. These passages of rebellion alternated with passages of nostalgic beauty, music which came from a sorrowing heart. The final was superb in its indomitaible will, ending with as glorious a peal of liberation as was ever penned. In this the horns do[illegible] with the first violins [illegible] chorale of surpassing pow[illegible]

Continued on Page 16

Audience of 7000

Continued from Page 1

There is little which [illegible] to what has been written [illegible] of the Koussevitzky readin[illegible] bussy's "The Sea." It is [illegible] tour de force, unequalled by [illegible] conductor in this country [illegible] the world. With the mig[illegible] of the Boston Symphony [illegible] mand, Dr. Koussevitzky [illegible] the Debussyian colors, [illegible] rhythms and the constan[illegible] mood. It was a memo[illegible] one of the most rewardin[illegible] the literature.

The closing work [illegible] Second Symphony. O[illegible] phonies by Brahms, [illegible] most sweetly upon [illegible] easily digested at a [illegible] Once again, one could [illegible] at the penetration of [illegible] the virtuosity of the pe[illegible] emotional qualities of th[illegible] in evidence and the [illegible] rugged quality was not [illegible] emotionalism.

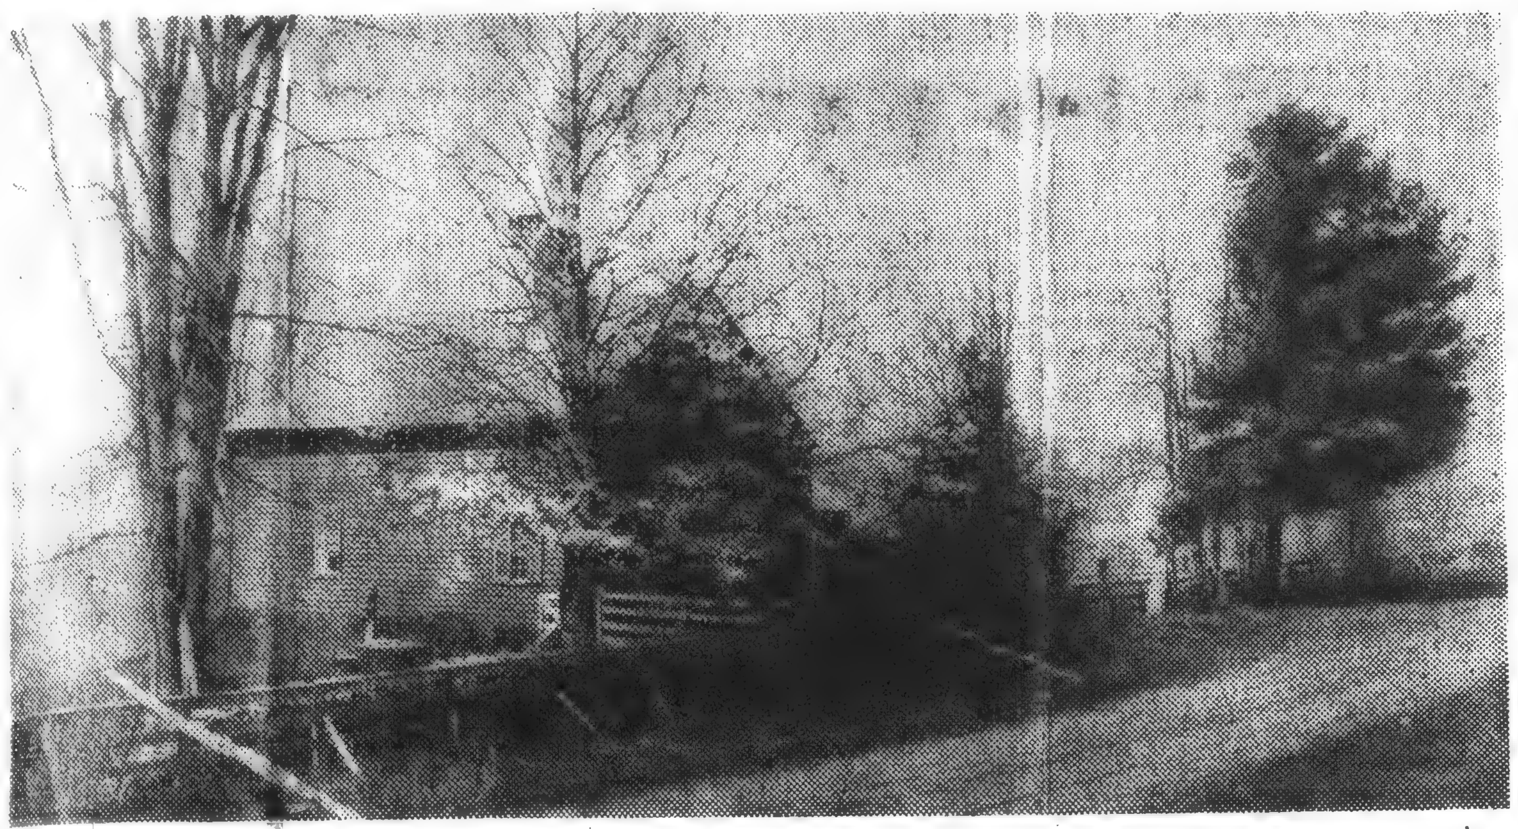
The second concert [illegible] "A" will be given Saturday [illegible] program will include the [illegible] "School for Scandal" by Sam[illegible] ber; Coplan's Third Symph[illegible] "Harold in Italy" by Berl[illegible] William Primrose as viol[illegible]

[45]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

-The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 24, 1947

wthorne's 'Little Red House' at Lenox Is Being Restored



The "Little Red House" as it appeared when Hawthorne lived in Lenox from 1850 to 1851. The structure burned to the ground in 1890 and is being restored to its original appearance.

hor's Home
House Studios
Tanglewood

OHN G. W. MAHANNA

gh he had no ear for mu- [illegible] declared [illegible] while living [illegible] that he couldn't [illegible] between "Hail Colum- [illegible] "Yankee Doodle," the [illegible] of Nathaniel Hawthorne [illegible] the Berkshire [illegible] by the restoration [illegible] Little Red House" where [illegible] from 1850 to 1851. [illegible] to me- [illegible] and abhorred making pil- [illegible] to the shrines of depart- [illegible] ness, but Hawthorne [illegible] be remembered.

a year before the out- [illegible] World War II, Mrs. Guy [illegible] Gannett of Portland, [illegible] ted Tanglewood. At that [illegible] was president of the Na- [illegible] ederation of Music Clubs, [illegible] something should be done [illegible] a shrine to the author [illegible] ught some of his most out- [illegible] works at Tanglewood. [illegible] ing over the grounds she [illegible] on the site of the house [illegible] awthorne lived from May, [illegible] Nov. 21, 1851. The build- [illegible] destroyed by fire June 22, [illegible] August, 1929, the late [illegible] Field Bishop of Lenox [illegible] monument on the site of [illegible] od and the historical [illegible] speech was made by the [illegible] an H. Ballard, librarian [illegible] erkshire Athenaeum in annett conferred with Dr. [illegible] ussevitzky, founder of the [illegible] Music Center, to obtain [illegible] oval for the restoration [illegible] Little Red House." It [illegible] ntil this year that Mrs. [illegible] now a past president of [illegible] ation, was able to launch [illegible] t to restore the building. [illegible] hen completed, will cost [illegible] ,000. Contractor Harold [illegible] Lenox is doing the work [illegible] to have the exterior [illegible] before the end of the [illegible] Symphonic Festival next use is being built on the [illegible] foundations. A fireplace [illegible] original brick from the [illegible] the structure. Like the original it will be el-shaped, constructed close to the ground, of clapboards like any New England farmhouse and painted barn red. On the outside it will look like the original house.

15,000

The inside will be quite different. The main part will be divided into two studios, with a fireplace in each, and separated by a soundproof partition. In the ell there will be a reception or practice room, two powder rooms and a kitchenette. The old stone wall and the original well, which still contains water, will be restored.

Lenox Has Changed

Lenox today is taking on the appearance of a "proving ground" for musicians, but when Hawthorne came to the Berkshires in 1850 the town was known as the "jungle of literary lions" and the star of his literary fame had just come into notice.

Politics drove Hawthorne to Lenox. With the advent of Gen. Zachary Taylor to the Presidency in 1848, Hawthorne was removed from his office in the Salem Custom House. He then started to write his book, "The Scarlet Letter," which appeared the following spring.

Just prior to his removal from office Hawthorne had talked of moving to the Berkshires and, according to his son, Julian, it was just by chance that "The Scarlet Letter" was not written in Lenox. He was impoverished upon arrival. Recognition and remuneration from his book were slow in coming.

After the Hawthornes had been here for about a year a change of fortune came to them. Checks began to overmaster bills. Longfellow, Holmes, Melville and Fanny Kemble visited Hawthorne with tokens of appreciation and Hawthorne took heart again and wrote at Tanglewood "The House of Seven Gables." After that he finished in the incredibly short space of five weeks, "The Wonder Book." In 1851 he also edited and wrote the preface for a third edition of the "Twice Told Tales."

"Tanglewood Tales," a supplement to "The Wonder Book," although not published until 1853, was evidently thought out in Lenox.

Hawthorne came to Lenox with his wife, and daughter Una, and son, Julian. While in Lenox their daughter, Rose, was born.

Describes View

Once in describing the view from Tanglewood, Hawthorne said, "There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic whose round head is more distinct than ever in winter when its snow patches are visible but which generally is a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

The scenery about his property so fascinated Hawthorne that he once said "I cannot write in the presence of that view."

From 1850 to 1851 Hawthorne's house was a hive of literary industry. He was 46 years old when he arrived to find the town bustling with lawyers because it was the county seat.

His son, Julian, reported in one of his writings that Hawthorne was so shy when he first moved to Lenox that "one day while walking to the Post Office he leaped over a stone wall to avoid meeting some of the villagers."

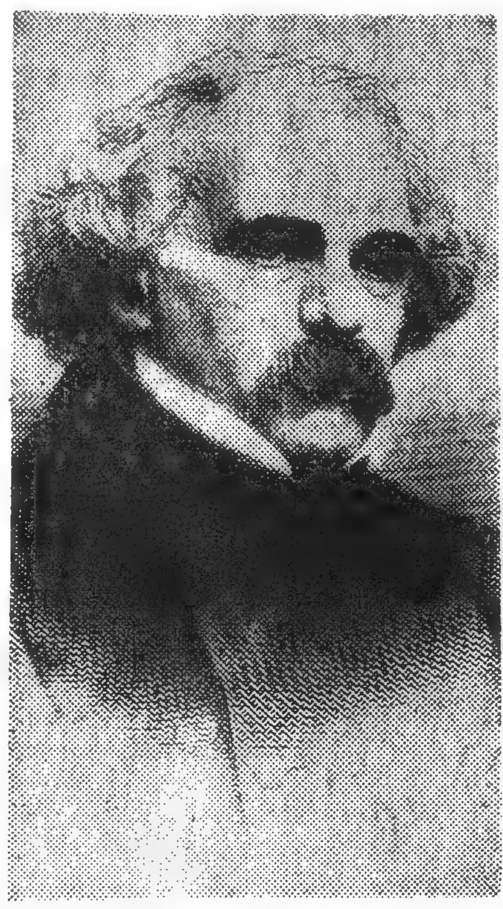
Household Economy

In one of Mrs. Hawthorne's letters to her mother she wrote of her household economy. The Hawthornes paid three cents a quart for the best of milk, 14 cents for butter, 11 and 12 cents for eggs, two shillings for a bushel of potaties, 6 cents a pound for veal and 9 cents a pound for beef.

When Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires he never wore a beard, according to books written by his son, and "he was without a mustache until his 55th year."

The Berkshire winters were too rough for the Hawthornes and they left Lenox in 1851. He died May 18, 1864 at Plymouth, N.H.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, who is heading the group in charge of the restoration of Hawthorne's house, inspect a memorial at the site on Hawthorne Street which was erected in 1929 by the late Cortlandt Field Bishop of Lenox.



NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, from an old engraving made when he grew a mustache after leaving Lenox.

[46]

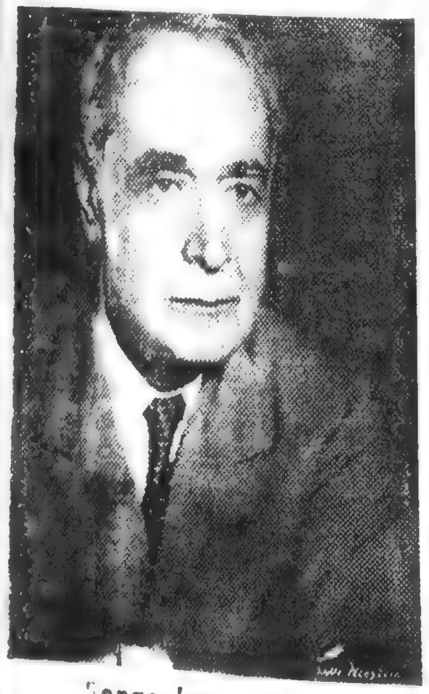
Friday, July 25, 1947

Berkshire Music Festival

Mozart-Programm

Tanglewood, im Juli.

A. H. Die für die ersten Bach- und Mozart-Programme angesetz- [illegible] Wiederholungen haben den



Serge Koussevitzky

[illegible] ner nur so weit [illegible] sich um den 1200 [illegible] fassenden Theatersaal [illegible] 1400 Hörer mit dem [illegible] im Grase begnügen muss- [illegible] Da [illegible] Tanglewood Flug- [illegible] unbekannte zivi- [illegible] mehr [illegible] Anlage eines [illegible] der für [illegible] Klangverteilung [illegible] Mozart konnte noch [illegible] den Kampf mit [illegible] Materie aufnehmen. [illegible] B-Dur für Blasinstrumente (K. 361) und das Divertimento B-Dur für Streicher und zwei Hörner (K. 287) waren die [illegible] während die kurze Symphonie Es-Dur (K. 184) und die Jupiter-Symphonie (K. 551) [illegible] annehmen: durch Mangel [illegible] Proben, besonders in den [illegible] nicht die Ton- [illegible] Durchsichtigkeit hatten, [illegible] zu den Vorzügen gerade der Boston [illegible] gehören. Anscheinend selbst nicht befriedigt, begann Serge Koussevitzky nervös die Konturen [illegible] zu überzeichnen. Dass aber [illegible] einer nicht vollendeten Darstellung bei diesem trefflichen Orchester und diesem grossen Dirigenten immer noch vieles bleibt, was erinnerungswürdig ist, bedarf nicht der Hervorhebung. Es war diesmal vorzugsweise in den erfüllten langsamen Sätzen zu finden.

Aus dem Musikleben

Stadium-Konzerte

Helen Traubel singt am Donnerstag, 24. Juli, Bruchstücke aus den Musikdramen von Wagner. Hans Schwieger dirigiert. Am Sonnabend, 26. Juli, spielt Ruggiero Ricci das Violinkonzert D-Dur von Paganini. Dirigent: Paul Lavalle.

"Tote Saison" in Town Hall

Die Direktion von Town Hall zeigt für den September bereits 27 Solistenkonzerte an.

Salzburger Festspiele

Die vom 27. Juli bis zum 31. August abgehaltenen Festspiele bestehen aus vielen Konzerten, in denen Edwin Fischer, Vaclav Talich, Wilhelm Furtwängler, John Barbirolli, Otto Klemperer, Charles Münch, Ernest Ansermet und Hans Knappertsbusch dirigieren. Als Solisten sind angesetzt: Edwin Fischer und Yehudi Menuhin, der in dem von Furtwängler geleiteten Konzert spielt. In den sechs von Joseph Messner geleiteten Domkonzerten werden Werke von Bach, Mozart, Verdi, Palestrina, Haydn und Bruckner aufgeführt. An den von Otto Klemperer, Joseph Krips, Hans Knappertsbusch und Karl Böhm dirigierten Opernabenden, an denen Lothar Wallerstein, Günther Rennert und Oscar Fritz Schuh als Spielleiter tätig sind, werden "Dantons Tod" von Gottfried Einem als Uraufführung, ausserdem "Cosi Fan Tutte', "Die Hochzeit des Figaro" von Mozart und "Arabella" von Richard Strauss gegeben. Als Schauspiele sind "Jedermann" von Hofmannsthal unter der Regie von He-

---

OBE—FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1947

Berkshire Festival Opens 10th Season at Tanglewood

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, July 24—The 10th season of the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra began here in the music shed at Tanglewood tonight. An audience of 6500 persons, 5500 in the shed and another 1000 on the lawns, heard Serge Koussevitzky conduct Honegger's Symphony for String Orchestra, the symphonic sketches "The Sea," by Debussy, and Brahms Second Symphony.

The weather was cool and clear, free from humidity and from the intermittent thunder showers that on occasions have punctured the music on opening nights in the past. The estate of Tanglewood, with its rolling green lawns, majestic trees and broad view of Lake Mankeenac, never looked lovelier.

Although there have been two sets of chamber music concerts in the theatre concert hall, and quite a lot of activity on the part of students of the Berkshire Musi Center, the festival may correctly be said to have opened with a concert by the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Everything else is really preliminary. The "big show" does not begin until the whole orchestra, part of which has been playing on the Charles River Esplanade, is reunited under the baton of the man who has given these festivals their far flung fame, Serge Koussevitzky.

Honegger Absent, Ill

Due to illness, Composer Arthur Honegger was unable to hear the performance of his symphony, and to share in the applause which followed. Mr. Honegger, having flown here from Europe a few weeks ago, has been teaching at the Berkshire Music Center, and is said quickly to have become a very popular member of the center faculty.

So far as one may judge, he would have rejoiced at his music and its performance tonight. The music, composed in Paris under the Nazi occupation in 1941, and introduced to the United States by Charles Muench and the Boston Symphony last December, is of thoroughly modern aspect. That is not to say it is overly dissonant, eccentric or forbidding. It is anything but that, and another hearing simply reinforces one's first feeling of pleasure.

This symphony is solidly built, of effective ideas, and superbly written for strings. To be sure, the constant sound of strings alone may become a little monotonous, and the added color supplied by the single trumpet in the chorale of the finale brings a quick new interest. Nevertheles, Honegger's work seems destined to live. A certain uneasiness, perhaps you might say disquiet, pervades it, even in the comparatively relaxed and melodic slow movement.

"Sea" Koussevitzky Triumph

As for "The Sea," that amazing capturing of the moods of glassy, then tossing, water, and finally of the turbulence of huge waves and blasting wind, that was again a Koussevitzky triumph. I have heard him interpret this piece time and again, and always it arouses wonderment, both at the consistency of the way he does it, and at the marvelous polish of detail, the fine touches of rhythm and accent and, above all, the surging vitality and passion of his reading. This is as close as you can get to the sea and its varying aspects without being on—or in—it.

Among the distinguished personages in the audience tonight were Sir Alexander Cadogan, British representative to the U.N., and Lady Cadogan; Mr. and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College; John Nicholas Brown, assistant secretary of the Navy, and Mrs. Brown; Dr. Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins College, and Mrs. Holt; Mr. and Mrs John Shepard Jr., and William H Vanderbilt, former governor of Rhode Island, and Mrs. Vanderbilt.

The festival will continue Saturday evening, when Serge Koussevitzky will present Samuel Barber's overture, "The School for Scandal;" the Third Symphony by Aaron Copland, and Berlioz "Harold in Italy," with William Primrose as viola soloist. The series of the festival will be concluded Sunday afternoon, with Leonard Bernstein assuming the baton for Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute;" "The Rite of Spring," by Stravinsky and the "Great" C Major Symphony by Schubert.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 25 1947

First Guest Conductor To Lead Symphony

LENOX, July 25 (AP) — For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra next Sunday at the Tanglewood Music Shed.

He is 29-year-old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor. The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival last night before about 7,000 persons.

MILWAUKEE WIS.
JOURNAL

JUL 25 1947

No Hall for Great Orchestra

Disclosure that the Boston symphony orchestra will not play in Milwaukee this season for lack of a suitable hall again calls attention to the city's urgent need for the auditorium planned as part of the Memorial Center.

The Boston symphony has been heard these last few years, always by packed houses, in the Milwaukee Auditorium. However, when the orchestra makes its annual midwestern tour this December, the big hall will not be available at the only time possible for a visit. The Auditorium has made previous commitments that cannot be changed.

Last April a similar situation arose and the Metropolitan opera company could not be accommodated at the Auditorium. Consequently the world's greatest opera company was forced to bypass Milwaukee and go, instead, to some other city. This fall the world's greatest orchestra, as many believe it to be, will be forced to do the same thing.

The truth is that the Milwaukee Auditorium has long been recognized as inadequate for either concerts or opera, but for all these years we have had to make it do. If now the country's finest attractions are to be denied the city because even these unsatisfactory facilities are not available—well, then the situation is getting close to hopeless.

Some will say that there is no great loss in the cancellation of only two musical events. Only a few thousands of our people, the thoughtless will say, are thereby cheated.

In point of fact, the entire city suffers, and more than can be measured, if only in the matter of prestige. We have been languidly sliding into the status of a whistle stop and it's high time we halted the decline.

Friday, July 25, 1947

Berkshire Music Festival

Mozart-Programm

Tanglewood, im Juli.

A. H. Die für die ersten Bach- und Mozart-Programme angesetzten Wiederholungen haben den

Serge Koussevitzky

Strom der Besucher nur so weit abgelenkt, dass sich um den 1200 Personen fassenden Theatersaal diesmal "nur" 1400 Hörer mit dem Lagern im Grase begnügen mussten. Da auch in Tanglewood Flugzeuge leider keine unbekannte zivilisatorische Erscheinung mehr sind, so wäre die Anlage eines Lautsprechers geboten, der für eine gerechtere Klangverteilung Sorge trägt. Mozart konnte noch weniger als Bach den Kampf mit der lärmenden Materie aufnehmen.

Die Serenade B-Dur für Blasinrümente (K. 361) und das Divermento B-Dur für Streicher und vei Hörner (K. 287) waren die stlichen Ereignisse, während die urze Symphonie Es-Dur (K. 184) nd die "Jupiter-Symphonie (K. 1), man darf annehmen: durch fangel an Proben, besonders in ten ersten Violinen nicht die Tonschönheit und Durchsichtigkeit hatten, die zu den Vorzügen gerade der Bostoner gehören. Anscheinend selbst nicht befriedigt, begann Serge Koussevitzky nervös die Konturen zu überzeichnen. Dass aber selbst in einer nicht vollendeten Darstellung bei diesem trefflichen Orchester und diesem grossen Dirigenten immer noch vieles bleibt, was erinnerungswürdig ist, bedarf nicht der Hervorhebung. Es war diesmal vorzugsweise in den erfüllten langsamen Sätzen zu finden.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

JUL 25 1947

Guest Conductor For First Time

LENOX (AP)—For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra next Sunday at the Tanglewood music shed.

He is 29 year old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival last night before about 7000 persons.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 25 1947

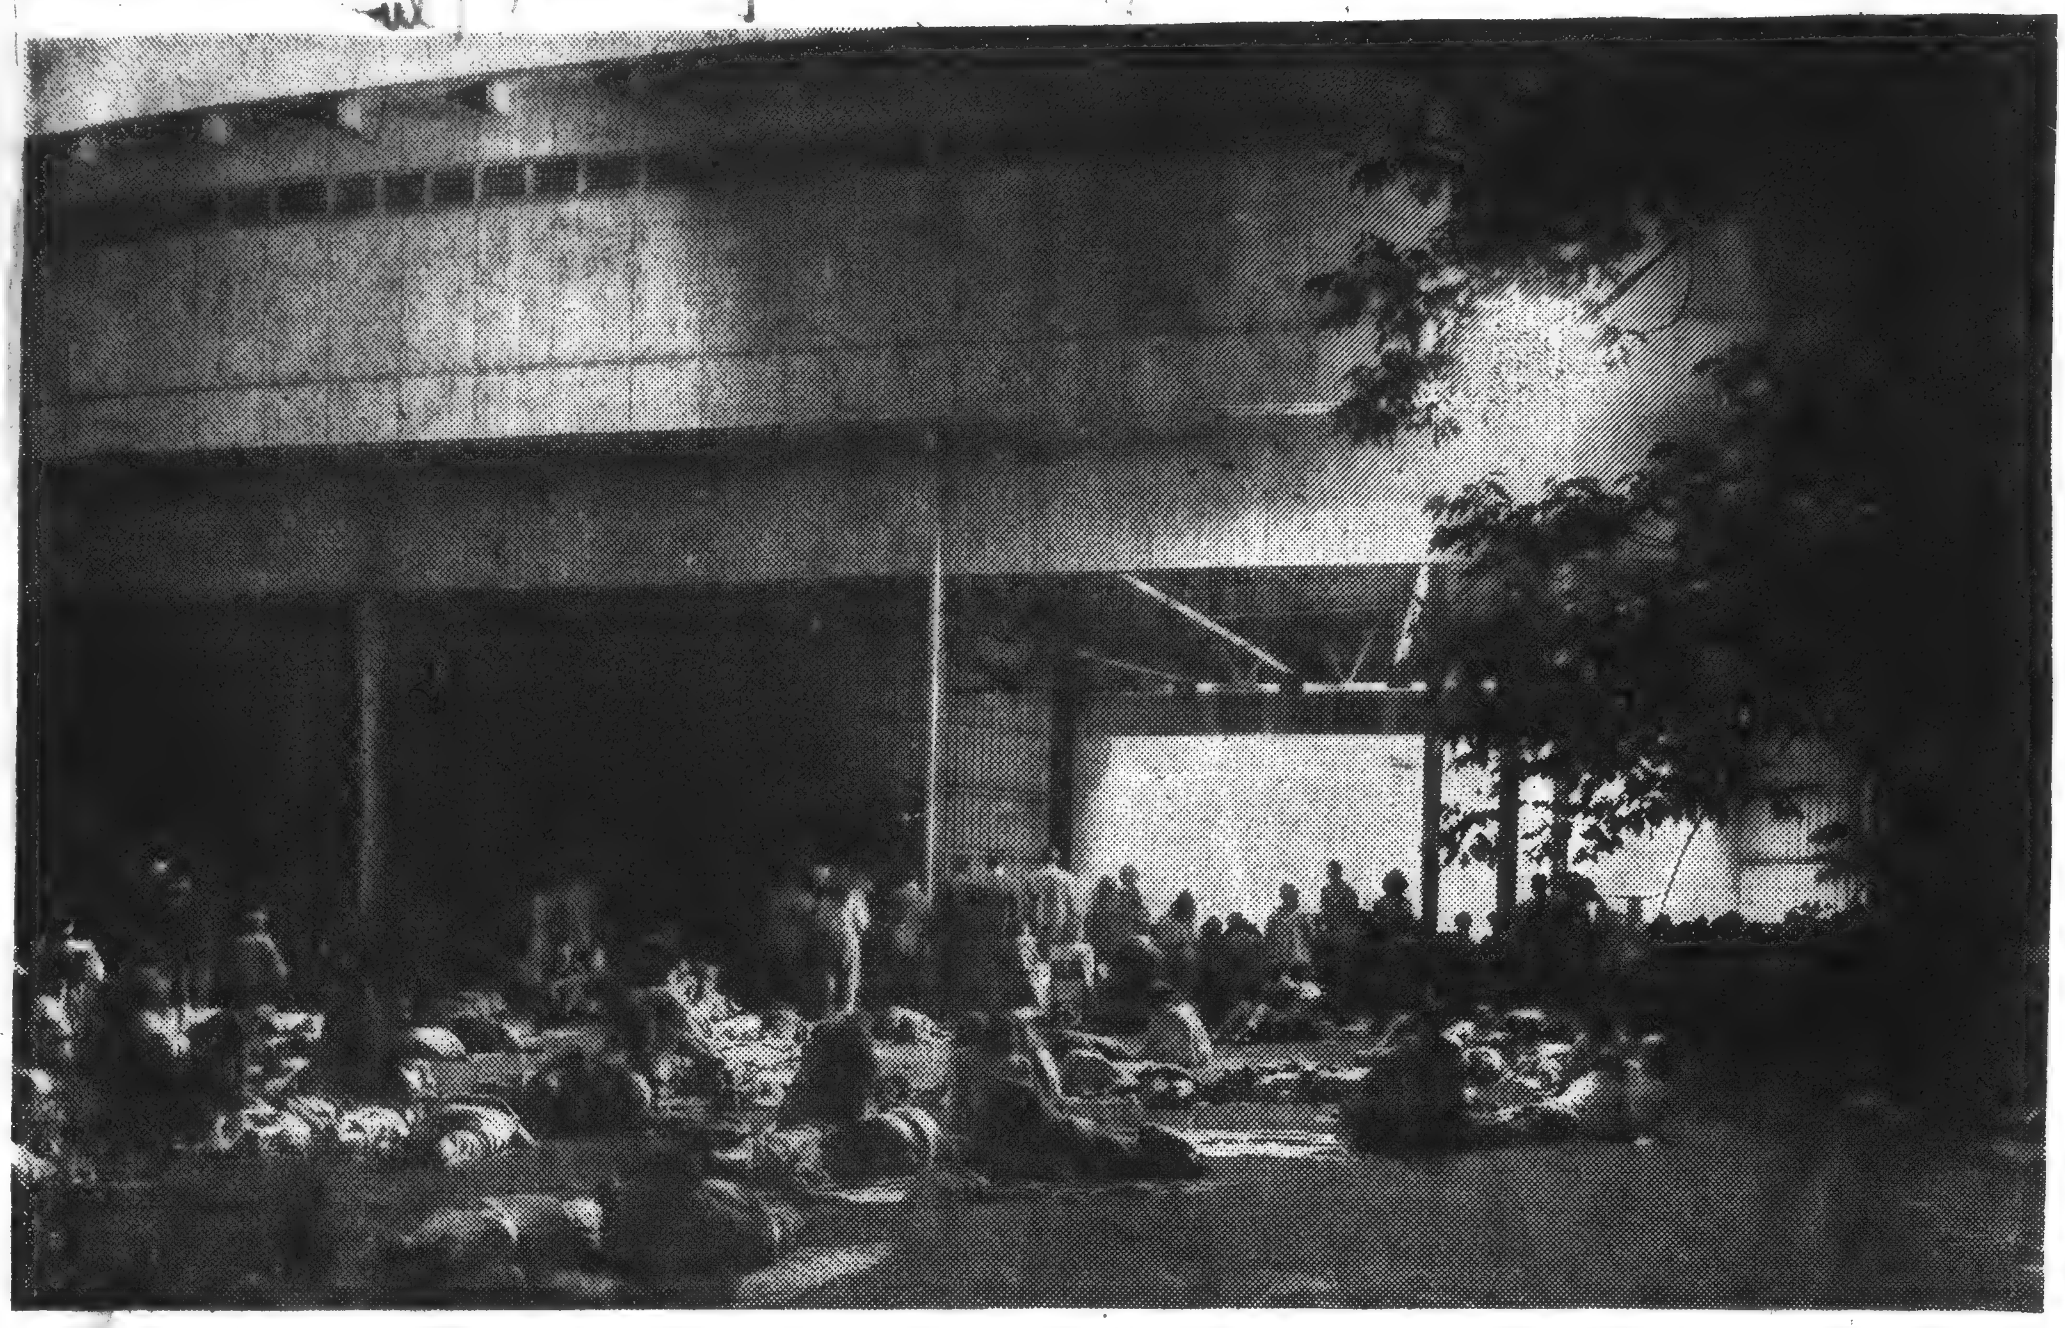
TANGLEWOOD HAS 7,000, BERNSTEIN TO CONDUCT

LENOX, Mass., (AP) — For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston Symphony orchestra next Sunday [illegible] Tanglewood Music Shed.

He is 29 year old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival last night before about 7,000 persons.

Audience of 7000 Turns Out at Tanglewood For Season's First Concert in Music Shed



THE FESTIVAL OPENS ITS 10TH SEASON: This is a small and horizontal section of the 7000 who poured into Tanglewood last evening for the opening of the 10th season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the huge Shed. A warm and starry night welcomed the crowd which heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the major programs in the 1947 series.

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the third program of the 10th Berkshire Festival and the first of the season in the Shed at Tanglewood last night to an overflowing and gala audience of 7000. There had been two previous programs but they had been played by a reduced orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall, but this program was the first in which the complete resources of the famous orchestra were employed.

Koussevitzky Courageous

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the famed musical director of the orchestra, displayed great courage and keen musical instinct in choosing and arranging the program. He devoted the first half to two examples of the best in French musical thought of the past two generations, playing them in reverse chronological order, starting with the symphony for strings of Arthur Honegger and going on to Debussy's "La Mer."

Honegger's work has a stark and sombre character, but under the galvanic impulse of the Boston orchestra's unsurpassed leader, the powerful and ponderous nature of the music was penetrated with an intensity which gave it extraordinary impressiveness. A slow introduction reiterates an ordinary droning idiom, first by a solo viola, then by the section tutti, until by mere repetition it accumulates a telling effect. The slow movement is a lyric masterpiece. Written in Paris during the German occupation, it betrays the oppressed spirit of the French but with the poetic remoteness which has identified some of the best French music. Koussevitzky demanded savage energy from the strings at times, particularly in the passages allotted to the celli in their least favorable registers, but without the stimulation of the conductor, it seemed likely that it would not have met with the acclaim it won from the rapt audience. Honegger is professor of composition at the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is so inextricably attached to these Festival concerts. It was a genuine pity that illness prevented him from being present to hear and see and acknowledge the approval his work evoked.

Audience Arrives Early

Under clear, cool skies the huge audience started arriving early. Encouraged by the management, picnic parties had chosen favorable spots under the trees and on the lawns, and were still enjoying the relaxation and their food when the main legions began to arrive attired in more soigne dress. The air was crystal clear, and encouraged an alertness which was apparent during the whole program.

The Debussy is a conceded personal triumph of the Boston conductor. Taking every advantage of the almost limitless possibilities of his virtuoso orchestra, Koussevitzky played upon them with a well-disciplined fantasy and a rich imagination, catching and conveying the ephemeral character of the French spirt with unique fidelity. Koussevitzky has been conceded

Arthur Honegger
Continued on Second Page

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 25 1947

7,000 Hear Symphony at Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitsky and the weatherman cooperated last night to repay Waterburians who made the two-hour drive through shadowy Berkshire hills to Tanglewood for the third program of the Boston Symphony's 1947 Music Festival.

His conducting relaxed and cool, Dr. Koussevitsky set a comfortable pattern for the 7,000 listeners roofed under the famed Shed or sprawling in more informal enjoyment of the pastoral program, on blankets spread on Tanglewood lawns.

The first of the festival's three Thursday night concerts introduced to Tanglewood audiences the melancholy rhythms of Arthur Honegger's "Symphony for Strings." This, according to program notes, embodies "much of the mood of occupied Paris, to which the composer remained faithful under all difficulties."

The early dramatic virility expressed by Honegger in "King David" and "Pacific 231" is subdued into almost impressionistic lyricism traceable to Debussy on one extreme and Ravel on the other.

Honegger, turning for the summer from composing to teaching at the festival's Tanglewood school, should, however, have no complaints on the interpretation drawn out by Dr. Koussevitsky.

The balance of the program offered two works standard on the summer symphony repertoire, Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' melodic Symphony No. 2.

Debussy's harmonic ruminations were turned last night into a suddenly startling reflection of the sea pictures from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherezade." It was a strange variation on the customarily vague, soft overlays of the Debussy tone poem, and perhaps, I hope, only a temporary one.

The Brahms D-major Symphony, easiest to listen to of that composer's four symphonic works, gave the Boston Symphony full scope for its lush orchestral treatment.

The festival programs turn tomorrow to more contemporary composers, presenting Barber's "School for Scandal" overture and Copeland's Third Symphony, retreating to the last century only for the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" symphony.

Leonard Bernstein, young Harvard-schooled protege of Dr. Koussevitsky, will conduct the Sunday afternoon concert of music by Schubert and Stravinsky.

FZ

Koussevitzky To Be 73 Years Old Tomorrow

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will observe his 73d birthday tomorrow.

Dr. Koussevitzky was born in Russia, July 26, 1874. He has been the conductor of the Boston orchestra since 1924, Dr. Koussevitzky established in memory of his wife, the Koussevtizky Music Foundation Inc., to assist composers and to further the development of musical culture in 1942.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 25 1947

Guest Conductor To Lead Hub Symphony Orchestra

Lenox, Mass., July 25—(AP)—For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra next Sunday at the Tanglewood music shed.

He is 29-year-old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival last night before about 7,000 persons.

GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1947

The World of Music

NEW YORK (U.P.)—Mozart's opèra "Idoheneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Behkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his 24th year. It is considered by some of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for Tanglewood production.

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music Festival, which opens at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on Sept. 6.

"We glorify all kinds of American things, from antiques and ancestors to hot dogs and chorus girls," Adler observed. "Why not take a little time out and glorify American culture Let's give American music a chance to be heard."

Adler, who has a fondness for listing premieres on his programs, gave 43 first performances at the Saratoga Festival last year. He has about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a music culture," Adler continued, "until we foster American music. We have a large body of men and women in this country today writing music [illegible] a rich and varied tradition and experimenting with the future. They cannot live, they cannot learn, they cannot grow unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is controversial— especially that by Americans. Audiences are said to shy from it, although it has been our experience that an audience not only accepts but enjoys the new when it is interestingly introduced.

"No audience should be asked to listen to 'all-American' programs. The listener should have variety, so that he may compare the present with the past. The composer should likewise be asked to measure his creative work against the accepted art of the past."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 25 1947

Music Lovers Throng Festival

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—Serge Koussevitzky's special brand of Tanglewood magic electrified 7,000 people here tonight. The noted director of the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted as one inspired. The orchestra responded dramatically. The first of the three symphonic week-ends of the tenth Berkshire Festival thus opened with a flood of tonal splendor.

That this concert led off with a contemporary work carries its o n significance. Honegger's symphony for strings, first heard in Boston last December under Muench, has yet to be given in New York. It is a striking work, for this is Honegger in a definitely communicative mood. What he has to say reflects his feelings in Paris in 1941 when the work was completed.

Consciously or unconsciously he has expressed the undercurrents of those days, though there is no program note to that effect. The brooding, the foreboding, the anguish, the poignancy and the tenacity of this music is unmistakable. It springs from strong emotions and it kindles them in the listener.

* * *

Master at Work

All three movements reveal a master technician at work. His keen intelligence has shown itself in fascinating ways, from the one viola solo in the first part to the amazing complexity of rhythms in the last. The score is typically Honegger in its locomotive style, its extreme busyness, and its use of dissonance. It cries out for more than just strings and gets its liberation in the entrance of the brasses in the final movement.

Debussy's "La Mer" and the Brahms second symphony are Koussevitzky war horses. In the expansive atmosphere of the Tanglewood music shed, these works received more rousing performances than ever were heard in Carnegie Hall. The audience's enthusiasm knew no bounds.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL IN FINE DEBUT

Open Program With Work of French Composer

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 24—The [illegible] Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened this evening under ideal weather conditions with some 7200 persons in attendance.

OPENING NUMBER

In honor of Arthur Honegger, distinguished French composer, who this year joined the faculty of the Berkshire Music Centre, Dr. Koussevitzky's program had as its opening number his Symphony for Strings. Debussy's "The Sea" and the Second Symphony of Brahms were the other numbers.

While this was the first time this season that the full orchestra had performed in the huge music shed, it was not actually the first concert, since a small group of Symphony men under Dr. Koussevitzky had already presented and repeated two programs in the theatre concert hall, one of them devoted to the music of Bach, the other to that of Mozart.

These came under the head of extra concerts and helped take care of the scheduled weekly broadcast on Tuesday evenings. There will be others but in them the full orchestra will participate.

More Subtle

The Honegger Symphony was introduced to Boston and the United States last season by Charles Muench. That of this evening was the first performance under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. As always with contemporary music, he grasped and released the spirit and essence of the score. And if such comparison can be made the performance seemed slightly more subtle and more sensitive than that under Mr. Muench.

In that it was composed in Paris during the German occupation—the score bears the date October, 1941—this may be called a war symphony. [illegible] fanciful interpretation [illegible] might say that the first movement expresses the resentment of the French. The second, a sense of oppression and the vigorous finale the hope of liberation. As in Boston, the entrance of a trumpet doubling the first violins in the chorale with which the symphony concludes was both startling and striking.

Until this symphony was disclosed to us we had gone for some time in Boston without hearing Mr. Honegger's music. Unlike his colleagues Milhaud and Poulenc he never descends to a popular idom but maintains a certain austerity. However, the finale of this particular work is genuinely exciting and the other two movements are in their various ways engrossing.

Others on Program

Incidentally, the first reminds you at times of Mr. Honneger's most celebrated composition, the locomotive piece, "Pacific 231." To judge from the success of the symphony both with the Symphony Hall audiences and with that of this evening, it is likely to remain in the repertory.

The other numbers on this program were also heard in Boston last season though it was Bruno Walter not Dr. Koussevitzky who then conducted the Brahams Second. Both conductors are eloquent

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 25 1947

Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 24.—The Berkshire Music Festival entered its most intense stage tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of nine subscription concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

The program began with the "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, a member of this summer's faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. This work was introduced to America by the Boston Symphony last December under Charles Muench, but has not yet been heard in New York. This novelty was followed by familiar music, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms's "Second Symphony."

Good weather prefaced tonight's performance, and, as in pre-war summers and last summer, when the full scale festivals at Tanglewood were resumed, many listened to the music on the grounds outside the spacious music shed, in addition to the capacity audience under its roof. The officially estimated attendance was 7,000. Still larger audiences are expected for the week-end concerts Saturday night under Dr. Koussevitzky and Sunday afternoon under Leonard Bernstein.

Tonight's concert was the fifth of the 1947 festival which has offered a Bach and a Mozart program each played twice during the past fortnight, but the first to be played by the complete Boston Symphony which, besides the regular subscription programs, will give two extra concerts on the next two Tuesday evenings. The present festival in the tenth according to the official reckoning, not counting the 1942 series, when students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the programs, or the concerts given by a part of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1944 and 1945. The only war-time summer in which there was no musical activity at Tanglewood was 1943.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 25 1947

Audience of 7000 Hears First Tanglewood Concert

Great Shed in Berkshires Filled as Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony

By Willard M. Clark

Tanglewood, July 24—A moonlit night and the promise of music superbly performed drew an audience of 7000 persons to Tanglewood tonight to hear the first in the series of Berkshire Festival concerts. Once again, the great shed was filled to capacity, while more than 100 persons were seated outside. The concert opened in traditional manner, as Dr. Koussevitzky strode onto the platform, his orchestra rose and, after a bit of hesitantcy, the audience followed suit. The greeting was enthusiastic and prolonged.

For the opening number, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to play the "Symphony for Strings" by Honegger. This work was first performed in this country in 1946. It is a powerful work, filled with strange harmonies and intriguing rythms. Written during the war in Paris, one felt that in it Honegger breathed his defiance against forces which turned his beloved city into a wraith. These passages of rebellion alternated with passages of nostalgic beauty, music which came from a sorrowing heart. The final was superb in its indomitable will, ending with as glorious a peal of liberation as was ever penned. In this the horns doubled with the first violins to produce chorale of surpassing power.

There is little which can be added to what has been written in the past of the Koussevitzky reading of Debussy's "The Sea." It is a veritable tour de force, unequalled by any other conductor in this country and perhaps the world. With the mighty resources of the Boston Symphony at his command, Dr. Koussevitzky revelled in the Debussyian colors, the surge of rhythms and the constant changes of mood. It was a memorable reading of one of the most rewarding scores in the literature.

The closing work was Brahms' Second Symphony. Of the four symphonies by Brahms, the second falls most sweetly upon the ear, is most easily digested at a single hearing. Once again, one could only marvel at the penetration of the reading and the virtuosity of the performance. The emotional qualities of the score were in evidence and the predominating rugged quality was not lost in the emotionalism.

The second concert of this series "A" will be given Saturday night. The program will include the overture to "School for Scandal" by Samuel Barber; Coplan's Third Symphony, and "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz with William Primrose as viola soloist.

He followed the Honegger composition with his famous interpretation, though it is never precisely the same interpretation, of Debussy's "La Mer." It is conducting of such glamor that, as conducting pure and simple, by a conductor and an orchestra of supreme virtuosity, it is irresistible. There is the glowing, shimmering orchestra, which, through long years of association, the conductor has at hair-trigger control, and there is the irredescent music of Debussy. The listener is intoxicated by the splendor of the experience.

The admirably balanced and contrasted program ended with another of the interpretations that has deservedly found a special place in the esteem of these festival audiences—that of the mellow wisdom and the nature poetry of the Brahms D Major Symphony, particularly apropos of the hills and forests that flank the music shed at Tanglewood.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 25 1947

Tanglewood Hears First Honegger

'Symphony for String,' Tops Program With Debussy and Brahms

BY T. H. PARKER.

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 24.—The tenth season of the Berkshire Music Festival really got under way here tonight on the old stamping grounds at Tanglewood. During the last fortnight, Dr. Serge Koussevitseky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra had provided a preliminary round or two of Bach and Mozart, but to most devotees, the festival means the three Thursday week-end concerts, and they turned out a moderate 7000 strong this evening to launch the main events once more.

This opening event was an affable affair, no more, no less. With the exception of Arthur Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" being done here for the first time, it consisted of hackneyed music in a serenely buccolic setting.

The weather was elegant, the evening so cool that the mosquitos went about with shawls over their shoulders. The great pines framing the music shed rose up almost artificially like a mammoth stage setting and persons camping on the lawn hugged for Calliope, for Venus and for warmth.

First Honegger.

The concert got underway with considerable promptness to unveil locally the French composer, Honegger. None of his work had been done previously at Tanglewood. The item offered, the "Symphony for Strings," bears the legend, "Paris, October 1941," according to the program notes, and "embodies much of the mood of occupied Paris, to which the composer remained faithful under all difficulties."

The import of these words seemed a little vague to this deponent, but there was nothing new or unusual about the music it referred to. In essence, Mr Honegger seems very little farther along than he was in 191 and "Le Chant de Nigamon." Tw movements of the symphony, th First and Second, are Mr. Hon gger's customary misery drenched stanzas, while the last hich somehow seems to sens hat "here come the United State Iarines" and everything's goin o be hunky-dory, not to say mag ifique, is just the obverse of th ame dish. The texture of th ork is again elaborate and com lex, the temperature largely He raic, the style hand-wringing i retchedness and frenetic i ope.

But the greatest disappoint ent to this courier is that Mr Ionegger still makes his way long supported on the one hand y Debussy and Ravel and on the ther by Stravinsky, with the lyr cism of the first two and the vi lence of the second. It is not the rogress of a creative composer dvancing on his own two feet. he whole symphony seems highly lerative in form and hollow in ontent.

The rest of the program was levoted to Debussy, "LaMer" and Brahms "Second Symphony," a ery ho-hum menu to steady cus omers of Dr. Koussevitsky and he Boston, or to habitues of any oncert hall, for that matter. What with the four Brahms Symphonies having been performed 15 times in the not too extensive history of the Berkshire Festival, to meet up with a sixteenth offering was hardly stimulating. Nor was it to be expected that the thrice-familiar Debussy work would be greeted with the enthusiastic "Thalassa! Thalassa!" raised by Xenophon's troops on sighting the sea.

Dr. Koussevitsky carried "la Mer" to an enormously splashy climax which seemed to excite the audience considerably, though actually the effect was garish. The final apopletic outburst of brass failed to make up for the continual lack of finese up to that point. There is no virture to making Debussy sound like Rimsky-Korsakov. Certainly it was not the magnificently onomotapoetic reading which Dr. Koussevitsky has brought to "La Mer" for many happy years.

The Brahms was given with the Boston's customary full-blown opulence. All during the evening, the orchestra played with a kind of erratic brilliance, a little more theatric than poised or polished, pretty much a piece with the temper of the conductor himself.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 25 1947

WORK BY HONEGGER IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Premiere of 'Symphony for Strings' Marks First of Programs in Berkshire Festival

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., July 24 —The first concert of the Boston Symphony series of the Berkshire Music Festival was given tonight in the Music Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, with an audience which far outnumbered the seating capacity of the outdoor auditorium and heard the first festival performance of Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" as the beginning of the program.

This symphony, composed in Paris in 1941 during the German occupation, is a work of extraordinary workmanship and feeling. Mr. Honegger, who habitually jests and who does not carry his heart on his sleeve, told the writer that people were mistaken who read into his final movement, with the entrance of the solo trumpet in its concluding measures, an effect of defiance.

"I simply decided," he said, "that, as the score stood, the melody carried by the first violins would be over-balanced by the other voices, so I strengthened the part of the violins with the first trumpet—the best instrument, I think, for doubling, under such circumstances."

Unable to Attend Concert

Mr. Honegger, unfortunately confined to his bed here and therefore unable to attend the concert, added that his French colleagues had found the earlier movements of the symphony rather somber, "but then, the time in Paris was not too cheerful."

The which Mr. Honegger may tell, if he pleases, to his grandmother. The symphony is written with intense emotion, at the same time stark and powerful to a degree in the carrying through of the ideas. The evolution of a very simple, germinal motive for the violas at the beginning procedes not only in markedly organic, but very dramatic fashion. Melodic and rhythmical unfoldments of this theme predominate in the opening movement, unmistakably expressive as well as constructive purposes.

It can properly be said that a listener need not be particularly interested in the machinery of a composition, and that he is concerned, first and last, with what it says. But in this work admiration for its structure mingles with the thrill communicated by its emotional content. It is tragical music, rising at times to pitch of extreme tension and not the less eloquent for the dissonance of its counterpoint and its frequently polyharmonic method.

The slow movement, in the lyrical vein, continues to unfold melodic elements contained in the opening idea richly developed, this in wholly new ways, and with figuration and given to the low strings a la Passacaglia.

But, again, one thinks past the masterly means employed to the poignancy of the expression. As for the finale, whether Mr. Honegger wishes to "blague" about it or not; whether, even, he is sincere in his blithe statement that is has nothing to do with such an idea, it is in fact music of extraordinary defiance. Nor has the immensely effective entrance of the trumpet, at the end, any less than the effect of the chorale of the resolute warrior. Incidentally, this motive, as finally given to the trumpet, has the sensation, with all the modern counterpoint placed against it, of a simple, solemn, major key chorale in the old Lutheran spirit.

A Koussevitzky Evening

The music is couched in such truly heroic terms with such a complete absence of sentimentalism, or selfconscious "theatre," that it rings like the truest steel, with a most refreshing masculinity. It is of emotional realities. We consider it the strongest score of Mr. Honegger, and the one the most stripped to essentials that we have heard from him, far deeper in meaning and the most terse and concentrated of his symphonic writings.

Doubtless the masterly performance given by Koussevitzky and the orchestra had much to do with its effect. A superb score was unfolded magisterially. One can add to this that it was a Koussevitzky evening.

continued

Hartford Times JUL 25 1947

Brilliant Artistry at Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

YOU WANT a Monet to paint the summer night picture at Tanglewood for you:

The canvas is very dark with a red moon brooding low at first quarter. Under the inverted scallop shell which is the big pavilion all the light radiates from the hinge where the stage seats a white-jacketed hundred men bending low over their instruments. A cone of light, bluish with cigarette smoke, picks out the white-jacketed gnomish leader who bends even more intently over his Debussy. Even in the dark you can see that the stippled dabs of color in a dressy audience is orchestral in its prismatic variety. Outside the oak foliage filters a high lone arc light.

And your music of course, is Parisian Honegger, DeBussy's La Mer and a very Frenchified Brahms Second Symphony.

* * *

IT WAS the late W. J. Henderson who once wrote that all music is romantic, and I never heard his point better made than at last night's concert. Whether the piece was something acidulously up-to-date, like Honegger's Third Smphony for Strings, or the whole-tone impressionism in the lush sea rhapsody of the incomparable musicien francaise or the forthright diatonism of Brahms, the music was all warm-hearted and glowing under Koussevitzky's genius for expression. It was full of sentiment and spoke plainly.

Such a thought probably would not please Honegger at all for he was in his day a high priest of the unsentimental — whether that was to be called abstraction, realism or any other term to signify rebellion against romantic reaction. He became famous with his noisy and amusing and unfeeling locomotive piece.

But he is older now and hence cannot escape the infection of nostalgia, if only for the good old days of the revolution. At any rate I found his symphony very sentimental, pleasingly so. It was prevailingly pessimistic, freely dissonant as to background but persistently uttering ripe, voluptuous themes in solo, now by the viola, then by the cello and by a battery of 10 basses giving out with a rich vibrato.

The moods were in turn pensive, truculent, resolute. After three movements spoken entirely by the string choir the effect of a blazing trumpet doubling the first violins on the final page was electrifying.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY does Brahms like nobody else. The D major Symphony lost all trace of formalism and became a great fantasia. It was completely improvisational with the interpreter creating his effects measure by measure. Here is a conductor who cannot resist the challenging palette of so phenomenal an orchestra as the Boston Symphony which he has lived with and perfected over so many years. He plays upon it con amore, eleciting in strange tints those sonorities which the score calls for and cherishing in reserve the infinitude of those untapped which must await their turn.

All this is somehow foreign to Brahms, and yet Koussevitzky's Brahms is unforgettable. You come to want it that way and, as far as the Second Symphony is concerned, this has almost come to be a theme song of Tanglewood.

Debussy, of course, deliberately asked for this play of timbres in "The Sea." He gave his technical genius free rein and our master orchestra picked up the license with uninhibited virtuosity. For sheer brilliance, this performance ranked with anything heard under the Hawthorne pines.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUL 26 1947

Series B of the Berkshire Festival will occupy three concerts, beginning on Thursday evening. All of the music will be by Beethoven, including the first seven symphonies, the fourth concerto, played by Joseph Lateiner, and the "Emperor" Concerto, played by Joseph Battista. The eighth and ninth symphonies will be given on Tuesday, August 5.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 26 1947

GIFTS TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Receives 150-Year-Old Violin and 'Cello, 100, for Birthday

Serge Koussevitzky will receive two valuable musical instruments today, on the occasion of his birthday. The instruments, a violin and a 'cello, are the gifts of Constance Keene, pianist, and Abram Chasins, pianist-composer, both of whom have been heard as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

The violin is a 150-year-old Leeb and the 'cello was made 100 years ago by Hemming. They will be the first instruments in the Tanglewood Instrument Collection, intended for the use of Berkshire Music Center students who either have no instruments of their own or whose instruments are inferior.

Events at Tanglewood

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, several concerts will be given at Tanglewood.

This morning at 10:30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3:30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony in an all-Bach program, in the Theatre-Concert Hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8:15. Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, in the Theatre-Concert Hall, there will be a program by a student orchestra and chorus.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Emil Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; "La Cheminee du Roi Rene," by Milhud; Rapsodie, by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4:30 and at 8:15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzy conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed Tuesday evening, July 29. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D Minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, the Introduction to Act 3 of "Lohengrin" Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Second Suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

This event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public—the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures. Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonographic recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the orchestra itself.

THE BOSTON HERALD,

7000 AT TANGLEWOOD FOR FESTIVAL CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

TANGLEWOOD, July 24—Favored by perfect weather the main part of the 10th Berkshire Festival opened tonight with about 7000 in attendance. This is in no sense a record, and the weekend attendance will almost certainly see half as many again thronging the Shed and the lawns outside.

But it was an audience which greeted Serge Koussevitzky on his appearance by standing and applauding, and which listened to a program of music by Honegger, Debussy and Brahms with rapt attention.

The program listed this as the third in the current Berkshire Festival, which means that the four concerts devoted to Bach and Mozart in preceding weeks in the much smaller shed were rated as part of the Festival; but for the vast public the opening of this famous series was this evening.

Conducting the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky opened his program with the Symphony for Strings by the eminent Franco-Swiss composer, Arthur Honegger. Bostonians heard this composition with respectful acclaim last winter when Charles Muench conducted our orchestra in it, the first American performance. Mr. Honegger is here in Tanglewood, on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center; but if he was in the audience last night he did not come forward or arise to acknowledge the applause, which was prolonged obviously with the hope of seeing him.

Honegger's symphony was written in France in the dark days of 1941, and to a very large extent it reflects the mood of bitterness and despair which at that time afflicted all loyal Frenchmen. Only with the chorale in the finale and the dramatic entrance of the trumpet in a work otherwise scored exclusively for strings is there sounded a note of hope or defiance or both.

Otherwise a sense of bleakness and bitter revolt pervades the work. This is not written in criticism of an unusually profound score, one which we all in Boston felt was exceptional last January when we first heart it. It is said merely in the nature of a warning that the public will not find in this symphony the characteristic cheerful vigor with which we so often associate the composer. Vigor there is, in the middle of the first movement for instance, but it is a driving restlessness not joyous exuberance.

With the reservation that the symphony was written in a period of despair, and bearing this in mind while listening to it, I find it on a second hearing a distinctly moving work. The slow movement in particular is one of remarkable poignancy. To nd a modern counterpart I would go to the slow movement in Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony for a comparably eloquent expression of grief. The audience received the symphony respectfully, though the strength of the applause may have been largely due to the conclusion.

Dr. Koussevitzky followed this unfamiliar work with one of the show pieces with which he and the Boston Symphony have had so much success. Time was when Debussy's La Mer would not have been considered a show piece. rather would it have been called obscure; and perhaps it is not quite fair to the poetic beauty of Debussy's musical conception of the sea so to describe it. Nevertheless Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra have so brilliantly interpreted it and it has become so much a part of our repertoire that the term is not too inapt. I have sometimes heard it even more eloquently set forth than it was last night, but the performance was still a remarkable one and drew forth loud acclaim from the audience.

An even more familiar work in symphonic literature brought this opening concert to a close, namely, Brahms' Second Symphony in D Major. Nothing more need be said at this time about it, save to note that it concluded an admirably built program and served to send the audience away in just the right mood to anticipate the further musical delights of the festival, even though all the programs may not equal this.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 25 1947

Music

Koussevitsky Opens Berkshire Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The 10th season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last night at the music shed in Tanglewood with the expected capacity audience and the enthusiasm and general to-do which would naturally accompany the second postwar inaugural.

With Serge Koussevitzky—restless of arms and hands as a petrouchka—to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the festival got under way auspiciously.

The program, for this first concert of the series, offered a symphony for strings by Arthur Honegger which had been first performed in this country by the same orchestra in Boston. New York has not yet heard it, and it is not a long guess that it will some day be heard in Gotham.

This symphony for strings seems to me to call for a more varied instrumentation. All that Honegger has poured into it—at least to my thinking—does not come through with the force and richness of sound it seeks in the playing of stringed instruments. It is a beautifully written work, however, as intelligently planned as anything of Honegger's. It moves along with refinement and grace despite the fact that the strings occasionally scream in emotional fervors far above their capacities.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 25 1947

Brilliant Artistry at Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

YOU WANT a Monet to paint the summer night picture at Tanglewood for you:

The canvas is very dark with a red moon brooding low at first quarter. Under the inverted scallop shell which is the big pavilion all the light radiates from the hinge where the stage seats a white-jacketed hundred men bending low over their instruments. A cone of light, bluish with cigarette smoke, picks out the white-jacketed gnomish leader who bends even more intently over his Debussy. Even in the dark you can see that the stippled dabs of color in a dressy audience is orchestral in its prismatic variety. Outside the oak foliage filters a high lone arc light.

And your music of course, is Parisian Honegger, DeBussy's La Mer and a very Frenchified Brahms Second Symphony.

* * *

IT WAS the late W. J. Henderson who once wrote that all music is romantic, and I never heard his point better made than at last night's concert. Whether the piece was something acidulously up-to-date, like Honegger's Third Smphony for Strings, or the whole-tone impressionism in the lush sea rhapsody of the incomparable musicien francaise or the forthright diatonism of Brahms, the music was all warm-hearted and glowing under Koussevitzky's genius for expression. It was full of sentiment and spoke plainly.

Such a thought probably would not please Honegger at all for he was in his day a high priest of the unsentimental — whether that was to be called abstraction, realism or any other term to signify rebellion against romantic reaction. He became famous with his noisy and amusing and unfeeling locomotive piece.

But he is older now and hence cannot escape the infection of nostalgia, if only for the good old days of the revolution. At any rate I found his symphony very sentimental, pleasingly so. It was prevailingly pessimistic, freely dissonant as to background but persistently uttering ripe, voluptuous themes in solo, now by the viola, then by the cello and by a battery of 10 basses giving out with a rich vibrato.

The moods were in turn pensive, truculent, resolute. After three movements spoken entirely by the string choir the effect of a blazing trumpet doubling the first violins on the final page was electrifying.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY does Brahms like nobody else. The D major Symphony lost all trace of formalism and became a great fantasia. It was completely improvisational with the interpreter creating his effects measure by measure. Here is a conductor who cannot resist the challenging palette of so phenomenal an orchestra as the Boston Symphony which he has lived with and perfected over so many years. He plays upon it con amore, eleciting in strange tints those sonorities which the score calls for and cherishing in reserve the infinitude of those untapped which must await their turn.

All this is somehow foreign to Brahms, and yet Koussevitzky's Brahms is unforgettable. You come to want it that way and, as far as the Second Symphony is concerned, this has almost come to be a theme song of Tanglewood.

Debussy, of course, deliberately asked for this play of timbres in "The Sea." He gave his technical genius free rein and our master orchestra picked up the license with uninhibited virtuosity. For sheer brilliance, this performance ranked with anything heard under the Hawthorne pines.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 26 1947

Tanglewood

Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the second concert in the subscription season tonight at 8.15. William Primrose will be the viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony. The program will include Barber's Overture "School for Scandal" and Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, teacher of composition and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, who will be present. The concert will start at 8.15.

---

community picnic.

'See Yourself' in Television To Be Featured Tuesday

July 26

A "see yourself" television set in full operation will be one of the features of the "music for all" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday evening.

Patrons of the event, a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center, will be invited to pass before the cameras in the library of the school between 6.15 and 8.15, to see themselves televised. Among those who will make their television debut will be Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the special concert and broadcast at 8.30 in the Festival Shed.

RCA has transported more than five tons of television equipment from their laboratories at Camden to Tanglewood in connection with their introduction of the Berkshire, which marks their entry into the custom-made radio-phonograph field.

At the private demonstration of the instrument there will be "man-on-the-street" interviews with students of the Berkshire Music Center over portable equipment at various points of the Tanglewood grounds.

After Tuesday, when the Berkshire will be on display at the Lenox Brotherhood, until the end of the Festival season on Aug. 10, there will be daily televised performances by members of the opera department at the center.

TANGLEWOOD CHORAL GROUP: Alfred Patterson of Cambridge, a student of choral conducting under Hugh Ross (at left) of the choral conducting department at the Berkshire Music Center, rehearses a madrigal in one of the new studios at Tanglewood. Classes meet regularly in this chamber music hall with one side open toward the Tanglewood gardens.

Tanglewood

Picture Guide Issued

A "1947 Picture Guide of Tanglewood, the Berkshire Music Festival," published by Miss Ruth Orkin, free-lance photographer, was issued in the county today. The guide gives a written and pictorial summary of the Berkshire Music Festival and the Music Center.

Juilliard Quartet Tonight

A chamber music concert will be given tonight in the theatre-concert hall by the Juilliard Quartet, who will play string quartets by Schuman, Copland, Riegger and Shapero.

Symphony Tomorrow

Although a concert planned for tomorrow at 4.30 by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5 has been canceled, a program by the orchestra has been substituted, including Brahms' "Tragic" overture; the first movement of Mozart's concerto for piano and orchestra with William Johnson of New York, soloist; the first movement of Tchaikovsky's concerto for violin and orchestra, with Kenneth Gordon of New York, soloist; and the first movement of Franck's symphony in G minor. Richard Burgin, associate director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and head of the department, will conduct the Franck symphony; Gerard Samuel, the first three numbers.

1500 at Concert

An audience of 1500, again extending beyond the walls of the theatre-concert hall, heard the second performance of the all-Mozart program last evening.

Famous Teacher Here

Madame Isabella Verengerova, teacher of piano at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, is in Lenox for the Festival. She taught Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct two of the concerts, Lukas Foss, pianist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Joseph Battista, soloist in Beethoven's fourth piano concerto on Sunday, Aug. 3.

MAMARONECK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL [illegible] 1947

TO THE BERKSHIRES

Miss Nancy Immerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Immerman of New Rochelle, formerly of Larchmont, will spend the weekend of Aug. 2 at the Berkshire Music Center.

MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

JUL 26 1947

Berkshire Music Festival: Koussevitzky conducting; Ella Goldstein [illegible] Concerto in D minor for [illegible] and orchestra (Vivaldi, transcribed for piano by Siloti); Concerto No. 1 for piano and orchestra [illegible] Tuesday [illegible] 8.30 [illegible] over CBC and CFCF

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 25 1947

Weekend Concert Series Opens at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Friday—The long-anticipated first series of weekend concerts was opened last night at beautiful Tanglewood in the Berkshires before a throng of 7000.

Having completed two appetizing Sunday concerts in the theater concert hall, devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, Serge Koussevitzky and the full forces of the Boston Symphony took up residence in the yawning expanses of the shed for the 12 concerts that remain.

Three Works Performed

Last night's concert advanced the musical calendar by approximately one century. The three works performed were Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" (dated 1941); Debussy's "La Mer," and "Symphony No. 2 in D. Major," by Joannes Brahms.

For those of us who have been thriving on the quiet dignity and suave elegance of Bach and Mozart, the transition to Honegger was rather startling.

When Honegger's macabre oratorio "King David" was performed at the Worcester Festival a few years ago, Albert Stoessel remarked to the chorus that it would one day consider this one of its important accomplishments. He meant this as a reassurance that the music of Honegger would come into its own, which it has.

Glorious Work

The "Symphony for Strings" is not in the same category with the locomotive effects of his "Pacific 231" or the gridiron tactics of "Rugby." It is built of the same polytonal ingredients as "King David," with a solid classic foundation. In brief, it is a glorious work in the modern idiom. It begins with an eerie solo in the violas to a shimmering background from the other instruments. There is a stern interruption from the lower strings, building to a climax, and then embarking on a series of moods of deep intensity.

The Boston Symphony strings, being what they are, made magnificent music of the "Adagio Mesto." They set forth the melody with startling beauty, bringing it to a powerful climax and subsiding. The final movement resumed the chattering background, with assertive themes piercing through, and finally climaxed by solo trumpet.

Gripping Piece of Music

Debussy's "La Mer" was not only a spicy earful of sound but a gripping piece of music. Koussevitzky made it so by raising it above a wave by wave description of the sea. The second and third movements, depicting the quiet and turbulent motion of gigantic waves, was as graphic as the most torrential scene from Rimsky's "Scheherazade." However, the Debussy score was made into a rich tonal tapestry without undue significance to the storm pictures.

There is no implication that this was not realistic music but rather that the shattering climaxes and heavy orchestral effects were but part of the work's beauty. There was as much emotional impact, of its sort, in the first movement, "From Dawn to Midday on the Sea," as in the hard-hitting sequences that followed.

Brahms Contribution

The festival's sole Brahms contribution was last night's "Symphony No. 2 in D Major," which was performed here last year when most of Brahms' important orchestral works were played in a series of three concerts.

On Saturday night, the program bows to the moderns with Samuel Barber's overture, "The School for Scandal," and Aaron Coplan's "Symphony No. 3." The program will be completed with the Eberlioz neglected symphony, "Harold in Italy." William Primrose will be viola soloist.

HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 26 1947

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29. Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, the Introduction to Act Three of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" second suite, and Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

This event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public — the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures. Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the Orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonographic recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the Orchestra itself.

The first portion of the program by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be broadcast (8:30 to 9:30 E. D. S. T.) on the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network. He will conduct Berlioz' Overture "The Roman Carnival" while the motion pictures are made of the listening audience. The remainder of the program is called "The March of Fidelity," and will be devoted to a comparison of Victor phonograph records and the Orchestral in actual performance.

Palestinian To Be Soloist At Tanglewood

Eagle [illegible]

Ella Goldstein

Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old Palestinian, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, for the concert that will be a part of the "New Horizons in Music" program Tuesday evening at Tanglewood. She will play in the Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1, for piano.

Born in Harbin, China, Miss Goldstein played in her first concert at the age of five, touring China and Japan until she settled in Tel-Aviv, Palestine, when she was 11. Her father was Professor Uriel Goldstein, a violinist-conductor and president of three conservatories, and her mother, who was her first teacher, was a concert pianist.

At the age of 12 she went to Holland to study at the Amsterdam Academy of Music, playing with leading Dutch orchestras and visiting orchestras. Prevented in 1940 by the war from accepting an invitation to play in France, England and Belgium, she left for Palestine, on the Patria, the last ship to leave for the Holy Land before the fall of France. She has played 200 concerts with the Palestine Symphony Orchestra, toured Egypt for four seasons and in 1944 made a successful nine-month tour of South Africa. She is a student this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

She speaks six languages and has a repertoire of 26 piano concertos and 20 recital programs.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 26 1947

Celebrities Among Thousands At First Tanglewood Concert

Boston Symphony Begins Annual Series; Second and Third Concerts Tonight and Tomorrow

Lenox, July 25 — Leonard Bernstein, brilliant young conductor, who is becoming well known to hearers of symphonic music on the radio, takes over the podium at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon to conduct the third in the first series of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in this Berkshire center. The program, which to many listeners may well prove to be the high spot of the 1947 series, will be composed of the Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart; Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," which only a short time back, as music history goes, set the musical world by its ears, and Schubert's Symphony in C Major, No. 7, the grandest of Schubert's compositions.

Koussevitzky Saturday Night

Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra Saturday night, in the second concert in Series A, in a program consisting of the Overture to "The School for Scandal," by Barber; Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, the American now firmly established as one of the world's leading contemporary composers, and Berlioz' symphony, "Harold in Italy," a work seldom heard. Viola soloist with the orchestra in this work will be William Primrose, who has been heard several times in this area, including an appearance recently with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Beautiful Setting

While Tanglewood musical activities have been in full swing for most of this month, the major attraction for most people—the concert series by the full orchestra—opened Friday night under perfect conditions with the usual huge atendance. More than 7000 persons filled the great Music Shed and overflowed over the wide green lawns.

Strangers here for the first time marveled at the beauty of Tanglewood and declared the setting is perfect for one of the world's greatest music festivals.

Dr. Koussevitzky had a special escort in the grounds of which Ward E. Gaston has been the superintendent for 17 years. A detail of state police, with Lt. Warner F. Eaton of Northampton in command, directed state highway traffic. He was assisted by Cpl. D. F. Murphy of Lee with Lenox and Stockbridge police in charge of the ground. Experienced in handling Tanglewood crowds they did a fine job.

About 40 newspapers and magazines were represented the opening night and the enlarged press quarters were greatly appreciated.

Noticed Friday night in the box section were former Gov. William H. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island and Mrs. Vanderbilt, who motored down from Cricket Creek Farm, South Williamstown; Mr. and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, who came over from Conway; Sir Arthur and Lady Salter of London, who were with Dr. and Mrs. Walter W. Palmer of Tyringham; Sir Alexander and Lady Cadogan of London, Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, Mrs. Henry Sloane Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown of Newport, Mrs. Horace Dodge, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, President James Phinney Baxter, 3d, of Williams College and Mrs. Baxter, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hoving, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, President Hamilton Holt of Rollins College, Fla., and Mrs. Holt, former ambassador to Brazil, Adolf A. Berle Jr., and Mrs. Berle, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown and Mrs. Brown of South Williamstown and Washington, Mrs. George Otis Rockwood and daughter Princess Diane Eristave.

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Sky Farm, North Egremont were among those who had dinner parties and later took their guests to Tanglewood.

Great Development Ahead at Tanglewood, Says Dr. Koussevitzky on 73d Birthday

First Five Years Were Only The Beginning

Copy

"The progress made at Tanglewood in five years is only the beginning of a great development," declared Dr. Serge Koussevitzky when interviewed on his 73d birthday today.

In his living room at Seranac, overlooking Tanglewood, Stockbridge Bowl and Mount Everett in the distance, the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who initiated the Berkshire Music Center to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts, said:

"We have many things to do in musical art, and the purpose is not only to come to study and go home. It is to go home and share with people in their communities what is learned and experienced here, to develop musical art, to lead people to musical culture and so to culture in general.

"That is what we are doing already. We know the progress of the boys and girls who have come to Tanglewood. We know the positions they have. We know how many first players are in leading orchestras. We have followed the careers of singers and conductors. Already we have developed here several brilliant conductors. I will mention two names of my assistants, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazer deCarvalho." Bernstein will conduct two of the Festival concerts, the first tomorrow.

Picture Is Changing

"Carvalho will go to his native Brazil after the Festival to conduct there. He will take American music with him. The relationship of America with other countries is closer because for the first time in history, foreigners are being sent to America—to Tanglewood—to study music. It used to be that Americans went abroad to study music."

"All that we have done is introduction to what we expect to do in the future," Dr. Koussevitzky repeated. "I hope very soon we shall begin to create great compositions here at Tanglewood. There are outstanding composers here already, but there will be more. The most important players and writers will work together on musical dramas and tragedies that will be in the Greek tradition, but the subject will be of our own time. We have no less tragedies in our lives than the Greeks had."

'A New Step'

"I hope," he continued, "to have the greatest virtuosi, violinists, pianists and 'cellists to teach young soloists to play. For instance, how to play Beethoven or Brahms concerti. It will be a new step."

Asked to comment on "Idomeneo," the Mozart opera that will be performed at Tanglewood for the first time in America during the last week of the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky said it was chosen because it is seldom heard, because it is long, difficult and not considered a success. "We have tried to overcome the difficulties," he said.

Never Heard 'Idomeneo'

He told of the search for the complete material of "Idomeneo," which has been collected at great effort from many parts of the world. "I have never heard it," he said, "and have never known of its being performed, but I can tell from the music it is one of the most beautiful operas ever written."

With 10 candles burning, marking the 10th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky cuts his birthday cake at a party held in his honor last night. With him is Lester Roberts of Lenox, a member of the Tanglewood advisory committee and manager of the Curtis Hotel.

Regarding the future of the Berkshire Festival, the conductor said: "That is established. Our only problem is to make the repertoire as varied as possible and to maintain the highest musical standard."

It will be a tradition, he announced, that one week each season be dedicated to the music of one composer, as a week in 1946 was dedicated to the music of Brahms and this season the second series of concerts will be, with an extra program, to the work of Beethoven.

Another tradition will be a concert each year for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Next Tuesday, July 29, will be the first.

Impressed With Students

"One is impressed," Dr. Koussevitzky concluded, "by the quality of the student material. This year it is higher than ever before in all departments. The orchestra is already splendid, though they have been working together a few short weeks. The chorus was never so good, and the singers and pianists are of the highest quality."

In addition to directing the school, teaching his class in conducting, rehearsing and conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in all but three of the 14 Festival concerts and the extra concert on Tuesday. Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted the student orchestra and attends many of the student activities and chamber music programs, especially the opera scenes and the Friday night symphony concerts which his students and assistants conduct.

Students Entertain

With the playing of a canon, composed for the occasion, the singing of a cantata and the presentation of a cake, students of the Berkshire Music Center celebrated Dr. Koussevitzky's 73d birthday at a concert by the student orchestra at Tanglewood last night.

After intermission, before an audience of 2200, the largest for a student concert this season, Leonard Bernstein, Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant in teaching conducting and former pupil, conducted a canon entitled "Fanfare for Bima," based on the tune with which the director calls his black cocker spaniel, Bemoll, fondly called Bima.

The choral group sang a cantata, under the direction of Hugh Ross, with words to the music of Bach's "Wedding Cantata," on the theme, "Koussevitzky, may you prosper all your whole life long."

After the concert, conducted by students of his class and his assistant, Eleazar deCarvalho, Dr. Koussevitzky, in his "green room" behind the stage, cut a cake provided by Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel.

Tanglewood

Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, wil play the second concert in the subscription season tonight at 8.15. William Primrose will be the viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony. The program will include Barber's Overture "School for Scandal" and Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, teacher of composition and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, who will be present. The concert will start at 8.15.

Tomorrow Afternoon

Leonard Bernstein will be the first guest conductor at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 when he conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's symphony in C major.

Morning Concert

Under the direction of William Primrose, acting head of chamber music, a concert will be given tomorrow morning, at 10.30 in the chamber music hall.

Opera Scenes

Scenes from eight operas will be performed tomorrow evening at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall, with orchestral accompaniment. The excerpts will be: Duets from Act 1 of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," prologue from Gounod's "Faust," Donizetti's "La Favorita," the sextet from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera," the duet scene of Act 2 from Wagner's "Lohengrin," excerpt from Mozart's "Magic Flute" and a duet from the second act of "Carmen."

The scenes are prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department; Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl, Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl, Frederic Waldman and Felix Wolfes, with Richard Rychtarik, scenic director.

HARRISBURG, PA.
TELEGRAPH

JUL 26 1947

List Programs At Tanglewood

Sunday afternoon's concert marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood.

The program is made up of the Overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, No. 7.

"Music for All," the special added event on Tuesday, July 29, is creating wide interest and is expected to attract many visitors from distant points. In addition to a full concert by the orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, there will be demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments of science for musical reproduction, including radio, phonograph, motion pictures, and television.

The evening's program begins at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the Theatre-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

In a different vein the film program will have as a curtain-raiser the now historic Disney cartoon, "Mickey's Grand Opera." For those unable to reach Tanglewood on time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the motion pictures at 11 p. m.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8.30 o'clock, in the Shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company.

The Vivaldi Concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture first motion pictures of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood ultimately to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity." There will be examples of records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several of them landmarks in phonographic art, over the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," RCA Victor's first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1947

Students Conduct At Berkshire Fete

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The day after the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was not exactly a day of rest for the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For one thing, there was a rehearsal in the morning of Leonard Bernstein's program, which he is scheduled to conduct tomorrow afternoon.

For another, the first desk players of the orchestra had a rather heavy day at the Berkshire Music Center, where they comprise the faculty in orchestral playing, both symphonic and chamber. The second concert in the first series takes place tonight.

Last night the first student orchestra of the Center gave a concert under the critical eyes of the faculty members and the appreciative eyes of a large invited audience. The conductors were students having a fling at waving a baton.

Koussevitsky's Birthday.

Honoring Dr. Koussevitzky's 73rd birthday, a group of students from the Berkshire Music Center's choral department sang a Bach composition to special words in praise of the good doctor. Just before that, Leonard Bernstein announced that he had written a piece dedicated to Dr. Kousevitzky's anniversary. The composition was scored for 11 brass and one string instrument. He conducted it.

The young directors of the musical program were Irving Fine, who led his companions in Beethoven's "Consecration of the House" overture; Harry John Brown, who did likewise for the Howard Hanson "Serenade" for flute, harp and strings; Gerard Samuel who exercised his batonistic prerogatives over the first movement of the Stravinsky Symphony in three movements; and Eleazar De Carvalho, a highly promising youth who led the musicians in Bocchecini's "Concerto in B-flat" for cello and orcrestra with soloist Aldo Parisot, and the Richard Strauss symphonic poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

Dramatic Program Arranged.

Mr. Bernstein, with a strong penchant for the dramatic in program devising, has selected the overture to Mozart's "Magic Flute," the Stravinsky "Sacre Du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C-major, No. 7. These will be played tomorrow afternoon.

The Berkshire Symphony Festival consists of the three series of three concerts by the Boston Symphony, whereas the festival proper relates to the entire five weeks of public performances, including chamber concerts, the Mozart opera, "Idomeneo," to be given by the students on Aug. 4 and 5 under the direction of the gifted Boris Goldovsky, programs of operatic scenes, and a host of like activities.

The festival actually began on July 13, when Serge Koussevitzky conducted an all-Bach program. An all-Mozart program, again under Dr. Koussevitzky was offered on July 20.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

[illegible] 1947

'Tanglewood' Program This Week Unusual

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, WORC-ABC will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival Tuesday night to 9.30 p. m., EDT.

Designated as "Music for All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast, will include the taking of motion pictures for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood." This will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its Summer home have been filmed for the screen.

The finale of the day's schedule will be the playing of important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years. These will be alternated with "live" playing by the ensemble. A demonstration of a new radio-phonograph also will be held.

Ella Goldstein, 20-year old pianist, will [illegible] Miss Goldstein, who played [illegible] than 200 concerts with [illegible]stine Symphony Orchestra will participate in both numbers to be heard on the air.

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 27 19

THERE WILL BE A

. . . special concert at Tanglewood, Mass. for the Berkshire Music festival now in progress there, on Tuesday evening and a portion of the concert will be heard on the usual Tuesday broadcast of the Boston Symphony over the American network. The event is called "Music for All" and is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public — the phonograph, the radio and motion pictures.

MOZART OPERA AT TANGLEW'D

Details of the pending production of Mozart's three act opera Idomeneo, on August 4 and 6 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., has been announced. This opera will then have its first performance in this country. It will be under the direction of Boris Goldovsky and will be staged by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The cast of singers, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, as was the case when "Peter Grimes" was performed at Tanglewood last summer. The title part of 'Idomeneo' will be sung by Joseph Lader[illegible] Idamante, a part written by Mozart for a casthato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, alternated in the two performances by Elizabeth Ann Bollinger and Dorothy Dawson. The Princess Ilia of Troy will be sung by Nancy Trickey; Elettra, daughter of Agmemnon, by Paula Lenchner, and the High Priest of Neptune by Frank Guarrera.

The performance will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Monday evening, August 4 and Wednesday evening, August 6. Admission will be by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Great Development Ahead at Tanglewood, Says Dr. Koussevitzky on 73d Birthday

First Five Years Were Only The Beginning

"The progress made at Tanglewood in five years is only the beginning of a great development," declared Dr. Serge Koussevitzky when interviewed on his 73d birthday today.

In his living room at Seranac, overlooking Tanglewood, Stockbridge Bowl and Mount Everett in the distance, the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who initiated the Berkshire Music Center to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts, said:

"We have many things to do in musical art, and the purpose is not only to come to study and go home. It is to go home and share with people in their communities what is learned and experienced here, to develop musical art, to lead people to musical culture and so to culture in general.

"That is what we are doing already. We know the progress of the boys and girls who have come to Tanglewood. We know the positions they have. We know how many first players are in leading orchestras. We have followed the careers of singers and conductors. Already we have developed here several brilliant conductors. I will mention two names of my assistants, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazer deCarvalho." Bernstein will conduct two of the Festival concerts, the first tomorrow.

Picture Is Changing

"Carvalho will go to his native Brazil after the Festival to conduct there. He will take American music with him. The relationship of America with other countries is closer because for the first time in history, foreigners are being sent to America—to Tanglewood—to study music. It used to be that Americans went abroad to study music."

"All that we have done is introduction to what we expect to do in the future," Dr. Koussevitzky repeated. "I hope very soon we shall begin to create great compositions here at Tanglewood. There are outstanding composers here already, but there will be more. The most important players and writers will work together on musical dramas and tragedies that will be in the Greek tradition, but the subject will be of our own time. We have no less tragedies in our lives than the Greeks had."

'A New Step'

"I hope," he continued, "to have the greatest virtuosi, violinists, pianists and 'cellists to teach young soloists to play. For instance, how to play Beethoven or Brahms concerti. It will be a new step."

Asked to comment on "Idomeneo," the Mozart opera that will be performed at Tanglewood for the first time in America during the last week of the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky said it was chosen because it is seldom heard, because it is long, difficult and not considered a success. "We have tried to overcome the difficulties," he said.

Never Heard 'Idomeneo'

He told of the search for the complete material of "Idomeneo," which has been collected at great effort from many parts of the world. "I have never heard it," he said, "and have never known of its being performed, but I can tell from the music it is one of the most beautiful operas ever written."

With 10 candles burning, marking the 10th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky cuts his birthday cake at a party held in his honor last night. With him is Lester Roberts of Lenox, a member of the Tanglewood advisory committee and manager of the Curtis Hotel.

Regarding the future of the Berkshire Festival, the conductor said: "That is established. Our only problem is to make the repertoire as varied as possible and to maintain the highest musical standard."

It will be a tradition, he announced, that one week each season be dedicated to the music of one composer, as a week in 1946 was dedicated to the music of Brahms and this season the second series of concerts will be, with an extra program, to the work of Beethoven.

Another tradition will be a concert each year for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center. Next Tuesday, July 29, will be the first.

Impressed With Students

"One is impressed," Dr. Koussevitzky concluded, "by the quality of the student material. This year it is higher than ever before in all departments. The orchestra is already splendid, though they have been working together a few short weeks. The chorus was never so good, and the singers and pianists are of the highest quality."

In addition to directing the school, teaching his class in conducting, rehearsing and conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in all but three of the 14 Festival concerts and the extra concert on Tuesday. Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted the student orchestra and attends many of the student activities and chamber music programs, especially the opera scenes and the Friday night symphony concerts which his students and assistants conduct.

Students Entertain

With the playing of a canon, composed for the occasion, the singing of a cantata and the presentation of a cake, students of the Berkshire Music Center celebrated Dr. Koussevitzky's 73d birthday at a concert by the student orchestra at Tanglewood last night.

After intermission, before an audience of 2200, the largest for a student concert this season, Leonard Bernstein, Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant in teaching conducting and former pupil, conducted a canon entitled "Fanfare for Bima," based on the tune with which the director calls his black cocker spaniel, Bemoll, fondly called Bima.

The choral group sang a cantata, under the direction of Hugh Ross, with words to the music of Bach's "Wedding Cantata." on the theme, "Koussevitzky, may you prosper all your whole life long."

After the concert, conducted by students of his class and his assistant, Eleazar deCarvalho, Dr. Koussevitzky, in his "green room" behind the stage, cut a cake provided by Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel.

Tanglewood

Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, wil play the second concert in the subscription season tonight at 8.15. William Primrose will be the viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" Symphony. The program will include Barber's Overture "School for Scandal" and Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, teacher of composition and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, who will be present. The concert will start at 8.15.

Tomorrow Afternoon

Leonard Bernstein will be the first guest conductor at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 when he conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's symphony in C major.

Morning Concert

Under the direction of William Primrose, acting head of chamber music, a concert will be given tomorrow morning at 10.30 in the chamber music hall.

Opera Scenes

Scenes from eight operas will be performed tomorrow evening at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall, with orchestral accompaniment. The excerpts will be: Duets from Act 1 of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," prologue from Gounod's "Faust," Donizetti's "La Favorita," the sextet from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera," the duet scene of Act 2 from Wagner's "Lohengrin," excerpt from Mozart's "Magic Flute" and a duet from the second act of "Carmen."

The scenes are prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department; Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl, Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl, Frederic Waldman and Felix Wolfes, with Richard Rychtarik, scenic director.

HARRISBURG, PA.
TELEGRAPH

JUL 26 1947

List Programs At Tanglewood

Sunday afternoon's concert marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood.

The program is made up of the Overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, No. 7.

"Music for All," the special added event on Tuesday, July 29, is creating wide interest and is expected to attract many visitors from distant points. In addition to a full concert by the orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, there will be demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments of science for musical reproduction, including radio, phonograph, motion pictures, and television.

The evening's program begins at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the Theatre-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

In a different vein the film program will have as a curtain-raiser the now historic Disney cartoon, "Mickey's Grand Opera." For those unable to reach Tanglewood on time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the motion pictures at 11 p. m.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8.30 o'clock, in the Shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company.

The Vivaldi Concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture first motion pictures of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood ultimately to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity." There will be examples of records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several of them landmarks in phonographic art, over the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," RCA Victor's first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1947

Students Conduct At Berkshire Fete

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The day after the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was not exactly a day of rest for the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For one thing, there was a rehearsal in the morning of Leonard Bernstein's program, which he is scheduled to conduct tomorrow afternoon.

For another, the first desk players of the orchestra had a rather heavy day at the Berkshire Music Center, where they comprise the faculty in orchestral playing, both symphonic and chamber. The second concert in the first series takes place tonight.

Last night the first student orchestra of the Center gave a concert under the critical eyes of the faculty members and the appreciative eyes of a large invited audience. The conductors were students having a fling at waving a baton.

Koussevitsky's Birthday.

Honoring Dr. Koussevitzky's 73rd birthday, a group of students from the Berkshire Music Center's choral department sang a Bach composition to special words in praise of the good doctor. Just before that, Leonard Bernstein announced that he had written a piece dedicated to Dr. Kousevitzky's anniversary. The composition was scored for 11 brass and one string instrument. He conducted it.

The young directors of the musical program were Irving Fine, who led his companions in Beethoven's "Consecration of the House" overture; Harry John Brown, who did likewise for the Howard Hanson "Serenade" for flute, harp and strings; Gerard Samuel who exercised his batonistic prerogatives over the first movement of the Stravinsky Symphony in three movements; and Eleazar De Carvalho, a highly promising youth who led the musicians in Bocchecini's "Concerto in B-flat" for cello and orcrestra with soloist Aldo Parisot, and the Richard Strauss symphonic poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

Dramatic Program Arranged.

Mr. Bernstein, with a strong penchant for the dramatic in program devising, has selected the overture to Mozart's "Magic Flute," the Stravinsky "Sacre Du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C-major, No. 7. These will be played tomorrow afternoon.

The Berkshire Symphony Festival consists of the three series of three concerts by the Boston Symphony, whereas the festival proper relates to the entire five weeks of public performances, including chamber concerts, the Mozart opera, "Idomeneo," to be given by the students on Aug. 4 and 5 under the direction of the gifted Boris Goldovsky, programs of operatic scenes, and a host of like activities.

The festival actually began on July 13, when Serge Koussevitzky conducted an all-Bach program. An all-Mozart program, again under Dr. Koussevitzky was offered on July 20.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

[illegible] 1947

'Tanglew Program Week Un

Climaxing an all-c ance illustrating the tivities of the Boston Orchestra, WORC-ABC sent the third broadc series from the Berksh Festival Tuesday nigh p. m., EDT.

Designated as "Music the day's activities, in ad the broadcast, will incl taking of motion picture movie to be called "The Se Tanglewood." This will first time the Boston Sym Orchestra and its Summer have been filmed for the s an eng n New awfully

The finale of the day's sch will be the playing of impo recordings made by the orch during the past 32 years. Th will be alternated with "li playing by the ensemble. A de onstration of a new radio-phone graph also will be held.

Ella Gold[illegible] 20-year old pianist, will be [illegible] Miss Goldstein, who played more than 200 concerts with the Palestine Symphony Orchestra will participate in both numbers to be heard on the air.

l. "Ma
, no le
She is
w. so s may y com a fore n a ing a Can ng ab it mu ered com happ that ha pern keep it in nea res
D

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 27 19

THERE WILL BE A

. . . special concert at Tanglewood, Mass. for the Berkshire Music festival now in progress there, on Tuesday evening and a portion of the concert will be heard on the usual Tuesday broadcast of the Boston Symphony over the American network. The event is called "Music for All" and is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public — the phonograph, the radio and motion pictures.

MOZART OPERA AT TANGLEW'D

Details of the pending production of Mozart's three act opera Idomeneo, on August 4 and 6 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have been announced. This opera will then have its first performance in this country. It will be under the direction of Boris Goldovsky and will be staged by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The cast of singers, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, as was the case when "Peter Grimes" was performed at Tanglewood last summer. The title part of 'Idomeneo' will be sung by Joseph Laderoute. Idamante, a part written by Mozart for a casthato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, alternated in the two performances by Elizabeth Ann Bollinger and Dorothy Dawson. The Princess Ilia of Troy will be sung by Nancy Trickey; Elettra, daughter of Agmemnon, by Paula Lenchner, and the High Priest of Neptune by Frank Guarrera.

The performance will take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Monday evening, August 4 and Wednesday evening, August 6. Admission will be by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

11

[51]

SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1947.

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.]

WORK BY HONEGGER IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Premiere of 'Symphony for Strings' Marks First of Programs in Berkshire Festival

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 24 — The first concert of the Boston Symphony series of the Berkshire Music Festival was given tonight in the Music Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, with an audience which far outnumbered the seating capacity of the outdoor auditorium and heard the first festival performance of Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" as the beginning of the program.

This symphony, composed in Paris in 1941 during the German occupation, is a work of extraordinary workmanship and feeling. Mr. Honegger, who habitually jests and who does not carry his heart on his sleeve, told the writer that people were mistaken who read into his final movement, with the entrance of the solo trumpet in its concluding measures, an effect of defiance.

"I simply decided," he said, "that, as the score stood, the melody carried by the first violins would be over-balanced by the other voices, so I strengthened the part of the violins with the first trumpet—the best instrument, I think, for doubling, under such circumstances."

Unable to Attend Concert

Mr. Honegger, unfortunately confined to his bed here and therefore unable to attend the concert, added that his French colleagues had found the earlier movements of the symphony rather somber, "but then, the time in Paris was not too cheerful."

The which Mr. Honegger may tell, if he pleases, to his grandmother. The symphony is written with intense emotion. It is stark and powerful to a degree in the carrying through of the ideas. The evolution of a very simple, germinal motive for the violas at the beginning proceeds not only in markedly organic but very dramatic fashion. Melodic and rhythmical unfoldments of this theme predominate in the opening movement, unmistakably expressive as well as constructive in its purposes.

It can properly be said that a listener need not be particularly interested in the machinery of a composition, and that he is concerned, first and last, with what it says. But in this work admiration for its structure mingles with the thrill communicated by its emotional content. It is tragical music, rising at times to pitch of extreme tension and not the less eloquent for the dissonance of its counterpoint and its frequently polyharmonic method.

The slow movement, in the lyrical vein, continues to unfold melodic elements contained in the opening idea—this in wholly new ways with figure treatment which in places is related to that of the Passacaglia.

But, again, one thinks past the masterly means employed to the poignancy of the expression. As for the finale, whether Mr. Honegger wishes to "blague" about it or not; whether, even, he is sincere in his blithe statement that it has nothing to do with such an idea, it is in fact music of strength and intrepid spirit. Nor has the immensely effective entrance of the trumpet, at the end, any less than the effect of the chorale of the resolute warrior. Incidentally, this motive, as finally given to the trumpet, has the sensation, with all the modern counterpoint placed against it, of a simple, solemn, major key chorale in the old Lutheran spirit.

A Koussevitzky Evening

The music is couched in such truly heroic terms with such a complete absence of sentimentalism, or self-conscious "theatre," that it rings like the truest steel, with a most refreshing masculinity. It is of emotional realities. We consider it the strongest score of Mr. Honegger, and the one the most stripped to essentials that we have heard from him, the deepest in meaning and the most terse and concentrated of his symphonic writings.

Doubtless the masterly performance given by Koussevitzky and the orchestra had much to do with its effect. A superb score was unfolded magisterially. One can add to this that it was a Koussevitzky evening.

He followed the Honegger composition with his famous interpretation, though it is never precisely the same interpretation, of Debussy's "La Mer." It is conducting of such glamour that, as conducting pure and simple, by a conductor and an orchestra of supreme virtuosity, it is irresistible. There is the glowing, shimmering orchestra, which, through long years of association, the conductor has at hair-trigger control, and there is the iridescent music of Debussy. The listener is intoxicated by the splendor of the experience.

The admirably balanced and contrasted program ended with another of the interpretations that has deservedly found a special place in the esteem of these festival audiences—that of the mellow wisdom and the nature poetry of the Brahms D Major Symphony, particularly apropos of the hills and forests that flank the music shed at Tanglewood.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 25 1947

The Old and the New On Berkshire Program

First Shed Concert in Tanglewood Series Includes Brahms, Debussy and Honegger; Thousands On Hand to Hear Boston Symphony

Serge Koussevitzky, master of the Boston and Tanglewood music makers, demonstrated his program craftsmanship with disturbing conviction last night. He held his audience firmly by the ears, eyes and mind; and they were satisfied.

The occasion was the third in the current series of Berkshire festival concerts, with the usual mixture of students, average listeners and dabblers in culture on hand for an evening of Honegger, Debussy and Brahms.

There are those who would argue the Koussevitzky mastery. He is accused, by these, of extraneous showmanship—of grimaces and motions beyond the needs of leadership in music and in men. That argument, fortunately, is to be avoided here.

The point is this: Our subject for today has within the scope of his talents a consummate understanding of musical audiences. (That word "musical" may be misplaced, but it must serve.) He knows what they want and when to give it to them. He also knows what he and his men do best.

Brahms' second symphony, as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is an exciting and rewarding event. It has long been among the two or three works on which the conductor could depend: For effect and for stirring his listeners to peaks of emotional elan.

Brahms' second appeared last on last night's program.

Debussy's "La Mer" is another Koussevitzky best seller. In the 20 to 30 Boston concerts enjoyed by this listener, the colorful French depiction of ocean waters has been included at least nine times. Under the leader's impulse, it drives and smashes on the listener's ears; under his palette, it shines and glows in the imagination.

Debussy's "La Mer" was second on the program, or what is more significant, it occupied the middle and central portion of the evening's music making.

Much of the tremendous crowd was still on the outskirts of festival grounds and not in a position to fully appreciate proceedings when the provocative doctor opened with Honegger.

The Symphony for String Orchestra was first performed in the United States by this same orchestra less than a year ago. It is dated 1941.

Those who heard it for the first time yesterday were, as always in first hearings, divided in their opinions. Some, known to the writer, felt the new work is short on ideas and lacking in expression of what ideas there are. Others, including the writer, sensed much good in it; heard a compelling exposition of moods, and liked its soft sounds.

So much of latter-day production is noisy and harsh; this Honegger work is a pleasing exception. Limited as it is to string orchestra—with one superb trumpet break-in in the concluding chorale—this observation may appear obvious. Yet even smaller pieces confined to the strings have upset the equilibrium. Filled with disonances and metallic harmonies, they have not been easily acceptable. The new symphony happily avoids the errors of many of its contemporaries.

Whether or not the Honegger piece "embodies much of the mood of occupied Paris," as one reviewer has claimed, matters little. It is to be heard long after occupation of Paris is forgotten.

Dr. Koussevitzky was wise to include a successor to the established masters of other years. But Honegger was overwhelmed by all that followed—and that's the disturbing element in the conductor's program artistry.

D. H. W.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUL 27 1947

Guest Artist At Berkshire Festival

Frances Yeend, young American soprano, will be guest artist at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Tuesday, August 5, when she will sing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and Saturday, August 9, when she will sing Mozart's Requiem, conducted by Robert Shaw. Miss Yeend appeared at Tanglewood last year in the final concert of the Festival when she created the leading soprano role in the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes."

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD

JUL 26 1947

Boston Symphony Berkshires Festival

This year's Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockton, Massachusetts, will provide many interesting features in addtion to characteristic symphony programs.

On Tuesday evening, July 29 at 8:30 will be given a special concert called "Music For All" at the Music Shed. Portions of this concert will be reproduced in a forthcoming moving picture, showing this particular audience with the soloist, Ella Goldstein, playing the Tschaikowski Piano Concerto No. 1. On the same evening, preceding this concert, the orchestra will play in the Theatre-Concert Hall at 7 "Music in the Movies." Excerpts from films with music by Copland, Prokoffief, Thomson and Walton will be heard once more.

A Beethoven Cycle will include the first three symphonies on Thursday evening, July 31 at 8:15; Symphony No. 4 and 5 and the Emperor Piano Concerto played by Jacob Lateiner on Saturday evening, August 2 at 8:15; and Symphonies Nos. 6 and 7 with the Piano Concerto in A Major played by Joseph Battista on Sunday afternoon August 3 at 3:30.

Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies will be given Tuesday evening, August 5 at 7:30.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday evening, August 7 at 8:15 featuring Ruth Posselt, violinist, as soloist in the Hindemith Violin Concerto.

Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, August 9 at 8:15, when the chorus will sing the Bach Cantata "Nun ist das Heil," the Stravinski "Symphony of Psalms," and the Mozart "Requien." On Sunday afternoon, August 10 at 3:30 Mr. Shaw will conduct a program of Martinu, Ravel and Tscahikowski.

Tomorrow Mr. Bernstein will conduct at 3:30 a concert of Mozart, Stravinski and Schubert Symphony No. 7.

The first American performance of Mozart's great opera "Idomeneo" will be produced at Tanglewood, directed and conducted by Boris Goldowski. Mr. Goldowski has brought the opera to performable length by omitting unimportant sub-plots. Considered Mozart's greatest opera seria, the opera will comprise the oustandng effort of the Berkshire Music Center. Admission will be by invitation only.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 26 1947

Will Make History at Festival

Picture of a conductor relaxing. Caught in an informal pose on the lawn at Tanglewood, Leonard Bernstein, one of America's rising young orchestra leaders, chats with friends. Bernstein, a former student at the Berkshire Music Festival, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra there tomorrow afternoon, for the first time in the history of Tanglewood series.

music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8.30 p.m. in the Shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company. Engineers, director, and announcers will be operating in full view of the audience.

The Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture first motion picture of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood ultimately to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity." There will be examples of records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several of them landmarks in phonographic art, over the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," RCA Victor's first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the Orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

RCA Victor has earmarked the first 200 sets of "The Berkshire," named in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

Series B, which will cover all the Symphonies of Beethoven, will begin Thursday evening, July 31, with Nos. 1, 2, and 3, the "Eroica." Saturday evening August 2, will bring Nos. 4 and 5 and the Fifth ("Emporer") Poano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist.

TANGLEWOOD IS SET FOR FIRST NIGHT PROGRAM

Dr. Koussevitsky Will Conduct Symphony Thursday Evening

The first concert of Series A of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., wil open on Thursday evening, July 24 when Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger. It will include "The Sea", Three orchestral sketches by Debussy and Brahm's 2nd symphony and on Saturday evening the program will [illegible] of Barber's "School [illegible] Scandal", Copland's Symphony [illegible] and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" symphony, with a viola solo by W[illegible] Primrose, acting head of the [illegible] music department at T[illegible].

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27th at 2:3[illegible] conducted by Leonard Bernstein, [illegible] the following program: M[illegible] "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'" [illegible] Stravinsky, Le Sacre [illegible] Printemps [illegible] Schubert's Symphony in C [illegible]

A rehearsal [illegible] the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be [illegible] to the public for the benefit of [illegible] pension fund

---

Singers for American Premiere in Berkshires of Mozart's "Idomeneo"

The singers have been announced for the American premiere at Tanglewood in the Berkshires of Mozart's opera "Idomeneo, King of Crete." There will be performances Aug. 4 and 6.

The cast, chosen from members of the Berkshire Music Center, will be as follows: Idomeneo, Joseph Laderoute, tenor; Idamante (written for a castrato), Elizabeth Ann Bollinger (Aug. 4) and Dorothy Dawson (Aug. 6), sopranos; Princess Ilia of Troy, Nancy Trickey, soprano; Electra, Paula Lenchner; high priest of Neptune, Frank Guarrera.

First performed on Jan. 29, 1781, two days after Mozart's 25th birthday, "Idomeneo" has since enjoyed occasional performances in Europe. Three of the great Mozart scholars, Alfred Einstein, Edward J. Dent and W. J. Turner, rate "Idomeneo" very highly.

Boris Goldovsky will conduct. He has prepared the score, for no printed parts exist. It will be sung in the original Italian. The scenery has been designed by Richard Rychtarik. Fre[illegible] Cohen, Felix Wolfes, Elsa Ka[illegible] [illegible]ederic Waldman of the op[illegible] [illegible]nt have assisted Mr. Gold[illegible] [illegible]dmission will be by invita[illegible] [illegible]e Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, first concert of Series A. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, Thursday night at the Music Shed, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program

Symphony for Strings .... Honegger
La Mer .... Debussy
Symphony No. 2, in D major .... Brahms

Strings Outdoors

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave last night under the shed in Tanglewood its first subscription concert of the season's Berkshire festival. The program was a pleasant one and the execution, so far as could be judged in the semi-outdoor circumstances, impeccable.

The audience was large, the applause massive. The whole occasion, indeed, was impressive, if not entirely satisfactory acousically.

Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra sounds better in its shed than most other orchestras do in their summer circumstances, there is still no getting around the fact that strings do not carry well in the open air.

The brass carries beautifully, and the woodwinds fairly well. The ensemble, however, for sheer acoustical reasons, bears little relation to that of the same organization as heard indoors in the winter. The music is the same, the conductor is the same and their care for the musical amenities is not less. But one simply does not hear out front all the refinements of execution that are being observed on the platform.

This general acoustic imprecision was particularly disadvantageous to Arthur Honeger's Symphony for Strings. If your announcer had not heard the work previously (he reviewed from Paris last summer), he would be at some difficulty to estimate its qualities fairly. It is a better piece, assuredly, than it sounded last night. Its simple thematic structure was clear, but its fluid contrapuntal texture gave rather an effect of confusion than of richness. Everybody seemed relieved when, at the end of the work, a trumpet was heard playing above the general hubbud a tune in simple hymn style.

Whether it is fair play on Mr. Honeger's part to have recourse to the trumpet in a symphony entitled "for strings" I leave to the public to judge. Certainly the brass instrument livens up the sound of his piece at that point, relieves the mounting monotony of string sounds and gives the whole a simple and straightforward "punch." Without it, it is doubtful whether the work would make anything like the effect it does, though the tune the trumpet plays is present in the first violins. It is to be hoped that Mr. Koussevitsky (or possibly Mr. Muench, who conducts this piece most effectively) will give New York a chance next season (Boston already has heard it) to make its acquaintance. I know from previous hearings that it is a serious and agreeable work.

Last night's concert included also Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms's Second Symphony. The first had moments of passionate conviction, but it was the second that, being by nature less refined orchestrally, suffered least among the three works played from that disorganization of balances that is inevitable to the outdoor performance of orchestral music. It is charming to hear good music in the summertime, but folly to pretend that the summer's open-air acoustics are comparable to those of a good concert hall.

Arthur Honegger

Whose Symphony for Strings was played in Thursday night's Berkshire Festival Concert

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1947

Koussevitzky Is 73; Conducts At Tanglewood

Receives Cello and Violin for Use at Center as Part of Birthday Celebration

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky celebrated his seventy-third birthday here today by conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several hours in the music shed at Tanglewood, including the first of the Saturday morning public rehearsals and the second concert of Berkshire festivals regular subscription series in the evening. Half of the evening program was devoted to music by American composers, Samuel Barber's overture for "The School for Scandal" and the Third Symphony of Aaron Copland, who is assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday was hailed both at this morning's rehearsal and at last night's concert of the Berkshire Music Center's advanced student orchestra. At the rehearsal he received a century-old cello from Abram Chasins, composer-pianist, and a 150-year-old violin from Constance Keene, pianist. The gifts will be the first items in a collection of instruments to be used by students at the center. Mr. Chasins was a member of the center's first faculty at Tanglewood in 1940 and Miss Keene studied there in 1941. She received the violin from Dr. Seymour Rogers, of New York, for presentation to a gifted student. The cello had been sent to Mr. Chasins by Dr. Henry H. Stevens, of Yarmouth Port, Mass.

In his presentation speech Mr. Chasins said that fine instruments and Dr. Koussevitzky have this in common—as they grow older they grow better. The conductor spoke briefly in thanks.

The surprise observance of Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday by the students at last night's concert began with a "Fanfare for Bima," composed and conducted by Leonard Bernstein. Bima or, more formally, Bemol, the French title for a flat, is the name of Dr. Koussevitzky's cocker spaniel and the theme of this engaging piece for eleven brass instruments and one violin is the tune to which the spaniel responds. Mr. Bernstein said that the fanfare would be long. It took about thirty seconds.

Hugh Ross then conducted a student chorus in an excerpt from Bach's Wedding Cantata with the text duly adapted for the occasion. The last two works on the program, Boccerini's cello concerto in B flat with Aldo Parisot as soloist and Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" were conducted by Eleazar De Carvalho, a young Brazilian who is Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant in the center's conducting department.

In the Strauss tone poem his direction gave an impression of talent in a responsive performance. In the Boccherini concerto Mr Parisot, also a Brazilian, gave a musically interpretation with a consistently pleasing tone.

Irving Fine conducted Beethoven's overture, "The Consecration of the House." Lois Schaefer and Mary Stemm were soloists in Howard Hanson's serenada for flute, harp and strings with Harry John Brown conducting. Gerald Samuel conducted the first movement of Stravinsky's symphony.

Tonight's program was completed with the symphony "Harold in Italy," by Berlioz. William Primrose played the solo viola. This concert and the third subscription concert tomorrow afternoon will be reviewed in Monday's New York Herald Tribune.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 26 1947

Music Festival Hears Boston Symphony

With Koussevitzky Conducting, Berkshire Group Hears Works Of Three Composers

By D. E. RITZ

The 10th season of the Berkshire Festival opened Thursday evening at Tanglewood, Mass., with the performance of Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The work, in which the score is dated at Paris in October, 1941, includes some of the best modern string writing that the reviewer has been privileged to hear. The mood is intense with the first two movements on the quiet side and the third in sharp contrast. The "Vivace, non troppo" achieves an effect of almost frenzied gaiety. Near the end one suddenly hears the trumpets, which double the first violins in a noble chorale, and the symphony finishes on a note of triumph. The symphony has been performed in Zurich and other Swiss cities by Paul Sacher, to whom it was dedicated, and was first performed in this country by the Boston Symphony under the guest conductor, Charles Munch, on Dec. 27, 1946.

The balance of the program included Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' "Symphony number 2 in D major, opus 73."

"La Mer" came as a remarkable foil to the Honegger composition and the Brahms symphony brought one further back into accepted orchestral repertoire. The entire program was another tribute to the skill of Dr. Koussevitzky as a designer and interpreter.

Tonight's festival program will include two compositions by American composers, Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal" and Aaron Copeland's "Symphony number 3," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music foundation, also the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" symphony with William Primrose as the viola soloist. Dr. Koussevitzky will again conduct.

Tomorrow afternoon Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Mozart overture to "The Magic Flute," "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Stravinsky and the Schubert Symphony in C major

---

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
NEWS

JUL 27 1947

'Music for All' Aired by ABC

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival on Tuesday, July 29, from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. EDT.

Designated as "Music For All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast, will include the taking of motion pictures by M-G-M for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood." This will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its Summer home have been filmed for the screen.

With Serge Koussevitzky on the podium, the audience will see the filming of the ABC broadcast, with producer William L. Marshall, announced Gene Hamilton and the engineering staff working in full view of the listeners.

The finale of the day's schedule will be the playing of important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years. These will be alternated with "live" playing by the ensemble. A demonstration of a new radio-phonograph also will be held.

For the ABC broadcast, Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old pianist, will be soloist. Miss Goldstein, who played more than 200 concerts with the Palestine Symphony Orchestra will participate in both numbers to be heard on the air. The program follows:

Concerto in D minor for Organ and Orchestra (transcribed for piano and orchestra by Siloti)—Vivaldi.

Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor for piano and Orchestra—Tchaikovsky.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 27 1947

To Give Mozart's Opera 'Idomeneo' at Music Center

MOZART'S opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 in his 24th year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUL 27 1947

Varied Musical

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood on Tuesday will show latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction: Recording, radio, television and motion pictures.

"The March of Musical Fidelity" will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year intervals back to 1915.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1947

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

C. B. S.'s Boston station does carry the Sunday afternoon broadcasts of the C. B. S. Symphony; and so on July 13 I heard Malipiero's Symphony No. 3, or "Symphony of the Bells," which was only the latest example of his dreary "modern" writing. On the same program was a Symphony in F by Hermann Goetz, described by the announcer as a contemporary of Brahms with whose work Goetz's had been compared—which turned out to be, instead, extraordinarily Wagnerian in idiom, but without the Wagnerian pretentiousness, and in fact just a quietly and fluently melodious and sunny work. One curious result of hearing these works was to make some of the things in Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, which preceded the Malipiero symphony, seem more startlingly lovely and daring than ever before, and Chabrier's "Marche joyeuse," which followed the Goetz, more refreshingly untraditional.

Last Sunday's broadcast of the C. B. S. Symphony offered David Diamond's new Symphony No. 2. I recognize the specific talent involved in the mere business of keeping the musical apparatus going for forty minutes; but for my ears that was the only talent involved in Diamond's symphony. What I heard gave me the impression of the apparatus being kept going not by genuine expressive impulse translating itself into achieved statement, but only by sheer determination straining for something it could not attain.

* * *

A. B. C.'s opening broadcast from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 15 was scheduled for 8:30; but what one got at that time, for unexplained reasons, was the improvising of a studio organist, which continued until 8:45. And what one got thereafter from Tanglewood was a mouthful of straw: Bach's Suite No. 1 and his Concerto in C for two claviers, written by the composer of the charming Suite No. 2 and the tremendous Concerto in D minor, but nevertheless examples of the collection of arid formulas and mannerisms which his craftsmanship could turn out mechanically while his mind and energies were engaged in some other activity.

The lovely playing of the Boston Symphony in the suite came through with proper balance; but the microphone placement for the concerto resulted in [illegible] complete blanketing of the orchestra by the pianos that were pounded insensitively by Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, first concert of Series A, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, Thursday night at the Music Shed, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program:

Symphony for Strings .... Honegger
La Mer .... Debussy
Symphony No. 2, in D major .... Brahms

Strings Outdoors

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave last night under the shed in Tanglewood its first subscription concert of the season's Berkshire festival. The program was a pleasant one and the execution, so far as could be judged in the semi-outdoor circumstances, impeccable.

The audience was large, the applause massive. The whole occasion, indeed, was impressive, if not entirely satisfactory acousically.

Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra sounds better in its shed than most other orchestras do in their summer circumstances, there is still no getting around the fact that strings do not carry well in the open air.

The brass carries beautifully, and the woodwinds fairly well. The ensemble, however, for sheer acoustical reasons, bears little relation to that of the same organization as heard indoors in the winter. The music is the same, the conductor is the same and their care for the musical amenities is not less. But one simply does not hear out front all the refinements of execution that are being observed on the platform.

This general acoustic imprecision was particularly disadvantageous to Arthur Honeger's Symphony for Strings. If your announcer had not heard the work previously (he reviewed from Paris last summer), he would be at some difficulty to estimate its qualities fairly. It is a better piece, assuredly, than it sounded last night. Its simple thematic structure was clear, but its fluid contrapuntal texture gave rather an effect of confusion than of richness. Everybody seemed relieved when, at the end of the work, a trumpet was heard playing above the general hubbud a tune in simple hymn style.

Arthur Honegger

Whose Symphony for Strings was played in Thursday night's Berkshire Festival Concert

Whether it is fair play on Mr. Honeger's part to have recourse to the trumpet in a symphony entitled "for strings" I leave to the public to judge. Certainly the brass instrument livens up the sound of his piece at that point, relieves the mounting monotony of string sounds and gives the whole a simple and straightforward "punch." Without it, it is doubtful whether the work would make anything like the effect it does, though the tune the trumpet plays is present in the first violins. It is to be hoped that Mr. Koussevitsky (or possibly Mr. Muench, who conducts this piece most effectively) will give New York a chance next season (Boston already has heard it) to make its acquaintance. I know from previous hearings that it is a serious and agreeable work.

Last night's concert included also Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms's Second Symphony. The first had moments of passionate conviction, but it was the second that, being by nature less refined orchestrally, suffered least among the three works played from that disorganization of balances that is inevitable to the outdoor performance of orchestral music. It is charming to hear good music in the summertime, but folly to pretend that the summer's open-air acoustics are comparable to those of a good concert hall.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 26 1947

Music Festival Hears Boston Symphony

With Koussevitzky Conducting, Berkshire Group Hears Works Of Three Composers

By D. E. RITZ

The 10th season of the Berkshire Festival opened Thursday evening at Tanglewood, Mass., with the performance of Honegger's "Symphony for Strings" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The work, in which the score is dated at Paris in October, 1941, includes some of the best modern string writing that the reviewer has been privileged to hear. The mood is intense with the first two movements on the quiet side and the third in sharp contrast. The "Vivace, non troppo" achieves an effect of almost frenzied gaiety. Near the end one suddenly hears the trumpets, which double the first violins in a noble chorale, and the symphony finishes on a note of triumph. The symphony has been performed in Zurich and other Swiss cities by Paul Sacher, to whom it was dedicated, and was first performed in this country by the Boston Symphony under the guest conductor, Charles Munch, on Dec. 27, 1946.

The balance of the program included Débussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' "Symphony number 2 in D major, opus 73."

"La Mer" came as a remarkable foil to the Honegger composition and the Brahms symphony brought one further back into accepted orchestral repertoire. The entire program was another tribute to the skill of Dr. Koussevitzky as a designer and interpreter.

Tonight's festival program will include two compositions by American composers, Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal" and Aaron Copeland's "Symphony number 3," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music foundation, also the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" symphony with William Primrose as the viola soloist. Dr. Koussevitzky will again conduct.

Tomorrow afternoon Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Mozart overture to "The Magic Flute," "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Stravinsky and the Schubert Symphony in [illegible] major

---

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 27 1947

To Give Mozart's Opera 'Idomeneo' at Music Center

MOZART'S opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780 in his 24th year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUL 27 1947

Varied Musical

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood on Tuesday will show latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction: Recording, radio, television and motion pictures.

"The March of Musical Fidelity" will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year intervals back to 1915.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1947

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

C. B. S.'s Boston station does carry the Sunday afternoon broadcasts of the C. B. S. Symphony; and so on July 13 I heard Malipiero's Symphony No. 3, or "Symphony of the Bells," which was only the latest example of his dreary "modern" writing. On the same program was a Symphony in F by Hermann Goetz, described by the announcer as a contemporary of Brahms with whose work Goetz's had been compared—which turned out to be, instead, extraordinarily Wagnerian in idiom, but without the Wagnerian pretentiousness, and in fact just a quietly and fluently melodious and sunny work. One curious result of hearing these works was to make some of the things in Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, which preceded the Malipiero symphony, seem more startlingly lovely and daring than ever before, and Chabrier's "Marche joyeuse," which followed the Goetz, more refreshingly untraditional.

Last Sunday's broadcast of the C. B. S. Symphony offered David Diamond's new Symphony No. 2. I recognize the specific talent involved in the mere business of keeping the musical apparatus going for forty minutes; but for my ears that was the only talent involved in Diamond's symphony. What I heard gave me the impression of the apparatus being kept going not by genuine expressive impulse translating itself into achieved statement, but only by sheer determination straining for something it could not attain.

* * *

A. B. C.'s opening broadcast from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 15 was scheduled for 8:30; but what one got at that time, for unexplained reasons, was the improvising of a studio organist, which continued until 8:45. And what one got thereafter from Tanglewood was a mouthful of straw: Bach's Suite No. 1 and his Concerto in C for two claviers, written by the composer of the charming Suite No. 2 and the tremendous Concerto in D minor, but nevertheless examples of the collection of arid formulas and mannerisms which his craftsmanship could turn out mechanically while his mind and energies were engaged in some other activity.

The lovely playing of the Boston Symphony in the suite came through with proper balance; but the microphone placement for the concerto resulted in [illegible] blanketing of the [illegible] by the pianos that were [illegible] insensitively by Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1947

Koussevitzky Is 73; Conducts At Tanglewood

Receives Cello and Violin for Use at Center as Part of Birthday Celebration

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky celebrated his seventy-third birthday here today by conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several hours in the music shed at Tanglewood, including the first of the Saturday morning public rehearsals and the second concert of Berkshire festivals regular subscription series in the evening. Half of the evening program was devoted to music by American composers, Samuel Barber's overture for "The School for Scandal" and the Third Symphony of Aaron Copland, who is assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday was hailed both at this morning's rehearsal and at last night's concert of the Berkshire Music Center's advanced student orchestra. At the rehearsal he received a century-old cello from Abram Chasins, composer-pianist, and a 150-year-old violin from Constance Keene, pianist. The gifts will be the first items in a collection of instruments to be used by students at the center. Mr. Chasins was a member of the center's first faculty at Tanglewood in 1940 and Miss Keene studied there in 1941. She received the violin from Dr. Seymour Rogers, of New York, for presentation to a gifted student. The cello had been sent to Mr. Chasins by Dr. Henry H. Stevens, of Yarmouth Port, Mass.

In his presentation speech Mr. Chasins said that fine instruments and Dr. Koussevitzky have this in common—as they grow older they grow better. The conductor spoke briefly in thanks.

The surprise observance of Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday by the students at last night's concert began with a "Fanfare for Bima," composed and conducted by Leonard Bernstein. Bima or, more formally, Bemol, the French title for a flat, is the name of Dr. Koussevitzky's cocker spaniel and the theme of this engaging piece for eleven brass instruments and one violin is the tune to which the spaniel responds. Mr. Bernstein said that the fanfare would be long. It took about thirty seconds.

Hugh Ross then conducted a student chorus in an excerpt from Bach's Wedding Cantata with the text duly adapted for the occasion. The last two works on the program, Boccerini's cello concerto in B flat with Aldo Parisot as soloist and Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" were conducted by Eleazar De Carvalho, a young Brazilian who is Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant in the center's conducting department.

In the Strauss tone poem his direction gave an impression of talent in a responsive performance. In the Boccherini concerto Mr Parisot, also a Brazilian, gave a musically interpretation with a consistently pleasing tone.

Irving Fine conducted Beethoven's overture, "The Consecration of the House." Lois Schaefer and Mary Stemm were soloists in Howard Hanson's serenada for flute, harp and strings with Harry John Brown conducting. Gerald Samuel conducted the first movement of Stravinsky's symphony.

Tonight's program was completed with the symphony "Harold in Italy," by Berlioz. William Primrose played the solo viola. This concert and the third subscription concert tomorrow afternoon will be reviewed in Monday's New York Herald Tribune.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
NEWS

JUL 27 1947

'Music for All' Aired by ABC

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival on Tuesday, July 29, from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. EDT.

Designated as "Music For All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast, will include the taking of motion pictures by M-G-M for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood." This will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its Summer home have been filmed for the screen.

With Serge Koussevitzky on the podium, the audience will see the filming of the ABC broadcast, with producer William L. Marshall, announced Gene Hamilton and the engineering staff working in full view of the listeners.

The finale of the day's schedule will be the playing of important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years. These will be alternated with "live" playing by the ensemble. A demonstration of a new radio-phonograph also will be held.

For the ABC broadcast, Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old pianist, will be soloist. Miss Goldstein, who played more than 200 concerts with the Palestine Symphony Orchestra will participate in both numbers to be heard on the air. The program follows:

Concerto in D minor for Organ and Orchestra (transcribed for piano and orchestra by Siloti)—Vivaldi.

Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor for piano and Orchestra—Tchaikovsky.

[53]

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 26 1947

The World of Music

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" at Berkshire; what American music needs

NEW YORK, July 25. (U.P.)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Indomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

* * *

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music festival, which opens at Saratoga Springs, on September 6.

"We glorify all kinds of Am can things, from antiques and cestors to hot dogs and cho girls," Adler observed. "Why take a little time out and glo American culture? Let's g American music a chance to heard."

Alder, who has a fondness listing premieres on his progra gave 43 first performances at Saratoga festival last year. He about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a musi culture," Adler continued, "u we foster American music. have a large body of men a women in this country today wr ing music in a rich and var tradition and experimenting w the future. They cannot live, th cannot learn, they cannot gr unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is troversial — especially that Americans. Audiences are said stay away from it, although it been our experience that an au ence not only accepts but enj the new when it is interestin introduced.

"No audience should be as to listen to 'all-American' p grams. The listener should h variety, so that he may comp
the present with the past.
composer should likewise be as to measure his creative w against the accepted art of past."

Zum Beginn der Berkshire-Festspiele

Von WOLFGANG STRESEMANN

LENOX, Mass., 25. Juli. — Tanglewood mit seinem über 6000 Menschen fassenden "Shed" ist einer der lieblichsten Plätze im Osten der Vereinigten Staaten. Dieses zwischen Lenox und Stockbridge liegende Fleckchen Erde, das seinen Namen von dem Dichter Nathaniel Hawthorne erhalten hat, ist von der Natur besonders begnadet worden. Kaum kann sich das Auge satt sehen. Wo immer es hinblickt, steigen sanfte, bewaldete Hügel auf, ein ganz vom Grünen umrahmter See belebt die Landschaft, herrliche Gärten, Blumen und weite Rasenflächen laden den Besucher zum Verweilen ein. Das "estate", das abseits von der Verkehrsstraße liegt, ist so groß, daß man ungestört spazieren gehen kann, obwohl hunderte von jungen Musikern von früh morgens bis spät in die Nacht hinein spielen, probieren, diskutieren und zwschendurch auch eigene Konzerte veranstalten. Ein jeder ist von dieser herrlichen, oft an ein deutsches Mittelgebirge erinnernden Landschaft inspiriert. Auch wer schon zuvor in Tanglewood war, ist wieder überrascht und hingerissen von den wunderbaren Ausblicken, die man nach allen Seiten hin hat, von der ganz eigenen Atmosphäre, wie man sie nur in den Berkshires findet.

In Tanglewood ist ein Traum in Erfüllung gegangen, der Traum von einem großen amerikanischen Musikzentrum mit Festkonzerten, Opernaufführungen sowie einer jeden Zweig umfassenden Sommerschule. In ganz wenigen Jahren ist dies alles Wirklichkeit geworden, und daß es so kam, ist in erster Linie der rastlosen Initiative Dr. Koussevitzkys zu danken, der diesen Traum am längsten und am intensivsten geträumt hat. Aber Dr. Koussevitzkys rastloser Einsatz wäre dennoch ohne Erfolg geblieben, wenn es an der begeisterten Mitwirkung weitester Schichten der Bevölkerung gefehlt hätte. Manche Opfer mußten gebracht werden. Änderungen erwiesen sich als notwendig, um diesen einst so ganz abgeschlossenen Teil der Berkshires zu einem großen Mittelpunkt der Musik zu machen. Aber von jeher war der Musikwille der hiesigen Bevölkerung stark und mächtig. Schon vor 20 Jahren waren die Berkshires die Heimstätte von Kammerkonzerten, und damals verband sich zum ersten Male der Name dieser Landschaft mit dem der Musik. "Musik in den Berkshires" wurde ein Begriff, ein leuchtendes Symbol für den Zusammenklang von Natur und Kunst, der die Menschen in wachsendem Maße anzog. Heute stellen Musik und "Berkshires" eine untrennbare Einheit dar; in kurzer Zeit ist ein Fundament geschaffen worden, das nicht wieder zerstört werden kann. Ja, es ist keine Übertreibung, wenn man bereits nach zehn Jahren Festspielen von einer Tradition sprechen darf, eine Tradition, die einmal in der amerikanischen Musikgeschichte eine ehrenvolle Erwähnung finden wird.

Zu dieser Tradition haben Dr. Koussevitzky und das Boston Symphonie-Orchester unendlich viel beigetragen. Dieses Ensemble mit seinem hochgestimmten Führer ist auch in diesem Jahre zur Stelle, und so groß ist der Ruhm dieser Musiker, daß die Menschen von weither kommen, um den Veranstaltungen in Tanglewood beizuwohnen. Riesig ist die Zahl der an Festspielabenden parkenden Wagen. Lenox hat nur ein einziges großes Hotel, das die Massen der Besucher nicht aufnehmen könnte, und mit Stockbridge steht es ähnlich. So verstreuen sich die Gäste auf einen weiten Umkreis. Besucher, die 100 Meilen mit ihrem Wagen zurückzulegen haben, sind durchaus keine seltene Erscheinung, und sie alle haben ihr Kommen nicht zu bereuen. Denn Tanglewood bedeutet immer ein besonderes musikalisches Erlebnis, wie es auch beim gestrigen Eröffnungskonzert wieder der Fall war.

Als Dr. Koussevitzky am Podium erschien, erhoben sich die Tausenden von Menschen, die jeden nur verfügbaren Platz im "Shed" besetzt hatten. Aber auch von draußen her ertönten Beifallsrufe. Die große Halle ist nach beiden Seiten hin offen, und dadurch ist es einer erheblichen Zahl von Menschen möglich, die Konzerte vom Rasen aus mitzuhören, was besonders an einem Sommernachmittag ein großer Genuß ist. — Dr. Koussevitzky hatte ein interessantes Programm zusammengestellt. Aber wer ein pompöses Eröffnungsstück erwartet hatte, sah sich getäuscht. Eine Streichersinfonie von Honegger, dem bekannten Schweizer, in Frankreich lebenden Komponisten, der zur Zeit in Tanglewood lehrt, machte den Beginn. Und diese Wahl von Dr. Koussevitzky war eine überaus glückliche. Nicht nur weil die Honegger Komposition ein sehr wertvolles Stück ist, sondern weil sie in ihrem ersten düsteren Satz, dem sehnsuchtsvollen, aber noch schwer ringenden Adagio und dem energievollen Aufschwung des Finale ein Abbild unserer im Dunkel tappenden, nach einem Ausweg strebenden Zeit darstellt. Honegger hat hier ein Stück geschrieben, das in der großartigen Wiedergabe durch Dr. Koussevitzky und die phänomenalen Streicher des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters einen geradezu umwerfenden Eindruck hinterließ. Wir werden auf diese Komposition noch einmal an anderer Stelle zurückkommen.

Nach dem Honegger gab es "La Mer" von Debussy. Dr. Koussevitzky hat das Werk unzählige Male dirigiert, und seine Interpretation dieser impressionistischen Musik ist allgemein als eine seiner besten Leistungen anerkannt. Aber Dr. Koussevitzky beschränkte sich am Donnerstag nicht auf eine Routine-Aufführung. Er dirigierte, als ob es sich um ein neues Werk handele, und erfüllte das Stück mit einer solchen Intensität, daß die Zuhörer einfach hingerissen waren. — Und zum Schluß feierte der unermüdliche Dirigent, der nun bald 73 Jahre alt wird, einen rauschenden Triumph mit der Brahmsschen Zweiten Sinfonie, deren lieblich-heitere und [illegible] wundersam beschwingte Musik sich besonders glücklich in diesen Rahmen einfügt.

Die Berkshire Festspiele von 1947 haben einen verheißungsvollen Anfang genommen.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 27 1947

Music

LEONARD BERNSTEIN CAN'T MAKE UP MIND

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday — Leonard Berstein, young, personable, and highly gifted guest conductor with Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, is faced with the problem of choosing a career.

He has every right to be uncertain. He is perhaps less known as a pianist than as conductor or composer. However, as Helen Coates, at present his secretary but once his piano teacher told me—"He could easily become a ranking piano virtuoso if he gave it some time."

First Piano Lessons at 10

Lenny as he is called by students here at the Berkshire Music Center, had his first piano lessons at the age of ten. Co-incidentally, William Kapell, who played under Bernstein a few weeks ago in New York, also started his piano studies at ten.

At 14, Lenny called on Heinrich Gebhard in Boston to arrange for piano lessons. Gebhard was impressed and suggested that he study with his assistant, Miss Coates. He studied with her for the next three years.

"When he came to me, he could play exceedingly difficult pieces with great ease," she says, "but it was instinctive facility, and what he needed was a solid foundation."

Piano Interest Accidental

Lenny's interest in the piano was, in a way, accidental. He had had two weeks of violin lessons when he was seven, but evidently had an indifferent interest at that time. Then an aunt of Lenny decided to store some of her household furnishings in the Bernstein home in Boston. Among them was a piano. It was a rather antiquated upright but, as for George Gershwin, it did the trick.

His start as a conductor was also unplanned. While Lenny was at Harvard College (he was graduated in 1939) he was asked by the Harvard Classical Club to write the music for "The Birds", by Aristophenes, and to conduct it. The orchestra had but ten pieces and those who attended, including Mr. Gebhard and Miss Coates, were amazed at what they saw.

Bernstein's Discoverer

Serge Koussevitzky is generally accredited with being Bernstein's discoverer, but that isn't literally so. Back in 1935, when Lenny was at Harvard, he met and played for Dimitri Mitropoulos. The Greek conductor was greatly impressed. After Lenny was graduated he went to New York for the usual purpose to find a job. Mitroupoulos was to be in Boston. After discouraging developments in New York, Lenny came to Boston for his advice.

Mitroupoulos suggested that he apply at the Juilliard School to study conducting, but unfortunately there were no vacancies.

Next he tried the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, and was promptly accepted. He studied conducting with Fritz Reiner, but curiously enough, had almost no opportunity to acquire practical experience with an orchestra.

The method there was to study conducting with an orchestral score to piano performance. "One of the real advantages at the Berkshire Music Center," Lenny said to me "is that the students are given practical experience with the student orchestras."

While at the Curtis, he also studied piano with Isabella Vengerova. Meanwhile, he had attracted the attention of numerous American composers, including Aaron Copland, William Schuman, and Roy Harris.

At the end of Lenny's first year of study at the Curtis, Koussevitzky announced that he would personally teach four student conductors at Tanglewood. Several of Lenny's noted friends wrote enthusiastic letters about him, and he found himself in Boston to be interviewed by the great conductor. Since then, he has conducted the Boston Symphony not only in Boston, but at Carnegie Hall, and two seasons ago in Worcester.

An Important Date

November 14, 1943 is an important date in the Bernstein biography. Lenny had been appointed assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic, and on that Sunday morning—at 9, to be exact—he was notified by phone that Bruno Walter was ill and he would have to conduct that afternoon on a coast-to-coast broadcast.

This has happened several times, and Lenny calls himself the "bete noir" of conductors. He doesn't attribute his opportunities to other conductors' illnesses but he does insist that "he has been terribly lucky." I admit that he has had several unexpected opportunities, but I doubt if "Luck" is anything but a minor reason for his success.

Palestine Views

Bernstein has just returned from Palestine, and although political views might be extraneous to a musical interview, his are timely, first hand, and enlightening.

"Most of the reports of trouble from Palestine are greatly exaggerated," he says. "The Palestinians are peace-loving. They are deeply interested in and have a genius for agriculture. They can make anything grow anywhere. The trouble in Palestine is due to a handful of terrorists who are understandably bitter enough against the English to resort to violence. It is up to Britain now to live up to her promise to create a free state in the Holy Land for the Jewish people."

Wants to Write More

According to all reports, and particularly to Lenny's 23-year-old sister Shirley, and his 15-year-old brother Burton, who are here with him, the Palestinians are passionately fond of good music, even to the point where eight performances of the same program had to be given in the same hall, and the demand for tickets was by no means filled.

"I had a wonderful orchestra to work with," Lenny declares, "it was made up of the best refugee musicians from all over Europe." While there, he was offered permanent conductorship of the orchestra but declined. He is, however, returning in Feburary for a four-month tour of Europe with two months in Palestine.

CONDUCTOR

Leonard Bernstein, guest conductor with Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 27 1947

ANIST . . . Jacob Latenier reads a photostatic copy of Beethoven's "Emperor V Concerto" which he will play Saturday with Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 27 1947

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Tanglewood,
Lenox, Mass.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky

Today, 3:30 P. M. Guest conductor, Leonard Bernstein.

Mozart's Overture to The Magic Flute; Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps; Schubert's Symphony No. 7.

Tuesday, 7 P. M. and 8:30 P. M.

In addition to a concert by the orchestra, there will be demonstrations of musical reproduction on radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television. The orchestra, at 8:30 will be heard in Vivaldi's Concerto for orchestra with organ, in D minor; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 (Ella Goldstein, soloist); Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture; Excerpts from Wagner's Lohengrin, Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, Prokofieff's The Love for Three Oranges; Beethoven's Egmont Overture. At 7 P. M., Music in the Movies, showing excerpts from films with music by Copland, Prokofieff, Thomson, Walton.

Thursday, 8:15 P. M. Beethoven program.

Symphonies; Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

Saturday, 8:15 P. M. Beethoven program. Jacob Lateiner, piano soloist.

Symphony No. 4; Piano Concerto No. 5, in E flat (Emperor); Symphony No. 5.

Next Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 P. M. Beethoven program. Joseph Battista, piano soloist.

Symphony No. 6; Piano Concerto No. 4 in G; Symphony No. 7.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1947

Nine Concerts This Fortnight In Berkshires

Beethoven Series Begins Next Thursday Night; Special Event Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completes Series A of the Berkshire Festival with a concert under Leonard Bernstein's direction today at 3:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The concerts of Series B, devoted to Beethoven's music, will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be performed in an extra concert on Tuesday night, Aug. 5.

Next Tuesday night at 8:30, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a special concert, of which the first half will be broadcast over the ABC network. Motion pictures will be made of the audience to form part of a film outlining the history of Tanglewood. The rest of the program will consist of short works to be played by the orchestra and also on records made by the Boston Symphony in 1915, 1935 and recently, to illustrate progress in the recording of orchestral music. Before and after the concert, at 7 and 11 o'clock, excerpts of films with music by contemporary composers will be shown. The programs for the remainder of the festival are:

Today, 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting: "Magic Flute" overture, Mozart; Le Sacre du Printemps, Stravinsky; Symphony in C, No. 7 (9), Schubert.

Tuesday, July 29, 7 and 11 o'clock, Theater-Concert Hall. Scenes from American, English, French and Russian films; music by Virgil Thomson, Aaron Copland, William Walton, Arthur Honegger and Serge Prokofieff. 8:30, Music Shed, "Music for All" program, Serge Kousevitzky conducting. Concerto in D minor, Vivaldi; Piano Concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky (soloist, Ella Goldstein); "Roman Carnival" overture, Berlioz; excerpts from works by Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and Beethoven, in actual performance and in recordings.

Thursday, July 31, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven Symphonies No. 1, 2, 3.

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 4; Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor), (soloist, Jacob Lateiner); Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 (Series B, Serge Kousesevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 6; Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major (soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7, in A major.

Tuesday, Aug. 5 (extro concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphonies Nos. 8 and 9; Festival Chorus (soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass).

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:15 (Series C, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Haydn; Violin Concerto, Hindemith (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus and soloists as on Aug. 5; Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil," Bach; Symphony of Psalms, Stravinsky; Requiem, Mozart.

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos, Martinu; Pavane, Bolero, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Tchaikovsky.

The orchestra's rehearsals next Saturday and the following Saturday mornings at 10 o'clock will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund.

The Berkshire Music Center has announced the following program for this week:

Today, morning, Chamber Music Group; evening, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30, Orchestra and Chorus, Department 5. Wednesday, 8:15, orchestral students in Stravinsky program. Thursday, 4:30, Chorus, Department 5. Friday, 8:15, concert by student orchestra.

The Center's concerts, including the performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo" on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 4 and 6, are open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about the festival and the Center's activities is obtainable at Tanglewood.

[54]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

[illegible] 27 1947

'IDOMENEO' PREMIERE

Mozart Work to Be Given at Tanglewood Festival

By OLIN DOWNES

A NOBLE experiment, and one most valuable to all lovers of Mozart, will be undertaken at the Berkshire Festival when the operatic contingent of the Berkshire Music Center gives the first American performances, Aug. 4 and 6, of Mozart's "Idomeneo" at Tanglewood.

The opera, which up to the present time has never had a popular success, even in Europe, and which has been ignored hitherto by American producers, has a unique place among all of Mozart's works for the stage. Creatively, it represents Mozart's coming of age in the lyric theatre. Stylistically, it is his own significant work which makes obeisance to Gluck and the court opera of the eighteenth century. It is a mythological theme, presented in the grand classic manner, which had become highly formalistic, but which is here diversified and enriched by Mozart's genius.

Music Acclaimed

Mozart specialists acclaim the music in the highest terms. Thus Alfred Einstein, in "Mozart: His Character and His Work": "But 'Idomeneo' is one of those works that even a genius of the highest rank like Mozart could write only once in his life. It is an 'opera seria' unlike any other. It was not taken up in other cities simply because at the time only Munich could produce such a work. Mozart wished to transplant it to Vienna, and had in mind a performance in German translation, following the precedent of Gluck with some of his operas; but he had to give up the idea. In 1786 the work seems to have had a concert performance in private for which Mozart added some purely concert pieces to it. As always, he did only infinite harm to his own work, just as he later did when he made changes in 'Don Giovanni' and 'Figaro.' But even in Vienna, five years after its original composition, and when Mozart was five years older and more mature, he found nothing to change so far as the essence of the music was concerned. It is said that he valued and loved 'Idomeneo' most among all his works, and this any true musician can easily understand."

Is the libretto at fault? There seems little question of the superlative interest of the music. The Tanglewood production, fortunately, is based directly upon Mozart's score, and has not to do with the doctored versions by Richard Strauss or Wolf-Ferrari. How Mr. Goldovsky will treat the score is to be seen. His admirable musicianship and the respect he doubtless will pay to the original intentions of the composer could bring to the opera a degree of authenticity and effectiveness which it has not possessed when subjected to the tinkering of officious modernists. It also could come to pass that an audience of today was capable of meeting this famous and problematic work with a degree of receptivity that audiences of earlier and more "romantic" periods did not entertain.

A Salzburg Product

Commissioned to write an opera for the Munich carnival of 1781, Mozart accepted the subject chosen by the Court—that of "Idomeneo"—and invited Abbate Giambattista Varesco, the court chaplain of Salzburg, to make him an Italian adaptation. The choice of Varesco, a third-class poet, was probably engineered by Leopold Mozart. Mozart had constant problems with this librettist. Leopold prided himself upon his son's opera being completely a Salzburg product—Wolfgang, composer of Salzburg; Varesco, librettist of Salzburg; Johann Schachtner, commissioned to make a German translation of Varesco's Italian text, also a Salzburger and intimate friend of the Mozart family.

IN OPERA

James Abresch

Joseph Laderoute will sing the leading role in "Idomeneo."

But the original libretto, from which Varesco's was fashioned, was not a Salzburg product. It was a revamping by Varesco of a French text by Antoine Danchet, set to music by Campra, and thus mounted in Paris in 1712. Mozart was to struggle with Varesco, and his father also, who was the go-between, to make his libretto as concise and theatreworthy as possible.

Idomeneo, King of Crete, returning home from the siege of Troy, has incurred the displeasure of Poseidon, manifested by adverse storms and related phenomena. To appease the god, Idomeneo swears that he will sacrifice the first person whom he encounters on landing. This person turns out to be his son, Idamante. In the meantime the girl Ilia, daughter of Priam, whom Idomeneo had sent forward as a captive from stricken Troy, has fallen in love with, and is loved by, Idamante. Idomeneo is advised by his confidant, Arbace, to save Idamante by shipping him off with Elektra—of all characters to be fished at this point out of the grab-bag of legend—to Argos. They are about to depart when Poseidon shows his displeasure by sending a sea monster which slays many of the people of Crete before it is dispatched by the brave Idamante.

Now the High Priest, backed by all the people, demands the name of Idomeneo's promised victim. All recoil when he reveals his terrible obligation. Learning of his father's vow, Idamante steps forward for the sacrifice, but Ilia offers herself in his stead. This moves Poseidon to mercy. A voice which causes the earth to tremble comes from the depths, commanding that Idomeneo yield his throne to his son, and that Ilia become Idamante's wife. Apparently nobody knows or cares what happens to Elektra.

Overture Played Here

An air or two from "Idomeneo" has found its way to concert programs of this city. The overture, which Paul Lang conducted seasons ago at a concert of the Columbia University Orchestra, is a beauty, and a score strangely neglected by our conductors. The big scenic moment comes evidently with the storm at the end of the second act—the storm which signalizes the appearance—in the story at least—of the sea serpent, and the wreck of Idomeneo's ship. The episode of the subterranean voice is accompanied, à la Gluck, by trombones and auxiliary brass. The quartet in the last act, when Idamante takes his leave, was considered by Mozart one of his finest pages, and this opinion is endorsed by authoritative persons.

Was this subject, and its formalistic treatment, the most native to Mozart's genius? Excepting "Titus," "Idomeneo" was his last essay in the realm of the opera seria. Thereafter, in all his dramatic works which have commanded the public's admiration through centuries, Mozart leaves the opera, in Gluck's sense of the word, behind him. "With Gluck," says Paul Bekker, in "The Changing Opera," "there comes to an end the history of opera as the reflection of the world viewed through the eyes of aristocracy."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUL 27 1947

Active Week Planned at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time at Tanglewood this Sunday afternoon at 3. The concert, which marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival, will include performances of Mozart's Overture to The Magic Flute, Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps and Schubert's Symphony No. 7, in C major.

Leonard Bernstein

Music for All, Tuesday's added event, is creating wide interest and is expected to attract many visitors from distant points. In addition to a full evening concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, there will be demonstrations of the latest instruments of science for musical reproduction, including radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

The program begins at 7 with Music in the Movies at the Theatre Concert Hall. Scenes from Our Town, Mayerling, Alexander Nevsky, The Youth of Maxim and Henry V will be presented to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the films. For those unable to reach Tanglewood in time for the first showing, there will be a repeat performance at 11 p.m.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 in the Music Shed will be broadcast, as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony, over the ABC coast-to-coast network. Engineers, directors and announcers will operate in full view of the audience.

The Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor and Tchaikowsky's First Piano Concerto, with Ella Goldstein as soloist, will provide the broadcast portion of the concerto. During the playing of Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture, which follows, motion pictures of the festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood to be released by MGM.

The final part of the program in the Music Shed, The March of Musical Fidelity, will include examples of recordings made by the Boston Symphony during the past third of a century. The climax will come with the introduction of The Berkshire, RCA Victor's new custom-made phonograph, which will be played alongside the playing of the orchestra itself. So far as is known, this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

Tickets for Music for All, good for admission to all events, are priced at $2.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUL 28 1947

Bernstein Leads Festival Concert

LENOX, Mass., July 27—(AP)—Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, today was guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in the third of the first series of Berkshire music festival concerts.

It was the first time anyone but Dr. Koussevitzky, who originated the idea of Tanglewood, had led the orchestra here. Bernstein, a native of Lawrence, Mass., won most applause from the 8,500 in attendance when the orchestra performed Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

The concert opened with Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute" and concluded with Schubert's "Symphony in C Major, No. 7."

Dr. Koussevitzky listened from his box in the center of the music shed and appeared on the stage to congratulate Bernstein.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

Koussevitzky Honored On Birthday, 73

Special Program Held At Tanglewood, Center Given Cello and Violin

Lenox, Mass., July 26. — (Special.)—The seventy-third birthday of Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was celebrated at Tanglewood by the playing of a canon composed for the occasion by Leonard Bernstein, the singing of a serenade by the student chorus and the presentation of two valuable musical instruments to the Berkshire Music Center of which he is founder and director.

Saturday night at a concert played and conducted by his students, the canon for 11 brasses and one violin entitled "Fanfare of Bima," using the theme with which he calls his cocker spaniel, was played by the orchestra.

The choral group conducted by Hugh Ross of the school sang the cantata "Koussevitzky, may you prosper all your whole life long."

Cuts Cake.

After the concert conducted by his students and his assistant, Eleazar De Carvalho, Dr. Koussevitzky cut a cake in the Green Room.

This morning a 100-years-old cello and a 150-years-old violin, designed to be the beginning of a Tanglewood instrument collection available for use by talented students whose instruments are inferior or who have none, were presented to the school in the presence of an audience of 2500 at the first public reharsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Berkshire Festival. The violin made in Vienna was given by Miss Constance Keene, pianist, 1941 scholarship student at Tanglewood and the cello by Abram Chasin, composer-pianist. A member of the first faculty of the school in 1940.

In making the presentation Mr. Chasin said "Dr. Koussevitzky and fine instruments have something in common. As they grow older they grow better."

UNE, SUNDAY, JULY

Nine Concerts This Fortnight In Berkshires

Beethoven Series Begins Next Thursday Night; Special Event Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completes Series A of the Berkshire Festival with a concert under Leonard Bernstein's direction today at 3:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The concerts of Series B, devoted to Beethoven's music, will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be performed in an extra concert on Tuesday night, Aug. 5.

Next Tuesday night at 8:30, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a special concert, of which the first half will be broadcast over the ABC network. Motion pictures will be made of the audience to form part of a film outlining the history of Tanglewood. The rest of the program will consist of short works to be played by the orchestra and also on records made by the Boston Symphony in 1915, 1935 and recently, to illustrate progress in the recording of orchestral music. Before and after the concert, at 7 and 11 o'clock, excerpts of films with music by contemporary composers will be shown. The programs for the remainder of the festival are:

Today, 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting: "Magic Flute" overture, Mozart; Le Sacre du Printemps, Stravinsky; Symphony in C, No. 7 (9), Schubert.

Tuesday, July 29, 7 and 11 o'clock, Theater-Concert Hall. Scenes from American, English, French and Russian films; music by Virgil Thomson, Aaron Copland, William Walton, Arthur Honegger and Serge Prokofieff. 8:30 Music Shed, "Music for All" program, Serge Kousevitzky conducting. Concerto in D minor, Vivaldi; Piano Concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky (soloist, Ella Goldstein); "Roman Carnival" overture, Berlioz; excerpts from works by Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and Beethoven in actual performance and in recordings.

Thursday, July 31, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven Symphonies No. 1, 2, 3.

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven Symphony No. 4; Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor), (soloist, Jacob Lateiner); Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 (Series B, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 6; Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major (soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7, in A major.

Tuesday, Aug. 5 (extra concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphonies No. 8 and 9; Festival Chorus (soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass).

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:15 (Series C), Leonard Bernstein conducting: Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Haydn; Violin Concerto, Hindemith (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus and soloists as on Aug. 5; Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil," Bach; Symphony of Psalms, Stravinsky; Requiem, Mozart.

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos, Martinu; Pavane, Bolero, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Tchaikovsky.

The orchestra's rehearsals next Saturday and the following Saturday mornings at 10 o'clock will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund.

The Berkshire Music Center has announced the following program for this week:

Today, morning, Chamber Music [illegible]; evening, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30, Orchestra and Chorus, Department 5. Wednesday, 8:15, orchestral students in [illegible] program. Thursday, 4:30, Chorus Department [illegible]. Friday, 8:15, concert by student orchestra.

The Center's concerts, including the performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo" on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 4 and 6, are open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about the festival and the Center's activities is obtainable at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 27 1947

Music

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

Leonard Bernstein, young protege of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra this afternoon in performances of "The Magic Flute," by Mozart; Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and Schubert's symphony, No. 7 in C-major. The concert will be given in the large orchestral shed, and will begin at 3:30 o'clock.

Tuesday evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct a "Music for All" program, unique in the history of the Berkshire Music festival. For the first time, anywhere in the world, music lovers will be invited to compare symphonic recording, side by side with the modern orchestra itself, when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The second half of the program is titled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature musical recordings by the Boston Symphony orchestra of 10-year intervals, back to 1915. As a part of a film to be distributed by MGM, moving pictures will be made of the festival for the first time. On this occasion, the spacious music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers in full view of the audience, and the program will be broadcast coast to coast. The concert is scheduled for 8:30 o'clock.

• • •

FIVE ALBANY AREA vocal groups will participate in a choral concert to be held in Saratoga Springs convention hall, Sunday afternoon, Sept. 7, at 3:30 o'clock. They are the Monday Musical club chorus, of Albany; the Thursday Musical club and the Schubert male chorus of Schenectady; the Troy Vocal society, all under the direction of Dr. Elmer Tidmarsh, and the choir of the First Presbyterian church of Albany, directed by Helen Henshaw. The following week, regional contest winners for appearances with the Saratoga Spa music festival in the Spa theatre in September will be heard in a special concert. Among those who will appear are Naomi Ornest, coloratura soprano of Utica, N. Y.; Samuel H. Eringer, violinist, of Albany; Paul Black, pianist of Hoosick Falls; Jean C. May, contralto, of Troy; John L. Jadlos, violinist of Cohoes; Louis Palmer, pianist of Mechanicville. The conductor will be F. Charles Adler, of Saratoga Spa, who is director of the September music festival.

WORCESTER, TELEGRA

JUL 27

U. S. Co
Heard a

FAIRMOUNT, W
WEST VIRGINI

JL 27 1947

World
Music

DETROIT, MICH
FREE PRESS

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1947

U. S. Composers' Works Heard at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, [illegible] night's concert at Tanglewood brought two [illegible] but highly individual American composers, [illegible] Barber and Aaron Copland, into the limelight, and [illegible] a neglected score by Hector Berlioz, revolutionary of the [illegible] century.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, performed the following works before a Tanglewood Shed audience of six thousand with an additional two thousand crowding the environs.

Barber's overture, "A School For Scandal"; Copland's "Symphony No. 3"; and Berlioz' symphony "Harold In Italy." William Primrose, who probably plays the viola better than any one on earth, was soloist for the Berlioz work.

Has Strong Arguments

The defender of the modern idiom arms himself with strong arguments. Some resort to accusing the skeptic of being intolerant, narrow-minded, or downright ignorant. He points to the careers of Beethoven, Berlioz, DeBussy and even Stravinsky, and he says—"They were revolutionists. They knew violent public reaction. They were not understood, but now they are."

There are no strongly adverse reactions to any music presented at Tanglewood. There is only enthusiastic applause, some of it more hearty. The Tanglewood audience is devoted to the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky, and Tanglewood.

Responses to the three works played last night were reminiscent of the symposium of musical criticism at Harvard when a ridiculously incongruous assemblage of unmusical sounds, identified as a "trio" by composer Schoenberg, was applauded with the same spontaneity as several other works of real merit.

I enjoyed the Barber work. Like other symphonic works by this gifted young composer, it has an attractive straightforwardness. In this one (composed in 1932) Barber favors the woodwinds and brasses for the important melody assignments. The meter is 9/8 time and it is carefully planned structurally.

Extreme Harmonic Elements

It creates a mood of gaiety and remains modern without a suspicion of extreme harmonic elements. Insofar as the Sheridan comedy is concerned upon which it is based, it merely attempts to reflect the play's spirit.

Copland's "Symphony No. 3" falls short in continuity and logical music. It is clever instrumentation even when extreme, and what I consider a deviation from rationalism might well be described by some as the "new movement." The overall impression is not so much a lack of clarity of theme or rhythmic symmetry, as an almost consistent absence of harmonic concordance.

The program notes of the first movement state: "It opens and closes in E major." Like the succeeding three movements, it wanders far afield, which is consistent with strict classical style, but it is less convincing. I grant the effectiveness of the brass introduction of the second movement, the beauty of the transformed recurrent theme of the third movement by the violins, and the arresting fanfares of the final movement. But is this instrumental exhibition or inspired music?

Guest Conductor Today

And now to whet the protest of the argumentative modernist who points to Berlioz' one-time debatable position as an experimenter, I admit that his "Harold In Italy" seemed comparatively stolid. Primrose, who plays the viola perhaps better than anyone on earth, played the solo score with inspiration. He makes of the violin's larger cousin an instrument of poetry.

The various scenes were beautifully portrayed, as radical as it may have seemed in its day, it was contrived as purposeful music and, as such, possess unmistakable musical potentency.

This afternoon, Leonard Bernstein will be the first guest conductor ever to appear at Tanglewood. His program includes the overture to Mozart's "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," and Schubert's "Symphony No. 7 in C-Major."

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN

JUL 27 1947

World of Music

EW YORK, July 25 (U.P.)—Mo-'s opera "Idomeneo" will be formed for the first time in erica by the Berkshire Music ter, the Boston Symphony Or-tra's summer school at Tangle-d in Lenox, Massachusetts, of ch Serge Koussevitzky is direc-e production will be directed conducted by Boris Goldovsky. hard Rychtarik will design the . The orchestra and singers in the production of "Peter mes" last season, will consist pupils of the Berkshire Music ter.

vo performances will be given ng the last week of the festi- on Monday and Wednesday ings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission be by invitation to friends of Berkshire Music Center.

ozart wrote his "Idomeneo, of Crete" in 1780, in his ty-fourth year. It is consid- by some one of his greatest s, but because of its length the absence of printed parts, as been performed only oc-nally in Europe. Since no exist in America, a full set ing copied for the Tanglewood uction.

* * *

erican music needs consistent otion and more frequent per-nces to achieve its proper , in the opinion of F. Charles , conductor of the Saratoga c Festival, which opens at toga Springs, N. Y., on Sep-er 6.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

[illegible]

STAR GAZING

What's the Local Story on Movie 'Fan Clubs'?

BY HELEN BOWER

EVERY TIME a screen celebrity comes to town, the fans and autograph hounds are on the trail in full cry.

But, actually, how much of a movie "fan club" town is Detroit.

How many organized groups are cheering for a favorite star, man or woman? Which has the biggest enrollment of fans?

How about it, you fans?

[illegible] which movie stars are tops with Detroiters in that [illegible] fan club manner.

•

Film Music Gets a Hearing

VERY HIGH CLASS attention is to be paid film musical scores [illegible] Tuesday at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires at Lenox, [illegible]

At 7 p. m., and again at 11 p. m., a one-hour program of "Music in the Movies" is to be screened. The first showing will precede the regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

[illegible] will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," [illegible] "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," [illegible] "Henry V," in co-operation with United Artists, [illegible] of Modern Art film library and Paramount Pictures.

* * *

FACULTY MEMBERS of the Berkshire Music Center are [illegible] Copland and Arthur Honegger, who assisted in the se-[illegible]

Copland chose the closing scenes of "Our Town" as most representative of his work as a composer. The carriage ride scene from "Mayerling," starring Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux, will be included.

[illegible]ff will be represented by two scenes from "Alexander

• • •

TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

JUL 27 1947

WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK (UP)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 27 1947

The World of Music

NEW YORK, July 26 (UP) Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

* * *

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music Festival, which opens at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on September 6.

"We glorify all kinds of American things, from antiques and ancestors to hot dogs and chorus girls," Adler observed. "Why not take a little time out and glorify American culture? Let's give American music a chance to be heard."

Adler, who has a fondness for listing premieres on his programs, gave 43 first performances at the Saratoga Festival last year. He has about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a musical culture," Adler continued, "until we foster American music. We have a large body of men and women in this country today writing music in a rich and varied tradition and experimenting with the future. They cannot live, they cannot learn, they cannot grow unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is controversial—especially that by Americans. Audiences are said to stay away from it, although it has been our experience that an audience not only accepts but enjoys the new when it is interestingly introduced.

"No audience should be asked to listen to 'all-American' programs. The listener should have variety, so that he may compare the present with the past. The composer should likewise be asked to measure his creative work against the accepted art of the past."

* * *

The NBC Symphony Orchestra will shift to Saturday evening broadcasts starting Saturday, Oct. 4. It will be heard from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m., New York time.

The change, NBC announced, was made with the approval of Arturo Toscanini, permanent conductor. It moves the program to an evening listening period after years on the Sunday afternoon time.

Toscanini will resume his direction of the orchestra on Oct. 25. The symphony was formed in 1937 and has been heard on the air continuously since then with Toscanini as permanent conductor.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 28 1947

It is odd that two centuries after Mozart's death American premieres of two Mozart works should be simultaneously announced for this season. One is Idomeneo, well known abroad but never heard in this Country, which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's operatic department will produce next month at Tanglewood. The other is a symphony attributed to Mozart which will be made a part of the Saratoga Spa Festival this Fall. About the latter work, however, there seems to be some doubt—not that it is an American premiere, but that it was composed by Mozart. No less a personage than Dr. Alfred Einstein is the disputant. He claims that the work, which was unearthed in a Cremona library three years ago, was written by Franz Christopher Neubauer, a Bohemian composer. Nino Negrotti, who edited it, claims it was written by Mozart at 14. Mozart or no Mozart it will be performed just the same, says Saratoga.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 27 1947

Music, Dram And the Ar wil

stuor corresp

* * *

Tanglewood Temptation

"May we reserve seats for you for the first performance in America of Mozart's 'Idomeneo' on Aug. 4 or 6?

"You also are invited to the final dress rehearsal Sunday night, Aug. 3, following the third concert of the Beethoven cycle in the afternoon. Boris Goldovsky, who is directing the performance, will give a short commentary on the opera at the rehearsal, for the benefit of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, for whom it is intended primarily.

"We hope that you will remain also for the performance of the 8th and 9th symphonies in the extra Beethoven program Aug. 5."

Thus reads a message from the Tanglewood Center, growing more tempting every year. Not to be considered here, with a stage at almost every crossroads but exciting to contemplate in print when you can't consider making a trip of familiar aspects from earlier delights.

Last Summer, "Peter Grimes," a new opera, engaged favorable attention. This year's "Idomeneo," having its first production in this country, was rated by Mozart himself as his best loved among all his works. It was performed when the composer had just passed his 25th birthday. The legend of the opera is set in Crete of ancient Greece. It is called "one of Mozart's grandest and most ambitious works and unique among his operas for brilliance of instrumentation, virtuosity and dramatic intensity and in the splendid use of the chorus."

Joseph Laderonte will sing the title part of "Idomeneo." Goldovsky will direct, scenery has been designed by Rychtarik. Performances take place in the Theater-Concert Hall. Invitations go to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Fa ge le w f t

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUL 27 1947

'IDOMENEO' GETS U. S. PREMIERE'

Early Mozart Opera to Be Sung at Tanglewood

NEW YORK, July 26 (U.P.)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to [illegible] of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1947

U. S. Composers' Works Heard at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, [illegible] night's concert at Tanglewood brought [illegible] highly individual American composer, [illegible] Aaron Copland, into the limelight, and pres[illegible] neglected score by Hector Berlioz, revolutionary of the last century.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, performed the following works before a Tanglewood Shed audience of six thousand with an additional two thousand crowding the environs.

Barber's overture, "A School For Scandal"; Copland's "Symphony No. 3"; and Berlioz' symphony "Harold In Italy." William Primrose, who probably plays the viola better than any one on earth, was soloist for the Berlioz work.

Has Strong Arguments

The defender of the modern idiom arms himself with strong arguments. Some resort to accusing the skeptic of being intolerant, narrow-minded, or downright ignorant. He points to the careers of Beethoven, Berlioz, DeBussy and even Stravinsky, and he says—"They were revolutionists. They knew violent public reaction. They were not understood, but now they are."

There are no strongly adverse reactions to any music presented at Tanglewood. There is only enthusiastic applause, some of it more hearty. The Tanglewood audience is devoted to the Boston Symphony, Koussevitsky, and Tanglewood.

Responses to the three works played last night were reminiscent of the symposium of musical criticism at Harvard when a ridiculously incongruous assemblage of unmusical sounds, identified as a "trio" by composer Schoenberg, was applauded with the same spontaneity as several other works of real merit.

I enjoyed the Barber work. Like other symphonic works by this gifted young composer, it has an attractive straightforwardness. In this one (composed in 1932) Barber favors the woodwinds and brasses for the important melody assignments. The meter is 9/8 time and it is carefully planned structurally.

Extreme Harmonic Elements

It creates a mood of gaiety and remains modern without a suspicion of extreme harmonic elements. Insofar as the Sheridan comedy is concerned upon which it is based, it merely attempts to reflect the play's spirit.

Copland's "Symphony No. 3" falls short in continuity and logical music. It is clever instrumentation even when extreme, and what I consider a deviation from rationalism might well be described by some as the "new movement." The overall impression is not so much a lack of clarity of theme or rhythmic symmetry, as an almost consistent absence of harmonic concordance.

The program notes of the first movement state: "It opens and closes in E major." Like the succeeding three movements, it wanders far afield, which is consistent with strict classical style, but it is less convincing. I grant the effectiveness of the brass introduction of the second movement, the beauty of the transformed recurrent theme of the third movement by the violins, and the arresting fanfares of the final movement. But is this instrumental exhibition or inspired music?

Guest Conductor Today

And now to whet the protest of the argumentative modernist who points to Berlioz' one-time debatable position as an experimenter, I admit that his "Harold In Italy" seemed comparatively stolid. Primrose, who plays the viola perhaps better than anyone on earth, played the solo score with inspiration. He makes of the violin's larger cousin an instrument of poetry.

The various scenes were beautifully portrayed, as radical as it may have seemed in its day, it was contrived as purposeful music and, as such, possess unmistakable musical potentency.

This afternoon, Leonard Bernstein will be the first guest conductor ever to appear at Tanglewood. His program includes the overture to Mozart's "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," and Schubert's "Symphony No. 7 in C Major."

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN

JUL 27 1947

World of Music

NEW YORK, July 25 (U.P.)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music Festival, which opens at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on September 6.

TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

JUL 27 1947

WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK (UP)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 27 1947

The World of Music

NEW YORK, July 26 (UP) Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music Festival, which opens at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on September 6.

"We glorify all kinds of American things, from antiques and ancestors to hot dogs and chorus girls," Adler observed. "Why not take a little time out and glorify American culture? Let's give American music a chance to be heard."

Adler, who has a fondness for listing premieres on his programs, gave 43 first performances at the Saratoga Festival last year. He has about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a musical culture," Adler continued, "until we foster American music. We have a large body of men and women in this country today writing music in a rich and varied tradition and experimenting with the future. They cannot live, they cannot learn, they cannot grow unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is controversial—especially that by Americans. Audiences are said to stay away from it, although it has been our experience that an audience not only accepts but enjoys the new when it is interestingly introduced.

"No audience should be asked to listen to 'all-American' programs. The listener should have variety, so that he may compare the present with the past. The composer should likewise be asked to measure his creative work against the accepted art of the past."

The NBC Symphony Orchestra will shift to Saturday evening broadcasts starting Saturday, Oct. 4. It will be heard from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m., New York time.

The change, NBC announced, was made with the approval of Arturo Toscanini, permanent conductor. It moves the program to an evening listening period after years on the Sunday afternoon time.

Toscanini will resume his direction of the orchestra on Oct. 25. The symphony was formed in 1937 and has been heard on the air continuously since then with Toscanini as permanent conductor.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 28 1947

It is odd that two centuries after Mozart's death American premieres of two Mozart works should be simultaneously announced for this season. One is Idomeneo, well known abroad b[illegible] heard in this Country, w[illegible]ssevitsky's oper[illegible] next

---

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 27 1947

Music, Dran And the Ar will [illegible]

stuor corresp [illegible]

* * *

Tanglewood Temptation

"May we reserve seats for you for the first performance in America of Mozart's 'Idomeneo' on Aug. 4 or 6?

"You also are invited to the final dress rehearsal Sunday night, Aug. 3, following the third concert of the Beethoven cycle in the afternoon. Boris Goldovsky, who is directing the performance, will give a short commentary on the opera at the rehearsal, for the benefit of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, for whom it is intended primarily.

"We hope that you will remain also for the performance of the 8th and 9th symphonies in the extra Beethoven program Aug. 5."

Thus reads a message from the Tanglewood Center, growing more tempting every year. Not to be considered here, with a stage at almost every crossroads but exciting to contemplate in print when you can't consider making a trip of familiar aspects from earlier delights.

Last Summer, "Peter Grimes," a new opera, engaged favorable attention. This year's "Idomeneo," having its first production in this country, was rated by Mozart himself as his best loved among all his works. It was performed when the composer had just passed his 25th birthday. The legend of the opera is set in Crete of ancient Greece. It is called "one of Mozart's grandest and most ambitious works and unique among his operas for brilliance of instrumentation, virtuosity and dramatic intensity and in the splendid use of the chorus."

Joseph Laderonte will sing the title part of "Idomeneo." Goldovsky will direct, scenery has been designed by Rychtarik. Performances take place in the Theater-Concert Hall. Invitations go to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

STAR GAZING

What's the Local Story on Movie 'Fan Clubs'?

BY HELEN BOWER

EVERY TIME a screen celebrity comes to town, the fans and a[illegible] hounds are on the trail in full cry.

But, actually, how much of a movie "fan club" town is Detroit.

H[illegible] organized groups are cheering for a favorite star, [illegible]man? Which has the biggest enrollment of fans?

How about it, you fans?

[illegible] which mo[illegible] stars are tops with Detroiters in that [illegible]-and-soul fan club manner.

Film Music Gets a Hearing

VERY HIGH CLASS attention is to be paid film musical scores [illegible] Tuesday at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires at Lenox,

At 7 p. m., and again at 11 p. m., a one-hour program of "Music in the Movies" is to be screened. The first showing will precede the regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

[illegible] will be run from "Our Town," "Mayerling," [illegible] Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," [illegible] and "Henry V," in co-operation with United Artists, [illegible] of Modern Art film library and Paramount Pictures.

* * *

FACULTY MEMBERS of the Berkshire Music Center are [illegible] Copland and Arthur Honegger, who assisted in the se-

Copland chose the closing scenes of "Our Town" as most representative of his work as a composer. The carriage ride scene from "Mayerling," starring Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux, will be included.

[illegible]ff will be represented by two scenes from "Alexander

* * *

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUL 27 1947

'IDOMENEO' GETS U. S. PREMIERE'

Early Mozart Opera to Be Sung at Tanglewood

NEW YORK, July 26 (U.P.)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

[56]

PITTSBURGH PA.
PRESS
JUL 27 194

EMINENT CONDUCTOR of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, will give a special concert Tuesday night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Music Notes

Led by Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a special extra concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday night.

This event is apart from the regular series of summer concerts.

The program will comprise Tschaikowsky's first piano concerto with Ella Goldstein as soloist; Vivaldi's D-minor organ concerto with orchestra; Berlioz' Roman Carnival overture; Introduction to act III of Lohengrin; Beethoven's Egmont overture; excerpts from Ravel's suite "Daphnis & Chloe," and Prokofieff's "Love for Three Oranges."

This concert will be a salute to the Orchestra by RCA-Victor, for which the Bostonese have been recording for 32 years. The Boston Symphony was the first organization of its kind to record a complete symphonic work. On the air its broadcasting season is the longest of any orchestra not expressly organized for radio.

The event will be called "Music For All." It will be of unprecedented character for it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public, namely, the phonograph, the radio and motion pictures.

Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the Orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nation-wide broadcast, and a comparison of phonographic recordings made by the Boston Symphony at various times, with the direct playing of the same music by the Orchestra itself.

fotion picture cameras will take ots of the audience for the forthming film: "The Story of Tanglevood." Before the concert there vill be a special showing of outtanding films to which music was vritten by contemporary composers.

The first part of the program by he Orchestra led by Dr. Koussetzky will be broadcast Tuesday 8:30-9:30 p. m. E. D. S. T.) via the merican Broadcasting Company etwork.

Dr Koussevitzky will lead the erlioz piece while movies are ade of the listening audience. The est of the program, called "The farch of Fidelity," will be devoted a comparison of Victor recordgs and the Orchestra in actual erformance.

The film program will include usic of Honegger, Prokofieff, Walon, Copland and Virgil Thomason. The occasion will also demonrate the RCA-[illegible] new first ustom-built ra[illegible]graph. It called "The [illegible] honor f the famed annual [illegible] Berkire Symphonic Festival at Tanlewood.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 27 1947

WNBH NEWS

Final Music Program Set

Third Tanglewood Offering Tuesday

WNBH-ABC presents the third and final broadcast in its Berkshire Music Festival series from ~~Tanglewood at~~ 8:30 Tuesday night. This week's program, designated as "Music for All," climaxes an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With Serge Koussevitzky on the podium, ~~the audience will~~ see the filming of the WNBH-ABC broadcast, with producer Willard L. Marshall, announcer Gene Hamilton and the engineering staff working in full view of the listeners. The finale of the day's schedule for the orchestra will be the playing of important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years. These will be alternated with "live" playing by the ensemble.

* * *

WNBH adds to its list of disc jockey shows when Jim Lanagan starts a new series at 2:15 tomorrow afternoon. The show will run for 15 minutes every afternoon, Monday through Friday, and will feature the current top records of the day. Jim, who is well known for his early morning Clockwatcher program, promises to feature a different band and vocalist every day. He also is going to list the top 10 records each week and play the leading three on one of the programs. All in all, the genial record maestro says, the accent is going to be on music.

* * *

Still another new addition to the New Bedford station's programing is the "Tacklebox Topics" program scheduled for 9:45 tonight. This is an encore edition of the popular Wednesday night program featuring Ted Vincent, prominent New Bedford fishing expert. In tonight's show, fishermen will be able to get additional last-minute information on good vacation fishing grounds as well as word on the best kind of tackle to use to pull in those big ones.

* * *

One of the most avid group of newspaper readers to be found anywhere is the cast and production staff of "David Harding-Counterspy," heard at 5:30 Sunday afternoons over WNBH-ABC. And their reasons for reading so avidly are mostly professional. They're anxious to keep the show as topical as possible. In the five years it has been on the air, they say, Counterspy has stayed closer to the headlines than almost any other series except straight news shows. A case in point is this week's dramatization called the "Case of the Corpse's Alibi." In it David Harding traps the leader of an air-pirate gang and puts an end to sabotage in the all-freight industry.

* * *

"The Greatest Story Ever Told," heard at 6:30 Sunday nights over WNBH-ABC, has completed six months on the air and now is recognized as one of radio's outstanding programs. Presentation of the series dealing with the Prince of Peace was such a departure in radio that there were some misgivings at first about its success. Now that it has been acclaimed by millions throughout the country, the chairman of the board of the tire company sponsoring the show has made this statement:

"One Person, 2,000 years ago confined by transportation to a radius of 80 miles, during his short lifetime, traveling on foot or on the back of a domestic animal reaching only those within the sound of His voice, left such an impression on the hearts of mankind throughout the world and over many centuries, that we thought it would be a worthwhile contribution to society if this same lesson could be brought through the power of modern radio, to a worldwide audience who, today, are so much in need of it."

* * *

WNBH STATION BREAK: Eddie Albert, now heard in his own show at 9:30 Wednesday nights over WNBH-ABC, is another of those persons who seem to have two first names. Eddie has the answer for that. It seems his name is recorded officially as "Eddie Albert Heimberger." He merely lopped off the final three syllables and it came out Eddie Albert. Anyway, he says, radio announcers were always calling him "Hamburger."

O. W. G.

Three Concerts Inaugurate Busy Week at Tanglewood

Starting with three concerts today, including the third of the subscription series for the Berkshire Festival the coming week promises to be a busy one at Tanglewood. It will include concert at the "Music for All" field day on Tuesday, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the opening of the Beethoven cycle Thursday evening.

Leonard Bernstein will take the baton this afternoon, to be the guest conductor at Tanglewood, leading the orchestra in Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Shubert's "Symphony in C Major."

This morning the chamber music group will give a concert and in the evening the opera department will present scenes from operas, with orchestral accompaniment, an event not listed in the calendar. Tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 the orchestra and chorus will give a concert, and Wednesday evening orchestral students of the Berkshire Music Center will present an all-Stravinsky chamber concert.

Thursday at 4:30 the chorus will sing in the Festival shed and Thursday evening Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Beethoven cycle with the composer's first three symphonies, to be followed Saturday evening by the 4th and 5th symphonies and the 5th Piano Concerto "Emperor," with Jacob Lateiner, soloist.

The 6th and 7th symphonies and 4th piano concerto will be played Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, Joseph Battista, soloist, and the cycle will close with an extra concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 5 at 7:30, with the 8th and 9th symphonies. The soloists will be Miss Frances Yeend, soprano; Miss Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, tenor.

The "field day" on July 29 will start at 7 with the showing of scenes from French, Russian, English and American films, including "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River" and "Henry V," to illustrate the use of music, especially written by contemporary composers.

Jul 27 Globe

THE BOSTON SUNDAY

Berkshire Festival Continues

The Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue this week at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills. This afternoon at 3:30 Leonard Bernstein will conduct the final concert of series A, consisting of Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Stravinsky, and the "Great" G major Symphony by Schubert.

Series B will begin Thursday at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will open a Beethoven cycle. These programs follow:

Thursday at 8:15—Symphonies Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

Saturday at 8:15—Fourth and Fifth Symphonies, and the "Emperor" Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist.

Sunday, Aug. 3, at 3:30—Symphonies Nos. 6 and 7, and the Fourth Piano Concerto, with Joseph Battista as soloist.

Tuesday, Aug. 5 at 7:30—Extra concert, consisting of the Eighth and Ninth Symphonies. In the latter the Berkshire Music Center Chorus will assist, together with the following soloists: Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass, and David Lloyd, tenor.

"Music For All"

There will be a special added event Tuesday evening in the Theatre-Concert Hall and the Music Shed, beginning at 7 o'clock. Called "Music for All," this will be a demonstration of the progress of instruments for reproduction of music, including the radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

Scenes from the films, "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The River," "The Youth of Maxim" and "Henry V" will be shown at 7 p. m., to illustrate the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures. In lighter vein will be the famous Disney cartoon, "Mickey's Grand Opera." There will be a second showing at 11.

The orchestra, conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky, will give a concert in the Music Shed at 8:30. This will be broadcast. Engineers, director and announcers will operate in full view of the audience. The program will assemble the Vivaldi Organ Concerto in D minor, Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with Ella Goldstein as soloist, and Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture. During the last-named, motion pictures will be taken for the first time of about Tanglewood to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Musical Fidelity"

The final part of the program in the Music Shed will be "The March of Musical Fidelity." Records by the Boston Symphony, from the a festival audience, for a short film beginning to the present time, will be played to show the advance of science and art in this field. As a climax, there will be introduction of "The Berkshire," RCA-Victor's first custom-made phonograph, which will be heard alongside the orchestra itself. The first 200 of these "Berkshire" sets, named in honor of the Tanglewood Festivals, have been earmarked by RCA-Victor for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

LUISE RAINER, another of the actresses to essay Maxwell Anderson's "Joan of Lorraine" this Summer, will don the Maid's white armor at the Cape Playhouse, Dennis, this week.

There will also be concerts this week by various forces of the Berkshire Music Center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL [illegible] 1947

U. S. Debut Next Week For Mozart's Opera

Mozart's three-act opera "Idomeneo" will have its first performance in this country Aug. 4 and 6 at Tanglewood with Boris Goldovsky conducting. Admission will be by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The opera will be under the direction of Mr. Goldovsky, and will be staged by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Scenery has been designed by Richard Rychtarik. Mr. Goldovsky will be assisted by Frederic Cohen, Felix Wolfes, Elsa Kahl, and Frederic Waldman of the Opera Department. The cast of singers, orchestra, and chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, as was the case when [illegible] was performed at Tanglewood last summer.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 28 1947

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS FOR MENTOR IN LENOX

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, today was guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in the third concert of the first series of the Berkshire music festival concerts.

It was the first time anyone but Dr. Koussevitzky, who originated the idea of Tanglewood, had led the orchestra here. Mr. Bernstein, who was born in Lawrence, Mass., won most applause from the 8,500 in attendance when the orchestra performed Stravinsky's "The Ties of Spring."

The concert opened with Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute," and concluded with Schubert's Symphony in C Major, No. 7.

Dr. Koussevitzky listened from his box in the center of the music shed, and later appeared on the stage to congratulate Mr. Bernstein.

NE, SUNDAY, JULY

Nine Concerts This Fortnight In Berkshires

Beethoven Series Begins Next Thursday Night; Special Event Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completes Series A of the Berkshire Festival with a concert under Leonard Bernstein's direction today at 3:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The concerts of Series B, devoted to Beethoven's music, will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be performed in an extra concert on Tuesday night, Aug. 5.

Next Tuesday night at 8:30, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a special concert, of which the first half will be broadcast over the ABC network. Motion pictures will be made of the audience to form part of a film outlining the history of Tanglewood. The rest of the program will consist of short works to be played by the orchestra and also on records made by the Boston Symphony in 1915, 1935 and recently, to illustrate progress in the recording of orchestral music. Before and after the concert, at 7 and 11 o'clock, excerpts of films with music by contemporary composers will be shown. The programs for the remainder of the festival are:

Today, 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting: "Magic Flute" overture, Mozart; Le Sacre du Printemps, Stravinsky; Symphony in C, No. 7 (9), Schubert.

Tuesday, July 29, 7 and 11 o'clock, Theater-Concert Hall. Scenes from American, English, French and Russian films; music by Virgil Thomson, Aaron Copland, William Walton, Arthur Honegger and Serge Prokofieff. 8:30, Music Shed, "Music for All" program, Serge Kousevitzky conducting. Concerto in D minor, Vivaldi; Piano Concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky (soloist, Ella Goldstein); "Roman Carnival" overture, Berlioz; excerpts from works by Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and Beethoven, in actual performance and in recordings.

Thursday, July 31, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven Symphonies No. 1, 2, 3.

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:15 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 4; Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor), (soloist, Jacob Lateiner); Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 (Series B, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No 6; Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major (soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7, in A major.

Tuesday, Aug. 5 (extro concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphonies Nos 8 and 9; Festival Chorus (soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass).

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:15 (Series C, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Symphony in B flat No 102, Haydn; Violin Concerto, Hindemith (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Symphony No. 2, in C major Schumann.

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus and soloists as on Aug. 5; Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil," Bach; Symphony of Psalms, Stravinsky; Requiem, Mozart.

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos, Martinu; Pavane, Bolero, Ravel; Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Tchaikovsky.

The orchestra's rehearsals next Saturday and the following Saturday mornings at 10 o'clock will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund.

The Berkshire Music Center has announced the following program for this week:

Today, morning, Chamber M[illegible] evening, opera scenes. Mond[illegible] tra and Chorus, Department [illegible] 8:15, orchestral students [illegible] gram. Thursday, 4:30, Chorus [illegible] Friday, 8:15, concert by stude[illegible]

The Center's concerts, including the performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo" on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 4 and 6, are open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about the festival and the Center's activities is obtainable at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
JUL 28 194

Bernstein Conducts Tanglewood Concert

By Associated Press

LENOX, Mass.

Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, yesterday afternoon was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in the third of the first series of Berkshire Festival concerts.

It was the first time anyone but Dr. Koussevitzky, who originated the idea of Tanglewood, had led the orchestra here. Bernstein, a native of Lawrence, Mass., won most applause from the 8500 in attendance when the orchestra performed Stravinsky's The Rites of Spring.

The concert opened with Mozart's Overture to The Magic Flute and concluded with Schubert's Symphony in C Major, No. 7.

Dr. Koussevitzky listened from his box in the center of the Music Shed and appeared on the stage to congratulate Bernstein.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 28 1947

Tanglewood's First Series of Season Is Ended

Koussevitzky Conducts on 73d Birthday; Bernstein Also Leads Bostonians

By Francis D. Perkins

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 27.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the first of the three subscription series of the Berkshire Festival with concerts last night and this afternoon in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitsky, observing his seventy-third birthday, devoted half of yesterday's program to American works, Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal" and Aron Copland's third symphony. Berlioz's symphony "Harold in Italy" followed, with William Primrose as the viola soloist.

Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra this afternoon in Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's last symphony, in C major.

Good weather prevailed for both concerts, and the attendance, including the capacity gatherings in the shed itself and those who stood, sat or reclined on the lawn outside, was estimated at 8,000 for yesterday and 8,500 today. Still larger audiences are expected for next week end's Beethoven programs, judging by the advance sale.

This was the first Berkshire performance of Mr. Copland's third symphany, which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians introduced both to Boston and New York last season, when it won the New York Music Critics Circle annual award for an outstanding orchestral work. In yesterday's rehearing, it again impressed as music of exceptional quality, in its musical content and individuality as well as its instrumental investiture. Further hearings would be interesting, both for more consideration of its merits, and also to confirm or banish an occasional impression of length and of too-frequent proclamativeness, despite the effective and imposing nature of the proclamations and climaxes.

Two or three of Mr. Copland's themes recalled others by earlier composers, but this seemed a matter of coincidence rather than of influence; the work as a whole told of originality as well as unity of style. The performance was expressive and imposing, suggesting thorough devotion to the music on the part of both the conductor and the musicians. The composer was called upon for several bows.

Similar devotion and enthusiasm marked the performance of the Berlioz symphony, which seems to be returning in the active list after years of infrequent presentation. Mr. Primrose gave a musicianly and eloquent performance of his solos, with a tone which fully revealed the resources in color and timbre of an insrument which, even now, merits fuller exploitation in a solo role; the orchestra did full justice to the romantic spirit of the music.

Mr. Barber's well-wrought overture was well played. Composed fifteen years ago, it has merits which stand the test of repetition.

This afternoon's concert was the first regular festival program to be conducted by Mr. Bernstein or any conductor other than Mr. Koussevitzgy. The program as a whole and especially "Le Sacre" gave a convincing demonstration of Mr. Bernstein's already well-known technic. The Stravinsky work requires exceptional technical mastery as well as interpretative insight on the part of its director, and the young American leader preserved constant clarity of outline and detail and the often-complex rhythmic structure. There was a sense of constant sureness and thorough knowledge of the score, and its varying and striking moods and emotions were vividly projected; a memorable impression of increasing momentum and excitement marked the close of the first half.

In motion and gesture, Mr. Bernstein was more moderate than he has been on some previous occasions. In this regard he was not restrained today, but his gestures seemed concentrated on evident and achieved musical purposes. The orchestra deserved the highest praise, and there was fervent applause for this performance of a work which is still fresh and remarkable in many ways in this thirty-fifth year of its career.

The orchestra and its conductor also fared well in the Mozart overture and Schubert's delectable symphony.

Today's visitors had an opportunity to hear nearly six hours of music at Tanglewood, what with this concert and two performances by Berkshire Music Center students; a morning concert of mainly modern music and an evening program of opera scenes. Tomorrow afternoon's student concert of choral and orchestral music has been canceled.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 28

Bernstein Cheered In Tanglewood Bow

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Leonard Bernstein made the grade here this afternoon. It was his Tanglewood debut. His program practically duplicated that of his guest appearance with the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall during the Winter season.

It featured Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's Seventh Symphony. An audience of 8,000 cheered him for his youthful zest and sheer bravado.

Stravinsky's barbaric yawp rang out replete with pagan spirit. The music appeals to the savage in us all, especially when exposed as undaunted in its animal spirits as it was in this amazing performance.

It can truthfully be said Bernstein gave his whole body to his interpretation. If he resembled a cheer leader, perhaps the nature of the music warranted it.

Watching the performance tended to eclipse hearing it. Actually it was a technical achievement of extraordinary talent and enviable clarity of detail.

* * *

Cohesion Needed

The program opened with a nicely-tailored performance of Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute." It closed with a well-controlled concept of the Schubert Symphony. Both misses a fullness of communication through more need of cohesion. The orchestra was in top form throughout the afternoon.

Contemporary music comprised two-thirds of Koussevitzky's absorption in the Saturday night concert. He conducted Barber's overture, "The School for Scandal" and Copland's Third Symphony, intent on conveying every ounce of their worth.

Audience response came more readily for the Barber than for the Copland. The overture is short and easily comprehended. The symphony requires more hearings to grasp. Both composers were present to take bows.

Barber's musical instincts are well-rooted. This 15-year-old work contains promise for expansion beyond acknowledged skill. It catches the right mood, it holds melodic interest, it has rhythmic flexibility. Audiences have reason to like it.

While Copland's symphony seldom gets away from premeditated art, it has more sustained communicative writing than most of the composer's works.

There is no uncertainty in its bald, feverish, drive. The music quite surely expresses the times in which we live. How far it goes beyond, how deep its insight is still speculative. Repeated hearings, however, whet interest.

* * *

Hearers Transported

The comforting romanticism of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony gave solace to those who had "endured" the contemporary music. Its balmy harmonic and melodic sound was hardly conservative a hundred years ago when it was new.

With William Primrose playing the solo viola part, the romantic hero made an enjoyable tour. Koussevitzky gave this music the same consuming attention that he had given the other works.

These concerts concluded Series A of the 1947 Berkshire Festival. Series B, which is a Beethoven cycle, opens this Thursday evening and continues through August 5. Tomorrow a special event called "Music for All" will demonstrate the links between the science of musical reproduction and actual performance.

FIRST WOMAN CONDUCTOR: Dr. Stanley Chapple, dean of the Berkshire Music Center and assistant conducting teacher, congratulates Miss Iva Dee Hiatt of Berkeley, Cal., following her appearance last night at Tanglewood as the first woman to conduct a student symphony orchestra in the Music Shed. Other students in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class who appeared last night were Harry John Brown and Claude Frank. Emmanuel Zambelli was the piano soloist with the orchestra in Rachmaninoff's concerto for piano and orchestra with Dr. Chapple conducting before 2000.

Two Ex-Pilots To Be Soloists In Ninth Symphony at Festival

Two ex-pilots will be soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in the Ninth Symphony that will bring to a close the Beethoven cycle of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Tuesday evening. James Pease, bass, who was for three years in the Army Air Forces, and David Lloyd, tenor, a Naval Air Forces pilot, will sing with Miss Frances Yeend and Miss Eunice Alberts to form the quartet for "Schiller's Ode to Joy."

The concert, which will open with the Eighth Symphony, will start at 7.30 instead of 8.15. The entire Ninth Symphony will be broadcast over the nationwide network of the American Broadcasting Company, which will extend the time over the usual hour so that the radio audience may hear the complete work.

The Festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will sing the choral part. Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts and Mr. Pease sang in the quartet for the same work last summer at Tanglewood, and in the opera, "Peter Grimes." Mr. Lloyd, a student at the Berkshire Music Center, is at the school this season for the first time.

Sang Twice With BSO

Miss Yeend, a native of the state of Washington, sang twice with the orchestra at Symphony Hall in the Ninth Symphony. Mr. Pease, who appeared at Tanglewood as Falstaff in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" and as the captain in "Peter Grimes," has sung this season in Central City, Col., in "Fidelio" and "Martha." A native of Indianapolis, he was admitted to the Indiana Bar before winning a competition at the Academy of Vocal Arts, Philadelphia.

Born in Minneapolis, Mr. Lloyd won the 1946 "Voice of America" competition sponsored by the Philadelphia Inquirer. While a student at Minneapolis College of Music, where he sang in six choirs, learned to play the violin and was third trumpet in the college orchestra, he sang for Dimitri Mitropoulos, musical director of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, who encouraged him to study in the East. At the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, studying under Richard Bonelli, he met his wife, also a student at Tanglewood, who is concert-master of the advanced school orchestra.

Miss Alberts, a native Bostonian, studied at the New England Conservatory and the Longy School of Music, Cambridge. She studied with Fritz Lehmann and George Kitzinger, and with Rosalie Miller of New York. She sang with the Boston orchestra last winter.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, given its first performance in America by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra 101 years ago, was first played in Boston by the Germania Musical Society in 1853, assisted by a chorus from the Handel and Haydn Society. Written in 1824, it was dedicated to William 3d of Prussia.

The Eighth Symphony, scored for a small orchestra, was first performed at the Redoutensaal in Vienna in 1814.

Tickets for Tuesday's concert and the third series of the Festival the following week end are on sale at the box office.

FIRST PERFORMANCE OPERA, "IDOMONEO" IN LENOX, AUG. 4-6

Winsted Citizen Jul 28

Details of the pending production of Mozart's three act opera "Idomeno" Aug. 4 and 6 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., are announced. This opera will then have its first performance in this country. It will be under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, and will be staged by the opera department of the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct. Scenery has been designed by Richard Rychtarik. Mr. Goldovsky will be assisted by Frederic Cohen, Felix Wolfes, Elsa Kahl and Frederic Waldman of the opera department. The cast of singers, orchestra, and chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire music center, as was the case when "Peter Grimes" was performed at Tanglewood last summer. The title part of "Indomeneo" will be sung by Joseph Laderoute. Idamante, a part written by Mozart for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, alternately in the two performances by Elizabeth Ann Bollinger and Dorothy Dawson. The Princess Ilia of Troy will be sung by Nancy Trickey; Elettra, daughter of Agamemnon, by Paula Lencher, and the high priest of Neptune by Frank Guarrera.

The performances will take place in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood Monday evening, Aug. 4, and Wednesday evening, Aug. 6. Admission will be by invitation to the friends of the Berkshire music center.

There every evidence that Mozart applied his genius intensively to "Idomeneo" which was his first opportunity to write an "opera seria" for a major opera house, the court opera at Munich in 1780. The opera was performed Jan. 29, 1781, to great applause, two days after the composer's 25th birthday.

"Idomeneo" has had occasional performances in Europe, mostly in Germany and Austria. There were further revivals in 1931, the 150th anniversary of the first performance, when there was a production at the Vienna state opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and L. Wallerstein, and another at Munich musically edited by E. Wolf-Ferrari and E. L. Stahl. A version in English was performed in London in 1938. There has never been a performance in Italy.

The Abbe Varesco derived his text for "Idomeneo, King of Crete" or "Ilia and Idamante" from an earlier French libretto by Danchet for an opera "Idomeneo" by Campra. The legend, set in ancient Greece, is similar to that of the biblical Jeptha, and involves the predicament of the king of Crete, who, in gratitude for escaping shipwreck, vows to the god Neptune to sacrifice the first one whom he meets upon his own shores. It is his own son, Idamante, who first greets him. Idomeneo seeks to save his son by sending him to Argos with Electra, the Princess of that country, but the Gods intervene, and decree that Idamante replace Idomeneo on the throne of Crete, together with his true love, Ilia, prisoner of war from Troy.

Science, Music Mix at Festival

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Science and music caught up with each other at Tanglewood today and tonight. A musical shindig has been staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and RCA Victor the like of which is probably something new under the sun and moon.

They called it "New Horizons in Music."

It was RCA Victor's salute to the first full-sized symphonic organization to make records. Its gesture was a potential gift of $100,000 to benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center.

The day's program covered the fidelity of recordings and the use of the music shed for broadcasting a concert and as a motion picture studio. Added to those demonstrations was a session on music in the movies. This four-ring circus attracted a crowd estimated at 7,000.

In the lineup of movie scores, the representation of composers was impressive. Disney's "Mickey's Grand Opera" was used as a curtain raiser. Then followed excerpts from Copland's "Our Town," Honegger's "Mayerling," Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky," Shostakovich's "The Youth of

---

MUSIC
KASTENDIECK AT FESTIVAL

Maxim," Thomson's "The River," and Walton's "Henry V."

For the broadcast portion of the Boston Symphony concert, Koussevitzky programmed Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikowsky's first piano concerto with 20-year-old Ella Goldstein giving a bravura performance as soloist.

The second half included Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture, during which the audience was filmed. Wagner's prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," the general dance from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," the march from Prokofieff's "The Love of Three Oranges" and Beethoven's overture to "Egmont" completed a somewhat popular list.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
JUL 28 1947

Dr. and Mrs. Gerard C. Maglio and their son, Gerard, 44 Barker Avenue, will leave Wednesday for a two weeks' vacation in Pittsfield, Mass., where they will visit Mrs. Maglio's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Passero. While they are in the Berkshires they plan to attend a series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra "festival" concerts at Tanglewood.

Eagle

Special Train To Bring 100 To 'Music for All' Program

More Than 400 Special Guests To See Elaborate Events at Tanglewood Showing 'New Horizons in Music'

A special train will bring to Pittsfield from New York City more than 100 special guests for the "Music for All" program at Tanglewood tomorrow, including music critics from points as distant as Dallas, Texas. In addition 300 other guests, prominent in musical and social circles, have accepted the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to attend the events of the late afternoon and evening that will demonstrate "New Horizons in Music."

Forty men have arrived from Camden, N.J., and New York to prepare for the program. Many miles of wire have been strung and many truckloads of equipment have been unloaded for the television demonstration, radio broadcast, taking of motion pictures and the tableaux for the "March of Musical Fidelity."

Film at 6.45

From 6.15 to 8.15, in the garden, there will be a demonstration of television, when those who attend will have an opportunity to televise themselves. At 6.45 films will be shown in the theatre-concert hall that will demonstrate the use of music in movies, especially written by contemporary composers. Excerpts will be shown from "Our Town," "The River," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and "Henry V," with Walter Disney's "Micky's Grand Opera," as a curtain raiser. The show will be repeated at 11, or as soon after the concert as the audience assembles.

Illustrating how symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8.30 in the Shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over WBEC and the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company. Engineers, directors and announcers will operate in full view of the audience. The Vivaldi concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikovsky's piano concerto No. 1, with Ella Goldstein as soloist, will provide the broadcast portion of the concert. During the playing of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture, first motion pictures of a Festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood.

In "The March of Musical Fidelity" Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the prelude to Act 3 of "Lohengrin," after which a record of the piece made 30 years ago, will be played on a phonograph of the period. The orchestra's first orthophonic electrical recording of the dance from Ravel's "Daphnic and Chloe" will follow, and the recording made in 1936 of Prokofieff's "the Love for Three Oranges." The program will conclude with Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," in which the new "Berkshire," RCA Victor's first custom-made phonograph, will be demonstrated, following the playing of the overture by the orchestra itself.

RCA Officials Here

Miss Harriett Higginson, general manager of the RCA Victor consumer custom products department, has been at Tanglewood since Saturday. Among others who will attend are Dr. H. F. Olson, who developed the Olson speaker; James Murray, general manager of the record department; Donald K. West, director of public relations; Joseph B. Elliott, vice-president and general manager of the home instruments department; Richard Hooper, superintendent; Marvin Hobbs, chief engineer for the consumer customs products department; Carl Raifsteck, manager of manufactures.

The script for the "March of Musical Fidelity" was written by Harold T. Desfor. The narrator will be Gene Hamilton. Robert Woods is the director and Richard Rychtarik the designer.

Sandwiches and hot and cold drinks will be available for those who wish them. The audience is invited to picnic on the grounds. Tickets at the usual price for admission to the grounds are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood and England Brothers. Seats will not be reserved.

Special Busses To Leave Park at 6

Special busses will be operated from Park Square to Tanglewood tomorrow night at 6 for the "Music for All" program, General Manager Thomas E. MacDonald of the Berkshire Street Railway announced today. Busses also will be provided for the return trip.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 28 1947

Beethoven Cycle Highlights Week's Events at Tanglewood

Starting with Sunday's three concerts, this week promises to be a busy one at Tanglewood.

It will include the special concert at the "Music for All" field day on Tuesday for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the opening of the Beethoven cycle Thursday evening.

* * *

THIS AFTERNOON at 4:30 the orchestra and chorus department 5 was to give a concert, and Wednesday evening orchestral students of the Berkshire Music Center will present an all-Stravinsky chamber music concert.

Thursday at 4:30 the chorus department 5 will sing in the Festival shed and Thursday evening Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Beethoven Cycle with the composer's first three symphonies, to be followed Saturday evening by the 4th and 5th symphonies and the 5th Piano Concerto "Emperor," with Jacob Lateiner, soloist.

The 6th and 7th symphonies and 4th piano concerto will be played Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, Joseph Battista, soloist, and the cycle will close with an extra concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 5 at 7:30 with the 8th and 9th symphonies. The soloists will be Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, tenor.

* * *

THE STUDENT orchestra will play in the shed Friday evening and Saturday morning the BSO rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all student concerts. Admission to opera scenes will be by invitation.

ELLA GOLDSTEIN, Palestinian pianist, who will be the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Tuesday.

The "field day" Tuesday will start at 7 with the showing of scenes from French, Russian, English and American films, including "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Youth of Maxim," "The Plainsman," "The River," and "Henry V," to illustrate the use of music, especially written by contemporary composers. During a special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, movies will be made of the audience, who will see how a concert is broadcast over ABC's coast-to-coast [illegible].

The last [illegible] program will be played side by side with important recordings of the orchestra over the past 32 years. The audience is invited to bring a picnic supper.

28, 1947 Jul Trib. N.Y.

Tanglewood's First Series of Season Is Ended

Koussevitzky Conducts on 73d Birthday; Bernstein Also Leads Bostonians

By Francis D. Perkins

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 27.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the first of the three subscription series of the Berkshire Festival with concerts last night and this afternoon in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitsky, observing his seventy-third birthday, devoted half of yesterday's program to American works, Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal" and Aron Copland's third symphony. Berlioz's symphony "Harold in Italy" followed, with William Primrose as the viola soloist.

Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra this afternoon in Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and Schubert's last symphony, in C major.

Good weather prevailed for both concerts, and the attendance, including the capacity gatherings in the shed itself tnd those who stood, sat or reclined on the lawn outside, was estimated at 8,000 for yesterday and 8,500 today. Still larger audiences are expected for next week end's Beethoven programs, judging by the advance sale.

This was the first Berkshire performance of Mr. Copland's third symphany, which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians introduced both to Boston and New York last season, when it won the New York Music Critics Circle annual award for an outstanding orchestral work. In yesterday's rehearing, it again impressed as music of exceptional quality, in its musical content and individuality as well as its instrumental investiture. Further hearings would be interesting, both for more consideration of its merits, and also to confirm or banish an occasional impression of length and of too-frequent proclamativeness, despite the effective and imposing nature of the proclamations and climaxes.

Two or three of Mr. Copland's themes recalled others by earlier composers, but this seemed a matter of coincidence rather than of influence; the work as a whole told of originality as well as unity of style. The performance was expressive and imposing, suggesting thorough devotion to the music on the part of both the conductor and the musicians. he composer was called upon for several bows.

Similar devotion and enthusiasm marked the performance of the Berlios symphony, which seems to be returning in the active list after years of infrequent presentation. Mr. Primrose gave a musicianly and eloquent performance of the solos, with a tone which fully revealed the resources in color and timbre of an insrument which, even now, merits fuller exploitation in a solo role; the orchestra did full justice to the romantic spirit of the music.

Mr. Barber's well-wrought overture was well played. Composed fifteen years ago, it has merits which stand the test of repetition.

This afternoon's concert was the first regular festival program to be conducted by Mr. Bernstein or any conductor other than Mr. Koussevitzgy. The program as a whole and especially "Le Sacre" gave a convincing demonstration of Mr. Bernstein's already well-known talents. The Stravinsky work requires exceptional technical mastery as well as interpretative insight on the part of its director, and the young American leader preserved constant clarity of outline and detail and the often-complex dhythmic structure. There was a sense [illegible] sureness and thorough knowledge of the score, and its varying and striking moods and emotions were vividly [illegible]; a memorable impression [illegible] increasing momentum and excitement marked the close of the first half.

In motion and gesture, Mr. Bernstein was more moderate than he has been on some previous occasions. In this regard he was not restrained today, but his gestures seemed concentrated on evident and achieved musical purposes. The orchestra deserved the highest praise, and there was fervent applause for this performance of a work which is still fresh and remarkable in many ways in this thirty-fifth year of itss career.

The orchestra and its conductor also fared well in the Mozart overture and Schubert's delectable symphony.

Today's visitors had an opportunity to hear nearly six hours of music at Tanglewood, what with this concert and two performances by Berkshire Mpsic Center students; a morning concert of mainly modern music and an evening program of opera scenes. Tomorrow afternoon's student concert of choral and orchestral music has been canceled.

---

were disappointing. Samuel Barber has written far better music than that, in his overture to A School for Scandal.

Aaron Copland's third symphony has its moments, but they are few and far between. There are a few melodic moments and many more when melody is completely absent. The work lacks cohesion. There is effective use of brass and various percussion instruments. Dr. Koussevitzky gave it all it was worth and possibly made it sound better than it is.

Berlioz has written greater music than Harold in Italy, but it is music that still falls sweetly upon the ear. Frankly episodic, it moves through its tales of Italian life surely and easily. The viola is an integral part of the orchestration but is heard too seldom. When heard, the matchless tones which Mr. Primrose draws from his instrument soared through the shed, warm and vibrant. The audience was enchanted, and with reason.

Next Thursday the series of three concerts devoted to the symphonies of Beethoven begins. Thursday night brings the first, second and third symphonies.

It was announced that the student chorus and orchestra concert scheduled for Monday at 4.30 will not be given.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 28 1947

Bernstein Wins Ovation From Tanglewood Audience

Young Composer-Conductor Displays Rare Art in Leading Boston Symphony Concert

By Willard M. Clark

Tanglewood, July 27—Twenty nine years old Leonard Bernstein,, making his debut at Tanglewood this afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, won a tremendous and well-deserved ovation from an audience of 8500 persons.

This young composer, pianist, conductor showed the many facets of his art in a formidable program which included the overture to Mozart's The Magic Flute. The Rites of Spring by Stravinsky, and the great C major symphony No. 7 by Schubert.

Bernstein, as he conducts, is rhythm personified yet his cues are as direct and precise as one could wish. One of his most ardent admirers. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky occupied Box No. 1. It is rumored that one of these days Bernstein may be conductor of the Boston Symphony. Even now, it would be a happy choice.

Still Vigorous, Fresh

Stravinsky's masterpiece The Rites of Spring, is not heard as often as it should be. It is just 25 years since its dissonances fell upon the astounded ears of an audience attending a concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Today, its complexities seem less, its dissonances less appalling while its vigor, its freshness remain.

One heard today a definite performance, a performance which caught and held the earthy tang [illegible] first part, The Adoration of the Earth, and successfully evoked the mysterious murmurs and sonorities of The Sacrifice. Under Bernstein's direction, this work, written more than 30 years ago, emerged as significant as the day it was written.

Most Fascinating

It is a long distance from Stravinsky to Schubert, but in his culminating symphony, the seventh, or ninth if one prefers that opus number, one hears the most buoyant, fascinating and original of the Schubert symphonies. It was in his reading of this work that Mr. Bernstein revealed his poetic insight, his superb handling of dynamics and his sensitivity for melody. He summoned thrilling sonorities, yet had at his command the most delicate and beautiful of pianissimi, while his regard for phrase was a delight.

In his reading of the Mozart overture, he showed his familiarity with this school and brought to it the red-blooded, straight-forward reading it deserves.

Saturday Concert

Saturday night, 8000 persons heard Dr. Koussevitzky conduct two contemporary works in addition to the Berlioz Harold in Italy in which William Primrose, violist, appeared as soloist. The contemporary works

(Cont'd

Ella Goldstein, pianist, will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 1, by Tchaikovsky, and the orchestra will play music by Berlioz and Vivaldi.

On Thursday evening, the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will play three Beethoven symphonies: No. 1, in C Major, No. 2, in D Major, and No. 3, sometimes styled the "Eroica."

On Saturday evening, rounding out a busy week at the Tanglewood center, the orchestra will play Beethoven's fourth in B Flat major; the fifth in C Minor, and Jacob Lateiner will appear as piano soloist in the "Emperor" concerto.

SPRINGFIELD, MA
NEWS

JUL 28 1947

Tributes to Koussevitzky Mark His 73d Birthday

Presentation of Musical Instruments; Serenade in Hi Honor Are Part of Program; Full Week Ahead a Tanglewood Festival

Lenox, July 28—The playing of a canon, specially composed for the occasion by Leonard Bernstein; the singing of a serenade by the student chorus; the presentation of two valuable musical instruments to the Berkshire Music Center; the cutting of a birthday cake; tributes from all his well-wishers marked the 73d birthday of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood on Saturday night.

One of the instruments, a cello, was presented by Abram Chasin, composer-pianist, and a member of the first faculty of the school in 1940. In making the presentation, Chasin said, "Dr. Koussevitzky, and fine instruments have something in common. As they grow older, they grow better."

The cello is a century old, and the violin half that. The instruments will be used by talented students at the music school, whose instruments are inferior, or who have none. The presentations were made before a audience of 2500, at the first publi rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Berkshire Festival.

Yesterday afternoon, before a audience that filled the great shed and overflowed onto the green, Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor in the history of the Festival, led the orchestra in a program that comprised Mozart's "The Magic Flute;" Stravinsky's dramatic "Rites Of Spring," and Schubert's "C Major Symphony No. 7."

At the close of the concert, the young conductor, not yet 30, received a tremendous ovation.

Soloist at the Saturday night concert was William Primrose, violist, who appeared in "Harold In Italy," by Berlioz.

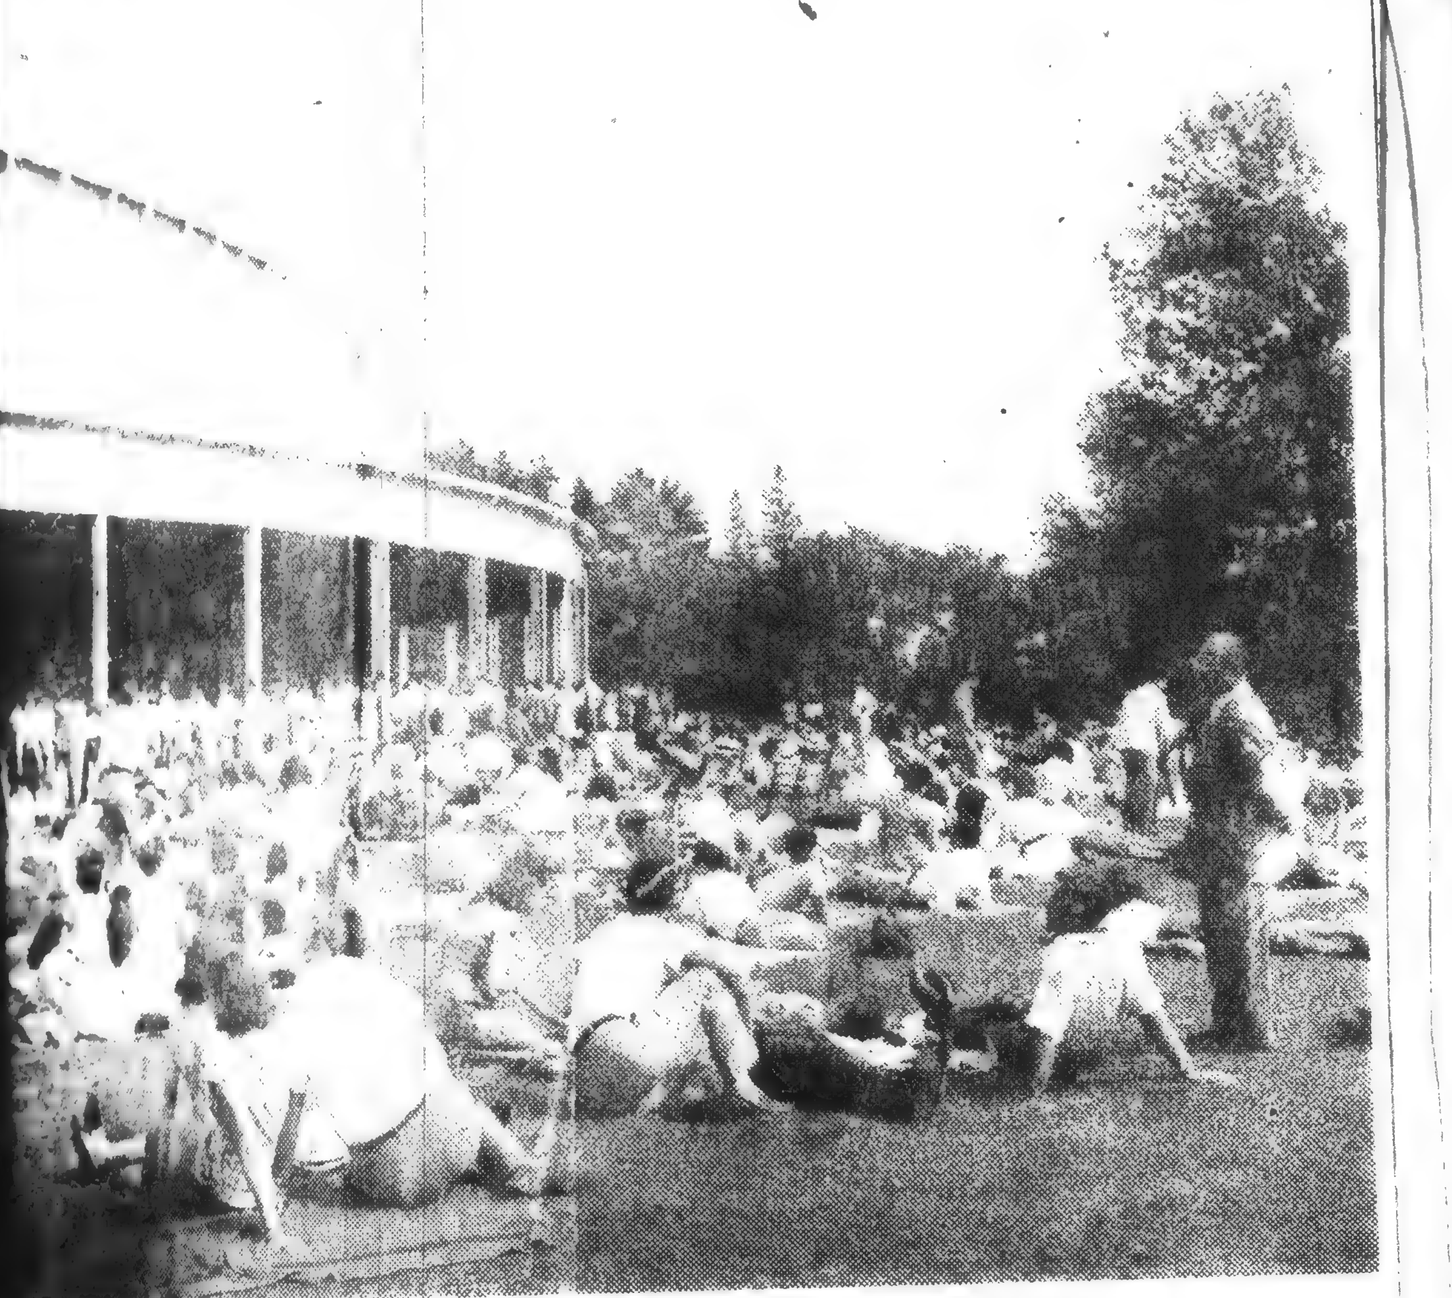
Tomorrow evening, the much-publicized "Music For All" Program will be held, starting at 7, with motion pictures in the theater-concert hall, to be followed by a concert in the shed.

[59]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 28 1947



[Photo by Babbitt]

NFORMALITY REIGNS AT TANGLEWOOD—Although almost every one of the 6000 seats in the big Music Shed at Tanglewood was sold for the concert last Sunday afternoon, more than 2000 other mu- ic lovers stood or sat outside as this picture by H. S. Babbitt. Jr., shows, to hear the Boston Sy- nony Orchestra play Stravinski's "Le Sacre du Printemps," under the direction of Leonard Bernstein, rilliant young conductor. Remaining concerts by the Boston Orchestra in this year's Tanglewood series are scheduled for the nights of July 1. Aug. 2, 5, 7 and 9, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3 and 10.

AT OPENING CONCERT: Virgil Thomson, composer and music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, chats at intermission at the first program presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, with Mrs. C. D. Jackson of Lenox, left, and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 29 1947

Music Festival Bows to Films

[illegible] director [illegible] Berkshire Music [illegible] place at Lenox [illegible] session [illegible] program to- [illegible] a one- [illegible] from mo- [illegible] partially [illegible] original [illegible] Agin- [illegible] Henry [illegible] William Walton com- [illegible] Town" and [illegible] sound-track [illegible] Copland and Ar- [illegible] Honegger respectively, both [illegible] whom are on the staff of the [illegible] Music Center, are also [illegible] the program. [illegible] selections will be pre- [illegible] before and again after, the [illegible]

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 29 1947

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the program (ABC, 8:30) tonight will feature a 20-year-old pianist in Tschaikowsky's Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. During the day, MGM, will film a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood" which will include the filming of the broadcast. Important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years will also be played for the audience at Tanglewood. * * * Jeffrey Cla[illegible] and Bobby Nicolson's [illegible] vide your more po[illegible] Serenade (ABC, 10), thus one network brings you two hours of music ranging all the way from classics to jive.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 29 1947

Music for All

This is Music for All Day at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., featuring a program covering recording, radio, television and moving pictures. The audience will hear RCA-Victor's new Berkshire radio-phonograph reproducing Boston Symphony recordings dating back to 1915 and will be able to compare reproduction with the orchestra itself during a special concert to follow.

BERKSHIRE CENTER STUDENTS INCLUDE 3 LOCAL MUSICIANS

Picture on the Picture Page.

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Music Editor

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Evidence that Buffalo is finding her place in the musical sun is represented in the fact that three local musicians—the largest representation from this city since the founding of the Berkshire Music Center — won the coveted honor of being accepted as students in the 1947 session of the Center at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Enjoying the wooded setting of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its annual Berkshire Festival are Joseph Wincenc, 64 Grosvenor Court, Kenmore, conductor of the Amherst Symphony Orchestra; Frank Knight Dale, 216 Ashland Ave., also a conductor, and Harry S. Taub, 26 Norwalk Ave., violinist.

"It's a grand place to exchange ideas and views on all matters musical," declared Mr. Wincenc. "The lectures are interesting and informative and the discussions following get really exciting at times."

Broadens Musical Horizon

Mr. Wincenc spoke enthusiastically of Eleazar De Carvalho and Leonard Bernstein, assistants to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the orchestral conducting department. Robert Shaw in the choral conducing department he termed a "terrific person," and Hugh Ross of the same department "a real musical scholar."

For Mr. Dale the Berkshire Music Center is outstanding because of the "remarkable, even great, possibilities" it represents as a molder and builder of music life in this country.

For Mr. Taub, youngest of the three men, coming to the Center constitutes one of the finest experiences of his life, for "it has broadened my musical horizon and given me something to think about," he said. He has derived especial pleassure from his participation in readings of chamber-music scores by Prokofieff, Hindemith, Piston and others and from his orchestral experience, particularly under De Carvalho.

Mr. Wincenc, a graduate of Oberlin College, formerly was concertmaster of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

Played at Chautauqua

He has studied at the Juilliard School, Columbia and New York Universities and at the Conservatory of Music in Prague, Czechoslovakia. While overseas, Tech. Sgt. Wincenc was director of the San Carlo Opera Company Orchestra, known as the Mediterranean Symphony.

In Prague, he was the only American playing in the Prague Philharmonic Orchestra. He also has played with the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra.

An interesting note comes in the fact that Mr. Taub is a former pupil of Mr. Wincenc. The violinist will return to Oberlin next Fall as a senior. He is the official concertmaster of the Oberlin Orchestra and is majoring in music, his goal being to play in a major symphony orchestra. Twice awarded the Purple Heart, he spent three years in the Infantry, reaching the rank of sergeant.

He is a graduate of Bennett High School, and began studying violin when a little over 5 years old.

Conducted in Vienna

His teachers, previous to Mr. Wincence, were Ivan Shapiro and Helen Durrett. He appeared as soloist with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at a summer concert in Beaver Island State Park in 1939.

Mr. Dale, formerly assistant to Dr. Hans Weisse of the Theory Department of the Mannes School in New York City, has studied music and conducted in Vienna. While there he met, through Dr. Weisse, Felix Weingartner and studied conducting under the famous conductor.

The Vienna Philharmonic, which Mr. Dale conducted several times, was, he said, a "wonderful orchestra, probably, at the time it disbanded, the greatest." From 1942 until 1945 Mr. Dale was a member of the Military Intelligence Service of the War Department in Miami Beach. He founded and conducted the Northfield Orchestra in Northfield, Minn., taught at Carleton College, taught piano at the Mannes School from 1933 to 1939 and has lectured on musical subjects.

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
HERALD

JUL 29 1947

Superb Music At Tanglewoo

Center at Lenox, Mass. Is Virtually a Musi Lover's Paradise

By Gladys F. Gilroy

Superlatives are almost unde statements when any music love talks about the music festival a Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Th superb music, magnificently playe by the Boston Symphony Orches tra, under the direction of D Koussevitsky, combined with th Berkshire Hills is an experienc that no one will ever forget o want to miss the next year.

In addition to the large concert in the shed, there are innumerabl smaller events which present som musical works which are rarel heard and almost never heard un der more ideal conditions. Ther is a series of chamber music con certs, sponsored by the Elizabet Sprague Coolidge foundation; ther is the opera and we have alread heard a Bach and Mozart serie at which the soloists were Nem eroff and Lieboshutz, whom w had in Manchester at one of th Civic Music series.

To a teacher, the most interesting feature of the entire Berkshir Music Center is the student sectio which is less publicized than th Festival. There are some four hundred and fifty students gathere from all over the world.

Student Performances

Here these students spend a summer working under some of the masters in their respective fields. The students not only study but also have an opportunity to perform every week and these performances meet all professional standards.

Of particular interest to the writer are the opera scenes given each week by the students who are studying under Boris Godolfsky. The freshness and youth of these young singers, along with their acting ability, is a treat to those of us who have seen so many fat Carmens and aging Hansels and Gretels. Incidentally this group is putting on Mozart's "Idomoneo," August 4 and 6, a full length work which is seldom heard on the regular operatic stage.

The next in interest are the student symphony concerts given every Friday night all summer. Here we have not only a student orchestra but also student conductors who are given an opportunity to work with a full sized symphony orchestra. That this has been a success is proven by the fact that Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw, two of our most promising young conductors, are products of the Berkshire Music Center. This year Mr. Bernstein was guest conductor at the shed on Sunday afternoon, July 27, when Schubert's Symphony in C major, No. 7 and Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring" was played.

Mr. Shaw will conduct one concert on Saturday evening, August 9, at which time Mozart's Requiem and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" will be played.

Chorus Of Prime Interest

I know that the chorus at Tanglewood will be of particular interest to the people of Manchester. This year, they are repeating the Beethoven Ninth Symphony with the final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." This concert had tremendous success last year.

The chorus is also singing at the Mozart "Requiem." In addition, they too give performances all summer long on Tuesday afternoons.

It is inspiring for one who attended the first concerts at the Mark Hanna estate, under a tent, to see what has been done in ten years. Dr. Koussevitsky has made a splendid dream come true. The gift of the Tanglewood Estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first step. Then came the building of the shed. Each year since has seen additions in the forms of theater, chamber music hall and various other buildings. Though the generosity of the National Federation of Music Clubs, a duplicate of Nathaniel Hawthorne's cottage where he wrote "Tanglewood tales," is being built and is being given to the Berkshire Music Center.

It has been a magnificent venture and Dr. Koussevitsky is lucky in being able to see his dream come true.

Staats-Zeitung

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von WOLFGANG STRESEMANN

Zweites Berkshire-Konzert

LENOX, Mass., 27. Juli. — Das Wetterglück des letzten deutschen Kaisers war so berühmt, daß man vor dem ersten Weltkrieg sehr oft vom "Hohenzollernwetter" sprach. Hier in Lenox verläßt man sich auf das "Koussevitzky-Wetter", das sich auch in diesem Jahre prompt eingestellt hat. Bis Mitte letzter Woche gab es nichts als Regen und dunkle Wolken. Aber seit Donnerstag, dem Tage der Eröffnung der Festspiele, kann sich niemand über schlechtes Wetter beklagen. Blauer Himmel, Sonnenschein und kühle Abende machen den Aufenthalt in den Berkshires zu einem ungetrübten Genuß. Und so ist Tanglewood den ganzen Tag über von Besuchern angefüllt, die darauf bedacht sind, so intensiv wie möglich an allen musikalischen Ereignissen teilzunehmen. Tausende von Zuhörern fanden sich z. B. bei Dr. Koussevitzkys öffentlicher Morgenprobe ein, und das von ihnen entrichtete Entgelt von einem Dollar pro Person wird dem Pensionsfonds des Boston Sinfonie Orchesters eine stattliche Summe eingetragen haben. Koussevitzky probte das Programm des zweiten Berkshire Konzerts und es gab vielen Musikfreunden Gelegenheit, sich mit den neuen Werken, die auf dem Programm standen, näher vertraut zu machen.

Am Abend selbst trafen viele Zuhörer schon eine Stunde vor Beginn ein, um es sich auf dem Rasen, außerhalb des "Shed" bequem zu machen. Da waren z. B. zwei ältere Damen, die sich Liegestühle mitgebracht hatten, andere hatten Decken und Kissen ausgebreitet, auf denen man sich niederließ, und überall herrschte eine erwartungsvolle Stimmung. Diese "out door" Zuhörer gehören zu den dankbarsten Musikfreunden. Obwohl sie sich weit entfernt von dem Konzertpodium befinden, herrscht bei ihnen während des Konzerts absolute Ruhe; wer spricht oder etwa seinen Platz verläßt, wird zur Ruhe verwiesen, und jede noch so geringe Störung wird mit mißbilligenden Blicken begleitet. Diese Zuhörer wollen die Musik und die wundervolle Natur zu gleicher Zeit genießen und sie kommen in der Tat restlos auf ihre Kosten.

Auch das Sonnabend - Konzert hinterließ bedeutende Eindrücke. Dr. Koussevitzky, der heute seinen dreiundsiebzigsten Geburtstag feierte, hatte wie immer, ein ausgezeichnetes Programm aufgestellt, das in der ersten Hälfte moderne Musik enthielt und nach der Pause mit Berlioz' "Harald in Italien" einen wirkungsvollen Abschluss fand. Der Dirigent, dessen Kräfte unerschöpflich zu sein scheinen, leitete das herrlich spielende Orchester mit hinreißendem Schwung und sorgte in der Berlioz Komposition für eine brillante, hinreißende Aufführung. Besonders der letzte Satz, der die Orgie bei den Briganten schildert, fand eine überwältigende Wiedergabe, was besonders viel heißt, da die Musik trotz ihrer genialen Instrumentation erfindungsmäßig auf keiner allzu hohen Stufe steht. Aber auch die anderen Sätze waren mit höchster Intensität und Ausdruck erfüllt. Das liebreizende Idyll des dritten Satzes mit seinen zahlreichen Solopassagen wurde in idealer Weise interpretiert, während die beiden ersten Sätze durchweg eine zwingende Atmosphäre hatten. Koussevitzky wurde von dem Bratschisten William Primrose hervorragend unterstützt, der seinen Part mit bemerkenswertem Einfühlungsvermögen und unfehlbarer Technik spielte.

Zu Beginn des Konzerts wurde Samuel Barber's Ouvertüre "The School for Scandal" gespielt, ein reizendes, schnell dahineilendes Stück, das der Komponist vor rund 12 Jahren geschrieben hat. Das melodiöse Werk, das ausgezeichnet instrumentiert und glänzend gearbeitet ist, erinnert in seinem Charakter an Rezniceks "Donna Diana" und Wolf-Ferraris Ouvertüre zu "Susannens Geheimnis". Es steht zu hoffen, daß diese hübsche, mit riesigem Beifall aufgenommene Komposition nicht so bald in der Versenkung verschwinden wird. — Anschließend dirigierte Dr. Koussevitzky die dritte Sinfonie von Aaron Copland, die in diesem Jahre den Preis der New Yorker Musikkritiker erhalten hat. Das umfangreiche Werk, das die Länge einer Brahms Sinfonie hat, ist die Arbeit eines großen Könners, der genau weiß, was er will. Aber trotz zahlreicher bedeutender Einzelheiten vermochte die Komposition keinen sehr nachhaltigen Eindruck zu hinterlassen. Das von Copland gewählte Themenmaterial, das sich stark an das amerikanische Musikidiom anleht, ist nicht sehr interessant, seine Durchführung kann kaum als zwingend angesprochen werden, und beide reichen nicht ganz aus, um den großen Rahmen einer 40-minutigen Sinfonie auszufüllen. Außerdem ist die Instrumentation oft reichlich roh und klingt viel zu laut, was allerdings teilweise an den akustischen Verhältnissen des "Shed" gelegen haben kann. Am eindrucksvollsten war der erste Satz, der in einem "Moderato" Tempo gehalten ist. Auch der Fanfaren Beginn des Finale hatte einige packende Momente, doch war der letzte Satz im ganzen gesehen, zu ausgedehnt. Das Hauptthema des Scherzos ist im Hinblick auf seine etwas bombastische Ankündigung nicht stark genug, während man sich in dem schön beginnenden langsamen Satz größere lyrische Intensität gewünscht hätte. Copland konnte sich über mangelnden Beifall nicht beklagen, aber dieser klang nicht so spontan, wie es nach der kurzen Barber Ouvertüre der Fall war. — Dr. Koussevitzky setzte sich für beide Stücke mit größter Begeisterung und unter Aufgebot seiner ganzen Persönlichkeit ein. Es sicherte beiden Werken effektvolle Aufführungen und holte die anwesenden Komponisten zur Entgegennahme des Applaus auf das Podium herauf.

Auch diesmal war die Halle bis auf den letzten Platz besetzt, und für heute nachmittag erwartet man einen Rekordbesuch.

Verleger Naumann 50 Jahre alt

Johann Wilhelm Naumann, erster Vorsitzender des Verlegerverbandes der amerikanischen Zone und Herausgeber der Zeitschrift "Neues Abendland" wurde am 9. Juli 50 Jahre alt. In Köln geboren, studierte er vor dem ersten Weltkrieg Philosophie, wandte sich jedoch nach Kriegsende der politischen Presse zu. Für sein Buch "Die Presse und der Katholik" verlieh ihm die Universität Lille 1932 ihre höchste Auszeichnung. Das Dritte Reich zwang ihn, seine Tätigkeit aufzugeben. Naumann verbrachte die Jahre bis zum Zusammenbruch in Freiburg und kehrte nach der Besetzung zu seinem alten Wirkungsort Augsburg zurück. Dort gründete er die "Schwäbische Landeszeitung".

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUL 29 1947

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Taylor of Clover Street have been attending the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood "Music for All" Just Like Three-Ring Circus

Ella Goldstein Proves Brilliant Pianist; Movie Music Presented; History of Phonograph Given

Tanglewood, July 29—"Music for All" was the title given the special doings at Tanglewood this afternoon and evening. The occasion had all the earmarks of a three-ring circus. In the Little Theater one listened to music written for the films by such luminaries as Copland, Honneger, Prokofieff and Virgil Thomson. In the gardens people were televised and learned that to see yourself as ohters see you is not always unalloyed pleasure. And in the music shed one heard the Tanglewood debut of a sensational young pianist, Ella Goldstein who gave a superb performance of Tschaikowski's "Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor."

Miss Goldstein, a newcomer to this country and a student in the school here, is a pianist of remarkable abilities. She had the power and technical assurance to give the needed breadth and style to the concerto. Her rhythmn was excellent, her pianissimi delicate and her conception of the concerto just right. Her tempo brought out the full beauty of the work. It was not rushed nor did Dr. Koussevitzky push his orchestra, as he is wont to do at times when collaborating with a soloist.

Miss Goldstein was recalled seven times, brought the conductor on the stage twice and from him received a bouquet and the orchesra rose from its seats in her honor.

The concerto opened with a meticulous performance of the "Concerto for Orchestra and Organ in D Minor" as arranged by Alexander Silotti.

The concert was arranged, in part, to demonstrate the part the Boston Symphony Orchestra has played in development of the phonograph and radio. It was the first symphony ever to make records, and on the air it has the longest broadcasting season of any orchestra not organized expressly for radio.

Tanglewood

Continued From Page 1

History of Phonograph

The second part of the music shed program was given over to the history of the phonograph and was climaxed by the unveiling of RCA Victor's latest custom-made phonograph-radio-television set.

One heard both this instrument and the orchestra in a group of selections which included the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," which, by the way, was the first record the symphony ever made; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," and the overture to "Egmont" by Beethoven. it was informative and interesting historically and musically.

We almost forgot to mention one other thing. During the playing of the "Roman Carnival" by Berlioz, we were filmed. Batteries of huge kleig lights were turned on and the audience was supposed to act natural and react only to the music. One noticed a deal of primping going on, in spite of the music.

It was noted on the program that the new phonograph, appropriately named the "Berkshire," would be sold on a subscription basis for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Festival and if all were sold it would mean $100,000.

Everyone had a good time and everyone means between 7500 and 8000 persons.

Thursday night the second series of concerts devoted to the works of Beethoven opens with the playing of the first three symphonies.

Bernstein Scores in Tanglewood Concert

Albany Times Union Jul 29

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

From his elite seat in the row of boxes which disects the great music shed of Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, listened to his own superb organization, conducted by his hand picked protege, Leonard Bernstein, in a program which evidently pleased the 73-year old maestro, judging from the rapturous expression which suffused his ruddy countenance. And an audience of 8,500 music lovers felt mch the same as the Boston Symphony orchestra's regular conductor as evidenced by the ovation vigen the 29-year old genius, particularly after the stunning performance of Stravinsky's musical recreation of the "Rite of Spring."

It may have been prophetical thinking on the part of Mr. Bernstein, conductor, composer and pianist when he wrote his symphonic ballet, "Facsimilie" a couple of years ago, for it was the consensus that Sunday's guest conductor, in interpretative artistry, conducting brilliance and orchestra-inspiring ability was a very clear carbon copy of his distinguished teacher, Dr. Koussevitzky.

Here is a young man, who, several years ago, come to Albany and conferred with several leaders in the musical life of the city, with the idea of starting a youth orchestra in this city as a "feeder" to the local symphony orchestra, but was allowed to slip from their grasp. He was taken up by Dr. Koussevitzky, because the "fair-haired boy" of the maestro, and catapulted to the top of this generation's potential conductors. He is the Horation Alger counterpart in the artistic sphere of America.

Interest, naturally, centered on his reading of the Stravinsky work. For this one number he distained the use of a score. It was in front of him, but as far as we could accertain, he never so much as even glanced at it. In the Schubert "Seventh" symphony, which ,incidentally, he conducted with romantic insight and flexibility, there wa snot even the customary music rack in front of him. However, it was "The Rite of Spring" which was a test of his ability ,with every choir of the orchestra receiving an unmistakable lead, and every change of its barbaric rhythm, being clearly indicated, resulting in an historic performance by this tremendously talented young American. It must have been an unique situation for Dr. Koussevitzky to sit on the sidelines, and "see himself as others see him" through his own, undimmed by time eyes as he himself, must have looked when he was the same age as this young guest conductor. But, in all justice to the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the intervening years have not dulled hiss musical tailed his tre

can still co

"photo-finish"

ful "facsimilie

[61]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 29 1947

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

4

1947

ELLA GOLDSTEIN IN TANGLEWOOD SOLO TOMORROW

20-Year-Old Pianist Will Play Tchaikowsky's Concerto No. 1

Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old pianist who will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1 Tuesday evening in the "New Horizons in Music" program at Tanglewood, began to play in concert at the age of five.

Born in Harbin, China, of a noted concert pianist mother and a father, Prof. Uriel Goldstein, who was a violinist-conductor and president of three conservatories, she toured China and Japan until she settled in Tel-Aviv, Palestine when she was 11. A year later she travelled to Holland to study at the Amsterdam Academy of Music, playing with the leading Dutch orchestras and other famous ones that visited the country.

ELLA GOLDSTEIN

When the war prevented her accepting an invitation to play in concert in France, England and Belgium, she left for Palestine on the "Patria," the last ship to leave for the Holy Land before the fall of France. She has played 200 concerts with the Palestine Symphony Orchestra, touring Egypt for four seasons with it. In 1944 she made a successful 9-month concert tour of South Africa, after which she came to America, making her debut in Town Hall, New York, last March.

She speaks six languages, and her repertoire includes 26 piano concertos and 20 full recital programs. She is studying at the Berkshire Music Center this summer.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUL 29

Mrs. Hawley Ward of Grove Place has returned from Lenox, Mass., where she attended the Berkshire Music Festival.

Presentation at Tanglewood

Part of the ceremonies attendant upon the 73d birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood. At the left, William Primrose, violist, looks on while Dr. Koussevitzky accepts a violin from Constance Keene, and a cello from Abram Chasins. The instruments are to form part of the Tanglewood instrument collection for students.

Honegger, der stärkste Eindruck von Tanglewood

Staats Zeitung

Rückblick auf die erste Musikwoche in den Berkshires

Von WOLFGANG STRESEMANN

Tanglewood ist das jüngste Musikparadies in der Welt. Die Musikfestspiele in den Berkshires, deren erste Woche nun hinter uns liegt, haben in wenigen Jahren einen ungeahnten Aufstieg genommen. Sie stellen heute das wichtigste musikalische Sommerereignis in den Vereinigten Staaten dar, und der Name "Tanglewood" gewinnt immer mehr einen internationalen Ruf. Die glückliche Verbindung von festlichen musikalischen Veranstaltungen mit einer alle Zweige umfassenden Musikschule hat es mit sich gebracht, daß die Berkshires zum Treffpunkt von Musikern der ganzen Welt geworden sind. Sie alle haben eine einzigartige Gelegenheit, das amerikanische Musikleben kennen zu lernen, und es steht zu hoffen, daß die internationale Bedeutung von Tanglewood in den kommenden Jahren sich noch verstärken wird. Tanglewood gehört heute zu den wichtigsten Repräsentationen der amerikanischen Musikkultur, von der die übrige Welt noch immer nicht genug weiß. Amerika ist insoweit auch heute noch ein nahezu unbekannter Erdteil. Besonders in Europa ist man viel zu wenig über den großen kulturellen Aufschwung dieses Landes informiert, der besonders auf dem Gebiete der Musik erstaunliche Proportionen angenommen hat. Die friedliche Zukunft der Welt hängt in erster Linie von dem gegenseitigen Sichverstehen und Kennenlernen der Völker ab. Wäre es nicht ein guter Gedanke, wenn man in Zukunft eine Anzahl von europäischen Musikstudenten nach Tanglewood einladen würde, um ihnen einen Einblick in das amerikanische Musikleben zu gewähren? Man hat in Wien vor kurzem junge amerikanische Sänger an die Staatsoper eingeladen, damit sie dort ihre Studien fortsetzen und Routine erwerben können. Wie wäre es, wenn man in gleicher Weise junge europäische Künstler für sechs Wochen nach den Berkshires bringen würde? Sie würden unendlich viel von ihrem Aufenthalt profitieren — denn Tanglewood hat viel zu bieten — und sie würden mit dazu beitragen, das Verständnis für die "Neue Welt" zu verbreiten. Auf der anderen Seite aber würden die amerikanischen Studenten von ihrer Zusammenarbeit mit ihren europäischen Gästen gleichfalls viel gewinnen und manche wertvolle Erkenntnisse, insbesondere hinsichtlich der europäischen Musik, erhalten.

Dr. Koussevitzky hatte in diesem Jahre den berühmten europäischen Komponisten Arthur Honegger eingeladen, der eine Kompositionsklasse in Tanglewood übernehmen sollte. Honegger, der seit langem in Paris lebt — er stammt aus dem französischen Teil der Schweiz — konnte leider nur für kurze Zeit sein Amt versehen. Offenbar ist ihm das ungewohnte Klima nicht gut bekommen, und vielleicht hat ihn seine Lehrtätigkeit in einer fremden Sprache zu sehr angestrengt. Jedenfalls beklagte er sich alsbald über Atemschwierigkeiten, und zwei Herzattacken zwangen ihn schließlich, sich von dem Schulbetrieb zurückzuziehen. Leider war es ihm auch nicht möglich, seine dritte Sinfonie für Streicher zu hören, die Koussevitzky an den Beginn seines Eröffnungsprogramms gestellt hatte. Honegger ist hier eine Komposition gelungen, die überall die stärksten Eindrücke hinterlassen hat. Das Werk wurde während der deutschen Okkupation von Paris geschrieben, und wenn es auch in keinerlei unmittelbaren Beziehung zu irgendwelchen geschichtlichen Ereignissen steht, so weist seine Grundstimmung unverkennbar auf die tragischen Umstände, unter denen die Komposition entstand. Diese tragischen Umstände haben ihren tieferen Grund in der großen Weltwende, in der wir uns seit langem befinden, und die auch heute noch keineswegs abgeschlossen ist. Honeggers Musik ist ein Symbol dieser Weltwende. Diese Empfindung stellte sich sehr bald beim Hören seiner Sinfonie ein. Die seltsame Ungewißheit, die aus dem langsamen Beginn spricht, das unsichere Tasten nach einem noch nicht erkennbaren Weg und vor allem der dunkle, "pessimistische" Ton der Musik stellen ein Abbild der Mentalität der heutigen Welt und ganz besonders des heutigen Europas dar. Der erste Satz wird von dieser düsteren Stimmung beherrscht, obwohl ein pochendes, wild hämmerndes Gegenthema erscheint, das offensichtlich das Walten der dunklen Mächte versinnbildlichen will. Aber bald fällt die gleichsam wie in einem Labyrinth gefangene Musik in die hoffnungslose Öde des Anfangs zurück.

Auch der zweite Satz kommt von dieser dunklen Grundstimmung nicht hinweg. Aber sie wird verschiedene Male durch ein gesangvolles Thema unterbrochen, das immer wieder versucht, einen Auftrieb zu finden. Aber noch ist es zu früh. [illegible] dieser Satz versinkt am Schluß genau wie der erste, in jene unendliche Melancholie, aus der es offenbar keinen Ausweg gibt. — Erst im dritten und letzten Satz vollzieht sich der Umschwung. Die Musik nimmt eine kämpferische Haltung ein. Der Wille zur Selbstbehauptung setzt sich durch. Dieser letzte Satz ist mit einer wilden, trotzigen Energie angefüllt, die in einem großartigen Gegensatz zu der "Unschlüssigkeit" der vorangegangenen Teile steht. Aber auch das Finale bleibt in seiner Farbe dunkel und grau. Freude und Jubel sind dieser Musik fremd, — wie könnte es auch anders sein — aber sie ist voll von einer geradezu brutalen Entschlossenheit, aus dem "Labyrinth" herauszukommen und einem neuen Ziel zuzustreben, mag es auch in noch so weiter Ferne liegen. Der Vergleich mit dem Phönix, der sich aus der Asche erhebt, liegt nahe. Aber die Asche, aus der er sich befreit, ist so riesig, daß es ihm nur ganz allmählich gelingt, sich ihrer zu entledigen. Aschgrau bleibt daher die Musik trotz des gewaltigen Antriebs, der ihr nunmehr innewohnt, und erst ganz am Schluß verliert sie ihre fahle, oft geradezu grausige Stimmung. Dieser Schluß ist unerhört wirkungsvoll. Honegger hat hier die ersten Geigen durch eine Trompete verstärkt, die einen Choral anstimmt, gegen den die übrigen Streicher kontrapunktisch geführt werden, wie dies schon Bach getan hat. Die Wirkung dieser Trompete ist außerordentlich. Mit ihrem Eintritt klärt sich ganz plötzlich der Wirrwarr, eine Führung stellt sich ein, und man fühlt auf einmal festen Boden unter den Füßen. Noch bleibt sicherlich viel Asche abzuschütteln, aber eine Basis ist für die Zukunft gewonnen, ein neuer Beginn ist geschaffen, und weit zurück liegt das Labyrinth mit seinem ewigen Nebel und seiner ganzen Hoffnungslosigkeit. Dies ist die symbolische Bedeutung der Musik der dritten Sinfonie Arthur Honeggers.

Sie stellt eines der bedeutendsten Werke unter den zeitgenössischen Kompositionen dar und ist vielleicht die stärkste Arbeit aus der Feder dieses Tonsetzers. Unerhört ist die technische Meisterschaft, mit der Honegger die Streicher geführt hat. Seine Kontrapunktik ist zwingend, seine Harmonik, die oft zum Radikalen neigt, besitzt jene innere Notwendigkeit, die man stets bei einem Meisterwerk findet. Und vor allem ist die Intensität zu bewundern, die aus jedem Takt der Sinfonie spürbar wird. Diese Intensität ist nicht nur rhythmischer Natur, wie man dies bei so vielen neuzeitlichen Kompositionen findet, sondern sie beruht auf einem großen, unerschütterlichen Gefühl. Diese Musik wendet sich an den inneren Menschen, an Geist, Herz und Seele zugleich. In diesem Sinne ist die Sinfonie "altmodisch", denn ihre emotionelle Wirkung ist ihr wichtigstes Aktivum. Vergleicht man dieses Werk mit Stravinskys "entseeltem" "Sacre du Printemps", welches Bernstein am letzten Sonntag in Tanglewood so prachtvoll dirigierte, so finden wir einen interessanten Gegensatz. Auf der einen Seite die bewußte Rückkehr zum "barbarischen" Menschen, zum Urbeginn, zu einem absichtlichen Aufgeben von fast allen gefühlsmäßigen Werten, und auf der anderen Seite der Versuch, erneut in der Musik eine Beziehung zum Menschen der Gegenwart und zum menschlichen Schicksal herzustellen, d. h., Musik zu komponieren, die in ihrem Kern sich doch wieder der Romantik nähert. Dabei sind beide Werke in der neuzeitlichen Tonsprache geschrieben, und beide enthalten scharfe Klänge, die noch vor zwanzig Jahren dem Ohre fremdartig, wenn nicht sogar unmöglich erschienen wären. Heute hat man sich an sie gewöhnt, und dies gilt nicht nur für einige auserwählte "Experten", sondern für die große Masse der Musikfreunde. Der beste Beweis hierfür waren die Tausende von Besuchern, die das "Shed" in Tanglewood füllten. Sie alle spendeten beiden Werken großen Beifall, und in keinem Augenblick wäre man auf den Gedanken gekommen, daß sich ein Widerspruch gegen den Klang dieser Musik regen würde.

Hoffentlich wird es möglich sein, die Honegger Sinfonie bald wieder zu hören. Sie war der stärkste Eindruck, den wir aus Tanglewood in der ersten Woche empfangen haben, und hierfür muß man Dr. Koussevitzky ganz besonders dankbar sein, der das Werk mit letzter Hingabe leitete. Die Wirksamkeit dieses Dirigenten für die amerikanische Musik und für die Berkshire Festspiele gehört bereits der Geschichte der Tonkunst an. Auch in diesem Jahre bildet seine überragende Persönlichkeit einen magischen Anziehungspunkt für alle Musiker und Musikfreunde. Und schon heute darf man sagen, daß Tanglewood zu einem unvergänglichen Denkmal für Dr. Koussevitzky geworden ist, dem es vergönnt sein möge, noch viele Jahre die Geschicke dieses großen amerikanischen Musikzentrums zu leiten.

7,000 Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival

Albany Times Union

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An estimated audience of 7,000 music lovers from all over the United States and Canada, rose en masse, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the conductor's podium in the great music shed at Tanglewood, Thursday night, to pay tribute to the 73-year-old maestro, who is the presiding genius of the Boston Symphony orchestra. A bright moon overhead and comfortable winds from off the Berkshires, contributed to the general air of festivity. Interspersed among the audience were many Boston Brahmins, and disciples of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The opening of Series "A" which engaged the interest of a capacity audience under cover, and some thousand members of the 'teen-age set, lounging on the capacious lawns, upon which blankets had been spread and folding campstools toted in from the parking area, was a gala occasion. Dividing the auditorium into two sections were the boxes of the subscribers, in formal attire, and containing men, women and children, whose names are included in "Who's Who in America." During the intermission, this segment of society came in for considerable ogling from the hoi polloi in slacks and sports clothes, permitted to see, at close range, bearers of the names written in flaming letters on the scroll of American history.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was a concentrated exploration of contemporary (modern) and established (classical) symphonic fare. Beginning with the rather muddy (to the mere layman) inharmonic intricacies of Honeggers "Symphony for Strings," with its surprise finale introduction of horns, doubling with the strings in a magnificent instrumental chorale, he continued with the less obtuse (because more familiar) complexities of Debussy's use of descriptive tone coloring in translating action into sound with a magnificent reading and performance of the French impressionist's popular work, in three parts, "The Sea."

And it may be, that Dr. Koussevitzky was using a bit of musical psychology by bringing the concert to a close with the superb performance of Brahms' melodious Symphony No. 2. For the uninitiate, the lovely melodies of the great German composer, sounded even more lovely, placed in contrast to their predecessors, whose unorthodox harmonic structure is, to a certain extent, an acquired musical pedagogy, and is to be congratulated for his courage and foresight in giving America glimpses of new works, which, but for him, might never be heard. At least the audience is given an opportunity to accept or reject this musical expression of a new and modern world. The conductor was recalled to the center of the stage again and again, following the Brahms to acknowledge the tumultuous applause—for Brahams also—with hand-clapping, shouts of "Bravo!" and, say it softly, one or two whistles, shattering the otherwise circumspect New England atmosphere. Perhaps the influence of Debussy and Honegger.

Garbage Man Fined

Collecting garbage without a license cost Samuel Franklin, 53, of Rapp road, a $25 fine yesterday in Police court. He was charged with making the unlawful collection July 14, in South Ferry street.

Mozart's Idomeneo At Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 24 — Details of the pending production of Mozart's three act opera "Idomeneo" on August 4 and 6 are announced. This opera will then have its first performance in this country. It will be under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, and will be staged by the opera department of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct. Scenery has been designed by Richard Rychtarik. Mr. Goldovsky will be assisted by Frederic Cohen, Felix Wolfes, Elsa Kahl, and Frederick Waldman of the Opera department. The cast of singers, orchestra, and chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, as was the case when "Peter Grimes" was performed at Tanglewood last summer. The title part of "Idomeneo" will be sung by Joseph Laderoute. Idamante, a part written by Mozart for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano — alternately in the two performances by Elizabeth Ann Bollinger and Dorothy Dawson. The Princess Ilia of Troy will be sung by Nancy Trickey; Elettra, daughter of Agamemnon, by Paula Lenchner, and the High Priest of Neptune by Frank Guarrera.

The performances will take place in the Theater - Concert hall at Tanglewood on Monday evening, August 4, and Wednesday evening, August 6. Admission will be by invitation to the friends of the Berkshire Music center.

There is every evidence that Mozart applied his genius intensively to "Idomeneo" which was his first opportunity to write an "opera seria" for a major opera house — the court opera at Munich in 1780. The opera was performed on January 29, 1781, to great applause, two days after the composer's twenty-fifth birthday.

"Idomeneo" has had occasional performances in Europe, mostly in Germany and Austria. There were further revivals in 1931, the 150th anniversary of the first performance, when there was a production at the Vienna State Opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and L. Wallerstein, and another at Munich musically edited by E. Wolf Ferrari and E. L. Stahl. A version in English was performed in London in 1938. There has never been a performance in Italy.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

MAY 25 1948

Ready Tanglewood For July 5 Opening

An acre and a half of new roof will cover the huge music shed at Tanglewood before the Berkshire Music center opens on July 5 and the Berkshire symphonic festival later in the month.

A force of roofers already has started the job of renewing the tar and gravel surface of the roof which took so bad a beating from winter storms that numerous leaks were found this spring.

The roofing job is one of several announced as under way today by Ward J. Gaston, superintendent of the Boston Symphony orchestra's Tanglewood property, as he outlined the physical preparations for the season.

On the schedule is the construction of a new reception room and music store to be located near the box office at the main entrance. The roof will be extended from the ticket office to the new building and the entrance to the grounds will be widened to about 45 feet.

Another project is the erection of a 300-yard long storage shed for tools, lumber, benches, scenery, machinery and other equipment. Ten-foot-square sections were made in the workshop during the winter under Mr. Gaston's supervision, and are being put together now. The building will be stained to blend with others on the grounds. Music center students will have the use of 120 new lockers also built in the workshop during the winter.

A dozen men are at work on the lawns and gardens to get them in shape while outside the Tanglewood gates the construction of a hard surface on Hawthorne Street which leads to the Tanglewood property has been started by the town of Stockbridge, Berkshire county and the state public works department.

MAESTRO'S PROTEGES

Times Union

Serge Koussevitzky has proved a good friend to the young artists who have caught his fancy, and he has gathered a number of his favorite chicks together for the forthcoming Berkshire Festival. His young conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. And all but three of the eleven soloists are young people who have appeared with him before, either at the festival or in Boston.

The exceptions are Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist, who are joining the fold for the first time. Gregor Piatigorsky is an exception of a different kind. He is a veteran, having played with the Boston Symphony twenty-five times.

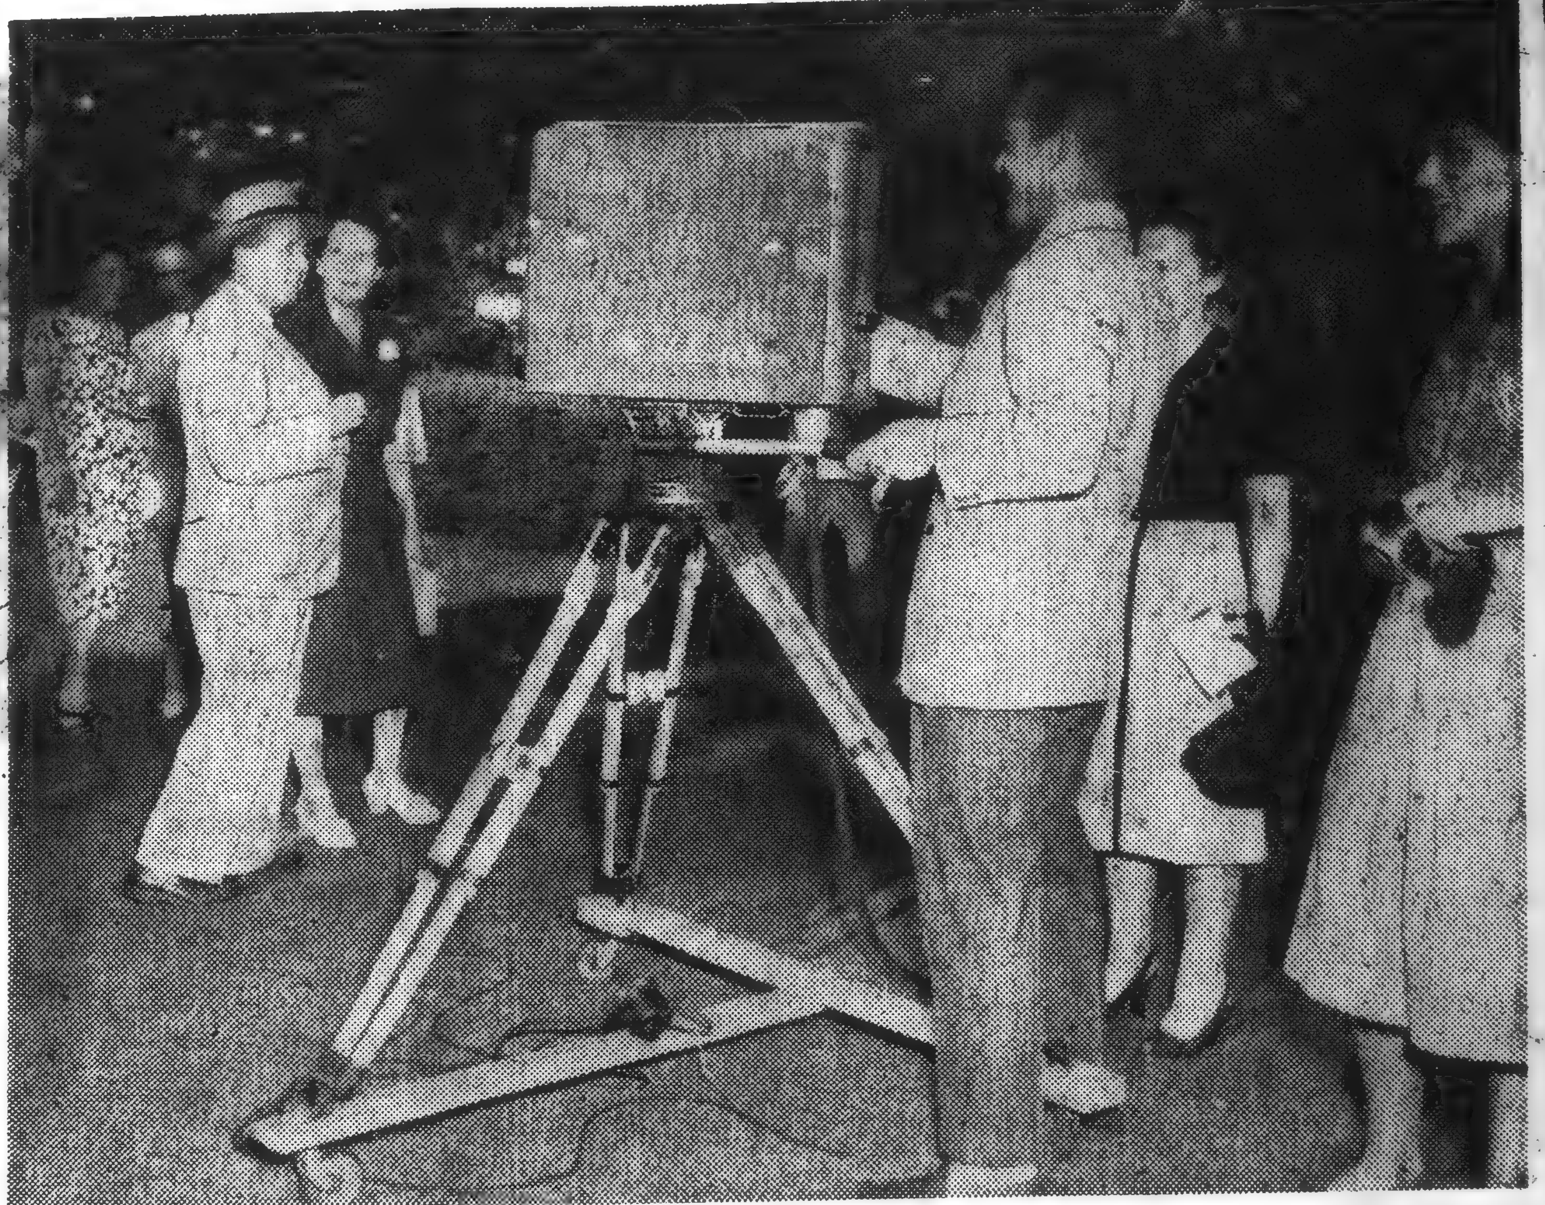
Others returning are the violinist Isaac Stern, the actor [illegible] (who will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus"), and three sopranos: Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David [illegible], tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. Many of them are [illegible] of the Berkshire Music Center, where they knew Dr. Koussevitzky as a teacher, too.

[62]

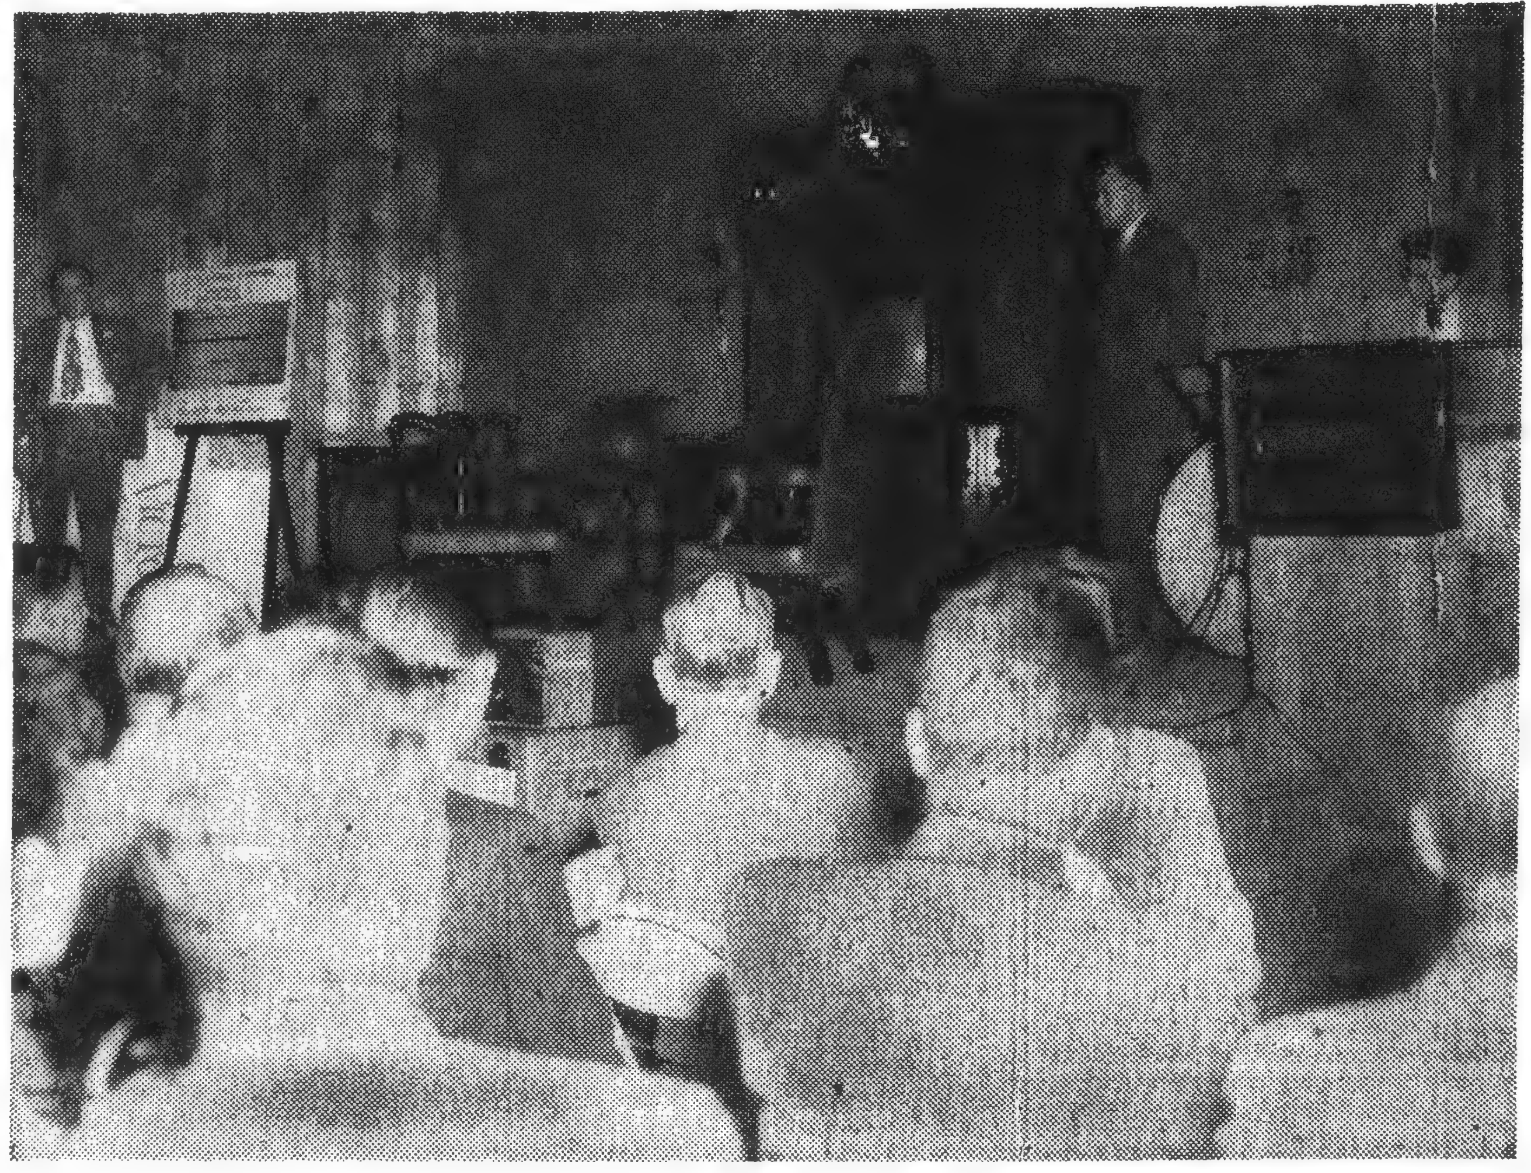
Tanglewood Presents a Three-Ring Musical Jamboree

MISS GOLDSTEIN TAKES A BOW: Ella Goldstein, soloist with the Boston Symphony in last night's concert in the Shed, acknowledges the vociferous plaudits of the crowd while holding hands with Dr. Koussevitzky. At right, Concertmaster Richard Burgin gives her the official accolade of the violinist, congratulatory taps on the instrument with his bow.

BUSMAN'S HOLIDAY: Fredric March and his wife, Florence Eldredge, of all people, watch the movies from the rear of the screen in the opera hall at Tanglewood during the program illustrating the use of music in the cinema.



TELEVISION AT TANGLEWOOD: Attorney and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate of Pittsfield are caught by the television camera which entertained visitors in the garden at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon with the opportunity to see themselves on screens set up near the camera.



TANGLEWOOD DEMONSTRATION: In the late afternoon, RCA Victor presented a demonstration of the 18th century model of its new radio-phonograph, "The Berkshire," which was named after the Festival. Flanking it are a conventional model radio-phonograph and one of the musicians who participated in the comparative program.

Palestinian Girl Impressive As Boston Orchestra Soloist

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Last night's carnival at Tanglewood was huge good fun for all, and no little credit for the general and happy atmosphere was the real spirit of sportsmanship with which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra entered into the schedule. The first half of the program in the Shed was broadcast on the orchestra's regular Tuesday evening hour and so it was the most seriously prepared.

The Vivaldi concerto in D minor for orchestra and organ was a vehicle to display the marvellously rich sonority of the orchestra's strings. Dr. Koussevitzky imparted his expected spark of vividness and proportion to the performance, but the real thrill of the evening was the performance of the Tchiakovsky B flat minor piano concerto with 20-year-old Ella Goldstein as soloist. Miss Goldstein, a personable and stalwart recent arrival from Palestine, is a member of the student body of the Berkshire Music Center. Her rendition of the familiar concerto, received, first of all, more than merely wonderful support from the evidently delighted leader of the orchestra. The accompaniment allowed her to soar to heights of virtuosity than which anything less transporting could have held her down to earth. But her completely adequate powerful and accurate technique permitted her to give the concerto an excitement and poetic beauty which left nothing to be desired. The unity of orchestra and soloist made for a remarkably well-knit and integral effort. There was never an instant nor a note which did not contribute its special character to the over-all conception, and tonally the soloist was superb, both in the bravura passages and in the more gentle phrases with which Tchiakovsky has contrasted the more vigorous requirements. The ovation was colossal and spontaneous, and continued beyond the tabulating equipment of this reviewer.

The rest of the program was devoted to an attempt to show the recording history of the Boston orchestra in its relations with makers of records and phonographs. It was one of the most lavish and extravagant and well-done jobs of public relations and advertising ever put over and the only one, to our knowledge, where the customers were made to pay to take it all in.

N.Y. Doctor Wins Door Prize Of RCA Records

Dr. Stanley H. Greenwald of New York City was drawn as the winner of the full set of RCA Victor records offered as the door prize at yesterday's "Music for All" program at Tanglewood.

The drawing, made on the stage of the Shed between numbers, was conducted by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Chairman Lewis Perry of the national committee of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center drew the winning ticket stub.

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a chamber concert at 8.15 tonight, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in the theatre-concert hall.

The program, with all of the numbers by Igor Stravinsky, will be as follows: Octet for wind instruments, played by Georges Laurent, flute; Manuel Valerio, clarinet; Raymond Allard and Ernst Panenka, bassoon; Georges Mager and Marcel Lafosse, trumpet; Jacob Raichman and John Coffey, trombone. A duo concertante will be played by Richard Burgin, violin and Irving Fine, piano.

The second half will be "Histoire du Soldat," with the "Soldier's March," music for Scenes I and II, "Royal March," "Little Concert," "Three Dances," "Little Chorale," "The Devil's Dance," "Great Chorale" and "Triumphal March of the Devil," played by Victor Polatschek, clarinet; Mr. Allard, bassoon; Roger Voisin, trumpet; Mr. Raichman, trombone; Mr. Burgin, violin; Georges Moleux, bass.

Tomorrow's Program

A program of madrigals, under the direction of Hugh Ross, will be given by students of the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow at 4.30.

'Music for All'

Continued From First Page

motionless on the podium and the orchestra at rest. For a few moments, the conductor shared spotlights with the phonograph, and then stepped down out of the ring of light and into the half-darkness of the stage, where he stood among his musicians until the recording ended.

RCA Victor, however, came out second when Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra brought the evening to an end with a spine-tingling version of "The Stars and Stripes Forever" which brought the whole audience to their feet.

The afternoon program, to which a special group of guests was invited, opened with a demonstration of "The Berkshire" conducted by RCA engineers and officials in the chamber music hall. With live talent and an earlier phonograph for comparison, the company put on an hour-long show illustrating the growing fidelity of musical reproduction.

Before the Shed concert and after it, the opera hall was the scene of a series of excerpts from noted motion pictures selected to show the role background music has taken in the cinema. The program opened with a Mickey Mouse, "Mickey's Opera," and progressed through such outstanding documentaries and regular films as Pare Lorentz' "The River," for which Virgil Thomson composed the music; the Lorentz "The City," and Hollywood's "Our Town," with scores by Aaron Copland, Berkshire Music Center faculty member, who was given a round of applause as his name appeared on the screen; the French "Mayerling," scored by Arthur Honegger; Lenfilm's "The Youth of Maxim," with music by Shostakovich; "Alexander Nevsky," for which Prokofieff composed the background music; and the noted British production of "Henry V," with score by William Walton. The "Alexander Nevsky" excerpt brought forth loud groans from the overflow audience of 1300 when it ended just as the German hordes crashed into the defending Russians and the battle was beginning to get exciting.

The film program was assembled by Francis Robinson, on loan to the Center for a month, from his duties as press agent for actress Katharine Cornell.

Completing the afternoon and early evening events was on-the-spot televising by an RCA crew in the garden. Receiving sets installed in open booths 10 to 15 feet from the camera allowed visitors to watch themselves being televised. The succeeding reactions of glee, shock and/or self-consciousness amused hundreds of onlookers and attracted candid photographers by the dozen. Toward the end of the demonstration, Lewis Perry, secretary of the Center, and several students participated in an informal program of interviews.

The celebrity list for the day was led by Fredric March and his actress-wife, Florence Eldredge.

Proceeds from the entire program will go to the Center.

Federal-City Aid for Opera Predicted by Boris Goldovsky

Boris Goldovsky, director of opera at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, predicted this morning that in 15 or 20 years, there would be federal and municipal aid in larger cities for the support of opera. He was speaking at the weekly assembly of the Pittsfield summer college at Pittsfield High School.

In the meantime, though, Mr. Goldovsky urges the formation of local guilds which would import and support opera, thereby offering an outlet for operatic talent. He thinks there is a "tremendous" amount of talent for opera in America and he cites the Tanglewood school as an example.

Mr. Goldovsky was active in the organization of the New England Opera Guild, which has organized its own company and will bring famous operas to cities that ordinarily do not hear them.

---

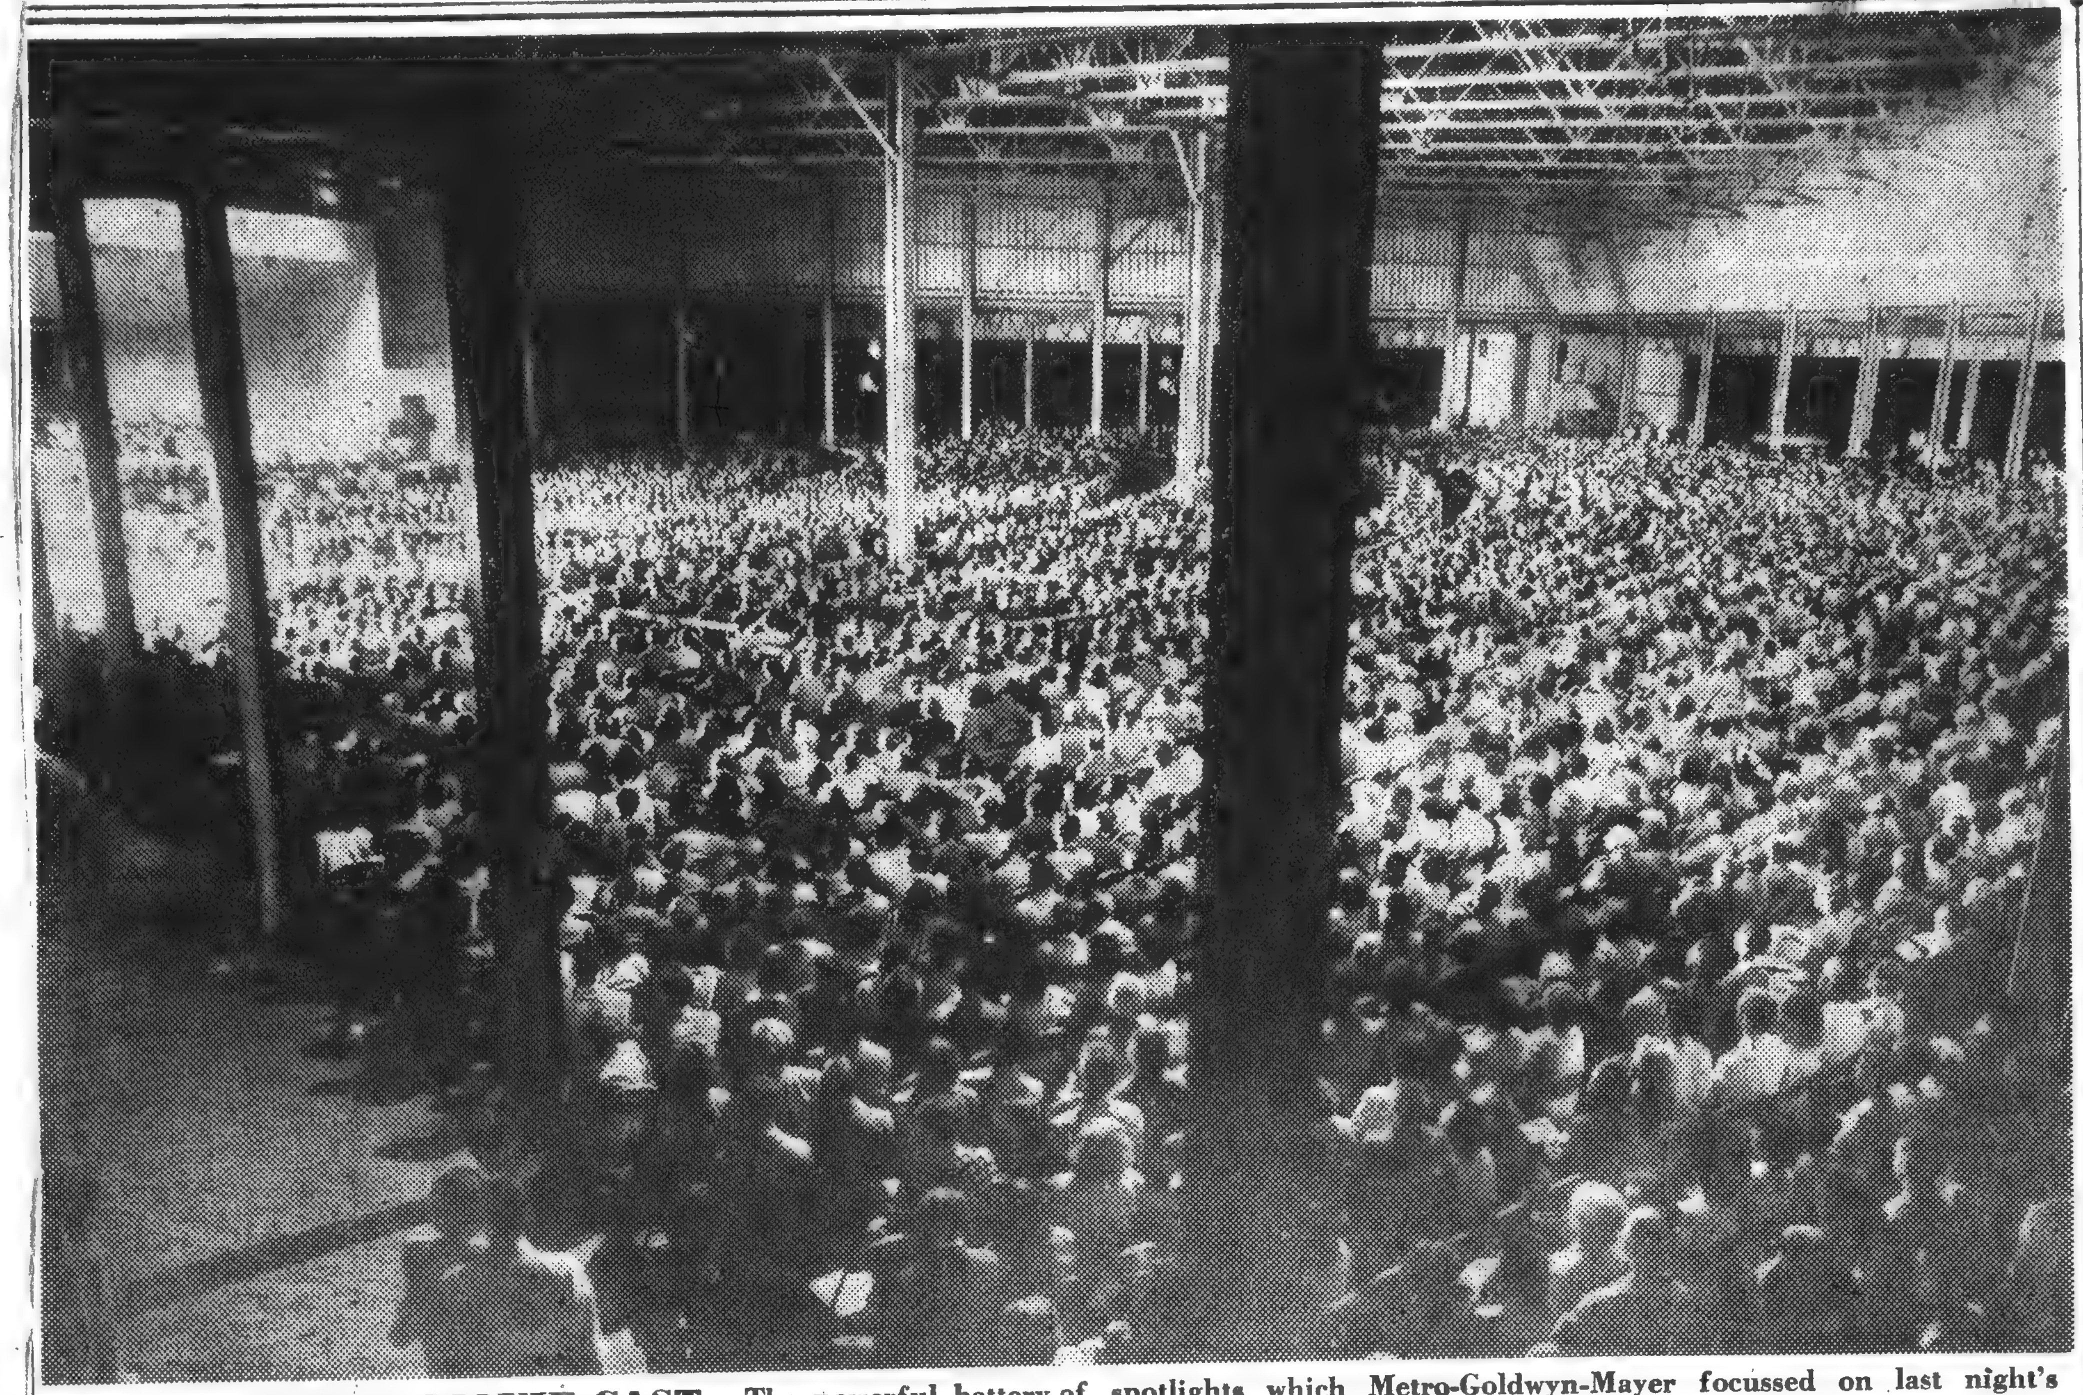
of floods and other disasters get first claim to War Assets Administration's vast hoard of surplus goods under a "mercy priority" that becomes effective today.

The new priority supersedes all existing claims. It may be invoked to aid any area where the President has determined that an emergency exists.

Gordon Quartet

e Berkshire County Eag

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Wednesday, July 30, 1947.



PORTRAIT OF A MOVIE CAST: The powerful battery of spotlights which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer focussed on last night's 6000 occupants of the Shed made it possible for photographers to take the first over-all night audience picture in the history of the Festival. The film company will use the footage taken last night as a part of a short on "The Story of Tanglewood."

Subcommittee

Highbrow Holidays

N Y Mirror Jul 31

THE SIMPLE Summer vacation in the mountains or at the seaside has grown inadequate for our generation. We have gone highbrow.

Every hamlet wants its Summer theatre, and at least an occasional star. These theatres offer tyro performers a chance to play in stock, to learn their trade. Stock companies have disappeared in New York.

So, in Summer, the young aspirants can use improvised barns or wayside theatres to practice comedy and tragedy, playing various roles.

There are music festivals, greatest of which is at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Tanglewood attracts 10,000 to 15,000 listeners and is a sight to behold. Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony in a huge shed, still not large enough for the audience, some with blankets and picnic baskets.

This is extremely highbrow. Yet the crowds grow. This year they will hear all nine Beethoven symphonies at four concerts. As an introduction, Koussevitzky gave them Bach and Mozart and twice so-called modern music.

Maybe vacationists fear the quiet of hot-weather repose or fishing, lest they might think—or even believe.

So they flock to the amazing Koussevitzky and the gymnastics of his protege, Leonard Bernstein, and the terrific tumult that is called modern music.

The hot months call for repose, rest, relaxation. But the temptations of excitement have cut in on them. Americans seem to have lost the ancient art of loafing—which once was the prerogative of only kings.

Crowd of 7000 Attends 'Music for All' Event

History of Recorded Music Is Theme For Potpourri of Orchestral Numbers, Movies and Television at Tanglewood

The year's biggest clambake was held on the grounds of Tanglewood yesterday to honor a phonograph.

Starting at 4 in the afternoon and proceeding with ever-increasing momentum to 11 o'clock, the Berkshire Music Center and RCA-Victor joined forces in a potpourri of "music for all," live and reproduced, heralding 30 years of joint effort in the field of recorded sound.

7000 Attend

By nightfall, some 7000 were gathered in the Shed and on the surrounding lawns for the climaxing program in which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Vivaldi through Tchaikovsky, Berlioz and Beethoven to John Philip Sousa.

The first half of the evening, consisting of the Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky's piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, was on the air coast-to-coast via the American Broadcasting Company as one of its regular Tuesday evening series, with the ABC engineers and their equipment sharing the stage with Dr. Koussevtizky and the orchestra.

In the Tchaikovsky, Ella Goldstein, who is studying at the Center, made her Festival debut and was roundly bussed on the forehead by Dr. Koussevtizky for her performance. Miss Goldstein received a tremendous ovation from the 6000 in the Shed and won further friends when, presented a bouquet by Dr. Koussevitzky, she tried to give it back to him.

During intermission, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer set up a battery of powerful spotlights along the front edge of the stage and along the west arcade of the Shed. When the audience returned, they were told they were going to be in the movies (MGM is making a short on "The Story of Tanglewood") and asked please to act natural. This resulted in large numbers of people finding it suddenly necessary to walk casually down an aisle in the general direction of the camera, which was set up on the west end of the stage. Filming was done during the first part of the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture, with Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra playing virtually unseen behind the row of spotlights, and at the end, when the audience gave the conductor and his men their usual warm accolade.

One box occupant, apparently even more interested than most in the scene-stealing, drank a bottle of beer with gestures during the filming.

Phonograph Unveiled

The evening ended with an impressive if considerably commerciel unveiling of "The Berkshire," a new RCA Victor radio phonograph which was enshrined backstage above the orchestra. Based on the theme of "The March of Musical Fidelity," the progress of recorded music was illustrated through side-stage tableaux and selections by the orchestra recalling milestones in its long association with Victor. Comment was read by Gene Hamilton, regular ABC announcer for the BSO broadcasts. The orchestra played the introduction to Act 3 of "Lohengrin," which was the first BSO recording and the first disk to be cut by a full-sized symphonic organization. The second souvenir was a dance from the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe," which was the first electrical recording to be made by the BSO. The alternating tableaux showed the early talking-machine and the subsequent development through the Orthophonic to the newest achievement in electronic reproduction. The orchestra then started the overture to Beethoven's "Egmont," halted halfway through and "The Berkshire" took over, with the green velvet curtains parting to reveal the radio-phonograph. The crowd applauded as the overture continued with Dr. Koussevitzky standing

'Music for All'
Continued on Tenth Page

Fredric March Goes to the Movies At Tanglewood

Fredric March and his actress wife, Florence Eldredge, came for the "Music for All" program at Tanglewood yesterday and spent the major part of their several hours there at, of all places, the movies.

The cinema star and his wife, trying to avoid disrupting the program, went in the back of the opera hall and watched Charles Boyer, Laurence Olivier and others from the rear of the screen.

They left after hearing the first half of the evening concert.

Irgun Cl

ook be given a tal next season
Rachmaninoff

three contes-Harrington, who nention for her
Brahms B-flat
Geiger, who playinoff "Rhapsody f Paganini", and
, who performed of the Rachman-
No. 1 in F-sharp ts were evaluated ne judges—Vladi-Mrs. Sergei Rachf Firkusny, Erich

m Chasins, Regina Gradova, Naida
Jesus Maria San-

n did not come as ne audience, judghusiasm that fol-kin's playing. It listener, too, that performance was ature and in the f tone-color and l-fingered accur-ic surety, it was f absolutely finest kin has poise. And eys something to rly twenties, Mr. has a remarkable

m. He entered the at ten to study kin; studied conerge Koussevitzky

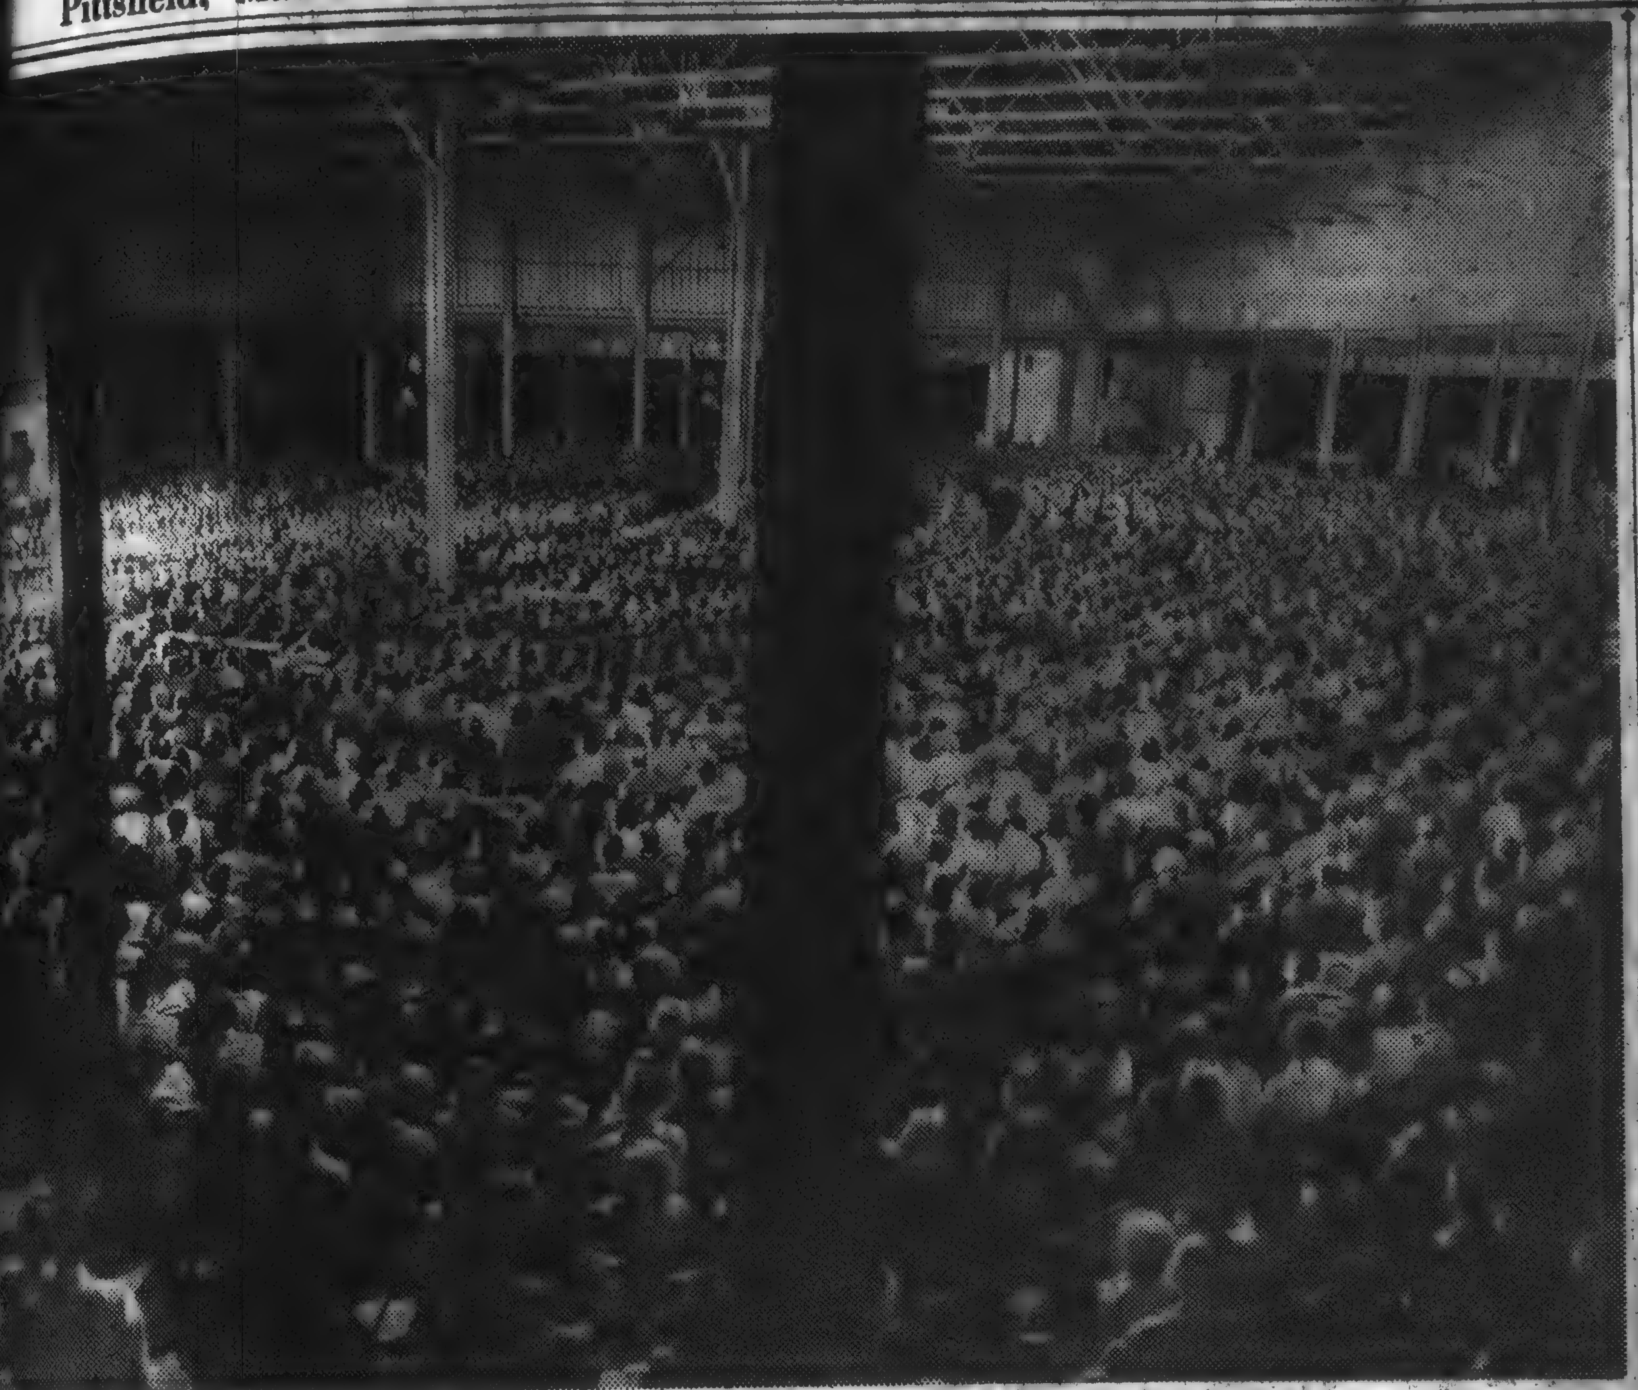
Capt. Barrett of

erkshire County Eag

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Wednesday, July 30, 1947.



A MOVIE CAST: The powerful battery of spotlights which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer focussed on last night's Shed made it possible for photographers to take the first over-all night audience picture in the history of the Festival. ilm company will use the footage taken last night as a part of a short on "The Story of Tanglewood."

Crowd of 7000 Attends 'Music for All' Event

History of Recorded Music Is Theme For Potpourri of Orchestral Numbers, Movies and Television at Tanglewood

The year's biggest clambake was held on the grounds of Tanglewood yesterday to honor a phonograph.

Starting at 4 in the afternoon and proceeding with ever-increasing momentum to 11 o'clock, the Berkshire Music Center and RCA-Victor joined forces in a potpourri of "music for all," live and reproduced, heralding 30 years of joint effort in the field of recorded sound.

7000 Attend

By nightfall, some 7000 were gathered in the Shed and on the surrounding lawns for the climaxing program in which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Vivaldi through Tchaikovsky, Berlioz and Beethoven to John Philip Sousa.

The first half of the evening, consisting of the Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky's piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, was on the air coast-to-coast via the American Broadcasting Company as one of its regular Tuesday evening series, with the ABC engineers and their equipment sharing the stage with Dr. Koussevtizky and the orchestra.

In the Tchaikovsky, Ella Goldstein, who is studying at the Center, made her Festival debut and was roundly bussed on the forehead by Dr. Koussevtizky for her performance. Miss Goldstein received a tremendous ovation from the 6000 in the Shed and won further friends when, presented a bouquet by Dr. Koussevitzky, she tried to give it back to him.

During intermission, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer set up a battery of powerful spotlights along the front edge of the stage and along the west arcade of the Shed. When the audience returned, they were told they were going to be in the movies (MGM is making a short on "The Story of Tanglewood") and asked please to act natural. This resulted in large numbers of people finding it suddenly necessary to walk casually down an aisle in the general direction of the camera, which was set up on the west end of the stage. Filming was done during the first part of the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture, with Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra playing virtually unseen behind the row of spotlights, and at the end, when the audience gave the conductor and his men their usual warm accolade.

One box occupant, apparently even more interested than most in the scene-stealing, drank a bottle of beer, with gestures during the filming.

Phonograph Unveiled

The evening ended with an impressive if considerably commercial unveiling of "The Berkshire," a new RCA Victor radio phonograph which was enshrined backstage above the orchestra. Based on the theme of "The March of Musical Fidelity," the progress of recorded music was illustrated through side-stage tableaux and selections by the orchestra recalling milestones in its long association with Victor. Comment was read by Gene Hamilton, regular ABC announcer for the BSO broadcasts. The orchestra played the introduction to Act 3 of "Lohengrin," which was the first BSO recording and the first disk to be cut by a full-sized symphonic organization. The second souvenir was a dance from the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe," which was the first electrical recording to be made by the BSO. The alternating tableaux showed the early talking-machine and the subsequent development through the Orthophonic to the newest achievement in electronic reproduction. The orchestra then started the overture to Beethoven's "Egmont," halted halfway through and "The Berkshire" took over, with the green velvet curtains parting to reveal the radio-phonograph. The crowd applauded as the overture continued with Dr. Koussevitzky standing

'Music for All'
Continued on Tenth Page

Fredric March Goes to the Movies At Tanglewood

Fredric March and his actress wife, Florence Eldredge, came for the "Music for All" program at Tanglewood yesterday and spent the major part of their several hours there at, of all places, the movies.

The cinema star and his wife, trying to avoid disrupting the program, went in the back of the opera hall and watched Charles Boyer, Laurence Olivier and others from the rear of the screen.

They left after hearing the first half of the evening concert.

TANGLEWOOD TO RESURRECT ROSSINI OPERA

Boston, Mass., June 13 — A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced.

"The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

SEYMOUR LIPKIN WINS RACHMANINOFF AWARD

By John Briggs
New York Post and The Home News
April 30, 1948

Five young pianists competed in Carnegie Hall last evening for the biggest musical jackpot of recent years—the national finals of the Rachmaninoff Fund piano contest, offering to the winner a nationwide tour under the joint sponsorship of Columbia Concerts and the National Concerts and Artists Corporation and an RCA Victor recording contract with a $1,000 cash advance against royalties.

The first prize was won by a young pianist from Cleveland named Seymour Lipkin, who played the first movement of the Tchaikovsky B-flat Minor Concerto.

Gary Graffman, who took second honors, will be given a Carnegie Hall recital next season sponsored by the Rachmaninoff Fund.

The remaining three contestants were Grace Harrington, who won honorable mention for her playing of the Brahms B-flat Concerto; Ruth Geiger, who played the Rachmaninoff "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini", and Jeanne Therrion, who performed two movements of the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 1 in F-sharp Minor.

The contestants were evaluated by a panel of nine judges—Vladimir Horowitz, Mrs. Sergei Rachmaninoff, Rudolf Firkusny, Erich Leinsdorf, Abram Chasins, Reginald Stewart, Gita Gradova, Naida Reisenberg and Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Their decision did not come as a surprise to the audience, judging by the enthusiasm that followed Mr. Lipkin's playing. It seemed to this listener, too, that Mr. Lipkin's performance was phenomenally mature and in the way of range of tone-color and dynamics, in steel-fingered accuracy and rhythmic surety, it was a performance of absolutely finest quality. Mr. Lipkin has poise. And his playing conveys something to his listeners.

Now in his early twenties, Mr. Lipkin already has a remarkable career behind him. He entered the Curtis Institute at ten to study with Rudolf Serkin, studied conducting with Serge Koussevitzky

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 30 1947

TANGLEWOOD SEES FIELD DAY IN MUSIC

Movies, Radio and Recordings Share Limelight at Festival —Potpourri of Talents

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a generous assist from RCA-Victor, held an event this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood which was variously called a "Field Day," "Music for All," "New Horizons in Music" and "The March of Musical Fidelity."

"A Musical Circus, with Scientific Overtones" would perhaps have been a better title. It was certainly a three-ring affair. Ring one was a demonstration of a new radio phonograph, ring two was a motion-picture program, and ring three was a combination concert, broadcast, pageant and film shooting.

As a side show, there was a television demonstration behind the clipped hedges of the formal garden. Visitors to the grounds were able to step before the television camera and see themselves telecast in two black-hooded television receiving sets.

Another attraction was enjoyment of the grounds of the estate. The event was for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the public had been invited to come early and bring picnic suppers. It did both. Since seats in the Shed for the biggest event were not reserved, many went straight there and ate as they held their advantageous places.

In so far as the event had a common theme, it was the demonstration of the mechanical means of reproducing music that have been developed in the last forty-five years. The radio, the motion-picture sound track, television and phonograph records, both of today and of the early experimental stages, were all demonstrated.

Ring one—the demonstration of "The Berkshire," the new radio phonograph developed by Victor—was held in the Chamber Music Shed before an audience of 500 invited guests, who overflowed the building to the sunlit lawns. Here Dr. S. F. Olson of the RCA laboratories used scientific charts to show the frequencies the machine could reproduce.

Concert Hall Is Jammed

The gates were opened for the general public at 5:30. An hour later the theatre concert hall was crowded to its 1,100 capacity fo ring two—a showing of excerpt from six films that had notabl musical scores.

They were Aaron Coplan "Our Town," Arthur Honegge "Mayerling," Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky," Virgil Thomson's "The River" and William Walton's "Henry V." Many of the younger people, including groups of children from neighboring camps, piled in for the movies.

Ring three—the main show—began in the huge Festival Shed at 8:30. By this time there were more than 6,000 on hand to applaud Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first hour of the program was broadcast by the American Broadcasting System. It consisted of a concerto for orchestra and organ by Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky's B Flat Minor Piano Concerto played by Ella Goldstein.

During the intermission six kleig lights were set up in front of the orchestra and six were set up on the left side. All were turned on the audience. While Dr. Koussevitzky led Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, motion-picture cameras photographed the listeners for a film to be entitled "The Story of Tanglewood."

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

Tanglewood Programs

Serge Koussevitzky has made his first announcement of the programs to be played under his direction by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer at Tanglewood. Guest conductors will be Eleazar de Carvalho, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

All concerts to be played in the Music Shed will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. The first three—July 29, 31 and August 1—list Beethoven's Fifth, Brahms' Second, Mahler's Second and Piston's Third Symphonies; a symphony by Haydn; Bach's Orchestral Suite in D major and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler."

The second week of concerts—August 5, 7 and 8—includes performances of Beethoven's Sixth and Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphonies; the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz; Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Piatigorsky; Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; "Madona," by Villa-Lobos, and de Falla's "El Amor Brujo."

The final concerts will be on August 12, 14 and 15, and at these will be played Beethoven's Third, Schumann's First and Sibelius' Second Symphonies and Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

An extra concert on August 10 will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky. The Festival will open with two concerts of music by Bach and Mozart on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening, July 18 and 20, each program to be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday, and all to be played in the Theater-Concert Hall.

The Berkshire Music Center will hold a six-week session at Tanglewood, July 5 to August 15, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. There will be five departments, as in former seasons: Conducting, Orchestra and Chamber Music, Composition, Opera, and Chorus. In addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty will include Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, in charge of choral conducting, and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud and Aaron Copland will teach composition, and Boris Goldovsky will head the opera department.

Information about the school and the festival may be secured by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1947

Barber to Hear 2 Sons Playing at Tanglewood

Special to the Herald Tribune

CAMDEN, N. J., July 30.—Max Lateiner, forty-five, a barber most of his life, will enjoy his first holiday Saturday when he will travel with his wife, Rebecca, to Tanglewood, Mass., to hear their sons, Jacob, nineteen, and Isadore, seventeen, play under Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Jacob Lateiner, a pianist, will be soloist, while his brother, a violinist, will play with the orchestra. The two boys were graduated in May from the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Jacob Lateiner has played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and as accompanist to Efrem Zimbalist, violinist.

The Lateiners traveled in 1926 from Vienna to Havana, where Mr. Lateiner found work as a barber and their sons were born. Both boys have studied music seriously since they were six. The family moved to the United States in 1943.

Mr. Lateiner asked his customers today to postpone their usual Saturday appointments until Monday. He will be back at his clippers and scissors then in the shop at 324 Market Street after a [illegible] week-end.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 30 1947

Science, Music Mix at Festival

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Science and music caught up with each other at Tanglewood today and tonight. A musical shindig has been staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and RCA Victor the like of which is probably something new under the sun and moon.

They called it "New Horizons in Music."

It was RCA Victor's salute to the first full-sized symphonic organization to make records. Its gesture was a potential gift of $100,000 to benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center.

The day's program covered the fidelity of recordings and the use of the music shed for broadcasting a concert and as a motion picture studio. Added to those demonstrations was a session on music in the movies. This four-ring circus attracted a crowd estimated at 7,000.

In the lineup of movie scores, the representation of composers was impressive. Disney's "Mickey's Grand Opera" was used as a curtain raiser. Then followed excerpts from Copland's "Our Town," Honegger's "Mayerling," Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky," Shostakovich's "The Youth of Maxim," Thomson's "The River," and Walton's "Henry V."

For the broadcast portion of the Boston Symphony concert, Koussevitzky programmed Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikowsky's first piano concerto with 20-year-old Ella Goldstein giving a bravura performance as soloist.

The second half included Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture, during which the audience was filmed. Wagner's prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," the general dance from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," the march from Prokofieff's "The Love of Three Oranges" and Beethoven's overture to "Egmont" completed a somewhat popular list.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUL 30 1947

'Music for All' Fete Held

Tanglewood Festival Devotes a Day to Mechanical Music and Instruments.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Lenox, Mass., July 30.—The Berkshire Music Center, which has been for a dozen years of aesthetic and academic repute, turned itself into a musical proving ground here yesterday. The radio, the films and the recording sciences passed in review, but the grand marshal of the march was a new phonograph record reproducer, appropriately titled "The Berkshire."

RCA-Victor, which is sponsoring this mammoth descendant of the horn seen in the familiar dog picture, had made some rather spectacular claims for the apparatus. Surprisingly enough, it vindicated a reasonable portion of them. The climax came at the evening demonstrations in the huge music shed when, mid-way in a playing of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture by the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky held up a hand and the performance continued from a record.

For a moment, even the listener who anticipated the daring gesture was not quite sure which was performing. A few lines of music, and the mechanical source was apparent. But it carried on with such a veracity of tone color and dynamic range that a verdict in its favor was not to be denied. To adjust the tonal output to the huge area and the 5,000 listeners, nine speakers additional to the one in the cabinet were used.

Olson Speaker.

This speaker (designed by H. F. Olson of RCA) is the notable element of the unit. At an afternoon demonstration in a smaller hall, it reproduced the sound of an oscillator from a barely distinguishable rumble at 30 cycles to the faint whine of 15,000. These, of course, are far beyond the capacity of any conventional radio-phonograph. The effect, when applied to recording of proper fidelity, is the difference between a rain-stained window and one newly washed. Both times there has been light, but only with the grime removed does it shine through clearly.

For the while, the mechanical heart of the "Berkshire" is embodied in a custom built body which brings it to a very pretty figure (economically, if not aesthetically). But it is conceivable that its best elements could be assembled in a modest casing which would permit distribution at prices competitive with other high fidelity machines. Right now it ranges upward from $1,800 to an astronomical $4,000 with "projection" television.

Aside from the "Berkshire," the day's visitors to this "Music for All" fete were treated to a showing of films with music by Copland, Prokofiev and Hindemith; sat in on an hour's broadcast of Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky, in which Ella Goldstein had a remarkable success in the latter's B minor piano concerto, and endured a battery of floodlights for the filming of their reactions as Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture was played. It would make an interesting sight, for most of the audience had their faces shielded from the overpowering glare. Nevertheless, to quote the most repeated word of the evening, this was a "milestone" along the road of reproduced music.

UST 2, 1947

Beethoven Series Opens At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—The first of four Berkshire Festival concerts devoted to Beethoven's music was given Thursday in Tanglewood's Music Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky before an audience of 7,600. The works performed were the first three symphonies.

The orchestra and conductor united in a lucid exposition of this highly transitory period in the composer's writings. The contrast between the lyric style of the first symphony and the stern dramaticism of the "Eroica" was vividly illustrated. The first symphony was imbued with a disarming freshness, and the performance of the finale was particularly outstanding in its enthusiasm and crystalline clarity of detail. The second symphony received an effectively intergrated reading, and the "Eroica" symphony gave an impression of unusual strength.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1947

R. C. A. Plans New Line Of Custom-Built Radios

A new line of custom-built high fidelity radio-phonographs, known as the Festival Series, is being planned by the R. C. A.-Victor division of Radio Corp. of America, it was announced yesterday. The first models are now on display at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Under the merchandising plan, the company will sell direct to the consumer with an over-ride of 10 per cent to any regularly franchised R. C. A.-Victor dealer the customer may designate. The price range is from $1,800 to $4,000.

Harriett H. Higginson has been appointed general manager of the consumer custom products department, which has been formed to develop and market the line. Miss Higginson has had more than fifteen years experience as an advertising, merchandising and fashion executive.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 30 1947

TANGLEWOOD SEES FIELD DAY IN MUSIC

Movies, Radio and Recordings Share Limelight at Festival —Potpourri of Talents

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a generous assist from RCA-Victor, held an event this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood which was variously called a "Field Day," "Music for All," "New Horizons in Music" and "The March of Musical Fidelity."

"A Musical Circus, with Scientific Overtones" would perhaps have been a better title. It was certainly a three-ring affair. Ring one was a demonstration of a new radio phonograph, ring two was a motion-picture program, and ring three was a combination concert, broadcast, pageant and film shooting.

As a side show, there was a television demonstration behind the clipped hedges of the formal garden. Visitors to the grounds were able to step before the television camera and see themselves telecast in two black-hooded television receiving sets.

Another attraction was enjoyment of the grounds of the estate. The event was for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the public had been invited to come early and bring picnic suppers. It did both. Since seats in the Shed for the biggest event were not reserved, many went straight there and ate as they held their advantageous places.

In so far as the event had a common theme, it was the demonstration of the mechanical means of reproducing music that have been developed in the last forty-five years. The radio, the motion-picture sound track, television and phonograph records, both of today and of the early experimental stages, were all demonstrated.

Ring one—the demonstration of "The Berkshire," the new radio phonograph developed by Victor—was held in the Chamber Music Shed before an audience of 500 invited guests, who overflowed the building to the sunlit lawns. Here Dr. S. F. Olson of the RCA laboratories used scientific charts to show the frequencies the machine could reproduce.

Concert Hall Is Jammed

The gates were opened for the general public at 5:30. An hour later the theatre concert hall was crowded to its 1,100 capacity fo ring two—a showing of excerpt from six films that had notab musical scores.

They were Aaron Coplanc "Our Town," Arthur Honegge "Mayerling," Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky," Virgil Thomson's "The River" and William Walton's "Henry V." Many of the younger people, including groups of children from neighboring camps, piled in for the movies.

Ring three—the main show—began in the huge Festival Shed at 8:30. By this time there were more than 6,000 on hand to applaud Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first hour of the program was broadcast by the American Broadcasting System. It consisted of a concerto for orchestra and organ by Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky's B Flat Minor Piano Concerto played by Ella Goldstein.

During the intermission six kleig lights were set up in front of the orchestra and six were set up on the left side. All were turned on the audience. While Dr. Koussevitzky led Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, motion-picture cameras photographed the listeners for a film to be entitled "The Story of Tanglewood."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 30 1947

'Music for All' Fete Held

Tanglewood Festival Devotes a Day to Mechanical Music and Instruments.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Lenox, Mass., July 30.—The Berkshire Music Center, which has been for a dozen years of aesthetic and academic repute, turned itself into a musical proving ground here yesterday. The radio, the films and the recording sciences passed in review, but the grand marshal of the march was a new phonograph record reproducer, appropriately titled "The Berkshire."

RCA-Victor, which is sponsoring this mammoth descendant of the horn seen in the familiar dog picture, had made some rather spectacular claims for the apparatus. Surprisingly enough, it vindicated a reasonable portion of them. The climax came at the evening demonstrations in the huge music shed when, mid-way in a playing of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture by the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky held up a hand and the performance continued from a record.

For a moment, even the listener who anticipated the daring gesture was not quite sure which was performing. A few lines of music, and the mechanical source was apparent. But it carried on with such a veracity of tone color and dynamic range that a verdict in its favor was not to be denied. To adjust the tonal output to the huge area and the 5,000 listeners, nine speakers additional to the one in the cabinet were used.

Olson Speaker.

This speaker (designed by H. F. Olson of RCA) is the notable element of the unit. At an afternoon demonstration in a smaller hall, it reproduced the sound of an oscillator from a barely distinguishable rumble at 30 cycles to the faint whine of 15,000. These, of course, are far beyond the capacity of any conventional radio-phonograph. The effect, when applied to recording of proper fidelity, is the difference between a rain-stained window and one newly washed. Both times there has been light, but only with the grime removed does it shine through clearly.

For the while, the mechanical heart of the "Berkshire" is embodied in a custom built body which brings it to a very pretty figure (economically, if not aesthetically). But it is conceivable that its best elements could be assembled in a modest casing which would permit distribution at prices competitive with other high fidelity machines. Right now it ranges upward from $1,800 to an astronomical $4,000 with "projection" television.

Aside from the "Berkshire," the day's visitors to this "Music for All" fete were treated to a showing of films with music by Copland, Prokofiev and Hindemith; sat in on an hour's broadcast of Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky, in which Ella Goldstein had a remarkable success in the latter's B minor piano concerto, and endured a battery of floodlights for the filming of their reactions as Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture was played. It would make an interesting sight, for most of the audience had their faces shielded from the overpowering glare. Nevertheless, to quote the most repeated word of the evening, this was a "milestone" along the road of reproduced music.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

Tanglewood Programs

Serge Koussevitzky has made his first announcement of the programs to be played under his direction by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer at Tanglewood. Guest conductors will be Eleazar de Carvalho, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

All concerts to be played in the Music Shed will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. The first three—July 29, 31 and August 1—list Beethoven's Fifth, Brahms' Second, Mahler's Second and Piston's Third Symphonies; a symphony by Haydn; Bach's Orchestral Suite in D major and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler."

The second week of concerts—August 5, 7 and 8—includes performances of Beethoven's Sixth and Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphonies; the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz; Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Piatigorsky; Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; "Madona," by Villa-Lobos, and de Falla's "El Amor Brujo."

The final concerts will be on August 12, 14 and 15, and at these will be played Beethoven's Third, Schumann's First and Sibelius' Second Symphonies and Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

An extra concert on August 10 will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky. The Festival will open with two concerts of music by Bach and Mozart on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening, July 18 and 20, each program to be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday, and all to be played in the Theater-Concert Hall.

The Berkshire Music Center will hold a six-week session at Tanglewood, July 5 to August 15, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. There will be five departments, as in former seasons: Conducting, Orchestra and Chamber Music, Composition, Opera, and Chorus. In addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty will include Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, in charge of choral conducting, and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud and Aaron Copland will teach composition, and Boris Goldovsky will head the opera department.

Information about the school and the festival may be secured by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

UST 2, 1947

Beethoven Series Opens At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—The first of four Berkshire Festival concerts devoted to Beethoven's music was given Thursday in Tanglewood's Music Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky before an audience of 7,600. The works performed were the first three symphonies.

The orchestra and conductor united in a lucid exposition of this highly transitory period in the composer's writings. The contrast between the lyric style of the first symphony and the stern dramaticism of the "Eroica" was vividly illustrated. The first symphony was imbued with a disarming freshness, and the performance of the finale was particularly outstanding in its enthusiasm and crystalline clarity of detail. The second symphony received an effectively intergrated reading, and the "Eroica" symphony gave an impression of unusual strength.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1947

Barber to Hear 2 Sons Playing at Tanglewood

Special to the Herald Tribune

CAMDEN, N. J., July 30.—Max Lateiner, forty-five, a barber most of his life, will enjoy his first holiday Saturday when he will travel with his wife, Rebecca, to Tanglewood, Mass., to hear their sons, Jacob, nineteen, and Isadore, seventeen, play under Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Jacob Lateiner, a pianist, will be soloist, while his brother, a violinist, will play with the orchestra. The two boys were graduated in May from the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Jacob Lateiner has played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and as accompanist to Efrem Zimbalist, violinist.

The Lateiners traveled in 1926 from Vienna to Havana, where Mr. Lateiner found work as a barber and their sons were born. Both boys have studied music seriously since they were six. The family moved to the United States in 1943.

Mr. Lateiner asked his customers today to postpone their usual Saturday appointments until Monday. He will be back at his clippers and scissors then in the shop at 324 Market Street after a [illegible]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 30 1947

Science, Music Mix at Festival

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Science and music caught up with each other at Tanglewood today and tonight. A musical shindig has been staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and RCA Victor the like of which is probably something new under the sun and moon.

They called it "New Horizons in Music."

It was RCA Victor's salute to the first full-sized symphonic organization to make records. Its gesture was a potential gift of $100,000 to benefit the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center.

The day's program covered the fidelity of recordings and the use of the music shed for broadcasting a concert and as a motion picture studio. Added to those demonstrations was a session on music in the movies. This four-ring circus attracted a crowd estimated at 7,000.

In the lineup of movie scores, the representation of composers was impressive. Disney's "Mickey's Grand Opera" was used as a curtain raiser. Then followed excerpts from Copland's "Our Town," Honegger's "Mayerling," Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky," Shostakovich's "The Youth of Maxim," Thomson's "The River," and Walton's "Henry V."

For the broadcast portion of the Boston Symphony concert, Koussevitzky programmed Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra with organ in D minor and Tchaikowsky's first piano concerto with 20-year-old Ella Goldstein giving a bravura performance as soloist.

The second half included Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture, during which the audience was filmed. Wagner's prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," the general dance from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," the march from Prokofieff's "The Love of Three Oranges" and Beethoven's overture to "Egmont" completed a somewhat popular list.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1947

R. C. A. Plans New Line Of Custom-Built Radios

A new line of custom-built high fidelity radio-phonographs, known as the Festival Series, is being planned by the R. C. A.-Victor division of Radio Corp. of America, it was announced yesterday. The first models are now on display at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Under the merchandising plan, the company will sell direct to the consumer with an over-ride of 10 per cent to any regularly franchised R. C. A.-Victor dealer the customer may designate. The price range is from $1,800 to $4,000.

Harriett H. Higginson has been appointed general manager of the consumer custom products department, which has been formed to develop and market the line. Miss Higginson has had more than fifteen years experience as an advertising, merchandising and fashion executive.

[65]

DINING and

By BERT M

Filet Formidable

After considerable legwork, I finally found that little French restaurant that I was looking for when I stumbled into Quo Vadis. For your information and my reference, it is situated at 129 East Sixtieth Street. It is also in the telephone book, but you will find it there under Le Veau d'Or and not under Veau d'Or, Le, which would have seemed to me to be the logical listing. Anyway, it's there and well worth a visit.

Like Daniel's, Le Veau d'Or offers an entire meal for the price of the entree, but the difference is that while Daniel's gives you more well cooked food than you can eat, Le Veau d'Or offers you just the right amount of beautifully cooked food. I started with a delicious novelty, Coquille Veau d'Or, which I can recommend, but wouldn't venture to describe; then, after some Vichyssoise which contained plenty of chives, but could easily have been thicker, I had filet de beouf, which was wonderful. With salad and coffee, but without the dessert which I just couldn't manage, the meal came to $3.

A small, intimate room with low ceiling, Le Veau d'Or has not more than twenty tables. A collection of singularly unattractive paintings adorns the paneled walls, but they are easily overlooked. The restaurant was taken over nine months ago by Henri, who looks like Jack Pearl, and Georges, who is in Europe at the moment. It has a comfortable bar, ably tended by Domenic, who used to be in the King Cole Bar at the St. Regis.

Talent Monopoly

Why the Blue Angel and the Ruban Bleu should have a virtual monopoly on new night club talent, I'm sure I don't know. But the fact remains that since I have been covering the beat, more fresh and hitherto untouted performers have turned up in these two spots than in all the other clubs combined. The Ruban Bleu now has another one in the person of George Kreisler, who opened there Monday night. A native of Vienna, Mr. Kreisler came to this country in 1938 and began writing music for Universal. When that didn't seem to be leading anywhere, he determined to set up his own act, singing his own material and accompanying himself at the piano.

His material is novel, clever and sophisticated. Tall, dark and rather studious looking, he affects a droopy, dead-pan delivery that is perfect for the songs he has devised for himself. Among these are "It's Great to Lead an Antiseptic Life," one that is dedicated to women entitled "You Bore Me" and another which he introduces as a love song and which is called "Please, Shoot Your Husband." I think you'll get a big kick out of him.

Another new face in the show at the Ruban is that of Jean Palmer, a slim nineteen-year-old singer with long auburn hair and blue eyes. Miss Palmer was also with Universal at one time. She does very well by such numbers as "This Can't Be Love" and "I've Got You Under My Skin." About the eyes, you'll notice an expression that ought to remind you of Betty Garrett.

Back at the Ruban is Judy Magee, the only girl I have seen who doesn't make a sound during the

---

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von WOLFGANG STRESEMANN

Bernstein-Konzert in Tanglewood

LENOX, 28. Juli. — Das dritte Konzert der Berkshire Musikfestspiele war Leonard Bernstein anvertraut, der vor sieben Jahren in Tanglewood mit Dr. Koussevitzky studiert hatte. Der schnelle Aufstieg dieses jungen amerikanischen Dirigenten ist in jeder Hinsicht berechtigt. Bernstein ist ein Musiker ersten Formats, ein geborener Dirigent und besitzt eine starke Persönlichkeit, die auch in Europa überall eine faszinierende Wirkung hinterlassen hat. Bernstein hat in der letzten Zeit große Fortschritte gemacht. Seine Gesten sind ruhiger geworden, seine Beherrschung des Orchesters ist vollendet — was viel besagt, besonders wenn es sich um die Spieler aus Boston handelt — und seine Kenntnis der Partituren ist beispielhaft. Es muß für den jungen Künstler eine besondere Genugtuung gewesen sein, in Tanglewood ein Konzert zu dirigieren, wo er einmal als Student sich seine ersten Lorbeeren mit einem Schülerorchester erworben hatte.

Bernstein eröffnete das Konzert mit der Ouvertüre zu Mozarts "Zauberflöte", dann folgte Stravinskys "Sacre du Printemps", und nach der Pause wurde die große Schubert C-Dur Sinfonie gespielt. Ein überaus anspruchsvolles Programm, das einen Dirigenten von Klasse erfordert. Bernstein wurde seiner Aufgabe in größtem Stile gerecht. Seine Wiedergaben hatten musikalisch wie klanglich hohes Niveau, und seine Interpretation von Stravinskys Komposition war schlechthin meisterhaft. Diese Musik liegt dem jungen Dirigenten ganz besonders, man möchte fast sagen, daß sie für ihn geschrieben worden ist, obwohl er erst fünf Jahre nach der Uraufführung des Werks geboren wurde. Die außerordentliche Vitalität der Musik, ihre komplizierten Rhythmen, jene oft dumpf-brütende Atmosphäre einer primitiven Welt, die barbarische Urkraft, die immer wieder aus dem Werke spricht, alle diese Elemente des genial konzipierten Stücks wurden von Bernstein mit einer noch nie zuvor gehörten Vollkommenheit herausgebracht. Aber auch die ruhigen Stellen der Partitur kamen vollendet heraus, die Vielfalt des klanglichen Bildes war bemerkenswert, und dank Bernsteins großartiger Intensität gab es keinen einzigen toten Punkt. Das Boston Sinfonie Orchester spielte in Hochform, und so kam eine denkwürdige Aufführung dieses Werks zustande, dessen absichtlich "entseelte" Musik vielleicht manchen Zuhörern innerlich fremd bleiben muß, aber das jedenfalls einen prominenten Platz in der Geschichte der Musik behaupten wird.

Auch die anderen Aufführungen waren durchweg hochwertig. Immer kommt es vor allem auf die Klasse einer Darbietung an, und diese entscheidet allein, auch wenn man in Einzelheiten verschiedener Meinung ist. Ueberdies darf man nie vergessen, daß die Meisterwerke der klassischen Literatur wiederholt dirigiert und gespielt werden müssen, bevor der Interpret sich zu einer letzten, reifen Leistung durchringen kann. Schon jetzt hat Bernstein ein so hohes Niveau erreicht, daß jede "Kritik" seiner Interpretation keine Herabsetzung, sondern lediglich eine Diskussion bedeutet. Und in diesem Sinne wollen wir ihm einige unserer Bedenken mitteilen. Zuerst die Mozart Ouvertüre. Hier waren die Sechzehntelnoten der Einleitung zu kurz genommen. Die Musik will am Anfang die Erhabenheit der freimauerischen Tempelwelt wiedergeben. Würde und Feierlichkeit sind ihre Merkmale, und diese finden keinen hinreichenden Ausdruck, wenn nicht jede Note das ihr zustehende Gewicht hat. Weiterhin war das Tempo des "Allegro" etwas zu langsam, was sich besonders in den Passagen der Holzbläser bemerkbar machte, die nicht ganz flüssig genug waren.

Was nun die Schubert Sinfonie betrifft — sie ist einer der schwersten der ganzen Literatur — so fiel uns auf, daß Bernstein in beiden Ecksätzen erst bei der Rekapitulation jenes beschwingte Tempo fand, das für diese olympische, hochgemute Musik notwendig ist. Im Seitenthema des ersten Satzes hat die Phrasierung unserer Auffassung nach ihren Höhepunkt erst im fünften Takt und nicht zuvor, wie es bei Bernsteins Interpretationsweise der Fall war, die übrigens von vielen Dirigenten befolgt wird. Im zweiten Satz hätte das Seitenthema etwas flüssiger klingen können.

Diese einfache, gesangvolle Melodie verträgt keine gedehnte Wiedergabe. — Im dritten Satz war Bernstein auf das Herausbringen des wuchtigen Elements der Musik allzu sehr bedacht. Er hatte hier noch nicht ganz den östreichischen Charakter der Musik erfasst. Sonst würde er den liebreizenden Walzer (Takt 30 ff) nicht so ausdruckslos dirigiert haben. An dieser Stelle ist ein singender, innerlich erfüllter Ton notwendig, der im wirkungsvollen Gegensatz zu dem mächtigen Klang des Beginns steht. Und dann vermißte man die Herausarbeitung des anmutigen Ländlers (Takt 66 ff), der zweckmäßigerweise ein ganz klein weniger ruhiger zu nehmen ist. — Im Finale schließlich ist zu erwähnen, daß Bernstein den Charakter des Seitenthemas nicht ganz erfaßte. Dieses ist nicht lyrisch zu interpretieren; die Musik drängt hier vorwärts, und der Zuhörer muß den Eindruck gewinnen, als ob Schubert die Schwingungen des ganzen Weltalls in seiner Musik versinnbildlichen wollte. Jedes Zurückhalten ist daher an dieser Stelle verfehlt.

Aber alle diese Punkte, in denen wir anderer Ansicht sind, dürfen — wir wollen es noch einmal betonen — nicht über die erstklassige Gesamtdarbietung hinwegtäuschen, die Bernstein der Schubert Sinfonie angedeihen ließ. Die klangliche Ausgeglichenheit, die feine Herausarbeitung der Gegenstimmen, das warme Gefühl, das aus der Wiedergabe strömte, machten auch diese Leistung des jungen Dirigenten zu einem schönen musikalischen Ereignis, das einen würdigen Abschluß dieses ersten Sonntagskonzerts in Tanglewood darstellte. — Berstein erhielt mit Recht große Ovationen. Unter den Zuhörern, wohl Zehntausend an der Zahl, befand sich auch Dr. Koussevitzky, der mit dem Berkshire Debut seines Schützlings wohl zufrieden sein konnte.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1947

Ella Goldstein Is Piano Soloist At Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony; Old Records Show Orchestra's Gains

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 30.—Ella Goldstein, young Palestinian pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in last night's special concert in Tanglewood's Music Shed, playing Tchaikovsky's concerto in B flat minor. Although it was enthusiastically received, her performance exhibited less of her musical assets than she had revealed in her New York recital debut last March. It told of technical talent, but not of complete technical security and accuracy; there was energy, but not a corresponding sonority of tone, and the romantic and emotional atmosphere of the work often eluded her. This was better realized in the orchestral accompaniment under Dr. Koussevitzky, who presented a bouquet to Miss Goldstein at the close.

The concert had its unusual features: The audience of 7,000 faced Kleig lights while being filmed during the performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, and then listened to "The March of Musical Fidelity," illustrating the progress which has been made since the Boston Symphony made its first Victor record thirty years ago.

A little of that 1917 record, of the introduction to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," was played before the orchestra itself performed this work; it could hardly be said that the early record gave much of an idea of how the Boston Symphony of a generation ago sounded under Dr. Karl Muck's leadership. The 1927 record of the

---

PEOPLE'S WORLD
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
JUL 27 1948

World of music

Berkshire sets benefit; Met revives 'Falstaff'

NEW YORK (UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3. (Part of the program will be heard over ABC affiliates at 6:30 p.m. CDT.)

SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists to the Old World."

DINING and

By BERT M

Filet Formidable

After considerable legwork, I finally found that little French restaurant that I was looking for when I stumbled into Quo Vadis. For your information and my reference, it is situated at 129 East Sixtieth Street. It is also in the telephone book, but you will find it there under Le Veau d'Or and not under Veau d'Or, Le, which would have seemed to me to be the logical listing. Anyway, it's there and well worth a visit.

Like Daniel's, Le Veau d'Or offers an entire meal for the price of the entree, but the difference is that while Daniel's gives you more well cooked food than you can eat, Le Veau d'Or offers you just the right amount of beautifully cooked food. I started with a delicious novelty, Coquille Veau d'Or, which I can recommend, but wouldn't venture to describe; then, after some Vichyssoise which contained plenty of chives, but could easily have been thicker, I had filet de beouf, which was wonderful. With salad and coffee, but without the dessert which I just couldn't manage, the meal came to $3.

A small, intimate room with low ceiling, Le Veau d'Or has not more than twenty tables. A collection of singularly unattractive paintings adorns the paneled walls, but they are easily overlooked. The restaurant was taken over nine months ago by Henri, who looks like Jack Pearl, and Georges, who is in Europe at the moment. It has a comfortable bar, ably tended by Domenic, who used to be in the King Cole Bar at the St. Regis.

Talent Monopoly

Why the Blue Angel and the Ruban Bleu should have a virtual monopoly on new night club talent, I'm sure I don't know. But the fact remains that since I have been covering the beat, more fresh and hitherto untouted performers have turned up in these two spots than in all the other clubs combined. The Ruban Bleu now has another one in the person of George Kreisler, who opened there Monday night. A native of Vienna, Mr. Kreisler came to this country in 1938 and began writing music for Universal. When that didn't seem to be leading anywhere, he determined to set up his own act, singing his own material and accompanying himself at the piano.

His material is novel, clever and sophisticated. Tall, dark and rather studious looking, he affects a droopy, dead-pan delivery that is perfect for the songs he has devised for himself. Among these are "It's Great to Lead an Antiseptic Life," one that is dedicated to women entitled "You Bore Me" and another which he introduces as a love song and which is called "Please, Shoot Your Husband." I think you'll get a big kick out of him.

Another new face in the show at the Ruban is that of Jean Palmer, a slim nineteen-year-old singer with long auburn hair and blue eyes. Miss Palmer was also with Universal at one time. She does very well by such numbers as "This Can't Be Love" and "I've Got You Under My Skin." About the eyes, you'll notice an expression that ought to remind you of Betty Garrett.

Back at the Ruban is Judy Magee, the only girl I have seen who doesn't make a sound during the

---

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von WOLFGANG STRESEMANN

Bernstein-Konzert in Tanglewood

LENOX, 28. Juli. — Das dritte Konzert der Berkshire Musikfestspiele war Leonard Bernstein anvertraut, der vor sieben Jahren in Tanglewood mit Dr. Koussevitzky studiert hatte. Der schnelle Aufstieg dieses jungen amerikanischen Dirigenten ist in jeder Hinsicht berechtigt. Bernstein ist ein Musiker ersten Formats, ein geborener Dirigent und besitzt eine starke Persönlichkeit, die auch in Europa überall eine faszinierende Wirkung hinterlassen hat. Bernstein hat in der letzten Zeit große Fortschritte gemacht. Seine Gesten sind ruhiger geworden, seine Beherrschung des Orchesters ist vollendet — was viel besagt, besonders wenn es sich um die Spieler aus Boston handelt — und seine Kenntnis der Partituren ist beispielhaft. Es muß für den jungen Künstler eine besondere Genugtuung gewesen sein, in Tanglewood ein Konzert zu dirigieren, wo er einmal als Student sich seine ersten Lorbeeren mit einem Schülerorchester erworben hatte.

Bernstein eröffnete das Konzert mit der Ouvertüre zu Mozarts "Zauberflöte", dann folgte Stravinskys "Sacre du Printemps", und nach der Pause wurde die große Schubert C-Dur Sinfonie gespielt. Ein überaus anspruchsvolles Programm, das einen Dirigenten von Klasse erfordert. Bernstein wurde seiner Aufgabe in größtem Stile gerecht. Seine Wiedergaben hatten musikalisch wie klanglich hohes Niveau, und seine Interpretation von Stravinskys Komposition war schlechthin meisterhaft. Diese Musik liegt dem jungen Dirigenten ganz besonders, man möchte fast sagen, daß sie für ihn geschrieben worden ist, obwohl er erst fünf Jahre nach der Uraufführung des Werks geboren wurde. Die außerordentliche Vitalität der Musik, ihre komplizierten Rhythmen, jene oft dumpf-brütende Atmosphäre einer primitiven Welt, die barbarische Urkraft, die immer wieder aus dem Werke spricht, alle diese Elemente des genial konzipierten Stücks wurden von Bernstein mit einer noch nie zuvor gehörten Vollkommenheit herausgebracht. Aber auch die ruhigen Stellen der Partitur kamen vollendet heraus, die Vielfalt des klanglichen Bildes war bemerkenswert, und dank Bernsteins großartiger Intensität gab es keinen einzigen toten Punkt. Das Boston Sinfonie Orchester spielte in Hochform, und so kam eine denkwürdige Aufführung dieses Werks zustande, dessen absichtlich "entseelte" Musik vielleicht manchen Zuhörern innerlich fremd bleiben muß, aber das jedenfalls einen prominenten Platz in der Geschichte der Musik behaupten wird.

Auch die anderen Aufführungen waren durchweg hochwertig. Immer kommt es vor allem auf die Klasse einer Darbietung an, und diese entscheidet allein, auch wenn man in Einzelheiten verschiedener Meinung ist. Ueberdies darf man nie vergessen, daß die Meisterwerke der klassischen Literatur wiederholt dirigiert und gespielt werden müssen, bevor der Interpret sich zu einer letzten, reifen Leistung durchringen kann. Schon jetzt hat Bernstein ein so hohes Niveau erreicht, daß jede "Kritik" seiner Interpretation keine Herabsetzung, sondern lediglich eine Diskussion bedeutet. Und in diesem Sinne wollen wir ihm einige unserer Bedenken mitteilen. Zuerst die Mozart Ouvertüre. Hier waren die Sechzehntelnoten der Einleitung zu kurz genommen. Die Musik will am Anfang die Erhabenheit der freimauerischen Tempelwelt wiedergeben. Würde und Feierlichkeit sind ihre Merkmale, und diese finden keinen hinreichenden Ausdruck, wenn nicht jede Note das ihr zustehende Gewicht hat. Weiterhin war das Tempo des "Allegro" etwas zu langsam, was sich besonders in den Passagen der Holzbläser bemerkbar machte, die nicht ganz flüssig genug waren.

Was nun die Schubert Sinfonie betrifft — sie ist einer der schwersten der ganzen Literatur — so fiel uns auf, daß Bernstein in beiden Ecksätzen erst bei der Rekapitulation jenes beschwingte Tempo fand, das für diese olympische, hochgemute Musik notwendig ist. Im Seitenthema des ersten Satzes hat die Phrasierung unserer Auffassung nach ihren Höhepunkt erst im fünften Takt und nicht zuvor, wie es bei Bernsteins Interpretationsweise der Fall war, die übrigens von vielen Dirigenten befolgt wird. Im zweiten Satz hätte das Seitenthema etwas flüssiger klingen können.

Diese einfache, gesangvolle Melodie verträgt keine gedehnte Wiedergabe. — Im dritten Satz war Bernstein auf das Herausbringen des wuchtigen Elements der Musik allzu sehr bedacht. Er hatte hier noch nicht ganz den östreichischen Charakter der Musik erfasst. Sonst würde er den liebreizenden Walzer (Takt 30 ff) nicht so ausdruckslos dirigiert haben. An dieser Stelle ist ein singender, innerlich erfüllter Ton notwendig, der im wirkungsvollen Gegensatz zu dem mächtigen Klang des Beginns steht. Und dann vermißte man die Herausarbeitung des anmutigen Ländlers (Takt 66 ff), der zweckmäßigerweise ein ganz klein weniger ruhiger zu nehmen ist. — Im Finale schließlich ist zu erwähnen, daß Bernstein den Charakter des Seitenthemas nicht ganz erfaßte. Dieses ist nicht lyrisch zu interpretieren; die Musik drängt hier vorwärts, und der Zuhörer muß den Eindruck gewinnen, als ob Schubert die Schwingungen des ganzen Weltalls in seiner Musik versinnbildlichen wollte. Jedes Zurückhalten ist daher an dieser Stelle verfehlt.

Aber alle diese Punkte, in denen wir anderer Ansicht sind, dürfen — wir wollen es noch einmal betonen — nicht über die erstklassige Gesamtdarbietung hinwegtäuschen, die Bernstein der Schubert Sinfonie angedeihen ließ. Die klangliche Ausgeglichenheit, die feine Herausarbeitung der Gegenstimmen, das warme Gefühl, das aus der Wiedergabe strömte, machten auch diese Leistung des jungen Dirigenten zu einem schönen musikalischen Ereignis, das einen würdigen Abschluß dieses ersten Sonntagskonzerts in Tanglewood darstellte. — Berstein erhielt mit Recht große Ovationen. Unter den Zuhörern, wohl Zehntausend an der Zahl, befand sich auch Dr. Koussevitzky, der mit dem Berkshire Debut seines Schützlings wohl zufrieden sein konnte.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1947

Ella Goldstein Is Piano Soloist At Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony; Old Records Show Orchestra's Gains

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 30.—Ella Goldstein, young Palestinian pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in last night's special concert in Tanglewood's Music Shed, playing Tchaikovsky's concerto in B flat minor. Although it was enthusiastically received, her performance exhibited less of her musical assets than she had revealed in her New York recital debut last March. It told of technical talent, but not of complete technical security and accuracy; there was energy, but not a corresponding sonority of tone, and the romantic and emotional atmosphere of the work often eluded her. This was better realized in the orchestral accompaniment under Dr. Koussevitzky, who presented a bouquet to Miss Goldstein at the close.

The concert had its unusual features: The audience of 7,000 faced Kleig lights while being filmed during the performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, and then listened to "The March of Musical Fidelity," illustrating the progress which has been made since the Boston Symphony made its first Victor record thirty years ago.

A little of that 1917 record, of the introduction to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," was played before the orchestra itself performed this work; it could hardly be said that the early record gave much of an idea of how the Boston Symphony of a generation ago sounded under Dr. Karl Muck's leadership. The 1927 record of the

---

PEOPLE'S WORLD
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
JUL 27 1948

World of music

Berkshire sets benefit; Met revives 'Falstaff'

SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY

NEW YORK (UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3. (Part of the program will be heard over ABC affiliates at 6:30 p.m. CDT.)

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists to the Old World."

[66]

G 1 1947

Koussevitzky's Beethoven Masterful

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

IT WAS a new experience at Tanglewood last night to sit through three Beethoven symphonies in a row—the first three at that.

From the suave, uncomplicated opening bars of the First to the closing pages of the Eroica is a mere two hours or so of elapsed time, but from the restive awe with which the young Beethoven looked out upon the prim formalism of Haydn's Vienna in its phosphorescent decay to the completed revolution of his disillusionment in "the memory of a great man" is a long, long way to come, for within this space musical history traverses its most epochal chapters from the begats to the apocalypse.

I was pleased and refreshed that Dr. Koussevitzky did not, however, give us an historical interpretation. There wasn't the slightest suggestion that he saw anything Haydnesque in the First Symphony. It is prissy and stupid to pretend that this delightful symphony is in any sense derivative. It shocked its first audiences and that was because it was the speech of Beethoven and not the product of the aging Haydn's pupil.

* * *

NEVER HAS anyone made this work more Beethovenish than Koussevitzky did last night. Not because it was big; it was manly. There was no idol-breaking particularly; merely intimations of humanity.

These things are not subtle or theoretical. Koussevitzky produces a composer's style right out of factual facilities of his superb orchestra. One could write a book about his method of producing a sforzando. It is more than an accent or an intensification; it is a locution. You know that it is the way Beethoven spoke and that Mozart and Haydn didn't express themselves that way.

Similarly with the creation of a crescendo. Nuance began with Beethoven; it is the essence of his harmony his instrumental coloring. His predecessors created their music on contrasting planes, all kept neatly and strictly apart and there was no washing together of the tonal elements. With Beethoven, naturalism was afoot.

These differences are elementary, even obvious, but it takes the great interpreter like a Koussevitzky to accept the obvious to let it speak for itself. Only lesser men strain for the personal interpretation.

* * *

UNTIL LAST NIGHT I have always found the Second Symphony something of a bore. It has contained a good deal of the Beethoven sweetness which for me borders on the vapid. The fault has been with this listener for last night what had once been "linked sweetness long drawn out" became in the slow movement an elevating and healthy songfulness. Again Koussevitzky did not strive for bigness or boisterousness in the scherzo and the thing came off the more happily for it.

It was interesting to note how Koussevitzky successively built up his orchestra from six basses and six violas in the First, an extra pair of each for the Second, and a full complement of 10 basses in the Third with 12 chairs in each of the other string sections.

The Eroica has always been a favorite with Koussevitzky. Here again there is nothing that could be construed as a personal perspective. He arrived at this Beethoven with an artistic rectitude beyond cavil. His account of the funeral march was one of the noblest things in music. It is an emotional experience that left one in a spent condition for which there was no restorative but the matchless scherzo.

The instrumental perfection, the balance of the woodwind chords, the dazzling horn playing, the luster of the strings was something even beyond what the Bostonians have accustomed us to.

The success of this concert, as is so often the case in musical performance, was created in the first few moments. It was a daring thing to program these three symphonies together. Not many interpretative artists would run the risk.

If Koussevitzky was concerned—and he must have been—all doubt was resolved within five minutes' time. The performance kindled. It spread through the players; the leader was lifted up. You can see when Koussevitzky is inspired and happy. He remained so all evening.

---

musicianship but he is in the stratosphere of dreamers who manage to get their dreams realized. For if ever a man has watched a dream walking and playing a violin and holding a baton and singing and carpentering a stage set that man is Mr. Koussevitsky. He dreamed of founding a school of music and opera and here it is. They say that he is now dreaming a Greek theater and he may be again an Aladdin—with the trustees of the Boston Symphony and the friends of the Berkshire Music center playing genii to him. Mrs. Donald Mc Pherson and Mrs. William G. Hibbard are Chicago members of the friends.

For six weeks the schools are in a flurry of ecstatic work. For three of those weeks the Berkshire festival is held, and if one could man-

[Continued on page 2]

Chicago Sunday Tribune: August 3, 1947
Part 7—Page 2 R

Koussevitsky Thrills Crowds in Berkshires

[Continued from page 1]

age it physically one could listen to 14 regular concerts by the full Boston Symphony orchestra, concerts by the student orchestra, chamber music concerts, performances of opera and choral music and rehearsals of all of them.

• • •

Hostesses invite their music loving friends especially for the week-ends of the festival, and at the spinning round of luncheons, cocktail and dinner parties the conversation is as often straight out of Grove's Musical dictionary as it is out of a smart novel.

For the dinner parties the women wear their choicest gowns and in the chill of the evening their bare shoulders are cosy under mink and sable. The gentlemen who belong to the dinner jacket every night school look upon those who appear in sports jackets as rebels. Every one doesn't dress, however. Those who bring blankets and sit or lie outside are in every stage of dress and undress, and on Sunday the wide grass lands within hearing distance disclosed more than one pair of stockings laid out to dry and bare toes twinkled contentedly.

• • •

The fortunate boxholders for the concerts can drive up to the entrance of "The Shed" for the full orchestra concerts. Others park a block or more away and walk. "The Shed" is a pie shaped structure which shelters 6,000. Even those who have a passion for modern architecture must call it purely functional. The gossip is that its acoustics don't do right by soloists, but there is such a sacrosanct air about everything concerning the festival that those doubts are whispered. It is also whispered that there is still an unfulfilled desire on the part of many of those emotionally entangled in Tanglewood for a typically New England "Shed."

Chicago may be a thousand miles away but it has had an intimate part in the Berkshire music, greater than many of the visitors here realize. It was a former Chicagoan, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge who sponsored the internationally famous chamber music concerts which antedated the Tanglewood festival. They were held in her music temple on South Mountain, now not open, but the magnificent Mrs. Coolidge is still here, honored by every one, when she appears at the festival. The late Miss Kate Buckingham who gave Chicago its beautiful lake front fountain lived in the big white house on the mountainside looking down over the lake called the Stockbridge bowl and Tanglewood itself which Mr. Koussevitsky now owns. Miss Buckingham willed the estate to Walter Byron Smith from whom Koussevitsky bought it.

• • •

Across the lake, not far away is another lovely white house recently sold by Mrs. James Ransom Walker who is spending the summer at the Red Lion inn with her sister, Mrs. David Shields Cook. They are sisters of the late Arthur Meeker and members of a large clan who, with other New Englanders settled in Chicago in the early days but always kept their love for New England and have come back every summer. Mrs. Clyde Carr, our own Symphony orchestra's godmother, is also at the Red Lion inn for the festival.

The inn's red lion sign bears the date 1773. Across the street from it is the little white house where the first cable message ever to come across the Atlantic cable was received by Cyrus Field. One of Mrs. Carr's guests at luncheon the other day was Mrs. Freeman Hinckley whose great aunt, a Field, lived in another of the characteristic, beautiful square white clapboard houses. Mrs. Hinckley motored down from Prout's Neck, Me., and was the guest of Mrs. Donald McPherson whose estate, Court Hill, in Pittsfield, is one of the historical spots of this section.

• • •

Next week I shall tell you about her house, in which Chicagoans of three generations have visited, and about other beautiful and historic houses owned by other Chicagoans. But this week it would be called lese majeste by the devotees to talk about anything but the music. For not only was the festival opened but Mr. Koussevitsky's 73d birthday was celebrated, and it was a sort of week-end Berkshire county festival in itself.

The celebrations began on Thursday evening with the opening concert at which the audience rose in a body to greet Koussy, as they affectionately called him after. I noticed, he stood until they did rise in the custom of his audiences in Boston. After his reading of the Brahms second the bravos rang from the emotional thrill. But an even greater ovation greeted 29 year old Leonard Bernstein after his magnificent reading of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and the Schubert Unfinished Symphony, and Koussevitsky went back to the green room to congratulate his favorite pupil.

In Stockbridge for the festival and among the week-end guests of Mrs. Welch Dickinson was Mrs. Ernst Von Ammon who has worked so devotedly for the success of the Ravinia festival. The John Alden Carpenters usually come down from Beverly for the week-end with Mrs. McPherson during the festival, but they went back to our own festival in Ravinia to hear Papa Monteux conduct John Carpenter's "The Seven Ages."

Attractive young Miss Marion Danielson, who was named for her aunt, Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, was another of Mrs. McPherson's guests. Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed also came here for the festival, from her Cape Cod home.

Rice's comedy,
Shubert tomorrow night.

'Music for All' Day at The Berkshire Festival

By ELINOR HUGHES

It's a little like coming along at the end of the procession to break into print at this time with the announcement that if there is a lovelier spot in northwestern Massachusetts than Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Festival is now in full swing, I hope to see it and quickly, too. The reason for all this excitement is that last week there was a special "Music For All" day at Tanglewood, presented for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, to which I traveled at the cordial urging of the music critic of this paper who felt that he has had and will have his innings at this beautiful place and that it was high time that I should pay it a visit.

However, this was to be a varied sort of entertainment, not entirely musical though music would provide the main course, and so I went, in company with other fortunate guests, in a car provided by RCA Victor, which was closely tied in with the proceedings. Upon our arrival, we were escorted first to the television shed, where we were provided with an interesting exposition and demonstration of television in action, as presented on a very elegant new radio-phonograph with built in television screen, christened, in honor of the Festival, "The Berkshire". (A limited number of these sets are to be sold to supply scholarships for the Music Center, complete with an engraved silver plate inscribed with a grateful message from Serge Koussevitsky.)

RADIO AND PICTURES

The main event of the evening began promptly at 8:30 P. M., in the Shed, which, due to the perfect moonlight night and ideal temperatures, was packed virtually to the last seat, with thousands more sitting on the grass outside. For this occasion only, because it was something of a show as well as a concert, the technicians and announcer for the American Broadcasting Company performed their functions in view of the audience, as the first half of the concert, consisting of Vivaldi's elegant and delightful Concerto in D minor for organ and orchestra, and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 were sent out over the air. The soloist in the Tchaikovsky work was Ella Goldstein, a young pianist from Palestine, who, following a tentative beginning, gave a splendid assured and exciting performance of this invariably popuar item in the concert repertoire. The audidnce gave her a really notable ovation, and was considerably amused as she attempted to give her sheaf of flowers to Mr. Koussevitsky and he, as firmly, handed them back.

As the audience returned to their seats after the intermission, they discovered that about a dozen floodlights had been set up near the stage and around the sides of the shed to assist the camera men from Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer in photographing the spectators during the first selection on the second half of the photograph. To be sure, the presence of Frederic March and his wife proved slightly distracting, but after this buzzing of talk and craning of necks had subsided, the house lights went down, the orchestra began Berlioa's "Roman Carnival" overture and the cameras did their noiseless and efficient work. It gave a very odd effect, I promise you, to hear the musicians paying and not be able to see them at all. The picture of which these shots will form a part, will be known as "The Story of Tanglewood."

ENTER "THE BERKSHIRE'

The climax of the entertainment was supplied by a brief history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's part in recording great music, together with the advance in sound reproduction, known as "The March of Musical Fidelity." This began with the orchestra's first recording, the Prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," made in 1915 when Karl Muck was conducting. Its thin squeaky tones were dramatically contrasted with the orchestra playing the same composition. Then came a dance from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," again with phonograph and orchestra alternating performance, and the march from Prokofieff's "Love for Three Oranges," all of these representing 10 years of progress in musical recording, and each illustrated with little tableaux presented by actors in costume playing phonograph models of the period. The big surprise was the playing of the overture to Beethoven's "Egmont," played by the orchestra to the half-way point and then, with "The Berkshire" unveiled center stage above the heads of the musicians, the orchestra stopped and the radio-phonograph playing the Symphony's new and as yet unreleased recording of this work carried on till the end. No phonograph, of course, should be asked to compete out of doors with a full symphny orchestra, but this new instrument unquestionably represents the finest reproduction available today and is a fine achievement.

The concert concluded with a fine lusty performance of "The Stars and Stripes Forever," after which those interested—and many of them were—were invited to the theater concert hall for a second showing of scenes from various films, American, English and European, which were famous for their incorporation of musical scores by Copland, Honegger, Prokofieff, William Walton and Virgil Thompson. Mickey Mouse in "Mickey's Opera" began the program, and the Agingcourt scene from "Henry V" brought it to a stirring close.

Koussevitsky Thrills Crowds in Berkshires

By Thalia

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—[Special]—Music is in the air both actually and conversationally for miles around. The nationally and internationally famous Berkshire Music festival is held in Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge for three weeks each season and every summer place is filled with music lovers. The Berkshire festival has become a pilgrimage in the less than a decade of its life. Other great music festivals, like Salzburg, for instance, took much longer to achieve the dual halos of musical and social sanctity.

But this part of Massachusetts has been a summer retreat of intellectual society since the days when Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales for the children who used to gather round a fireplace which still stands in the home of Mrs. William Bullard in whose husband's family it has been for generations. Her house, like all of the old houses hereabouts has been remodeled with its historic shrine reverently preserved.

It adjoins the 210 acre musical Valhalla to which fortunate music lovers are translated before, not after, they die, and which is named for the classic Hawthorne stories. The estate belonged to a Boston family devoted to culture and in 1936 it was given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, and Tanglewood as a music center became a reality.

• • •

Serge Koussevitsky, musical director of the Boston Symphony, is not only in the top stratum of

---

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, SUNDAY, 3 AUGUS

Joseph Laderoute

J. Abresch

Who will sing the title role in Mozart's "Idomeneo" tomorrow and Wednesday nights at Tanglewood

Mozart Opera's U.S. Premiere In Berkshires

'Idomeneo' Will Be Sung Monday and Wednesday Nights at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera seria "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" will have its first performances in this country tomorrow and next Wednesday nights in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the conductorship and stage direction of Boris Goldovsky, who has edited the score for this production. Admission is by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The dress rehearsal will be held tonight.

The cast, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Center, with Joseph Laderoute, tenor, as Idomeneo. The role of Idamante, originally written for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, Elizabeth Ann Bollinger in one performance and Dorothy Dawson in the other. Others in the cast are Nancy Trickey as Ilia, Paula Lenchner as Agamemnon and Frank Garreva as Neptune.

The opera was written for the Bavarian court in 1780, and first performed in Munich on Jan 29, 1781. Its 150th anniversary was observed in 1931 by the Vienna State Opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and Lothar Wallerstein, and in Munich in an edition by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. It was performed in London in English in 1938. The libretto by the Abbe Varesco is based upon Danchet's libretto for Campra's opera "Idomenee."

Since no printed parts of the score exist, they had to be copied for the coming production. Mr. Goldovsky, in condensing "Idomeneo" to a practicable length, has made some changes in the order of the score so as to obtain coherence and continuity of the dramatic action, but has made no changes in the music itself. The original Italian text will be used.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completes the second sub-

Playhouse, Dennis, tomorrow night.

Berkshire Festival

The Beethoven cycle in the series of concerts at Tanglewood will be completed this afternoon and Tuesday night, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony. Participating during the week will be the Festival Chorus, Robert Shaw, director, and the following vocal soloists: Frances Yeend, Eu-

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
JUL 31 1947

CRITICAL and AMUSEMENTS

—Hague—

'Music for All' Fete Held at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.

Under the general title of Music for All, a comprehensive and well-staged demonstration of how radio, phonograph, movies and television are bringing music to an ever-widening public, and are broadening music's horizons through the application of the most recent scientific contributions to musical reproduction, was put on Tuesday afternoon and evening, by RCA Victor and the Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Summer home in the Berkshire Hills. Coming in the middle of the annual series of Berkshire Festival concerts, this special added event drew nearly 7000, each of whom paid a $2 admission fee to aid the work of the Berkshire Music Center.

Hague

• • •

The first hour of the evening concert by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra was broadcast over the ABC coast-to-coast network. Listeners in the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood and on the air heard vital and notably persuasive performances of the Vivaldi-Siloti D-minor Concerto for Orchestra and Organ, and the First Piano Concerto of Tchaikowsky, with the young Palestinian pianist Ella Goldstein as soloist.

Miss Goldstein's account of the keyboard part of the thrice-familiar work was sure-fingered, forceful and musically convincing. Her playing was dynamically flexible and always controlled. Her tone was good, particularly in the singing passages of the second movement. She lent considerable emotional impact and excitement to the third movement, and had no difficulty keeping up with the precipitous pace Dr. Koussevitzky set towards the close. The audience gave her a long and noisy ovation, with Dr. K. and members of the orchestra joining heartily in the applause.

• • •

After the intermission, the Music Shed was turned temporarily into a movie studio. While Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra presented Berlioz's Roman Carnival overture, a battery of Klieg lights was trained on the audience, and cameras turned. The sequence is to be used in a film about Tanglewood being prepared by MGM.

• • •

The rest of the program was given over to comparisons of live and recorded performances of music by the orchestra. Entitled The March of Musical Fidelity, a series of tableaux with orchestra traced 30 years of development and improvement in recording and record manufacturing techniques. Early Victor records of the Boston Symphony were played on machines of the period, with the orchestra itself playing the same selections.

First came a 1917 acoustical recording of the Prelude to Act III of Lohengrin, the first successful recording of a full-sized symphony orchestra, played on an old-fashioned "screech box"; then, the first electrical recording, the General Dance from Ravel's Dahpnis and Chloe, made in 1928—in the live performance of which, always a specialty of Dr. K. and the Bostonians, conductor and orchestra outdid themselves brilliantly on the present occasion. Next came a recording of the March from Prokofiev's Love for Three Oranges, an example of the increased fidelity achieved in 1937.

For climax, there was the dramatic unveiling of RCA Victor's new custom-built, high fidelity radio-phonograph, The Berkshire, presented with a smart bit of showmanship. It interrupted the orchestra playing the first part of Beethoven's Egmont Overture, continuing the music from a recording of this work (made last week at Tanglewood by the orchestra) in an almost imperceptible switch. It was scarcely apparent where the live orchestra left off and the canned one began, so alike in volume and quality of tone was the music which came from the machine spotlighted on a raised platform behind the musicians. It is the closest I have yet heard mechanical reproduction come to the real thing.

• • •

Incidentally, RCA Victor has earmarked the first 200 sets of The Berkshire for sale on a subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The custom-built instrument comes in four cabinet styles, two traditional and two modern, and consists of automatic phonograph, radio receiver for FM, AM and short wave; and, in certain models, a large-screen television receiver. Prices range from about $1800 to $4000.

• • •

In the Theater-Concert Hall, before and after the evening concert, two programs of Music in the Movies were presented, demonstrating the important part music plays in films. Parts of movies to which distinguished contemporary composers have contributed musical scores were screened, including Virgil Thomson's graphic and expressive backgrounds for The River; Aaron Copland's sharply evocative score for The City, and his deeply affecting musical sequences for Our Town; Honegger's dramatic music for the romantic morbidities of Mayerling; Prokofiev's vivid accompaniment to the Battle on the Ice in Alexander Nevsky, and William Walton's to the Battle of Agincourt in Laurence Olivier's Henry V. All in all, an uncommonly impressive selection.

Jacob Lateiner, 19-year-old pianist, who will play Beethoven's Emperor Concerto with the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Saturday night at Tanglewood.

• • •

The Berkshire Festival proper resumes with this evening's concert under Dr. Koussevitzky, when Series B, covering all the symphonies of Beethoven, gets underway with the playing of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (the Eroica). Saturday evening will bring Nos. 4 and 5, and the Emperor Piano Concerto with young Jacob Lateiner as soloist. The 6th (Pastoral) and 7th Symphonies, and the 4th Piano Concerto with Joseph Battista as soloist, make up the program for Sunday afternoon; and the cycle will close next Tuesday evening with the performance of the 8th and 9th (Choral) Symphonies.

The Festival will conclude with the concerts of Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Saturday evening, Aug. 9, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the first one, Robert Shaw the second, and Dr. Koussevitzky the last.

—ROBERT A. HAGUE

Symphony's re-
Saturday morning the public for the orchestra's Pension ollowing programs e Music Center, in e performance of e open to members of the Center's chamber music. Mon-concert. Wednesday,

c. Eleazar de Carvalho
y. afternoon, symphony ening. student orchestral 2:30. opera scenes. Next amber music.

uld be directed to enox, Mass.

[68]

Koussevitsky Thrills Crowds in Berkshires

By Thalia

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—[Special]—Music is in the air both actually and conversationally for miles around. The nationally and internationally famous Berkshire Music festival is held in Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge for three weeks each season and every summer place is filled with music lovers. The Berkshire festival has become a pilgrimage in the less than a decade of its life. Other great music festivals, like Salzburg, for instance, took much longer to achieve the dual halos of musical and social sanctity.

But this part of Massachusetts has been a summer retreat of intellectual society since the days when Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales for the children who used to gather round a fireplace which still stands in the home of Mrs. William Bullard in whose husband's family it has been for generations. Her house, like all of the old houses hereabouts has been remodeled with its historic shrine reverently preserved.

It adjoins the 210 acre musical Valhalla to which fortunate music lovers are translated before, not after, they die, and which is named for the classic Hawthorne stories. The estate belonged to a Boston family devoted to culture and in 1936 it was given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, and Tanglewood as a music center became a reality.

• • •

Serge Koussevitsky, musical director of the Boston Symphony, is not only in the top stratum of

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

Pool Bonus For Homes, Vets Urged

A plan to build co-operative housing projects for veterans by utilizing the proposed State veterans bonus was announced yesterday by Herman T. Stichman of the State Division of Housing.

Under the plan, veterans could rent apartments at [redacted]

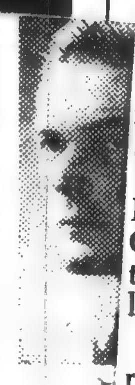
---

lic, and are broadening music's horizons through the application of the most recent scientific contributions to musical reproduction, was put on Tuesday afternoon and evening, by RCA Victor and the Boston under the direction of S sevitzky, at Tanglewoo chestra's Summer home i shire Hills. Coming in of the annual series o Festival concerts, this sp event drew nearly 700 whom paid a $2 admis aid the work of the Berk Center.



. . .

The first hour of t concert by Dr. Kousse the orchestra was bro the ABC coast-to-coa Listeners in the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood and on the air heard vital and notably persuasive performances of the Vivaldi-Siloti D-minor Concerto for Orchestra and Organ, and the First Piano Concerto of Tchaikowsky, with the young Palestinian pianist Ella Goldstein as soloist.

Miss Goldstein's account of the keyboard part of the thrice-familiar work was sure-fingered, forceful and musically convincing. Her playing was dynamically flexible and always controlled. Her tone lections.

First came a 1917 acoustical recording of the Prelude to Act III of Lohengrin, the first successful recording of a full-sized symphony orchestra, played on an old-fashioned "screech box"; then, the first electrical recording, the General Dance from Ravel's Dahpnis and Chloe, made in 1928—in the live performance of which, always a specialty of Dr. K. and the Bostonians, conductor and orchestra outdid themselves brilliantly on the

---

PATORUZU

LOOK AT THAT PLANE! IT'S RIGHT ABOVE US!
DO YOU SUPPOSE...? NO! MY FISTS ALWAYS KILL!
WE'RE NEAR ENOUGH TO SEND THEM A MESSAGE!
TROUBLES AGAIN!
GEE!

Sixty War Killings Balance One Non-War

James Quinn, 22, a former Marine who had pleaded guilty to second degree manslaughter in the fatal knifing of Margaret Dowling, appeared in Queens County Court expecting to hear the mandatory sentence of at least 10 years in prison.

Instead he heard a probation report citing War Dept. praise for Quinn for having slain 60 Japanese in hand-to-hand bayonet fighting. Judge Peter T. Farrell and Assistant D. A. David L. Dugan agreed that Quinn's heroic record had earned him a chance. He was sent to the Elmira Reformatory for a maximum of 18 months.

Dispute Date In POW Death

Entries

While the "entries COLE PORTER STAK week's DISC JOCKEY I being groomed (as if th it!), how about pitching a few brief notes about C himself, the composer this week.

It is considered ineleg the phrase "most uniqu Cole Porter there is phrase that does justi position in Tin Pan Alley

He is certainly the onl Alley denizen to start o $1,000,000 inheritance, one to maintain two (co apartments at the Wald (one to work in, the oth in), the only composer cluding Chopin to have th pean villas going at once Lido and Venice, where occupied Robert Brow mous diggings. He is f only composer who start life to become a circus a

---

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, SUNDAY, 3 AUGUS

Joseph Laderoute

J. Abresch

Who will sing the title role in Mozart's "Idomeneo" tomorrow and Wednesday nights at Tanglewood

Mozart Opera's U.S. Premiere In Berkshires

'Idomeneo' Will Be Sung Monday and Wednesday Nights at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera seria "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" will have its first performances in this country tomorrow and next Wednesday nights in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the conductorship and stage direction of Boris Goldovsky, who has edited the score for this production. Admission is by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The dress rehearsal will be held tonight.

The cast, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Center, with Joseph Laderoute, tenor, as Idomeneo. The role of Idamante, originally written for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, Elizabeth Ann Bollinger in one performance and Dorothy Dawson in the other. Others in the cast are Nancy Trickey as Ilia, Paula Lenchner as Agamemnon and Frank Garreva as Neptune.

The opera was written for the Bavarian court in 1780, and first performed in Munich on Jan 29, 1781. Its 150th anniversary was observed in 1931 by the Vienna State Opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and Lothar Wallerstein, and in Munich in an edition by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. It was performed in London in English in 1938. The libretto by the Abbe Varesco is based upon Danchet's libretto for Campra's opera "Idomenee."

Since no printed parts of the score exist, they had to be copied for the coming production. Mr. Goldovsky, in condensing "Idomeneo" to a practicable length, has made some changes in the order of the score so as to obtain coherence and continuity of the dramatic action, but has made no changes in the music itself. The original Italian text will be used.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completes the second subscription cycle, Series B, of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this afternoon, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a Beethoven program. An extra concert, devoted to Beethoven's eighth and ninth symphonies, will be held next Tuesday at 7:30. The remaining festival programs are:

Today, 3:30 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Piano Concerto No. 5 ("Emperor," soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7.

Tuesday, 7:30 (Extra concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 9, with Festival Chorus; soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Thursday, 8:15 (Series C), Leonard Bernstein conducting. Haydn, Symphony No. 102 in B flat; Hindemith, violin concerto (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus. Bach, Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil"; Stravinsky, Symphony of Psalms; Mozart, Requiem. (Soloists as on Tuesday.)

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzy conducting. Martinu, Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos; Ravel, Pavane and Bolero; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

The Boston Symphony's rehearsal next Saturday morning will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund. The following programs of the Berkshire Music Center, in addition to the performance of "Idomeneo," are open to members of the Society of the Center's Friends:

Today, 10:30 a. m., chamber music. Monday, 1:30, orchestral concert. Wednesday, 4:30, chamber music, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting. Thursday, afternoon, symphony concert. Friday, evening, student orchestral concert. Saturday, 2:30, opera scenes. Next Sunday, morning, chamber music.

Inquiries should be directed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Festival at Salzburg

Playhouse, Dennis, tomorrow night.

Berkshire Festival

The Beethoven cycle in the series of concerts at Tanglewood will be completed this afternoon and Tuesday night, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony. Participating during the week will be the Festival Chorus, Robert Shaw, director, and the following vocal soloists: Frances Yeend, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease. They will be heard not only in Beethoven's 9th Symphony on Tuesday but also in Mozart's Requiem, a Bach Cantata and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms on Saturday. Joseph Battista, pianist, will be the soloist today in Beethoven's 4th Concerto. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday's concert; and Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday when Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be soloist in Hindemith's Concerto.

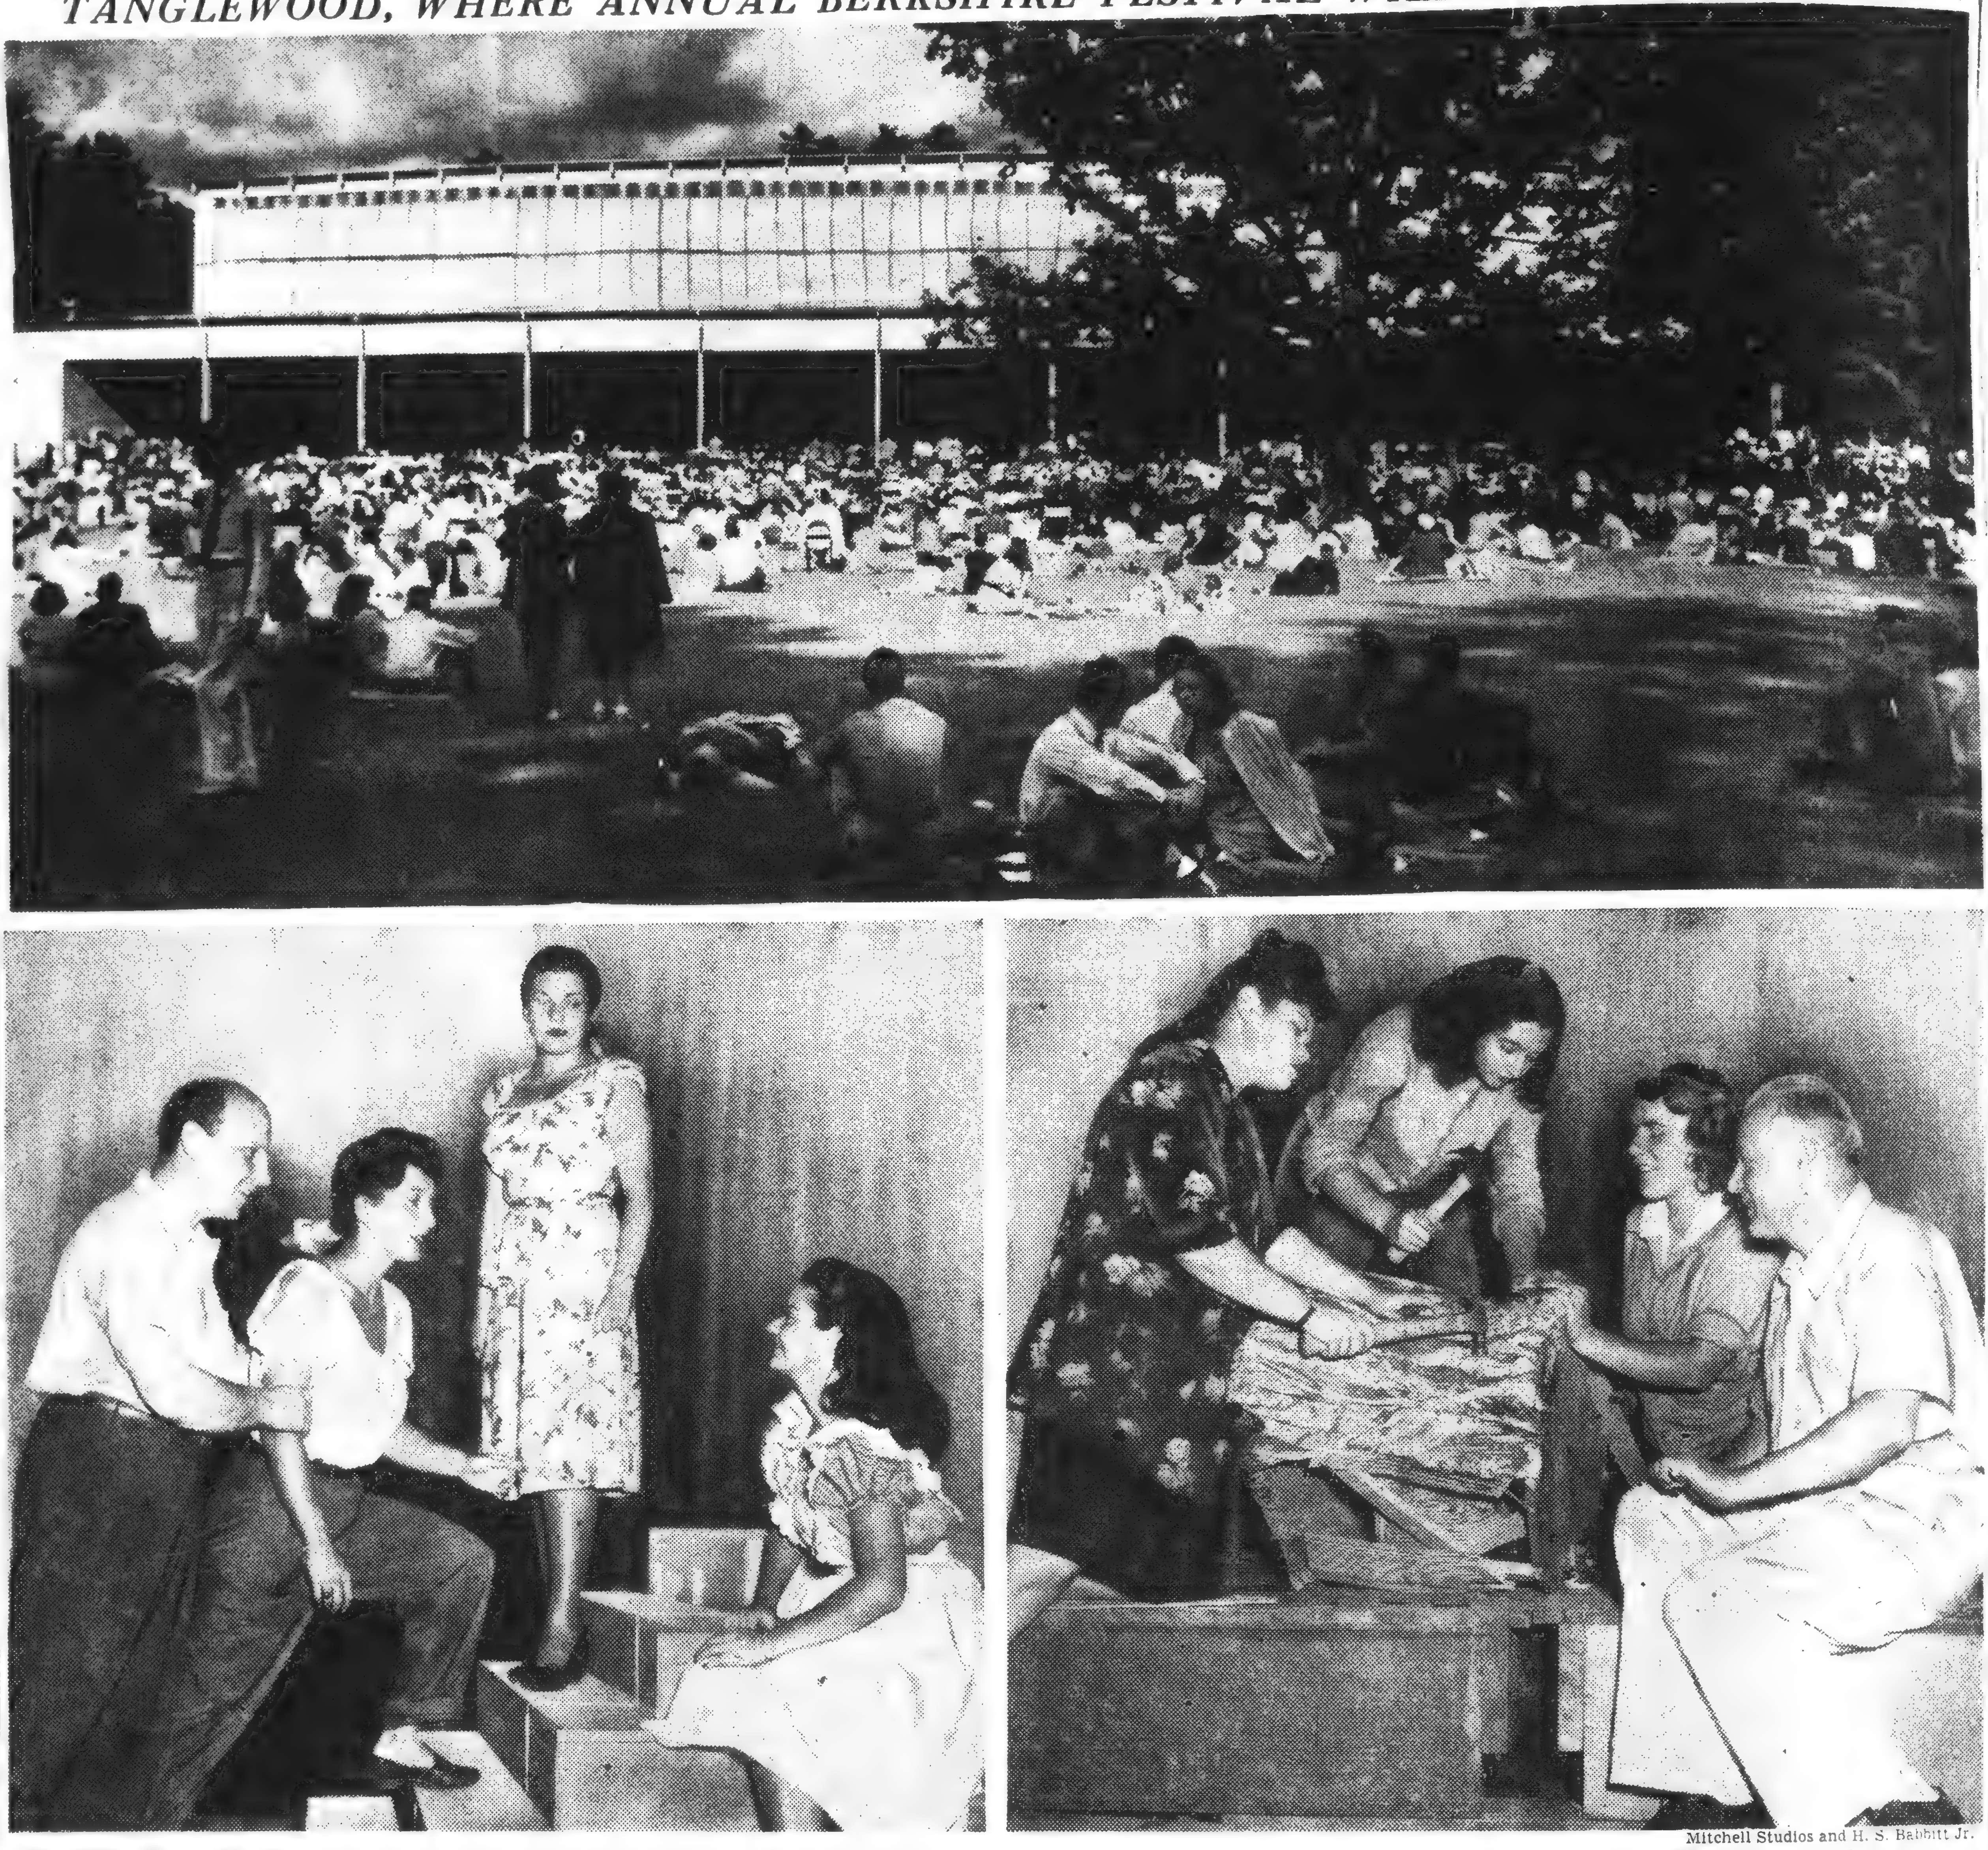
An extra event of exceptional interest will be the first American performance of Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," tomorrow night by the opera section of the Berkshire Music Center under Boris Goldovsky's direction. This will be repeated on Wednesday evening.

The remaining programs of the Festival which ends a week from today, are as follows:

TODAY at 3:30 P. M.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"	Beethoven
Piano Concerto in G major No. 4	Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 in A major	Beethoven
TUESDAY at 8:15 P. M.
Symphony No 8 in F major	Beethoven
Symphony No. 9 with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy"	Beethoven
THURSDAY at 8:15 P. M.
Symphony in B flat No. 102	Haydn
Violin Concerto	Hindemith
Symphony No. 2 in C major	Schumann
SATURDAY at 8:15 P. M.
Requiem Mass	Mozart
Symphony of Psalms	Stravinsky
Cantata No. 50 "Nun ist das Heil"	Bach
SUNDAY, Aug. 10, at 3:30 P. M.
Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with 2 pianos	Martinu
Pavane: Bolero	Ravel
Symphony No. 4 in F minor	Tchaikovsky

[68]

TANGLEWOOD, WHERE ANNUAL BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL END NEXT SUNDAY



Mitchell Studios and H. S. Babbitt Jr.

At top, the Music Shed where the symphonic concerts by the Boston Symphony, under Serge Koussevitzky, are held. Lower left, Boris Goldovsky directs a rehearsal of Mozart's "Idomeneo," which will be performed for the first time in this country tomorrow night. Lower right, students of stagecraft work on sets of "Idomeneo."

SOLOISTS IN NINTH SYMPHONY: Three of the four soloists who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Mozart's "Requiem" in the Music Shed tomorrow night, starting at 7.30, take time out from rehearsals to be snapped on the Tanglewood lawn. They are left to right, James Pease, Miss Eunice Alberta and David Lloyd. The fourth soloist will be Miss Frances Yeend, soprano.

MUSI

SUNDAY

... Studios and H. S. Babbitt Jr.
... time in this country
... sets of "Idomeneo."

Aug 4

FROM THE HEART

Music With Something to Say Can Take Or Leave Fashions of Day

By OLIN DOWNES

THE a[illegible] of Schumann is well [illegible] that you can con[illegible] within the four [illegible] symphony. [illegible] the wiser [illegible] when they tho[illegible] Honegger's Sym- A[illegible] solo trum- for [illegible] last week. This Ta[illegible] by Ho- ny [illegible] in [illegible] 1941, during [illegible] The G[illegible] Honegger should conduct in [illegible] that he should be [illegible] as an art- [illegible] not racially, Ge[illegible]. He declined [illegible] during the [illegible] of occupation this sym-ph[illegible]

[illegible] that if Hitler's [illegible] had had the perception [illegible] the significance of this "m[illegible]," they certainly would have [illegible] suppressed its appearance. Fo[illegible] score impresses us as music [illegible] only of tragedy but re[illegible] vo[illegible] ever worse from the vi[illegible] of the aggressor—of fai[illegible] deliverance.

[illegible] could be contended Mr. Ho[illegible] might himself contend—tha[illegible] was no such notion as thi[illegible] mind when he composed the [illegible] symphony. Indeed it is not customary today for composers to proclai[illegible] their states of mind as they use[illegible] to in the vociferous nineteenth century. They now think it mor[illegible] desirable to describe their scor[illegible] a salesman would the mac[illegible] of an automobile. For this [illegible] shows that they are writing not [illegible] programmatic or romantic, or mer[illegible] emotional" but "pure" music.

Communication

B[illegible] the final test of the pudding is it[illegible] eating. The final test of music [illegible] what it communicates to liste[illegible]. For the present writer this [illegible] of Honegger communicates [illegible] intense feeling that comes from [illegible] deep within and not merely char[illegible]teristics of style or form. In-deed, it presumes a certain profound revolution in the artist himself which is not the one that Schumann referred to in his famous aphorism [illegible] an inner revolution, through which Arthur Honegger becomes not as in the past an exterior but an interior composer.

We mean [illegible] new orientation on his part which we had not previously [illegible] or realized, in his [illegible]. It may be that conversion [illegible] has previously characteristic [illegible] and what we can call [illegible] stage-craft is discernible [illegible] of his that we do not [illegible] The "innerness" that we find [illegible] recent work of his also [illegible] present in his dramatic sc[illegible] d'Arc au Bucher," wh[illegible] be heard in New York [illegible] season and of which Mr. H[illegible] is scheduled to direct a st[illegible] performance later this year at [illegible] Arts. In the past Honegg[illegible] has appeared almost invariably as a musical realist and dramat[illegible] and not at all as a mystic or [illegible] listening to voices [illegible] himself, rather than to the phenomena of the outer world.

The capital joke and jeux d'esprit, "Pacific 231," the locomotive piece, by the musician who gaily observed that he loved locomotives as other men loved women and horses! That best seller of a dramatic cantata, with voices, orchestra, and speaker, "Roi David"—these were scores which made one believe that in essence Mr. Honegger was a musician for the theatre or screen, and a composer without mezzotints or heed for the inner recesses of the spirit. His laughter in such pieces as the "Pacific" was contagious, Chabriesque. His sense of theatre was evident on every page of "Roi David" and related scores. His workmanship, from the beginning—as for example in the early score of "Horace victorieux"—was brilliant and sure. He had a rich musical vein, and inexhaustible vitality.

But see what has happened in the pages of this symphony.

Interior Music

It is in the first place music without exterior connection. It bears no title, other than the generic and appropriate one of "Symphony for Strings." The addition of the solo trumpet at the last may or may not have been an afterthought. The craftsmanship is the essence of concentrated thought, consequent upon the inner dynamism of the musical ideas themselves. A main theme, immediately announced, is central to the structure and to the spiritual action of the entire three-movement work. In the finale the apparition of the trumpet is no mere gesture; its chorale-theme has already germinated in previous pages.

The devices used in the music as such, can be found in a hundred contemporaneous scores. Thus they appear oftenest as instrumental gadgets and tricks of the trade, just as plausible in the musical literature of today as the bumbling counterpoint of contemporaries of J. S. Bach was in the early eighteenth century, and no more important to posterity. What matters in this new symphony, yet to be heard in New York, is the composer's emotion which has wrung from him richly expressive music. For Mr. Honegger, in these pages, is speaking, willy-nilly, from the depths of his heart. One would say that what he is saying has gripped him hard, and was not to be evaded by him, or referred to in terms of artistic casuistry.

Result of Experience

We doubt if this would have come to him—this inescapable conviction, this power of expression—without the fertilization that searing experience brings to a genuine artist and an honest and thoughtful man. This precious essence is what has been so sadly lacking in the arid stretches of the contemporaneous musical landscape, where so much glitters which is a mirage of superficialities and tricks of style. It is unspeakably welcome.

Finally, it is a pleasure to observe the way in which Mr. Honegger had fought free of shibboleths and musical fashions of the moment and used not one but all the methods of musical expressions which seemed germane to his idea. He uses the strings as the most sensitive and expressive instruments of the orchestra, the ones nearest the human voice.

No one knows how important this work will appear fifty or a hundred years hence. We doubt if Mr. Honegger cares. For he did not write this symphony with one anxious eye on the future and the other one on preferences of the hour. He had not in mind, penning this score, rivals, friends, cliques or critics. He had a better prospect before him. He just followed the splendid advice of Giuseppe Verdi to a younger colleague. He just sat down, deeply moved, and wrote, in masterly fashion, "a little music."

[illegible] THE STADIUM

J. Abresch

Euge[illegible] Istomin, piano soloist, [illegible] at season's finale.

Beethoven's Symphonies At Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Koussevitzky's Beethoven cycle was continued in the Saturday and Sunday concerts at Tanglewood. He saw us through the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh symphonies and the piano concertos in E flat (the "Emperor") and the G. major.

The leader of the Boston orchestra has never set himself up as a Beethovenist particularly. He has favored the Eroica, of which we heard such a model performance on Thusday and he has found the Fifth a very useful program item.

It has been his splendid objectivity, his definitive recreation of these classic scores that has made the Beethoven cycle the feature of the 1947 Berkshire Festival. His familiar dealing with the Fifth has always been the antithesis of what this reviewer praised him for on Thursday — objectivity and avoidance of the personal interpretation. Koussevitzky's Fifth is a very individual reading. It is volcanic and quite fierce. It usually brings down the house and it was used on Saturday night to cap the climax of what turned out to be the biggest audience so far to gather on the Tanglewood grounds—something over 14,000 souls.

This reviewer prefers to dilate upon the Fourth symphony which opened the Saturday concert, and the felicitous "Pastoral" and Seventh which brightened the Sunday proceedings.

* * *

BUT FIRST the concertos. Jacob Lateiner gave a suave account of the E flat. His pianism was virile and well-proportioned but the outstanding characteristic was technical polish. Scales and passage work were executed with a purling quality that grew as much as out of tonal warmth as from mere precision.

His performance was a calculated one but it had artistic distinction too and he made a very fine impression upon the audience.

Joseph Battista made himself a part of the orchestra rather than standing upon soloist's prerogatives in presenting the G major concerto. He sedulously watched Koussevitzky's beat, allowing the conductor to set tempos as well as mood and manner. Only in the concluding rondo did his youthful enthusiasm make him something of a pacer-setter. Over all, his performance was hardly scaled for outdoor performance and it was doubtful if the listeners on the lawns outside the pavilion got full benefit of the nicer details of both tone and phrasing.

Koussevitzky's concerto accompaniments leave something to be desired. So strong an individualist as he is does not find it easy to subordinate himself to a soloist's vagaries, even when they are justified. All his cues to the orchestra are concerned with How and not When. Consequently a collaboration such as this, especially with two such young soloists, revealed a need for better team work.

* * *

FOR SHEER magnificence the Seventh topped all else. The piled up sonorities of the opening pages, the scintillant scherzo and the flooding turbulence of the last movement were memorable in a cycle of memories.

The Pastoral Symphony has been heard often at Tanglewood. It avowed tone painting suits the scene to perfection. Its miniature storm was as near as the Festival has come to bad weather this season.

The Fourth symphony on Saturday night was something for the connoisseur. No effects here for their own sake; simply a continent shaping of phrase and harmony toward expressive ends. The design and idiom of Beethoven were implicit under the ministrations of master musicians, expertly directed.

The Beethoven cycle will finish n Tuesday night with the Eighth nd Ninth symphonies.

Frances Yeend Sings This Week At Tanglewood

Frances Yeend, young Ameri can soprano, will be guest artist at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Tuesday, when she will sing Mozart's Requiem, conducted by Robert Shaw.

Miss Yeend appeared at Tanglewood last year in the final concert of the festival when she created the leading soprano role in the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes."

Tanglewood

Tonight

Closing concert of Beethoven cycle at 7.30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the eighth and ninth symphonies, with Schiller's Ode to Joy by the Festical chorus.

Tomorrow

Second performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo" at 8.15 by opera students of Berkshire Music Center.

Concert Canceled

The chamber music concert listed for tomorrow afternoon will be omitted. Eleazer deCarvalho, who was scheduled to conduct, will direct the closing chamber program Sunday morning at 10.30.

Party Planned

Students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, members of the Boston Symphony and the national committee of the Society of Friends of the school will hold a party Friday afternoon at 4 in the garden in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

Notables at Festival

Among the week-end visitors to the Berkshire Festival were former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy of Boston; U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter; Jennie Tirrell, opera star; Gene Tunney, former world heavyweight boxing champion, and Mrs. Tunney; Lowell Thomas, news commentator, and Mrs. Thomas.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUN 27 1948

MUSIC

Berkshire Chamber Music Programs Devoted to Schubert, Bela Bartok

By E. V. W.

June birth month of: Robert Schumann, Edvard Grieg, Joseph Joachim, Leopold Auer, Edward Elgar, Tito Ruffo, Roland Hayes, Erno Rapee, John Finley Williamson, John McCormack, Richard Strauss, Richard Crooks, Nelson Eddy, Oley Speaks.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday nights of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday nights, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts. The Schubert series will include July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreiss" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D Minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C Minor, and the String Quintet in C Major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A Minor, the Quintet in A Major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F Major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists. The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

Every good poem embodies a musical germ, a secret melody. To discover this, to hit on the key for it, and to give it an artistic form, is no common gift—it must be inborn, for it cannot be acquired.—Robert Franz.

...dins and H. B. Babbitt Jr. ... time in this country ...ets of "Idomeneo."

MUSIC

FROM THE HEART

[illegible]usic With Something to Say Can Take Or Leave Fashions of Day

By OLIN DOWNES

THE aphorism of Schumann is well known that you can conceal revolution within the four walls of a symphony, [illegible]e police be none the wiser. [illegible] thought of this when they [illegible] Arthur Honegger's Symphony for strings with solo trumpet [illegible] Tanglewood last week. This [illegible]ny was composed by Honegger in Paris in 1941, during the German occupation. The Germans had made overtures to Honegger [illegible] that he should conduct in [illegible]y; later, that he should be [illegible]d to the public as an artist [illegible]logically, if not racially, [illegible] German side. He declined [illegible]rs, and penned, during the [illegible] of occupation, this symphony.

[illegible] believe that if Hitler's [illegible] had had the perception [illegible] the significance of this [illegible]," they certainly would [illegible] suppressed its appearance. [illegible] score impresses us as music [illegible] only of tragedy but re[illegible] even worse from the [illegible] of the aggressor—of deliverance.

[illegible] could be contended—Mr. [illegible] might himself contend—[illegible]e was no such notion as [illegible] mind when he composed [illegible]phony. Indeed it is not customary [illegible] day for composers to pro[illegible]ir states of mind as they [illegible] do in the vociferous nineteenth century. They now think it [illegible]sirable to describe their [illegible] a salesman would the [illegible]y of an automobile. For [illegible] that they are writing [illegible] programmatic, or romantic, or [illegible] emotional but "pure" music.

Com[illegible]ication

B[illegible] final test of the pudding is i[illegible]ing. The final test of music [illegible] what it communicates to listen[illegible]. For the present writer this [illegible] of Honegger communicates [illegible] intense feeling that comes from [illegible]p within, and not merely cha[illegible]ristics of style or form. Indeed, it presumes a certain profound revolution in the artist himself which is not the one that Schumann referred to in his famous aphorism—an inner revolution, through which Arthur Honegger becomes not as in the past an exterior but an interior composer.

We mean by this a new orientation on his part which we had not previously encountered, or realized, in his music. It may be that conversion from his previously characteristic realism and what we can call tonal stage-craft is discernible in scores of his that we do not know. The "innerness" that we find [illegible] recent work of his also [illegible] present in his dramatic score [illegible] d'Arc au Bucher," which will be heard in New York next season, and of which Mr. Honegger is scheduled to direct a stage performance later this year at Buenos Aires. In the past Honegger has appeared almost invariably as a musical realist and dramatist and not at all as a mystic or introspective, listening to voices inside himself, rather than to the phenomena of the outer world.

The capital joke and jeux d'esprit, "Pacific 231," the locomotive piece, by the musician who gaily observed that he loved locomotives as other men loved women and horses! That best seller of a dramatic cantata, with voices, orchestra, and speaker, "Roi David"—these were scores which made one believe that in essence Mr. Honegger was a musician for the theatre or screen, and a composer without mezzotints or heed for the inner recesses of the spirit. His laughter in such pieces as the "Pacific" was contagious, Chabriesque. His sense of theatre was evident on every page of "Roi David" and related scores. His workmanship, from the beginning—as for example in the early score of "Horace victorieux"—was brilliant and sure. He had a rich musical vein, and inexhaustible vitality.

But see what has happened in the pages of this symphony.

Interior Music

It is in the first place music without exterior connection. It bears no title, other than the generic and appropriate one of "Symphony for Strings." The addition of the solo trumpet at the last may or may not have been an afterthought. The craftsmanship is the essence of concentrated thought, consequent upon the inner dynamism of the musical ideas themselves. A main theme, immediately announced, is central to the structure and to the spiritual action of the entire three-movement work. In the finale the apparition of the trumpet is no mere gesture; its chorale-theme has already germinated in previous pages.

The devices used in the music as such, can be found in a hundred contemporaneous scores. Thus they appear oftenest as instrumental gadgets and tricks of the trade, just as plausible in the musical literature of today as the bumbling counterpoint of contemporaries of J. S. Bach was in the early eighteenth century, and no more important to posterity. What matters in this new symphony, yet to be heard in New York, is the composer's emotion which has wrung from him richly expressive music. For Mr. Honegger, in these pages, is speaking, willy-nilly, from the depths of his heart. One would say that what he is saying has gripped him hard, and was not to be evaded by him, or referred to in terms of artistic casuistry.

Result of Experience

We doubt if this would have come to him—this inescapable conviction, this power of expression—without the fertilization that searing experience brings to a genuine artist and an honest and thoughtful man. This precious essence is what has been so sadly lacking in the arid stretches of the contemporaneous musical landscape, where so much glitters which is a mirage of superficialities and tricks of style. It is unspeakably welcome.

Finally, it is a pleasure to observe the way in which Mr. Honegger had fought free of shibboleths and musical fashions of the moment and used not one but all the methods of musical expressions which seemed germane to his idea. He uses the strings as the most sensitive and expressive instruments of the orchestra, the ones nearest the human voice.

No one knows how important this work will appear fifty or a hundred years hence. We doubt if Mr. Honegger cares. For he did not write this symphony with one anxious eye on the future and the other one on preferences of the hour. He had not in mind, penning this score, rivals, friends, cliques or critics. He had a better prospect before him. He just followed the splendid advice of Giuseppe Verdi to a younger colleague. He just sat down, deeply moved, and wrote, in masterly fashion, "a little music."

[illegible] THE STADIUM

J. Abresch

Eug[illegible] Istomin, piano soloist, [illegible]at season's finale.

Aug 4

THE HARTFORD T[illegible]

Beethoven's Symphonies At Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Koussevitzky's Beethoven cycle was continued in the Saturday and Sunday concerts at Tanglewood. He saw us through the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh symphonies and the piano concertos in E flat (the "Emperor") and the G. major.

The leader of the Boston orchestra has never set himself up as a Beethovenist particularly. He has favored the Eroica, of which we heard such a model performance on Thusday and he has found the Fifth a very useful program item.

It has been his splendid objectivity, his definitive recreation of these classic scores that has made the Beethoven cycle the feature of the 1947 Berkshire Festival. His familiar dealing with the Fifth has always been the antithesis of what this reviewer praised him for on Thursday — objectivity and avoidance of the personal interpretation. Koussevitsky's Fifth is a very individual reading. It is volcanic and quite fierce. It usually brings down the house and it was used on Saturday night to cap the climax of what turned out to be the biggest audience so far to gather on the Tanglewood grounds—something over 14,000 souls.

This reviewer prefers to dilate upon the Fourth symphony which opened the Saturday concert, and the felicitous "Pastoral" and Seventh which brightened the Sunday proceedings.

* * *

BUT FIRST the concertos. Jacob Lateiner gave a suave account of the E flat. His pianism was virile and well-proportioned but the outstanding characteristic was technical polish. Scales and passage work were executed with a purling quality that grew as much as out of tonal warmth as from mere precision.

His performance was a calculated one but it had artistic distinction too and he made a very fine impression upon the audience.

Joseph Battista made himself a part of the orchestra rather than standing upon soloist's prerogatives in presenting the G major concerto. He sedulously watched Koussevitzky's beat, allowing the conductor to set tempos as well as mood and manner. Only in the concluding rondo did his youthful enthusiasm make him something of a pacer-setter. Over all, his performance was hardly scaled for outdoor performance and it was doubtful if the listeners on the lawns outside the pavilion got full benefit of the nicer details of both tone and phrasing.

Koussevitzky's concerto accompaniments leave something to be desired. So strong an individualist as he is does not find it easy to subordinate himself to a soloist's vagaries, even when they are justified. All his cues to the orchestra are concerned with How and not When. Consequently a collaboration such as this, especially with two such young soloists, revealed a need for better team work.

* * *

FOR SHEER magnificence the Seventh topped all else. The piled up sonorities of the opening pages, the scintillant scherzo and the flooding turbulence of the last movement were memorable in a cycle of memories.

The Pastoral Symphony has been heard often at Tanglewood. It avowed tone painting suits the scene to perfection. Its miniature storm was as near as the Festival has come to bad weather this season.

The Fourth symphony on Saturday night was something for the connoisseur. No effects here for their own sake; simply a continent shaping of phrase and harmony toward expressive ends. The design and idiom of Beethoven were implicit under the ministrations of master musicians, expertly directed.

The Beethoven cycle will finish n Tuesday night with the Eighth nd Ninth symphonies.

Frances Yeend Sings This Week At Tanglewood

Frances Yeend, young Ameri can soprano, will be guest artist at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Tuesday, when she will sing Mozart's Requiem, conducted by Robert Shaw.

Miss Yeend appeared at Tanglewood last year in the final concert of the festival when she created the leading soprano role in the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes."

Tanglewood

Eagle Aug 5

Tonight

Closing concert of Beethoven cycle at 7.30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the eighth and ninth symphonies, with Schiller's Ode to Joy by the Festical chorus.

Tomorrow

Second performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo" at 8.15 by opera students of Berkshire Music Center.

Concert Canceled

The chamber music concert listed for tomorrow afternoon will be omitted. Eleazer deCarvalho, who was scheduled to conduct, will direct the closing chamber program Sunday morning at 10.30.

Party Planned

Students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, members of the Boston Symphony and the national committee of the Society of Friends of the school will hold a party Friday afternoon at 4 in the garden in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

Notables at Festival

Among the week-end visitors to the Berkshire Festival were former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy of Boston; U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter; Jennie Tirrell, opera star; Gene Tunney, former world heavyweight boxing champion, and Mrs. Tunney; Lowell Thomas, news commentator, and Mrs. Thomas.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUN 27 1948

MUSIC

Berkshire Chamber Music Programs Devoted to Schubert, Bela Bartok

By E. V. W.

June birth month of: Robert Schumann, Edvard Grieg, Joseph Joachim, Leopold Auer, Edward Elgar, Tito Ruffo, Roland Hayes, Erno Rapee, John Finley Williamson, John McCormack, Richard Strauss, Richard Crooks, Nelson Eddy, Oley Speaks.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday nights of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday nights, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts. The Schubert series will include July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreiss" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D Minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C Minor, and the String Quintet in C Major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A Minor, the Quintet in A Major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F Major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists. The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

Every good poem embodies a musical germ, a secret melody. To discover this, to hit on the key for it, and to give it an artistic form, is no common gift—it must be inborn, for it cannot be acquired.—Robert Franz.

Aug 3

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mozart 'I Domeneo'

Opera Heard First Time in U. S. at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Mozart's three-act opera "Idomeneo," first head in Munich in 1781, was produced for the first time in America tonight by the Berkshire Music Center's opera department in the opera hall at Tanglewood for an invited audience.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, doubled as conductor and stage director. Joseph Lauderoute sang the title role of the Cretan king who is faced with the prospect of sacrificing his son, Idamante, to the god Neptune. Ann Bollinger, a young soprano from New York, sang Idamante. Ilia, a Trojan princess, was sung by Nancy Trickey, with Paula Lenchner as her unsuccessful rival, Elettra. Frank Guarrera, as the high priest Arbace, and Adele Addison, Mildred Mueller, Robert Holland and Edward Ansara completed the cast.

The soloists, choristers and members of theorchestras are students at the center. In last night's dress rehearsal the cast was the same except that Miss Bollinger and Dorothy Dowson, who will sing the role in the repeat performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday night, alternated as Idamante.

Mr. Goldovsky has pointed out that the principal difficulties in staging "Idomeneo" are caused both by its length and its dramatic structure. Mozart's librettist, the Abbe G. B. Varesco, of Salzburg, had to provide a sufficient quota of arias for each principal, and this militated against dramatic clarity and continuity. Besides condensing the score to a practicable length of two hours and a half, he has made certain transpositions of scenes in the second and third acts to clarify the development of the story.

This he thinks is particularly modern, since it presents problems which face us now such as men's struggle with vast natural forces and the necessity of carry out one's obligation. Apart from cuts, he has not changed the music itself. Idamante's music, originally assigned to a contralto, is sungi in its original range by a soprano in this production.

Mr. Goldovsky has succeeded in giving a sense of dramativ coherence and continuity, and the musical sequence in yesterday's dress rehearsal seemed logical and coherent, except for one over-apparent seam in the last act. One can be very grateful to him and to the Berkshire Music Center for bringing to light this remarkable example of late eighteenth century opera.

The music throughout is unmistakable and characteristic Mozart, and of a mature Mozart; the score is often prophetic of the better known operas written bet- and eleven years later. This sometimes makes it difficult, at a first hearing, to get a clear idea of the individuality of "Idomeneo" as distinguished from the later operas. There were remarkable anticipations of "Don Giovanni" or "The Marriage of Figaro." Elettra's last aria before her suicide has a pungence and fury which reappears in the queens second aria in "The Magic Fluet." There is music, particularly when tragedy is imminent of vivid emotional persuasiveness, music of a characteristically Mozartian lyric appeal.

Impressions gathered at a dress rehearsal are naturally subject to amendment, but this left the reviewer wondering how much an occasional impression of unevenness of inspiration in the score was due to the music itself and how much to a production which, while devoted and consicentious, seemed more routine than imaginative.

The music was presented in a straightforward manner, but with inflexibility of tempo and insufficient revellation of mood, atmosphere and emotion. Dramatically, also, the performance gave a sense of conscientiousness rather than of conviction, leaving it to a further hearing to reveal how much dramatic persuasiveness exists in the roles themselves.

Richard Rychtarik's settings seemed too ambitious for the theater's relatively small stage, giving a sense of too much detail and missing atmospheric fidelity. Nor did the costumes designed by Leo Van Witeen engage the imagination. From a student production of such an exacting work too much should not be expected, but last summer's Tanglewood production of "Peter Grimes" showed what could be successfully accomplished on this stage.

Nevertheless, this production is an important event in American operatic history, and it will be interesting to see whether "Indomeno" will be added to the Mozart repertoire of our professional opera companies during the next few years.

Tanglewood Opera Unit Scores Another Triumph

American Premiere of Mozart Opera, 'Idomeneo, King of Crete' Reflects Great Credit on Goldovsky and Entire Cast

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A Mozart opera received its American premiere last night at Tanglewood. "Idomeneo, King of Crete" or "Ilia and Adamante," written by Mozart in 1780 and produced in Munich the following year, has lain practically neglected, except for a very rare dusting off on the occasion of an anniversary, until last night when it was resurrected by Boris Goldovsky, chief of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. This school, established by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as an adjunct to the summer festivals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, won international recognition last year for its American premiere of Benjamin Britten's new opera, "Peter Grimes." Now they have scored another major triumph with this revival.

Major Credit Goldovsky's

The major credit for the enterprise is due Mr. Goldovsky, for it was he who trimmed, cut, revised and transplanted the material of the three-act opera which, unabridged, would consume four full hours. Last night, with remarkable despatch and absence of any manner of hitch, the final curtain was lowered at quarter to 11 before an excited and acclaiming audience containing a good representation of the nation's press. With his colleagues of the school faculty, Goldovsky trained the singers, designed and constructed the sets, rehearsed the orchestra, working without benefit of tradition or precedent on this particular opus. The integration was a matter of marvel when all the factors were considered. The disposition of the choruses and the management of the scenes requiring the whole company were notably well prepared, with a minimum of maladroit incidents which are inevitable in first performances.

The plot is a variation of the episode in Homer's "Odyssey" in which Idomeneo, returning home from his distinguished part in the Trojan war, is overtaken by a vow to sacrifice to Poseidon, the god of the sea, the first living thing that meets him when he reaches home. This proved to be his son, whom he slew in accordance with his vow. In the adaptation by the Abbe Varesco from a previous French work, Poseidon is moved to mercy and Idomeneo renounces the throne in favor of his son Adamante.

Goldovsky, himself, found it necessary to renounce a personal vow he once made to never produce an opera in America in anything but English. When he decided, last February, to produce Idomeneo this summer, he set to work to make an English translation, but was soon informed that one existed, from the presentation in London in 1930 on the 150th anniversary of the opera. Efforts to secure the translation were delayed so that insufficient time remained finally to make a new one. Thus the opera was sung in its original Italian last night.

The original plot was very long and taxed one's credulity. Goldovsky's version has a reasonable and terse continuity. The material he has retained is all valuable and good Mozart.

Singers Extremely Able

The singers were extremely able. Joseph Laderoute, in the title role, exceeded the splendid impression he made last year, also in the title role of "Peter Grimes." Strangely again the turbulence of the sea was a major factor in last night's play and he was called upon to make many analagous steps in both operas. The first opens with Ilia, sung by Nancy Trickey, alone on a terrace before a temple, singing a long aria after which she withdraws in favor of Adamante, sung last night by Ann Bellinger. (Dorothy Dawson will take this role tomorrow night.) This grateful music was sung with telling beauty by both soloists, although the paucity of stage business up to this point was not sufficiently active to provoke complete interest. A general entrance by soldiers, maidens and captives now permits the colorful costumes and Mozart's chorus-writing to contribute to the dramatic effect which was brought into full play. Laderoute looked, as well as sang, majestically. His stature towered over the lesser aristocracy and the plebians. His costume and that of Adamante were particularly appropriate. The flowing robes of the feminine characters supplied bountiful background to the classic scenes.

Frank Guerrara as the high priest disclosed a voice of opulence and effective dignity. Adele Addison, as one of two Cretan maidens made the most of a small fragment, but Paula Lenchner, as Elletra, was a dramatically malevolent jilted lover and vocally was conspicuously graphic. Her deep rich contralto was used with excellent control and powerful resourcefulness.

The first act closed with one of the most striking tableaux of the opera. Here the stage direction was visibly masterly. The second and last acts open with an untenanted stage and a quiet pit. The second act starts with a narrative sung to piano accompaniment, supplied with great support by Mr. Goldovsky, who also leads the orchestra of 37 students from the Berkshire Music Center. There has been a spirited overture to the opera, but the orchestral inexperience of the students did not suffice to do it full justice. The second act also offers opportunities for the best concerted music. An outstanding duet between Ilia and Adamante, and later a quartet, in which they are joined by Idomeneo and Elletra, were magnificent as music and in their rendition, and the storm scene contained some of the finest orchestral material of the evening.

Third Act Most Exciting

The third act, however, is dramatically the most graphic and the most exciting of the entire work. A masterpiece of choral writing provides the occasion for the employment of the resources of the production and brings it to a climax. The heroic exploits lift the action to a point of high excitement, even though a trifle more thorough immersion in the realism of the scene might have carried it on further.

The audience was extravagant in its outbursts of applause at the conclusion and honors were shared by all, including the director and Richard Rychtarik, the scenic director and Feliz Wolfes, the assistant conductor.

Mr. Goldovsky, before the resumption of the second act, had come to the stage to make a few short remarks, a feature in which he is unique and quite unexcelled. He told of the problems of adapting the opera for modern production and compared the action of the plot to the international situation today. He chose to discern a prophetic touch in the work and drew an analogy between the struggle of the Cretans with the elements and the struggle of us moderns with the elements which our scientists have unleashed. His varied and many contributions to the production brought him tremendous acclaim.

News Republ. Aug 7

adio-Phonograph aced On Display

e Berkshire, new radio-tele-on-phonograph, which was ctacularly introduced as the ax for "Music for All" con- at Tanglewood, is now on lay for the first time. Demtrations of the new instrunt are being given by RCA tor at the Brotherhood Club, lker Street, Lenox.

As a result of the interest created by the television demonstration at Tanglewood, RCA Victor has also arranged to present television demonstrations for the public at the Brotherhood Club daily at 4:30. Students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in the programs and the public will be able to see themselves on television receivers.

The scholarship fund of the Center is expected to benefit substantially from the sales of the Berkshire instruments, according to arrangements made by RCA Victor and George E. Judd, business manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A limited quantity of the instruments will be available. A silver plaque bearing the purchaser's name as sponsor of a scholarship and signed by Serge Koussevitzky will be affixed to each.

In a demonstration of the instrument's high fidelity of music reproduction, the Berkshire was introduced at the finale of the "March of Musical Fidelity", when the Boston Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, stopped suddenly during its performance of the overture from "Egmont" and the audience heard the concluding portion from a record played on the Berkshire, prominently displayed an a platform above the heads of the orchestra members. It took the audience several seconds to realize that the overture was being played by the Berkshire, rather than the orchestra, and when the spotlight lighted the instrument it brought enthusiastic applause.

Season Closes At Tanglewood This Sunday

[illegible] Republican Aug 4

In the last week of the Tanglewood season that will close Aug. 10, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music Center will give seven performances.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem", with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms".

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Orchestra, with 2 Pianos; Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero", and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events for this coming week-end include a symphony concert Thursday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday evening; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2:30 and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

Rehearsals for Festival concerts will be open to the public each Saturday morning for the benefit of the pension fund.

Inquiries and requests for tickets should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood

Tonight

Closing concert of Beethoven cycle at 7.30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the eighth and ninth symphonies, with Schiller's Ode to Joy by the Festical chorus.

Tomorrow

Second performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo" at 8.15 by opera students of Berkshire Music Center

Concert Canceled

The chamber music concert listed for tomorrow afternoon will be omitted. Eleazer deCarvalho, who was scheduled to conduct, will direct the closing chamber program Sunday morning at 10.30.

Party Planned

Students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, members of the Boston Symphony and the national committee of the Society of Friends of the school will hold a party Friday afternoon at 4 in the garden in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

Notables at Festival

Among the week-end visitors to the Berkshire Festival were former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy of Boston; U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter; Jennie Tirrell, opera star; Gene Tunney, former world heavyweight boxing champion, and Mrs. Tunney; Lowell Thomas, news commentator, and Mrs. Thomas.

[71]

Aug 5

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mozart 'I Domeneo'

Opera Heard First Time in U. S. at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Mozart's three-act opera "Idomeneo," first head in Munich in 1781, was produced for the first time in America tonight by the Berkshire Music Center's opera department in the opera hall at Tanglewood for an invited audience.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, doubled as conductor and stage director. Joseph Lauderoute sang the title role of the Cretan king who is faced with the prospect of sacrificing his son, Idamante, to the god Neptune. Ann Bollinger, a young soprano from New York, sang Idamante. Ilia, a Trojan princess, was sung by Nancy Trickey, with Paula Lenchner as her unsuccessful rival, Elettra. Frank Guarrera, as the high priest Arbace, and Adele Addison, Mildred Mueller, Robert Holland and Edward Ansara completed the cast.

The soloists, choristers and members of theorchestras are students at the center. In last night's dress rehearsal the cast was the same except that Miss Bollinger and Dorothy Dowson, who will sing the role in the repeat performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday night, alternated as Idamante.

Mr. Goldovsky has pointed out that the principal difficulties in staging "Idomeneo" are caused both by its length and its dramatic structure. Mozart's librettist, the Abbe G. B. Varesco, of Salzburg, had to provide a sufficient quota of arias for each principal, and this militated against dramatic clarity and continuity. Besides condensing the score to a practicable length of two hours and a half, he has made certain transpositions of scenes in the second and third acts to clarify the development of the story.

This he thinks is particularly modern, since it presents problem which face us now such as me struggle with vast natural f and the necessity of carry o obligation. Apart from cu not changed the music mante's music, origi to a contralto, is s inal range by production.

Mr. Goldov giving a se ence and cal seq rehea here en am oper

The takable and of a is often known ope and eleven years later. This sometimes makes it difficult, at a first hearing, to get a clear idea of the individuality of "Idomeneo" as distinguished from the later operas. There were remarkable anticipations of "Don Giovanni" or "The Marriage of Figaro." Elettra's last aria before her suicide has a pungence and fury which reappears in the queens second aria in "The Magic Fluet." There is music, particularly when tragedy is imminent of vivid emotional persuasiveness, music of a characteristically Mozartian lyric appeal.

Impressions gathered at a dress rehearsal are naturally subject to amendment, but this left the reviewer wondering how much an occasional impression of unevenness of inspiration in the score was due to the music itself and how much to a production which, while devoted and consicentious, seemed more routine than imaginative.

The music was presented in a straightforward manner, but with inflexibility of tempo and insufficient revellation of mood, atmosphere and emotion. Dramatically, also, the performance gave a sense of conscientiousness rather than of conviction, leaving it to a further hearing to reveal how much dramatic persuasiveness exists in the roles themselves.

Richard Rychtarik's settings seemed too ambitious for the theater's relatively small stage, giving a sense of too much detail and missing atmospheric fidelity. Nor did the costumes designed by Leo Van Witeen engage the imagination. From a student production of such an exacting work too much should not be expected, but last summer's Tanglewood production of "Peter Grimes" showed what could be successfully accomplished on this stage.

Nevertheless, this production is an important event in American operatic history, and it will be interesting to see whether "Indomeneo" will be added to the Mozart repertoire of our professional opera companies during the next few years.

Tanglewood Opera Unit Scores Another Triumph

American Premiere of Mozart Opera, 'Idomeneo, King of Crete' Reflects Great Credit on Goldovsky and Entire Cast

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A Mozart opera received its American premiere last night at Tanglewood. "Idomeneo, King of Crete" or "Ilia and Adamante," written by Mozart in 1780 and produced in Munich the following year, has lain practically neglected, except for a very rare dusting off on the occasion of an anniversary, until last night when it was resurrected by Boris Goldovsky, chief of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. This school, established by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as an adjunct to the summer festivals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, won international recognition last year for its American premiere of Benjamin Britten's new opera, "Peter Grimes." Now they have scored another major triumph with this revival.

Major Credit Goldovsky's

The major credit for the enterprise is due Mr. Goldovsky, for it was he who trimmed, cut, revised and transplanted the material of the three-act opera which, unabridged, would consume four full hours. Last night, with remarkable despatch and absence of any manner of hitch, the final curtain was lowered at quarter to 11 before an excited and acclaiming audience containing a good representation of the nation's press. With his colleagues of the school faculty, Goldovsky trained the singers, designed and constructed the sets, rehearsed the orchestra, working without benefit of tradition or precedent on this particular opus. The integration was a matter of marvel when all the factors were considered. The disposition of the choruses and the management of the scenes requiring the whole company were notably well prepared, with a minimum of maladroit incidents which are inevitable in first performances.

The plot is a variation of the episode in Homer's "Odyssey" in which Idomeneo, returning home from his distinguished part in the Trojan war, is overtaken by a vow to sacrifice to Poseidon, the god of the sea, the first living thing that meets him when he reaches home. This proved to be his son, whom he slew in accordance with his vow. In the adaptation by the Abbe Varesco from a previous French work, Poseidon is moved to mercy and Idomeneo renounces the throne in favor of his son Adamante.

Goldovsky, himself, found it necessary to renounce a personal vow he once made to never produce an opera in America in anything but English. When he decided, last February, to produce Idomeneo this summer, he set to work to make an English translation, but was soon informed that one existed, from the presentation in London in 1930 on the 150th anniversary of the opera. Efforts to secure the translation were delayed so that insufficient time remained finally to make a new one. Thus the opera was sung in its original Italian last night.

The original plot was very long and taxed one's credulity. Goldovsky's version has a reasonable and terse continuity. The material he has retained is all valuable and good Mozart.

Singers Extremely Able

The singers were extremely able. Joseph Laderoute, in the title role, exceeded the splendid impression he made last year, also in the title role of "Peter Grimes." Strangely again the turbulence of the sea was a major factor in last night's play and he was called upon to make many analagous steps in both operas. The first opens with Ilia, sung by Nancy Trickey, alone on a terrace before a temple, singing a long aria after which she withdraws in favor of Adamante, sung last night by Ann Bellinger. (Dorothy Dawson will take this role tomorrow night.) This grateful music was sung with telling beauty by both soloists, although the paucity of stage business up to this point was not sufficiently active to provoke complete interest. A general entrance by soldiers, maidens and captives now permits the colorful costumes and Mozart's chorus-writing to contribute to the dramatic effect which was brought into full play. Laderoute looked, as well as sang, majestically. His stature towered over the lesser ...tocracy and the plebians. His ...e and that of Adamante ...ticularly appropriate. The ...es of the feminine char... ...ied bountiful back... ...lassic scenes. ... as the high ...e of opulence ... Adele Addi... Cretan maidens, ... of a small fragment, but Paula Lenchner, as Elletra, was a dramatically malevolent jilted lover and vocally was conspicuously graphic. Her deep rich contralto was used with excellent control and powerful resourcefulness.

The first act closed with one of the most striking tableaux of the opera. Here the stage direction was visibly masterly. The second and last acts open with an untenanted stage and a quiet pit. The second act starts with a narrative sung to piano accompaniment, supplied with great support by Mr. Goldovsky, who also leads the orchestra of 37 students from the Berkshire Music Center. There has been a spirited overture to the opera, but the orchestral inexperience of the students did not suffice to do it full justice. The second act also offers opportunities for the best concerted music. An outstanding duet between Ilia and Adamante, and later a quartet, in which they are joined by Idomeneo and Elletra, were magnificent as music and in their rendition, and the storm scene contained some of the finest orchestral material of the evening.

Third Act Most Exciting

The third act, however, is dramatically the most graphic and the most exciting of the entire work. A masterpiece of choral writing provides the occasion for the employment of the resources of the production and brings it to a climax. The heroic exploits lift the action to a point of high excitement, even though a trifle more thorough immersion in the realism of the scene might have carried it on further.

The audience was extravagant in its outbursts of applause at the conclusion and honors were shared by all, including the director and Richard Rychtarik, the scenic director and Feliz Wolfes, the assistant conductor.

Mr. Goldovsky, before the resumption of the second act, had come to the stage to make a few short remarks, a feature in which he is unique and quite unexcelled. He told of the problems of adapting the opera for modern production and compared the action of the plot to the international situation today. He chose to discern a prophetic touch in the work and drew an analogy between the struggle of the Cretans with the elements and the struggle of us moderns with the elements which our scientists have unleashed. His varied and many contributions to the production brought him tremendous acclaim.

Tanglewood

Tonight

Closing concert of Beethoven cycle at 7.30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play the eighth and ninth symphonies, with Schiller's Ode to Joy by the Festical chorus.

Tomorrow

Second performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo" at 8.15 by opera students of Berkshire Music Center.

Concert Canceled

The chamber music concert listed for tomorrow afternoon will be omitted. Eleazer deCarvalho, who was scheduled to conduct, will direct the closing chamber program Sunday morning at 10.30.

Party Planned

Students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, members of the Boston Symphony and the national committee of the Society of Friends of the school will hold a party Friday afternoon at 4 in the garden in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school

Notables at Festival

Among the week-end visitors to the Berkshire Festival were former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy of Boston; U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter; Jennie Tirrell, opera star; Gene Tunney, former world heavyweight boxing champion, and Mrs. Tunney; Lowell Thomas, news commentator, and Mrs. Thomas.

News R

Radio-Pho Placed O

The Berkshir vision-phonogra spectacularly i climax for "Mu cert at Tangle display for the onstrations of the new instrument are being given by RCA Victor at the Brotherhood Club, Walker Street, Lenox.

As a result of the interest created by the television demonstration at Tanglewood, RCA Victor has also arranged to present television demonstrations for the public at the Brotherhood Club daily at 4:30. Students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in the programs and the public will be able to see themselves on television receivers.

The scholarship fund of the Center is expected to benefit substantially from the sales of the Berkshire instruments, according to arrangements made by RCA Victor and George E. Judd, business manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A limited quantity of the instruments will be available. A silver plaque bearing the purchaser's name as sponsor of a scholarship and signed by Serge Koussevitzky will be affixed to each.

In a demonstration of the instrument's high fidelity of music reproduction, the Berkshire was introduced at the finale of the "March of Musical Fidelity", when the Boston Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, stopped suddenly during its performance of the overture from "Egmont" and the audience heard

---

E PINE PLAINS MI
Y LIME ROCK TACC

THE NEWS-REP

Season Closes At Tanglewood This Sunday

In the last week of the Tanglewood season that will close Aug. 10, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music Center will give seven performances.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem", with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms".

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Orchestra, with 2 Pianos; Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero", and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events for this coming week-end include a symphony concert Thursday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday evening; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2:30 and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

Rehearsals for Festival concerts will be open to the public each Saturday morning for the benefit of the pension fund.

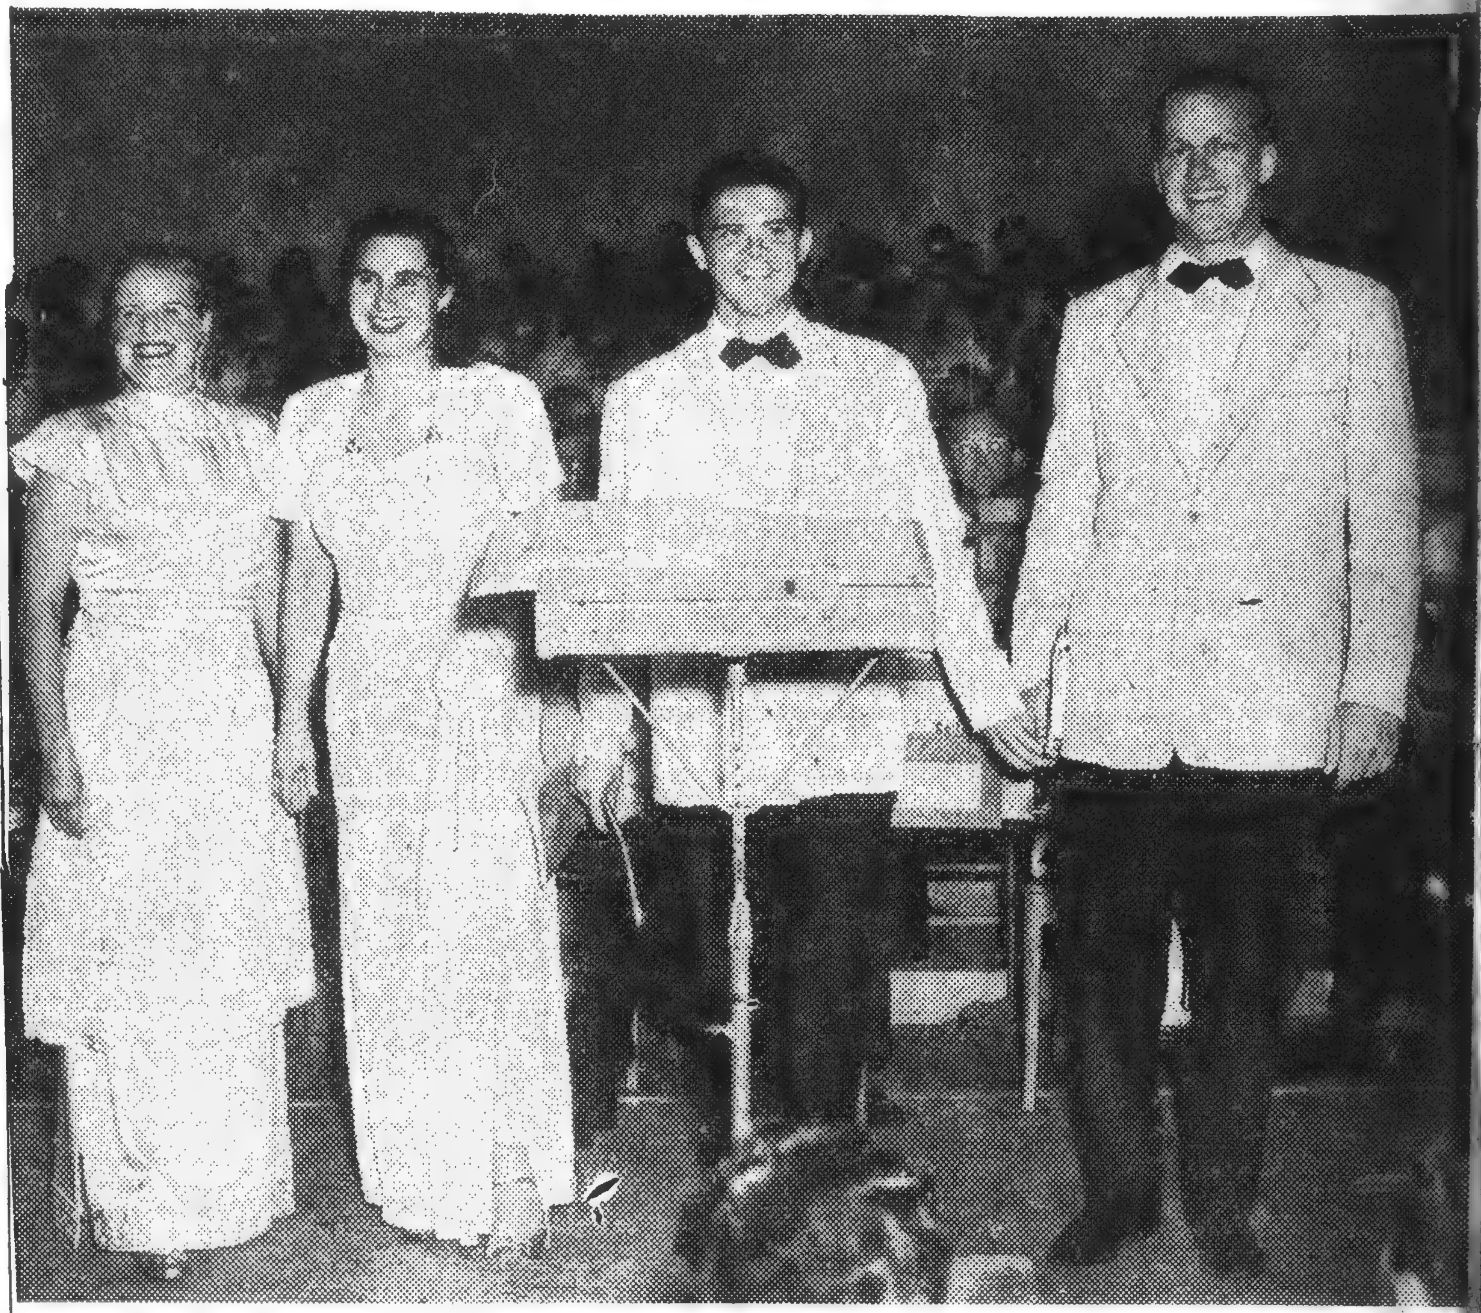
Inquiries and requests for tickets should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

[71]

TART INSTRUMENT COLLECTION: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston mphony Orchestra, receives from Constance Keene and Abram Chasins, concert pianists, two instrunts to start a Tanglewood collection for use by students whose instruments are inferior or who cannot ford to buy them. Miss Keene is holding her gift—a 150-year-old violin, while Mr. Chasins holds a ntury-old cello for the collection. Miss Keene, a scholarship pupil at the Berkshire Music Center in 41, and her teacher, Mr. Chasins, a member of the first faculty of the school in 1940, made the presentations in honor of Koussevitzky's 73d birthday.

erkshire County Eagle

eld, Massachusetts. Wednesday, August 6, 1947.



Mitchell

ETHOVEN SOLOISTS: A tremendous ovation was accorded Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the ton Symphony Orchestra and the chorus and soloists at the conclusion of the Ninth Symphony of ethoven last night at Tanglewood. Called back repeatedly by the audience were the soloists, left to ght, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass. The Ninth concluded the Beethoven series.

ridge Opens

At the Theatre

icians Union

Great Performance by Chorus Features Conclusion of Beethoven Symphony Series

7000 Attend Concert in Tanglewood Shed

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra pleted the performance of all Beethoven symphonies within days by the rendition of the last last night in the Shed at Tan- wood. Serge Koussevitzky, the hestra, the chorus, and Robert w, who had prepared them, and soloists were accorded a tre- ndous ovation at the final note the great choral work by the 0 attending.

tarting last Thursday evening continuing through the regu- two week-end concerts, the seven were performed, and extra evening last night was lized to include the final two. eighth was played with the tomary thorough understanding hich characterizes the fundamen- conception and the execution of the favorites of the orchestra's pertory. A wealth of color and riety coupled with a completely tisfying sense of line and proporn placed the symphony in the tegory of one of Koussevitzky's st accomplishments.

FESTIVAL GUEST: Miss Katharine Cornell, noted actress, was among the 7000 at last night's extra Festival concert. She is seated with her agent, Francis Robinson, who has been on loan to the Festival for more than a month.

orus at Very Best

But the evening reached its max, as, indeed, did the whole ethoven series, in the famous nth, and narrowing it down still rther, in the final choral movement. Never at Tanglewood has a horus performed with more in- sive and clean attacks and re- eases, with more vivid and youth- lly powerful tone, with greater ecurity in their inflections and in very detail which marks the raining under an expert. The rec- gnition accorded Robert Shaw, along with the others who contributed to the triumphal performance, evidently was tempered by a great personal regard and affection, for the members of the chorus were as vociferous in their participation in that feature of the evening as was the huge and demonstrative audience.

From the early cello recitatif which the Boston cello section did with such full tone and unlimited liberation, through the nostalgic references to the earlier movements, right up to the principal theme, Koussevitzky constructed the movement with a cumulative effect in mind. He exaggerated the tone value on the diminishing side of this opening theme. He allowed his cellos a bare three fingers of bow, and scarcely any more to the basses. From there on one could see the movement grom as it approached the entrance of the voices. James Pease, the bass of the quartet of soloists, was majestically impressive in his initial declamation and David Lloyd, tenor, was splendidly dramatic and vocally rich in his later solo. The soprano, Frances Yeend and the contralto, Eunice Alberts, dominated their most rewarding opportunity in the concerted episode just before the coda.

Koussevitzky Dons Tail Coat

Dr. Koussevitzky replaced the white Tuxedo jacket he wore for the eighth symphony with a black tail coat and white tie for the Ninth which came after the intermission. Lacking an explanation it seemed like a gesture of reverence he patently holds for this last of the Beethoven symphonies. Certain it is that he gave it all the spacious glory its lofty pages permit and raised the performance to a plane to which only music, of all the arts, can aspire.

This concert marked a milestone in Tanglewood history, as it would have done on any schedule. All the Beethoven symphonies consecutively and within the space of less than a week is a formidable task. Its achievement in such glory is a memorable event, and a mark of the orchestra's conductor. Much as he blueprinted the performance of the great final choral movement of the ninth symphony in which Schiller's "Ode to Joy," is used as the text, Koussevitzky has planned much of his career. Just as he had an eye for the later goal and climax when he kept the cellos and basses so contained in their early theme, so has he had an eye for the future in so much of what he has attempted. Whether it was the Boston orchestra, Tanglewood, or the Berkshire Music Center, he has been a builder. As this festival goes into its final trio of concerts on Thursday evening, it becomes increasingly apparent what his personality, vision and drive have done for all the ventures into which he has entered.

Thursday evening's program will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw will do the Saturday evening concert and Dr. Koussevitzky will resume his baton for the closing concert on Sunday afternoon.

Events Calendar

William C. Sullivan of Hartford,

[7a]

a Lenchner, as El-amatically malevor and vocally was graphic. Her deep was used with exand powerful react closed with one of riking tableaux of the e the stage direction masterly. The second s open with an untenand a quiet pit. The tarts with a narrative o accompaniment, sup-great support by Mr. who also leads the or-37 students from the usic Center. There has rited overture to the the orchestral inexperie students did not suf-it full justice. The seclso offers opportunities st concerted music. An duet between Ilia and and later a quartet, in are joined by Idomeneo were magnificent as in their rendition, and ene contained some of orchestral material of

Most Exciting

act, however, is dra-e most graphic and the ng of the entire work.
ece of choral writing e occasion for the em-f the resources of the and brings it to a cliheroic exploits lift the point of high excite-though a trifle more mmersion in the realism e might have carried it nce was extravagant in of applause at the

and honors were shared uding the director and record in the county with Tan

Rychtarik, the scenic di-Fritz Wolfes, the assistector.

oldovsky, before the reof the second act, had the stage to make a few marks, a feature in which que and quite unexcelled. of the problems of adapt-pera for modern produc-compared the action of to the international situay. He chose to discern a touch in the work and analogy between the of the Cretans with the
and the struggle of us with the elements which have unleashed. His many contributions to ction brought him tre-acclaim.

glewood

concert of Beethoven
7.30. The Boston Symchestra, Serge Koussevit-ducting, will play the ninth symphonies, with Ode to Joy by the Festiperformance of Mozart's at 8.15 by opera stu-Berkshire Music Center.

nceled

amber music concert tomorrow afternoon will Eleazer deCarvalho, scheduled to conduct, will closing chamber pro-ay morning at 10.30.

oned

and faculty of the Music Center, members oston Symphony and the ommittee of the Society of the school will hold a day afternoon at 4 in the honor of Serge Koussesic director of the ord director of the school.

at Festival

the week-end visitors rkshire Festival were mbassador Joseph P. and Mrs. Kennedy of
S. Supreme Court Jus-Frankfurter; Jennie era star; Gene Tunr world heavyweight mpion, and Mrs. Tunll Thomas, news com-and Mrs. Thomas.

TART INSTRUMENT COLLECTION: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conduct mphony Orchestra, receives from Constance Keene and Abram Chasins, concert pia ents to start a Tanglewood collection for use by students whose instruments are inferic ord to buy them. Miss Keene is holding her gift—a 150-year-old violin, while Mr. ntury-old cello for the collection. Miss Keene, a scholarship pupil at the Berkshire 941, and her teacher, Mr. Chasins, a member of the first faculty of the school in 1 presentations in honor of Koussevitzky's 73d birthday.

ridge Opens | At the Theatre

Au

Mrs. M
Fune day fro etery C
Adams,
Church
Mrs. M
Ghent
Hospita
Austerl
Mrs. of Woo with he ter, for was 48
sister.
lived in
She i
Mrs. Ed son, Ed brother, ham, a
Kline o
Levy of

—The town o Saturda certown
—Mr. celebrat niversar
—Miss gel, dau mont G sixth b —Will of New of Mr.
—Rob is spend with his liam Ab —Sam visiting law, Mr —Miss ter of M late Cha former two wee jarva, V member troop.

—Miss rned f

Berkshire County Eagle

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Wednesday, August 6, 1947.

Mitchell

BEETHOVEN SOLOISTS: A tremendous ovation was accorded Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus and soloists at the conclusion of the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven last night at Tanglewood. Called back repeatedly by the audience were the soloists, left to right, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass. The Ninth concluded the Beethoven series.

icians Union | Eaton R

Great Performance by Chorus Features Conclusion of Beethoven Symphony Series

7000 Attend Concert in Tanglewood Shed

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the performance of all the Beethoven symphonies within six days by the rendition of the last two last night in the Shed at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra, the chorus, and Robert Shaw, who had prepared them, and the soloists were accorded a tremendous ovation at the final note of the great choral work by the 7000 attending.

Starting last Thursday evening and continuing through the regular two week-end concerts, the first seven were performed, and this extra evening last night was utilized to include the final two. The eighth was played with the customary thorough understanding which characterizes the fundamental conception and the execution of all the favorites of the orchestra's repertory. A wealth of color and variety coupled with a completely satisfying sense of line and proportion placed the symphony in the category of one of Koussevitzky's best accomplishments.

Chorus at Very Best

But the evening reached its climax, as, indeed, did the whole Beethoven series, in the famous ninth, and narrowing it down still further, in the final choral movement. Never at Tanglewood has a chorus performed with more incisive and clean attacks and releases, with more vivid and youthfully powerful tone, with greater security in their inflections and in every detail which marks the training under an expert. The recognition accorded Robert Shaw, along with the others who contributed to the triumphal performance, evidently was tempered by a great personal regard and affection, for the members of the chorus were as vociferous in their participation in that feature of the evening as was the huge and demonstrative audience.

From the early cello recitatif which the Boston cello section did with such full tone and unlimited liberation, through the nostalgic references to the earlier movements, right up to the principal theme, Koussevitzky constructed the movement with a cumulative effect in mind. He exaggerated the tone value on the diminishing side of this opening theme. He allowed his cellos a bare three fingers of bow, and scarcely any more to the basses. From there on one could see the movement grom as it approached the entrance of the voices. James Pease, the bass of the quartet of soloists, was majestically impressive in his initial declamation and David Lloyd, tenor, was splendidly dramatic and vocally rich in his later solo. The soprano, Frances Yeend and the contralto, Eunice Alberts, dominated their most rewarding opportunity in the concerted episode just before the coda.

FESTIVAL GUEST: Miss Katharine Cornell, noted actress, was among the 7000 at last night's extra Festival concert. She is seated with her agent, Francis Robinson, who has been on loan to the Festival for more than a month.

Koussevitzky Dons Tail Coat

Dr. Koussevitzky replaced the white Tuxedo jacket he wore for the eighth symphony with a black tail coat and white tie for the Ninth which came after the intermission. Lacking an explanation it seemed like a gesture of reverence he patently holds for this last of the Beethoven symphonies. Certain it is that he gave it all the spacious glory its lofty pages permit and raised the performance to a plane to which only music, of all the arts, can aspire.

This concert marked a milestone in Tanglewood history, as it would have done on any schedule. All the Beethoven symphonies consecutively and within the space of less than a week is a formidable task. Its achievement in such glory is a memorable event, and a mark of the orchestra's conductor. Much as he blueprinted the performance of the great final choral movement of the ninth symphony in which Schiller's "Ode to Joy," is used as the text, Koussevitzky has planned much of his career. Just as he had an eye for the later goal and climax when he kept the cellos and basses so contained in their early theme, so has he had an eye for the future in so much of what he has attempted. Whether it was the Boston orchestra, Tanglewood, or the Berkshire Music Center, he has been a builder. As this festival goes into its final trio of concerts on Thursday evening, it becomes increasingly apparent what his personality, vision and drive have done for all the ventures into which he has entered.

Thursday evening's program will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw will do the Saturday evening concert and Dr. Koussevitzky will resume his baton for the closing concert on Sunday afternoon.

Public Events Calendar | William C. Sullivan of Hartford, Conn., have returned home

[7a]

Has ugged
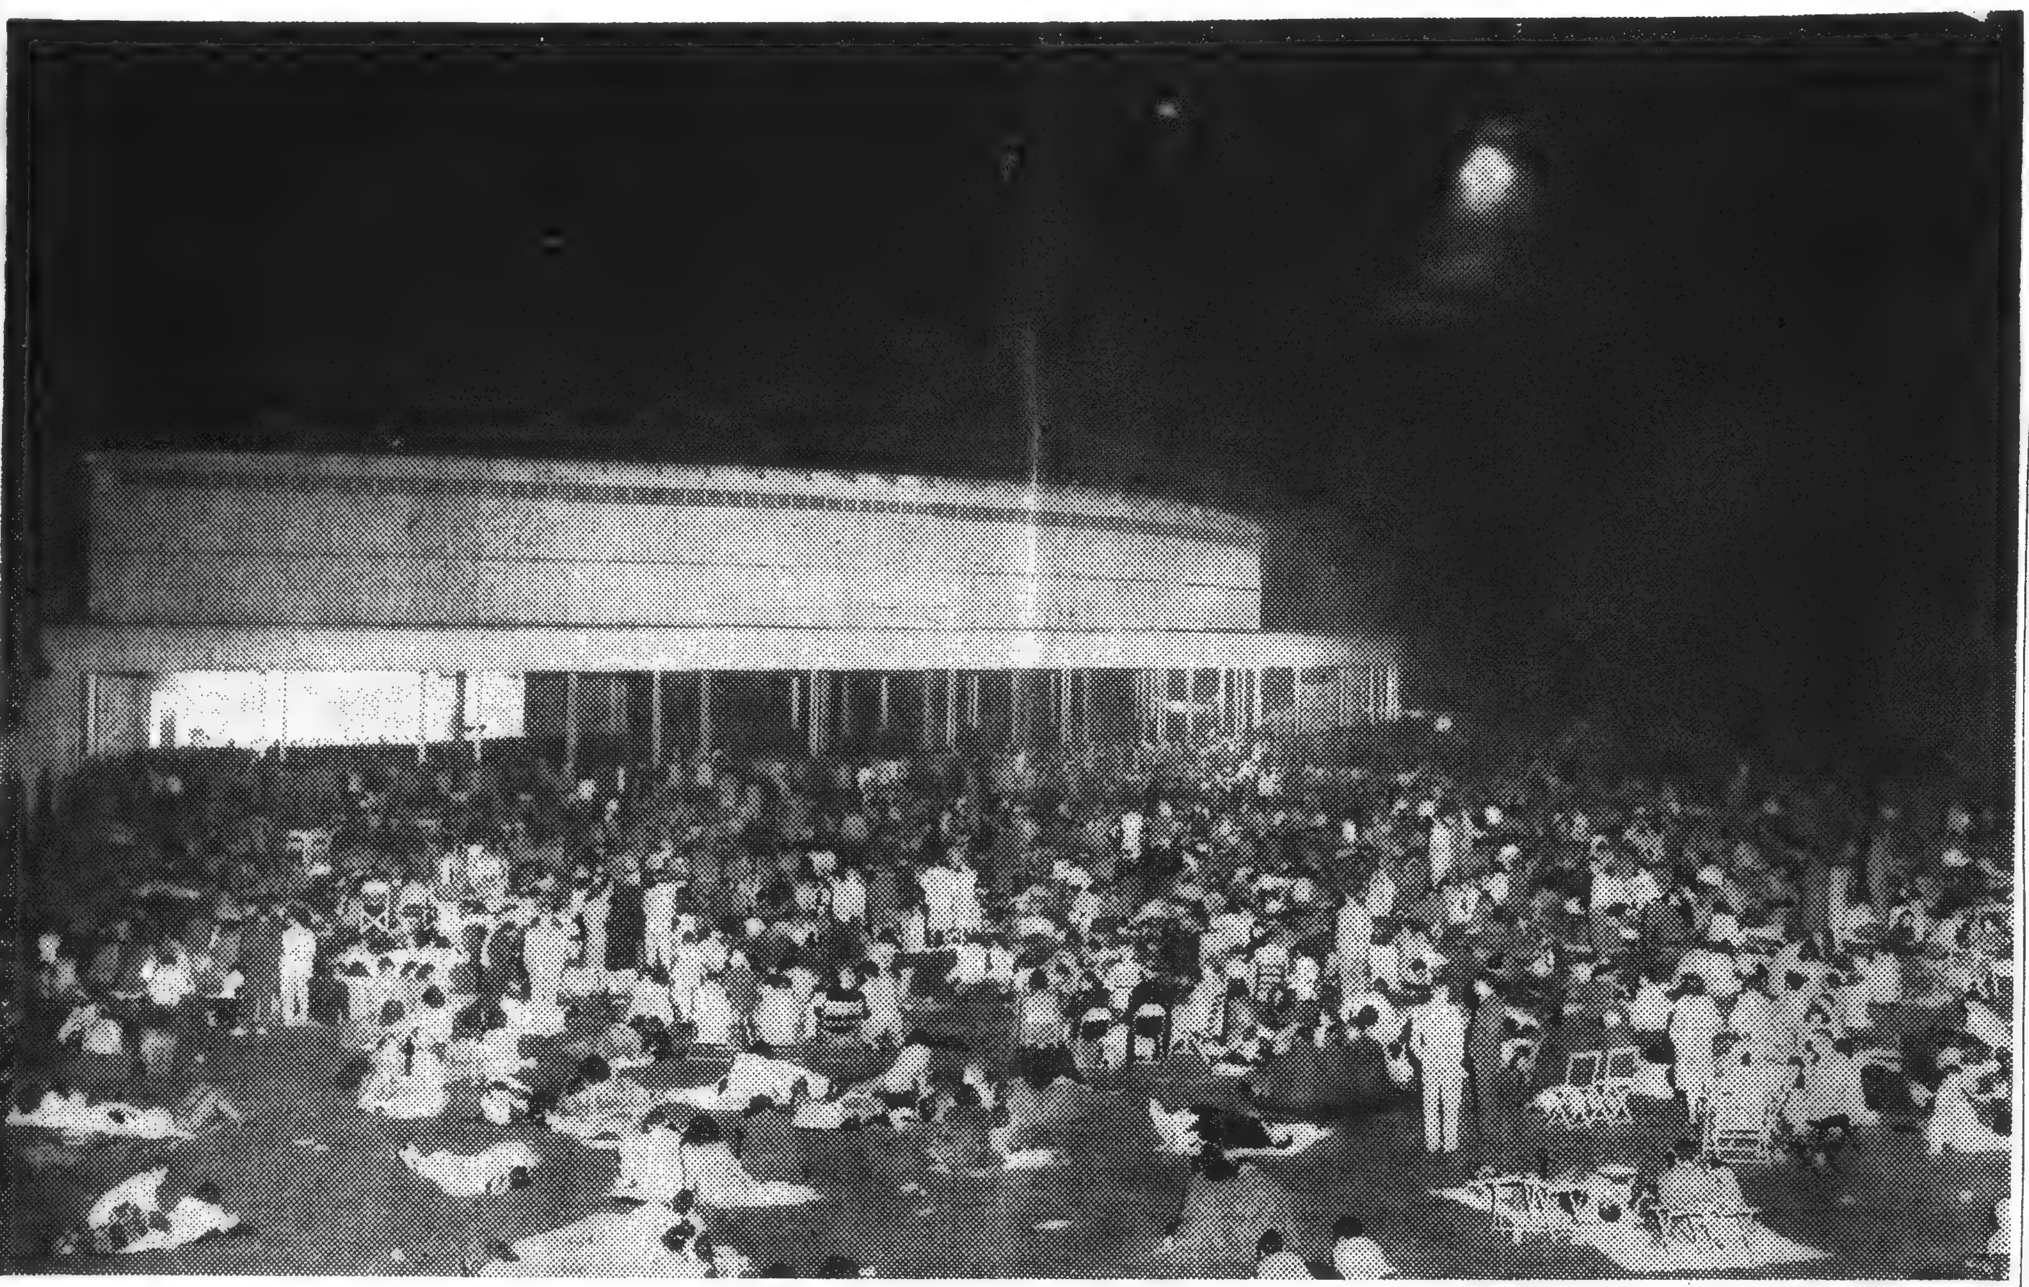
Page 12

The Berkshire Evenin

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 4, 1947.

nesia Accepts Dutch

Festival Attendance Mark Falls



THE MOON AND 14,000: The Berkshire moon looks down, no doubt with some surprise, on the record-breaking throng of 14,000 who packed the Shed and the surrounding grounds for the Saturday night concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Coupled with yesterday's 13,000, the second week end of the 1947 Festival set all-time highs for attendance.

Shake-up Hits N.Y. Police in

Ford and UAW Make Offe ear

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

All previous attendance records at the Berkshire Festival were shattered over the week end as 35,000 music lovers from all parts of the country turned out at Tanglewood for the second series of concerts.

Beethoven Finale Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, completed the performance of all but the last two of the Beethoven symphonies in the current cycle devoted to the great Bonn master. These final symphonies will be played at the special concert in the Music Shed tomorrow evening, starting at 7.30 instead of the usual later hour of 8.15. The Eighth and Ninth Symphonies will be presented tomorrow night. The Berkshire Festival chorus will be heard with the orchestra in the second part of the program, with the following soloists: Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. This part of the program will be broadcast over WBEC and the ABC network, starting at 8.30.

With the establishment of new reecords for attendance, the orchestra over the week end seemed to take inspiration from the added multitudes of listeners which crowded and overflowed the wide broad expanse which surrounds the Music Shed. The musicians gave performances which called forth demonstrations which seemed almost to baffle their usually unruffled leader, Dr. Koussevitzky.

More than 14,000 attended Saturday night's concert, while 13,000 turned out yesterday afternoon. A crowd of 7600 attended Thursday night. The total at the second series last year was 25,000, while the highest previous figure this year was 23,500 for the opening series.

At one of Dr. Koussevitzky's numerous recalls after the Fifth Symphony on Saturday evening, he stood for long seconds just looking on in happy bewilderment at what, from the stage, must have seemed like a sea of eagerly and vociferously acclaiming faces. Indeed, hands, hats and kerchiefs must have been part of the picture he observed from his special vintage point, for many seemed to want their particular kudos to catch his particular recognition.

Saturday Concert

Saturday evening was also a record, from our unofficial files, for low temperature. Wraps and blankets were at a premium and many a swain played the gallant to the lady of his choice. The program consisted of the fourth and fifth symphonies with the Emperor (E flat major) concerto in between. The fourth had an especial charm. Koussevitzky played it without guile and conducted in an appropriately less vehement manner than that which the more assertive symphonies require. This is one of Beethoven's rarer moods and the performance caught the spirit with proper feminine gentleness.

A quiet fragility and a kindly compassion pervaded this lovely symphony and there was no attempt to give it any energetic touch which was not germane to it. That was reserved for the great "V" symphony, which became such a popular expression of the war spirit a few years ago. Dr. Koussevitzky does not tarry long

Tanglewood
Continued on Second Page

Berkshire Evening

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 4, 1947

TUDENTS MAKE OPERA HISTORY: These students at the Berkshire Music Center, glewood, have leading roles in Mozart's three-act opera, "Idomeneo," which will have its first rican premiere tonight in the theatre-concert hall. It will be repeated Wednesday evening. In a e from the last act of the rarely performed opera are, left to right, Dorothy Dawson as Idamante; Nancy Trickey, Princess Ilia and Joseph Laderoute, Idomeneo, king of Crete.

2500 Friends To Witness 'Idomeneo'

Mozart's Opera To Be Given Tonight, Wednesday Night

TANGLEWOOD—In a dress rehearsal that took the form of a preview last night, nearly 1000 students at the Berkshire Music Center, members of the press and the school faculty made up the first audience for the premiere of Mozart's three-act opera, "Idomeneo," which will be given tonight and Wednesday night. The production. for which all seats are taken, will be seen by 2500 Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The students in the opera department presenting the seldom-performed work come from all parts of the United States and Canada. In order of their appearance, Joseph Laderoute in the title role is a Canadian; Ann Bollinger, who will alternate with Dorothy Dawson as Idamante, his son, is from New York City. Miss Dawson is a Bostonian. Nancy Trickey, Princess Ilia, daughter of King Priam of Troy, is from Wrentham; Paula Lenchner, Princess Ilettra, who vies with her for the prince's attention, daughter of King Agamemnon of Argos, from New York;

Frank Guarrera, Arbace, high priest of Neptune, from Philadelphia; Robert Holland, second priest Gibsonburg, Ohio; Adele Addison and Mildred Mueller, two Cretan maidens, Springfield and Cleveland; Edward Ansara, Waterbury Conn.

A chorus of 29 is directed b

arah Cald n orchest loris Goldovsky, accompanies th roduction. There are five dancers

hree Acts, Six Scenes

The opera, in three acts and si scenes, with text by Abbate Giambattista Varesco, is conducted an staged by Mr. Goldovsky. Richar Rychtarik is scenic director; Le VanWitsen, costume designer, an Felix Wolfes assistant conducto The production staff is composed o Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl an Fritz Waldman.

The scene at the end of the Trojan wars is laid on the island of Crete, of which Idomeneo is king. Ilia, daughter of the vanquished Trojan King Priam, is in love with Idomeneo's son, Idamante, as is Elettra, daughter of Agamemnon of Argos, who is also in exile. The news arrives that Idomeneo has been shipwrecked in a storm. When the scene changes to the sea coast, he is vowing to sacrifice to Neptune the first person he meets on land, to save his fleet from destruction.

As he waits, his son appears. In order not to kill his own son he decides on advice of the oracle, to send him with Elettra to Argos. As they are about to depart, a storm breaks and Idomeneo offers to sacrifice himself in order to save his son.

In the third act, the king tells his frightened people of his vow. They march to the underground Temple of Neptune to prepare the sacrifice. Idamante is willing to die for his country, but Ilia rushes in to take the place of her lover. As she kneels before the altar there is an underground disturbance and the oracle reveals the will of the god: that Idomeneo must renounce his throne to his son. Elettra, after an outburst of jealousy and rage, destroys herself, Idamante and Ilia are crowned and the people rejoice.

Mr. Goldovsky, relating the story likened the plot of the story to the situation of the world today. "We too are caught by a force of nature," he said. "In the case of the Cretans it was the storm. In our case it is the atom. They went underground, as we may have to do. I like to believe the last act is prophetic. Idamante is the youth of today. He took over when his people were caught by problems they could not solve. Perhaps our keen young people, without prejudices will take over and then we shall have a world at peace."

has ugged
Page 12

The Berkshire Evenin

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 4, 1947.

nesia Accepts Dutch

Festival Attendance Mark Falls

THE MOON AND 14,000: The Berkshire moon looks down, no doubt with some surprise, on the record-breaking throng of 14,000 who packed the Shed and the surrounding grounds for the Saturday night concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Coupled with yesterday's 13,000, the second week end of the 1947 Festival set all-time highs for attendance.

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

All previous attendance records at the Berkshire Festival were shattered over the week end as 35,000 music lovers from all parts of the country turned out at Tanglewood for the second series of concerts.

Beethoven Finale Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, completed the performance of all but the last two of the Beethoven symphonies in the current cycle devoted to the great Bonn master. These final symphonies will be played at the special concert in the Music Shed tomorrow evening, starting at 7.30 instead of the usual later hour of 8.15. The Eighth and Ninth Symphonies will be presented tomorrow night. The Berkshire Festival chorus will be heard with the orchestra in the second part of the program, with the following soloists: Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. This part of the program will be broadcast over WBEC and the ABC network, starting at 8.30.

With the establishment of new reecords for attendance, the orchestra over the week end seemed to take inspiration from the added multitudes of listeners which crowded and overflowed the wide broad expanse which surrounds the Music Shed. The musicians gave performances which called forth demonstrations which seemed almost to baffle their usually unruffled leader, Dr. Koussevitzky.

More than 14,000 attended Saturday night's concert, while 13,000 turned out yesterday afternoon. A crowd of 7600 attended Thursday night. The total at the second series last year was 25,000, while the highest previous figure this year was 23,500 for the opening series.

At one of Dr. Koussevitzky's numerous recalls after the Fifth Symphony on Saturday evening, he stood for long seconds just looking on in happy bewilderment at what, from the stage, must have seemed like a sea of eagerly and vociferously acclaiming faces. Indeed, hands, hats and kerchiefs must have been part of the picture he observed from his special vintage point, for many seemed to want their particular kudos to catch his particular recognition.

Saturday Concert

Saturday evening was also a record, from our unofficial files, for low temperature. Wraps and blankets were at a premium and many a swain played the gallant to the lady of his choice. The program consisted of the fourth and fifth symphonies with the Emperor (E flat major) concerto in between. The fourth had an especial charm. Koussevitzky played it without guile and conducted in an appropriately less vehement manner than that which the more assertive symphonies require. This is one of Beethoven's rarer moods and the performance caught the spirit with proper feminine gentleness.

A quiet fragility and a kindly [illegible] pervaded this lovely [illegible] and there was no at[illegible] any energetic [illegible] germane to [illegible] for the [illegible] became [illegible] the

Shake-up Hits N.Y. Police in

Ford and UAW Make Offe ear

Berkshire Eve

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, A

STUDENTS MAKE OPERA HISTORY: These students at the Berkshire Music Center, nglewood, have leading roles in Mozart's three-act opera, "Idomeneo," which will have its first rican premiere tonight in the theatre-concert hall. It will be repeated Wednesday evening. In a e from the last act of the rarely performed opera are, left to right, Dorothy Dawson as Idamante; Nancy Trickey, Princess Ilia and Joseph Laderoute, Idomeneo, king of Crete.

2500 Frie To Witness 'Idomeneo'

Mozart's Opera To Be Given Tonight, Wednesday Night

TANGLEWOOD—In a dress rehearsal that took the form of a preview last night, nearly 1000 students at the Berkshire Music Center, members of the press and the school faculty made up the first audience for the premiere of Mozart's three-act opera, "Idomeneo," which will be given tonight and Wednesday night. The production, for which all seats are taken, will be seen by 2500 Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The students in the opera department presenting the seldom-performed work come from all parts of the United States and Canada. In order of their appearance, Joseph Laderoute in the title role is a Canadian; Ann Bollinger, who will alternate with Dorothy Dawson as Idamante, his son, is from New York City. Miss Dawson is a Bostonian. Nancy Trickey, Princess Ilia, daughter of King Priam of Troy, is from Wrentham; Paula Lenchner, Princess Ilettra, who vies with her for the prince's attention, daughter of King Agamemnon of Argos, from New York;

Frank Guarrera, Arbace, high priest of Neptune, from Philadelphia; Robert Holland, second priest Gibsonburg, Ohio; Adele Addison and Mildred Mueller, two Cretan maidens, Springfield and Cleveland; Edward Ansara, Waterbury, Conn.

A chorus of 29 is directed b

Sarah Caldwell and Gerald Samue An orchestra of 37, conducted b Boris Goldovsky, accompanies th production. There are five dancers

Three Acts, Six Scenes

The opera, in three acts and si scenes, with text by Abbate Giambattista Varesco, is conducted an staged by Mr. Goldovsky. Richar Rychtarik is scenic director; Le VanWitsen, costume designer, an Felix Wolfes assistant conducto The production staff is composed o Frederic Cohen, Elsa Kahl an Fritz Waldman.

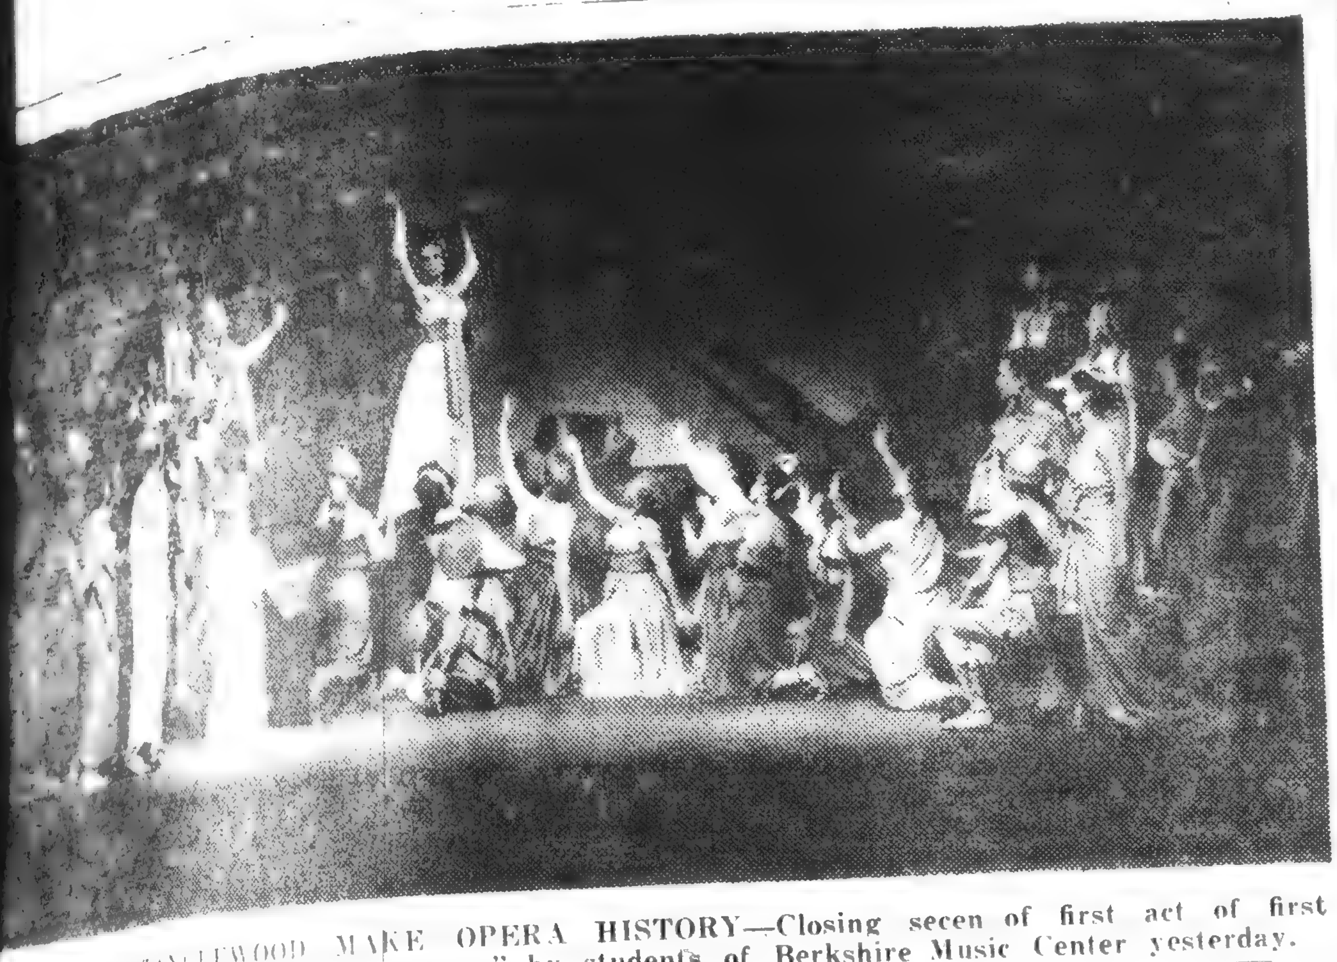
The scene at the end of the Trojan wars is laid on the island of Crete, of which Idomeneo is king. Ilia, daughter of the vanquished Trojan King Priam, is in love with Idomeneo's son, Idamante, as is Elettra, daughter of Agamemnon of Argos, who is also in exile. The news arrives that Idomeneo has been shipwrecked in a storm. When the scene changes to the sea coast, he is vowing to sacrifice to Neptune the first person he meets on land, to save his fleet from destruction.

As he waits, his son appears. In order not to kill his own son he decides on advice of the oracle, to send him with Elettra to Argos. As they are about to depart, a storm breaks and Idomeneo offers to sacrifice himself in order to save his son.

In the third act, the king tells his frightened people of his vow. They march to the underground Temple of Neptune to prepare the sacrifice. Idamante is willing to die for his country, but Ilia rushes in to take the place of her lover. As she kneels before the altar there is an underground disturbance and the oracle reveals the will of the god: that Idomeneo must renounce his throne to his son. Elettra, after an outburst of jealousy and rage, destroys herself, Idamante and Ilia are crowned and the people rejoice.

Mr. Goldovsky, relating the story likened the plot of the story to the situation of the world today. "We too are caught by a force of nature," he said. "In the case of the Cretans it was the storm. In our case it is the atom. They went underground, as we may have to do. I like to believe the last act is prophetic. Idamante is the youth of today. He took over when his people were caught by problems they could not solve. Perhaps our keen young people, without prejudices will take over and then we shall have a world at peace."

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION, SPRINGFI



[illegible] TANGLEWOOD MAKE OPERA HISTORY—Closing secen of first act of first [illegible] of Mozart's "Idomeneo" by students of Berkshire Music Center yesterday.

"Idomeneo" at Tanglewood Makes Musical History

First American Performance Is Given by Opera Department of Berkshire Center

By Willard M. Clark

Tanglewood, Aug. 4—Musical history was made here tonight when Mozart's early opera, "Idomeneo," was given its first American perform ance by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky. Mozart confessed that "Idomeneo" was his favorite opera with "Don Giovanni" a close second. The reason was not difficult to find for there is infinite beauty in the score, vitality and sustaning interest in the libretto devised by Abbate Giambattista Varesco from an earlier French libretto by Danchet for an opera, "Idomeneo," by Campra.

In Ancient Greece

The legend, set in ancient Greece, is similar to that of the biblical Jeptha, and involves the predicament of the King of Greece, "Idomeneo," who in gratitude for escaping shipwreck, vows to Neptune to sacrifice the first one whom he meets upon his own shores. It is his own son, Idamante, who first greets him. Idomeneo seeks to save his son by sending him to Argos with Electra, the princess of that country, but the Gods intervne and decree that Idamante replace Idomeneo on the throne of Crete, together with his true love, Illia, prisoner of war from Troy.

Singers, orchestra and chorus were members of the Berkshire Music Center. We were able to hear the full dress rehearsal Sunday night, a truly memorable experience. In his inimitable manner, Mr. Goldovsky talked informally to the audience of critics, students [illegible] invited guests noting that the [illegible] had not been given in this cou[illegible] or two reasons—first it is too long, a performance following the score exactly would take four and one half hours, and second, the story is too complicated and confusing. Mozart made cuts himself, so did Mr. Goldovsky, eliminating many extraneous arias and situations and providing a coherent story and the best of the music. There is monumental srength and passion in the story but it ends happily.

Staging Superb

The staging was superb in its color, imagination and simplicity. The lighting was excellent, particularly during the storm scene, when black

Continued on Page 13

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 28 1948

Scholarships To Tanglewood Awarded to Three

NEW YORK—A Utah girl, in her early 20's, formerly a member of the famous Tabernacle Choir, is announced today by Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, as winner of a federation-sponsored scholarship in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center for the summer of 1948. She is LuCretia Ferre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ferre of Salt Lake City.

The scholarship won by Miss Ferre is one of three covering 1948 tuition at the Berkshire Music Center donated by the Newport, R.I., Music Club to the national federation. One of these, a scholarship for strings, was open to Rhode Island competitors. This was won by Robert Allen, 21, of Providence, a student at Brown University and currently a pupil of Jean Bedetti, first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A second [illegible] open as to classification, but confined to Newport contestants, went to Martha Butler, 18-year-old contralto, daughter of Capt. Thomas J. Butler of the U.S. Maritime Service, and Mrs. Butler. Miss Butler is a graduate of Rogers High School in Newport, and has studied one year at the College of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif. She is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Albee of Newport.

THE ROVING REPORTER

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

Goldovsky's Staging of Mozart's 'Idomeneo' Thing of Beauty, as Composer Conceived It

He was 24 and, for the first time in his life, he had left his father and was on his own. The years had so far been good to him and those ahead seemed filled with promise, with honor, success, fame, happiness. How could Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart know of the tragedy that was to be his in the next 11 years?

Moreover, although he'd lost his first love and had yet to fall in love with the girl he was to marry a year or two later, he was in love with love. But, most of all, he was on his own now, fully aware of the endless creative powers within him, and so he sat down and composed an opera such as had never been heard before—or since.

The other night at Tanglewood that opera, "Idomeneo, King of "Crete," had the first performance ever given it in the United States—and one of the few ever given anywhere in the 167 years since it sprang out of the blue and onto paper for a world to look upon with astonishment thereafter. Even Mozart himself felt a little astonished by what he'd done; a short time before life slipped away from him in a garret he confided to someone that, of all the music he'd written, he loved Idomeneo best of all.

Awaited Goldovsky

That this master-product of one of the purest geniuses who ever lived has had to wait so long to be heard in this country is not such a mystery as it may at first seem. The fact of the matter is it had to await the arrival of Boris Goldovsky on the scene, for other men—even Richard Strauss—have tried to unravel the secret of this music and have failed. And the reason that Mr. Goldovsky succeeded so magnificently is that, with his incredible musical perceptiveness, he saw Mozart's own instructions to posterity in a letter to his father. "It is really far too long!" he cried in anguish. But Mozart, saddled with a vain and arrogant librettist, could not cut it himself. And no one to this day—save Mr. Goldovsky—has seen in this the composer's knowledge that he had overwritten it, made it far too complicated, obscured the simple yet tremendous drama of the piece.

The basic story is clearly that of the Biblical Jephtha, who, having been spared in the wars, vows to sacrifice the first person he meets on his return home. "Idomeneo" shifts the story to Crete, the time to the Trojan wars. Idomeneo, vowing to sacrifice the first person he meets if the gods will save him from the fury of the sea, is saved but encounters his own son Adamante. Hoping to renege on his vow and outwit the gods, he commands his son to abandon his love affair with a Trojan prisoner and take Electra (who happens to be on the island and is mad about the young prince, too) back to the mainland. But the gods defeat this with a fearful storm and, in the ensuing catastrophe, strip the throne from Idomeneo and give it to Adamante and his beloved Trojan prisoner.

This is the basic story, but Mozart, against his instinct, had to include all manner of sub-plots; people standing around explaining what they'd done and what they were going to do and why. The result seemed one of the longest and dullest operas until the time of Wagner. But Mr. Goldovsky, knowing that the main narrative contained some of the most remarkable musical drama ever written, condensed, re-ordered and hacked out the deadwood, but never altered a note of the music he did use.

Effective, Beautiful

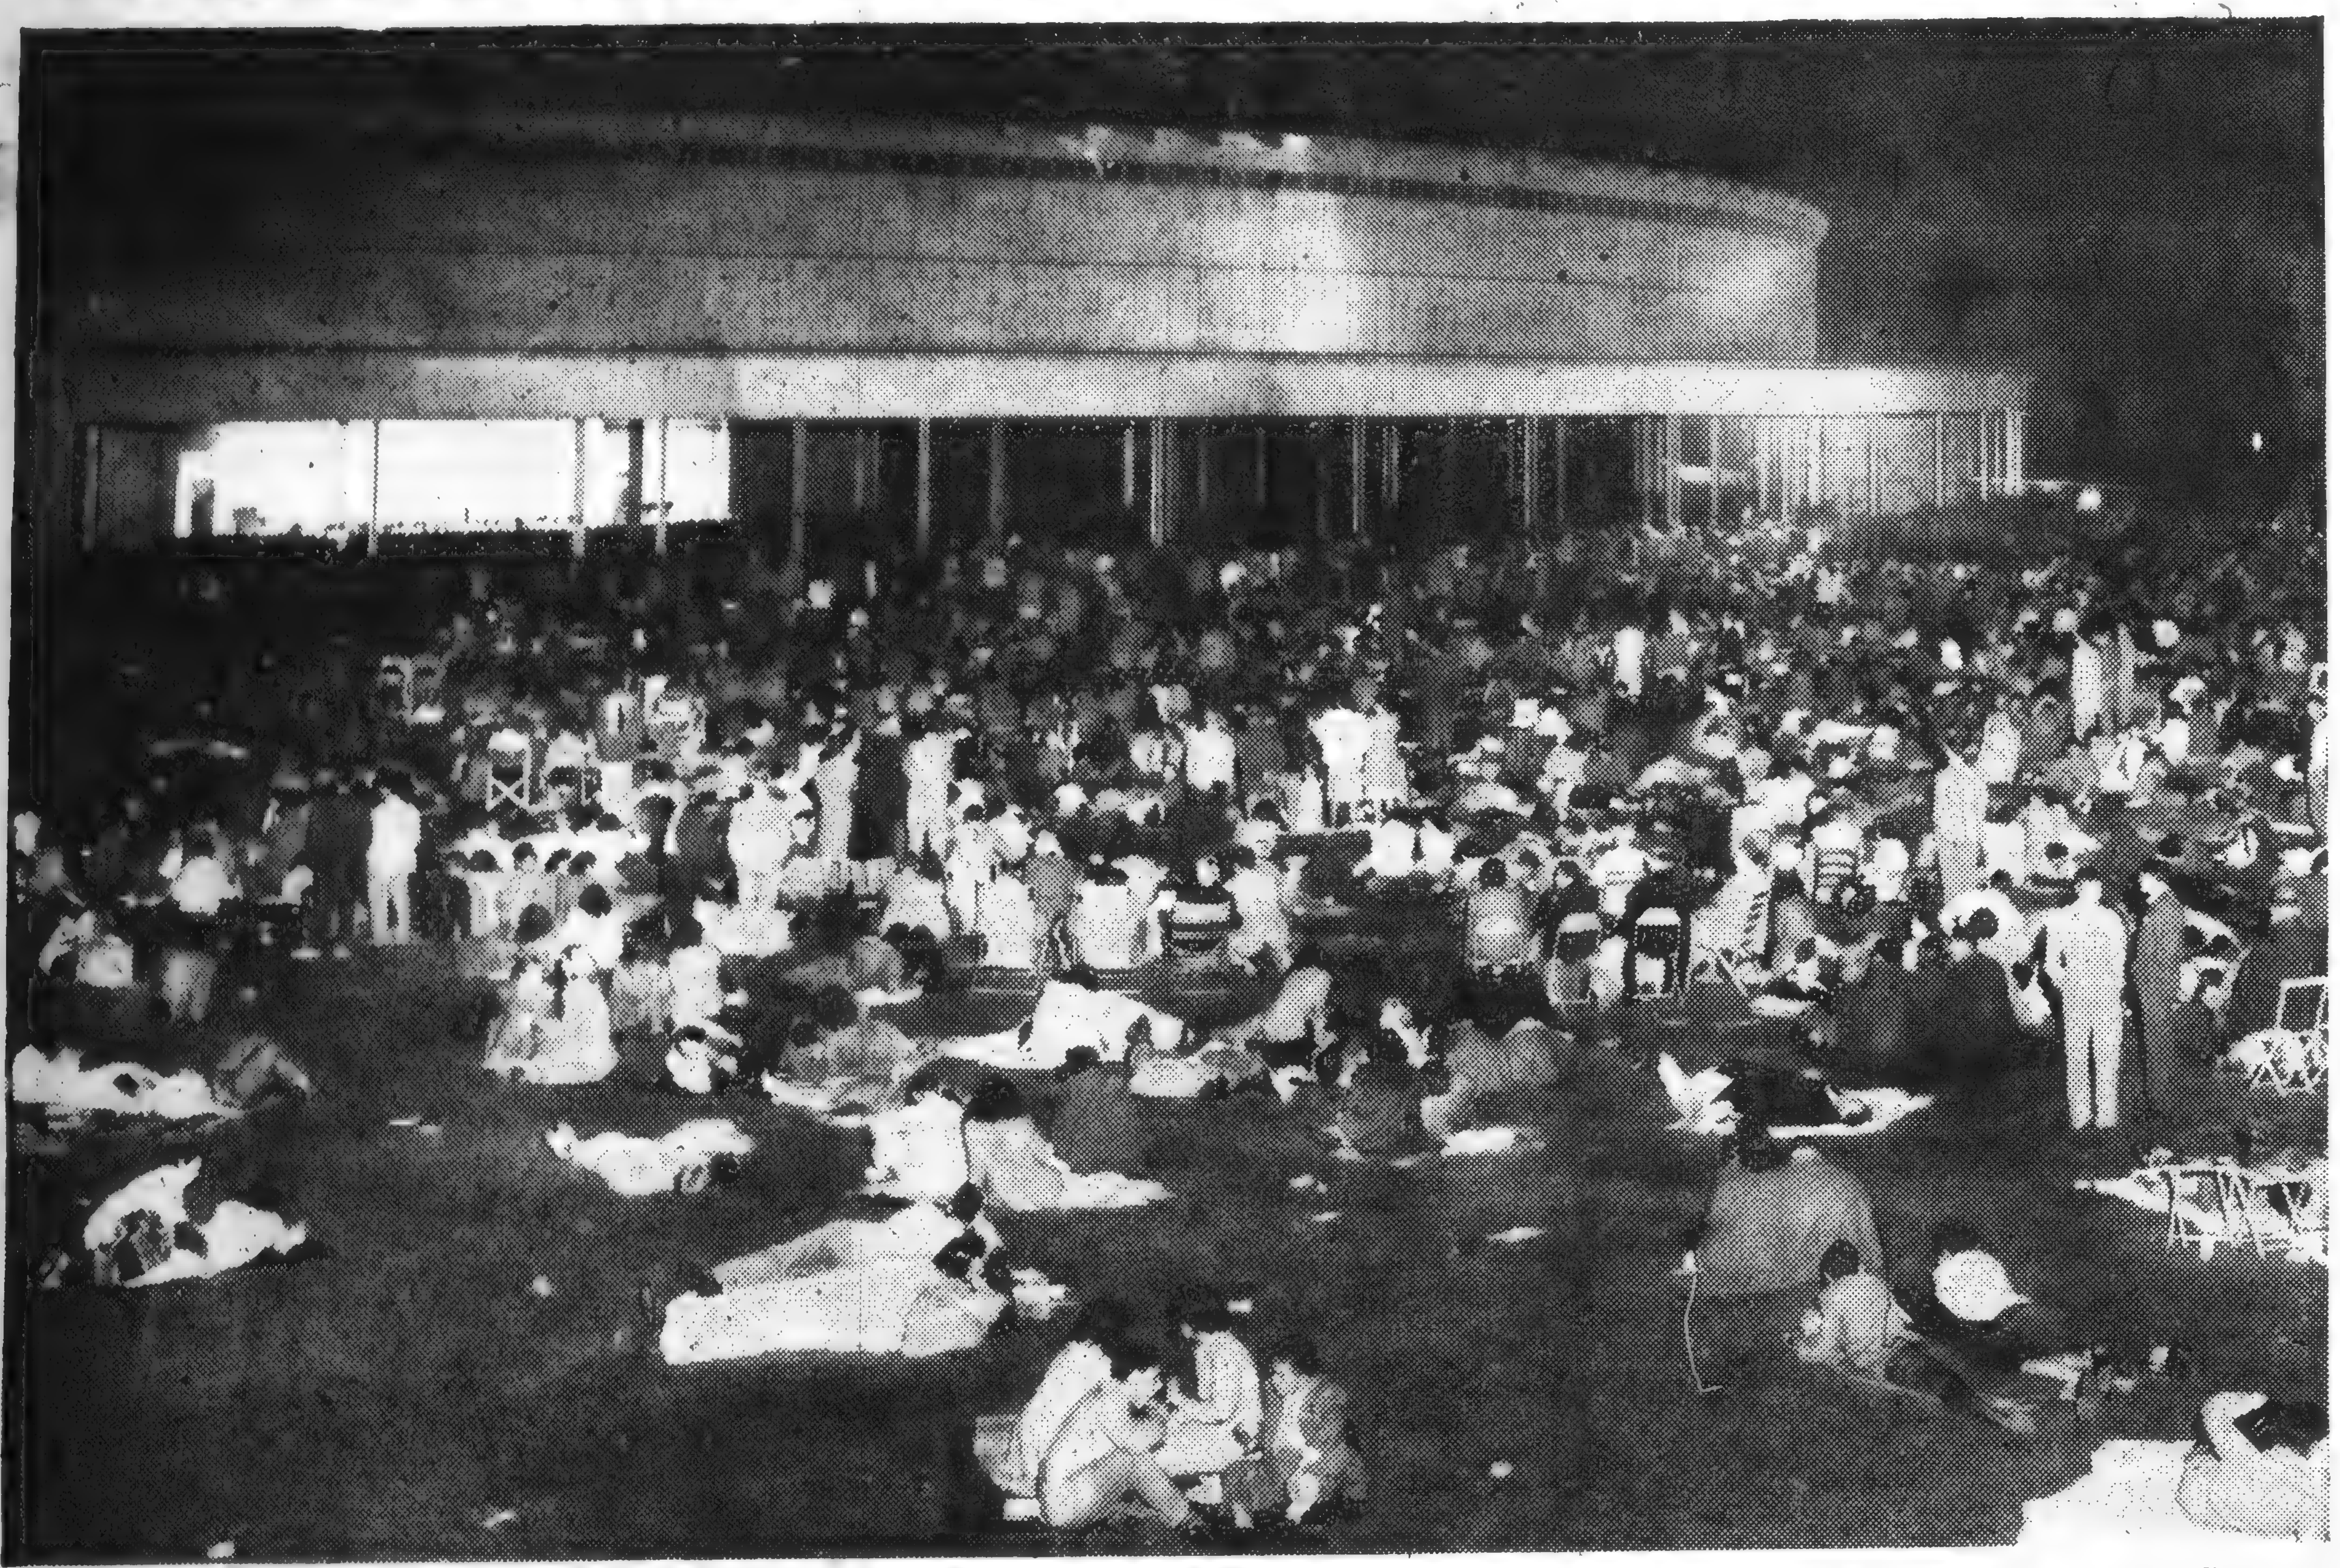
Thus, the other night in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood before audiences of the most sensitive musical people in the country—Mozart's "Idomeneo"—as the composer himself must surely have conceived it—sprang to life. I think I can speak for both audiences in saying that it was one of the most effective and beautiful things that ever was.

I will leave it to others to discuss the finer points in the musical vocabulary. But here, in what seemed to me the finest student performance I ever heard in my life, was a thesaurus of everything that ever happened in music up to Mozart, and the clue to everything that has happened since. Beethoven? He's there, in the opening of the third act (in a scene of incomparable tragedy). Verdi? He's there, in a foreshadow of his last and greatest works. Brahms, Schumann? They're all there, even the moderns, for Mozart's daring is beyond belief. Dissonances which in his own day must have been far more shocking than any conceived today for far more callous ears; musical devices only now coming into usage. And all underlining perhaps the most perfect marriage of words and music ever conceived. The love scene of the second act (I would be willing to perjure myself forever on it) is the most marvelous love scene in all music, but that's only one of countless miracles. Mozart never again dared to let himself go as he did in "Idomeneo"; he had to write for his public. And while in "Don Giovanni" he may have written a greater masterpiece, he never again touched the heavens he touched in this.

I don't know for sure, but I have the notion Mr. Goldovsky will bring "Idomeneo" to Boston this coming season. So you will have to wait, I'm afraid, to see the sensitivity of his staging of this opera, and hear the miracles he's accomplished in training his youthful singers—many of them, like Nancy Trickey and Joseph Laderoute Bostonians—but it is worth waiting for if anything ever was.

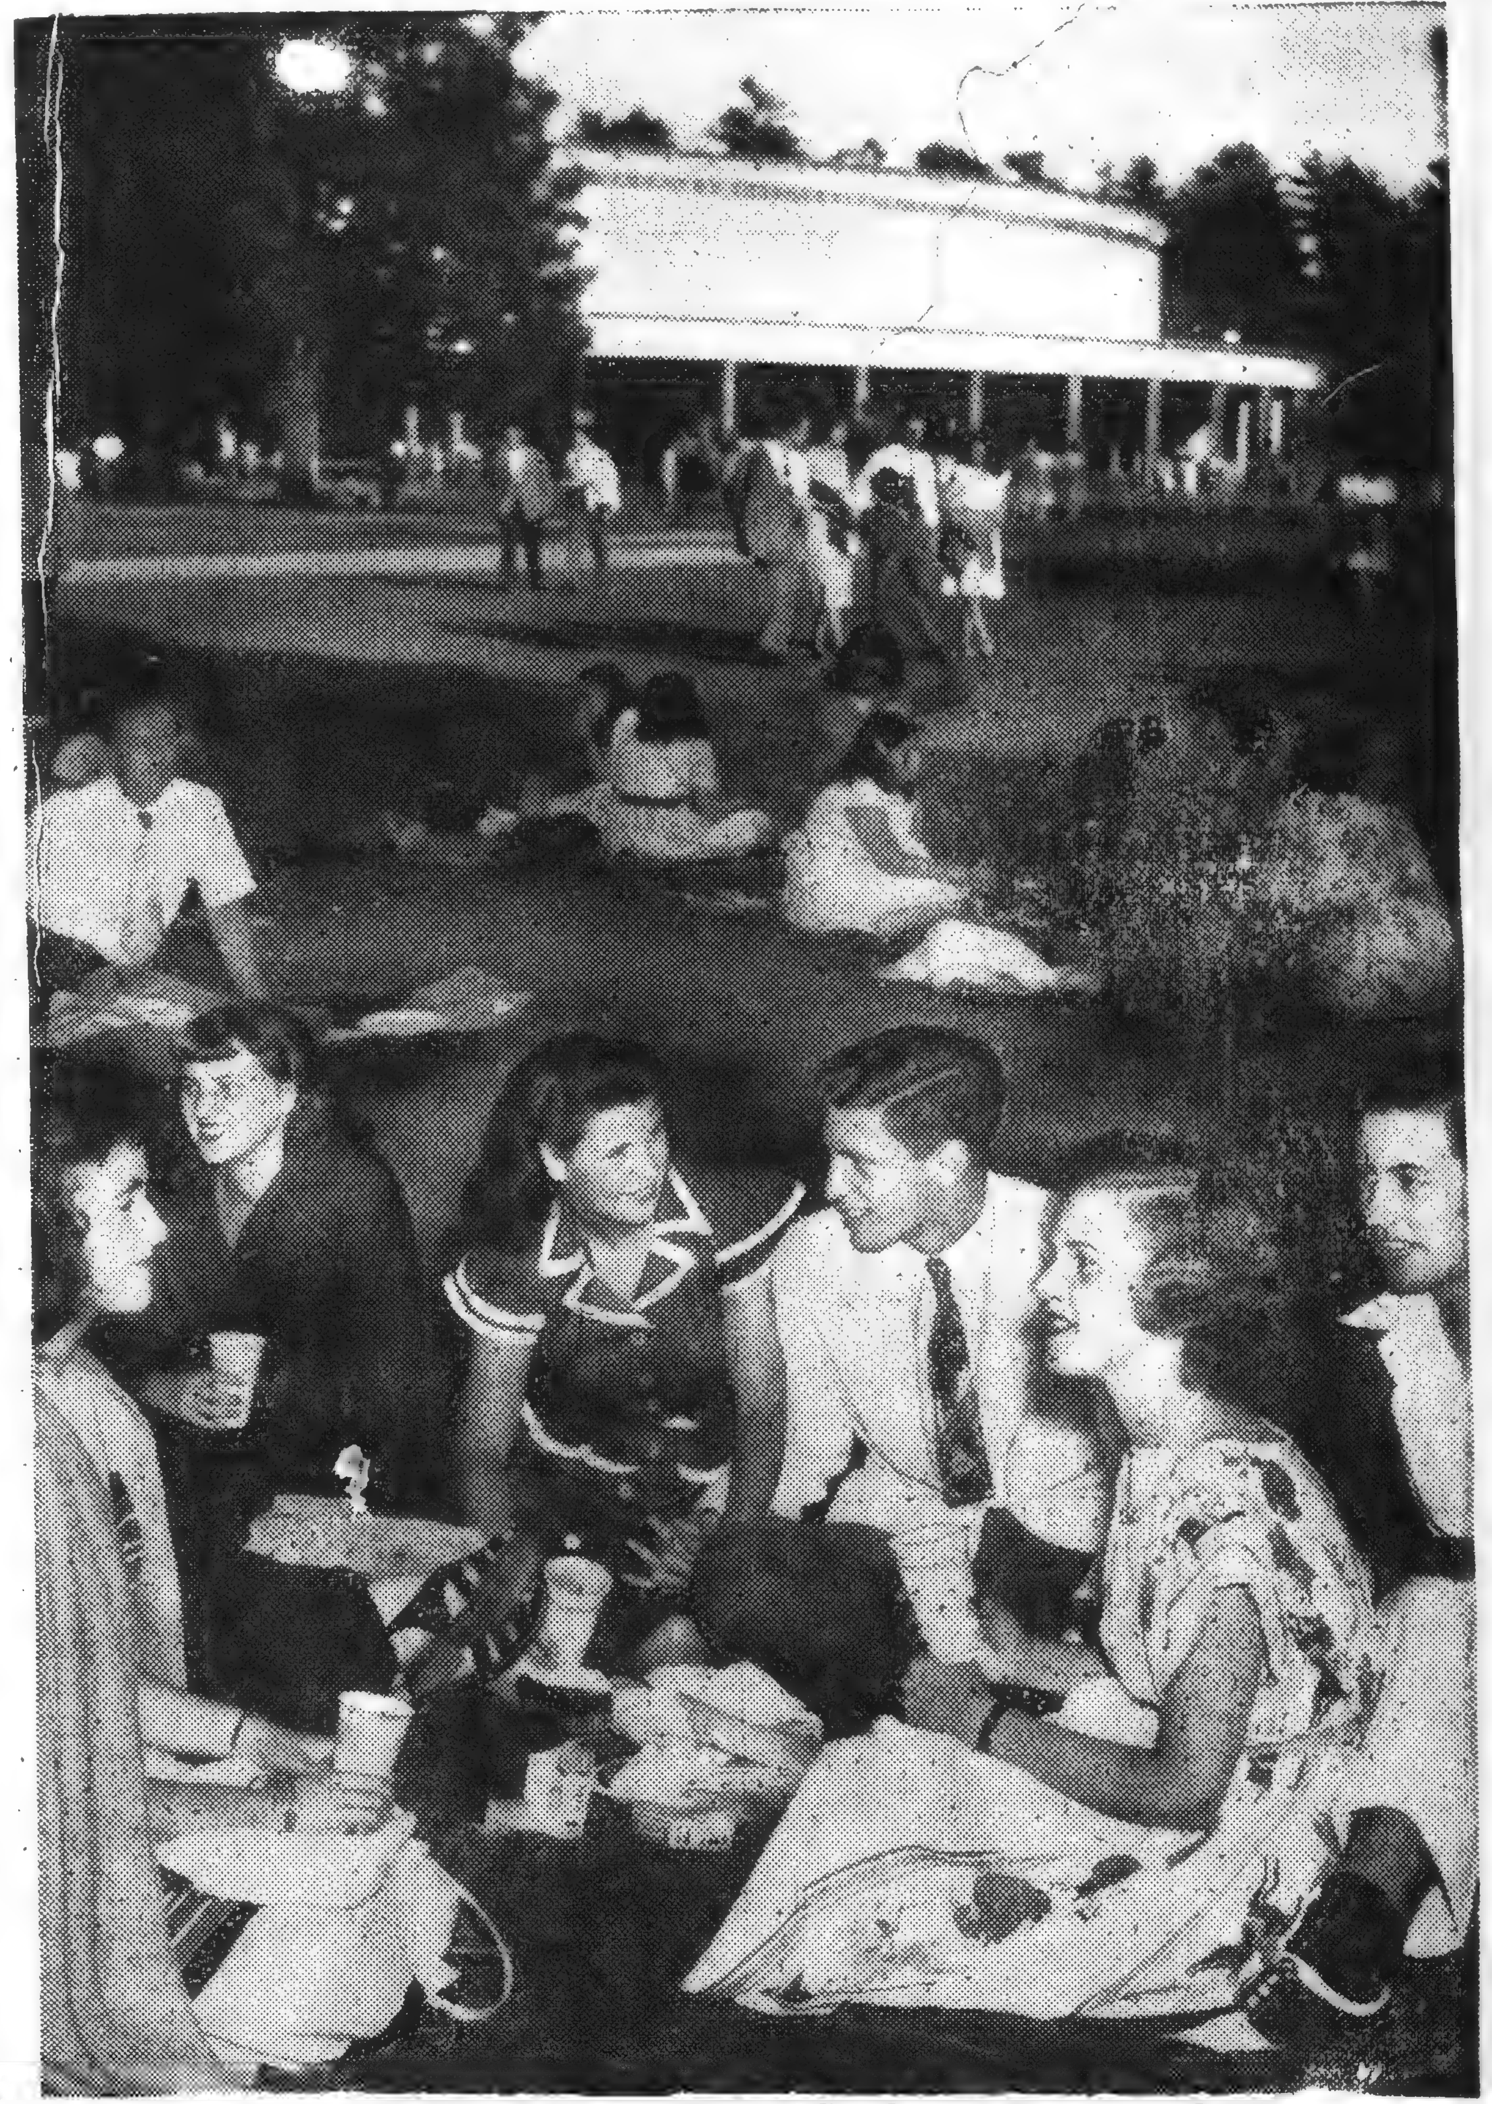
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 673,708) (S 1,216,488)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

Where the Music Lovers Gather



IN THE BERKSHIRES . . . The annual Summer musical event—the Berkshire Music Festival—is now approaching the close of its 13th season near Lenox, Mass. Here thousands of music lovers gather—in the huge Music Shed and on the adjacent lawns to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. On concert days and night—the throngs arrive early and an hour before concert time the lawn at Tanglewood swarms with sightseers. The Music Shed, which seats more than 6,000 persons, was built in 1938 at a cost of nearly $100,000. Eighty-two per cent of the contributions to the cost came from residents.

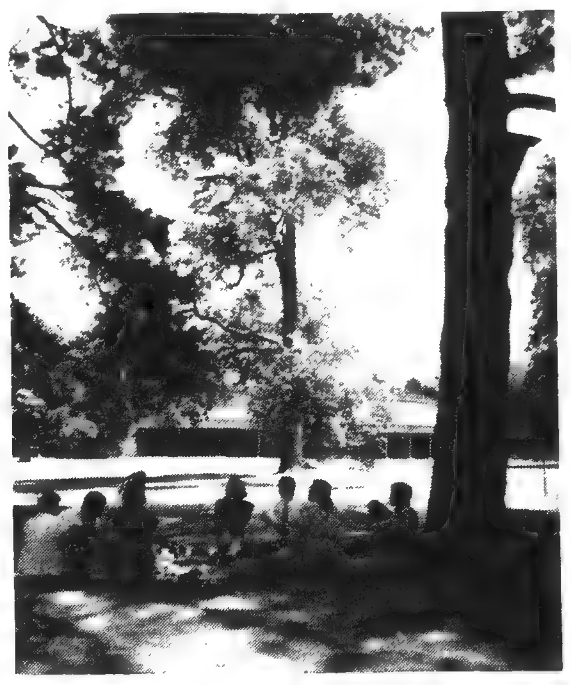
THE MAESTRO BOWS . . . Conductor Serge Koussevitzky and some of the members of the Boston Symphony take a bow at the close of a concert. The Berkshire Music Festival will close its 1947 season next Sunday. In addition to the concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky is in charge of the Summer school—the Berkshire Music Center. Instruction is offered in orchestral and choral conducting, orchestral playing and chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing and ensemble playing. Concerts are given by the students.



ON FAMILY DAY . . . That is Sunday at Tanglewood. Many groups have picnics on the spacious lawns. The concert patrons come from every State in the Union, according to a survey of parked automobiles. They take their music intently and likewise enjoy the beauty the Berkshires afford before and after concerts and during intermissions. Thousands of the concert-goers are young people—in their 'teens and twenties, giving ample proof that Young America isn't all for swing and jitterbug music.

DUSTRY

Switchboard
SUMMER 1947



BETWEEN CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD

TANGLEWOOD, near Lenox, Massachusetts, is the mecca for music lovers throughout the world during the summer season.

From Persia, Brazil, Lebanon, Holland, Australia and other countries, as well as from most states in the Union, students come to study music at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire Festival Concerts, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, are considered an outstanding musical event. They attract thousands of music lovers from South America, Mexico, Canada, and from all over the United States.

Telephone service plays an essential part at the Center. Calls to foreign countries are by no means uncommon. The ordinary day-by-day business of running the Center keeps an almost constant stream of calls flowing through the switchboard. Scores of concert-goers, many from far distant places, telephone for reservations. The telephone system is a busy, useful part of Tanglewood.

10—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, Aug. 7, 1947

Bernstein To Conduct Tonight At Opening of Final Series

The opening concert of the third and last series of the Berkshire Festival season will be played tonight at 8.15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at Tanglewood, taking the baton for the second time.

The program will include Haydn's symphony in B flat, Hindemith's violin concerto and Schumann's symphony Number 2 in C major. Ruth Posselt will be the soloist.

Miss Posselt, who has appeared with the orchestra at Tanglewood before, was born in Medford of musical parents. Beginning the study of violin at the age of three, she made her first public appearance in Jordan Hall, Boston, in her sixth year and her debut in Carnegie Hall, New York, at the age of nine.

After winning the Schubert Memorial Prize in 1929, she went to Europe for the first of six tours, including appearances with major orchestras in Amsterdam, Holland, Paris, Leningrad, Moscow and Stockholm. In the season of 1935-36 she returned to America for a transcontinental tour, appearing as soloist with the New York, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Washington, Cincinnati and St. Louis orchestras. She has played on several occasions with the Boston Orchestra in Boston, New York, and New Haven.

Programs for the week end follow:

Saturday 8.15 PM
Robert Shaw conducting
Cantata No. 50—Nun ist das Heil ... Bach
Symphony of Psalms .... Stravinsky
Requiem .... Mozart
Soloists—Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Sunday, 3.30 PM
Serge Koussevitzky conducting
Concerto Gross for chamber orchestra, with 2 pianos .... Martinu
Lukas Foss and Bernard Zighera, soloists
Pavane .... Ravel
Bolero .... Ravel
Symphony No. 4 in F minor..Tchaikovsky

Seats are on sale at the box office for the concerts tonight and Saturday. No tickets remain for the closing program on Sunday. A large audience is expected to listen from the lawn.

Becket

"Thunderhead," in technicolor, plus cartoon and short. Becket School, Monday 8 PM.—Adv. —11

Switchboard

BETWEEN CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD

TANGLEWOOD, near Lenox, Massachusetts, is the mecca for music lovers throughout the world during the summer season.

From Persia, Brazil, Lebanon, Holland, Australia and other countries, as well as from most states in the Union, students come to study music at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire Festival Concerts, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, are considered an outstanding musical event. They attract thousands of music lovers from South America, Mexico, Canada, and from all over the United States.

Telephone service plays an essential part at the Center. Calls to foreign countries are by no means uncommon. The ordinary day-by-day business of running the Center keeps an almost constant stream of calls flowing through the switchboard. Scores of concert-goers, many from far distant places, telephone for reservations. The telephone system is a busy, useful part of Tanglewood.

10—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, Aug. 7, 1947

Bernstein To Conduct Tonight At Opening of Final Series

The opening concert of the third and last series of the Berkshire Festival season will be played tonight at 8.15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at Tanglewood, taking the baton for the second time.

The program will include Haydn's symphony in B flat, Hindemith's violin concerto and Schumann's symphony Number 2 in C major. Ruth Posselt will be the soloist.

Miss Posselt, who has appeared with the orchestra at Tanglewood before, was born in Medford of musical parents. Beginning the study of violin at the age of three, she made her first public appearance in Jordan Hall, Boston, in her sixth year and her debut in Carnegie Hall, New York, at the age of nine.

After winning the Schubert Memorial Prize in 1929, she went to Europe for the first of six tours, including appearances with major orchestras in Amsterdam, Holland, Paris, Leningrad, Moscow and Stockholm. In the season of 1935-36 she returned to America for a transcontinental tour, appearing as soloist with the New York, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Washington, Cincinnati and St. Louis orchestras. She has played on several occasions with the Boston Orchestra in Boston, New York, and New Haven.

Programs for the week end follow:

Saturday 8.15 PM
Robert Shaw conducting
Cantata No. 50—Nun ist das Heil ... Bach
Symphony of Psalms .... Stravinsky
Requiem .... Mozart
Soloists—Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass.

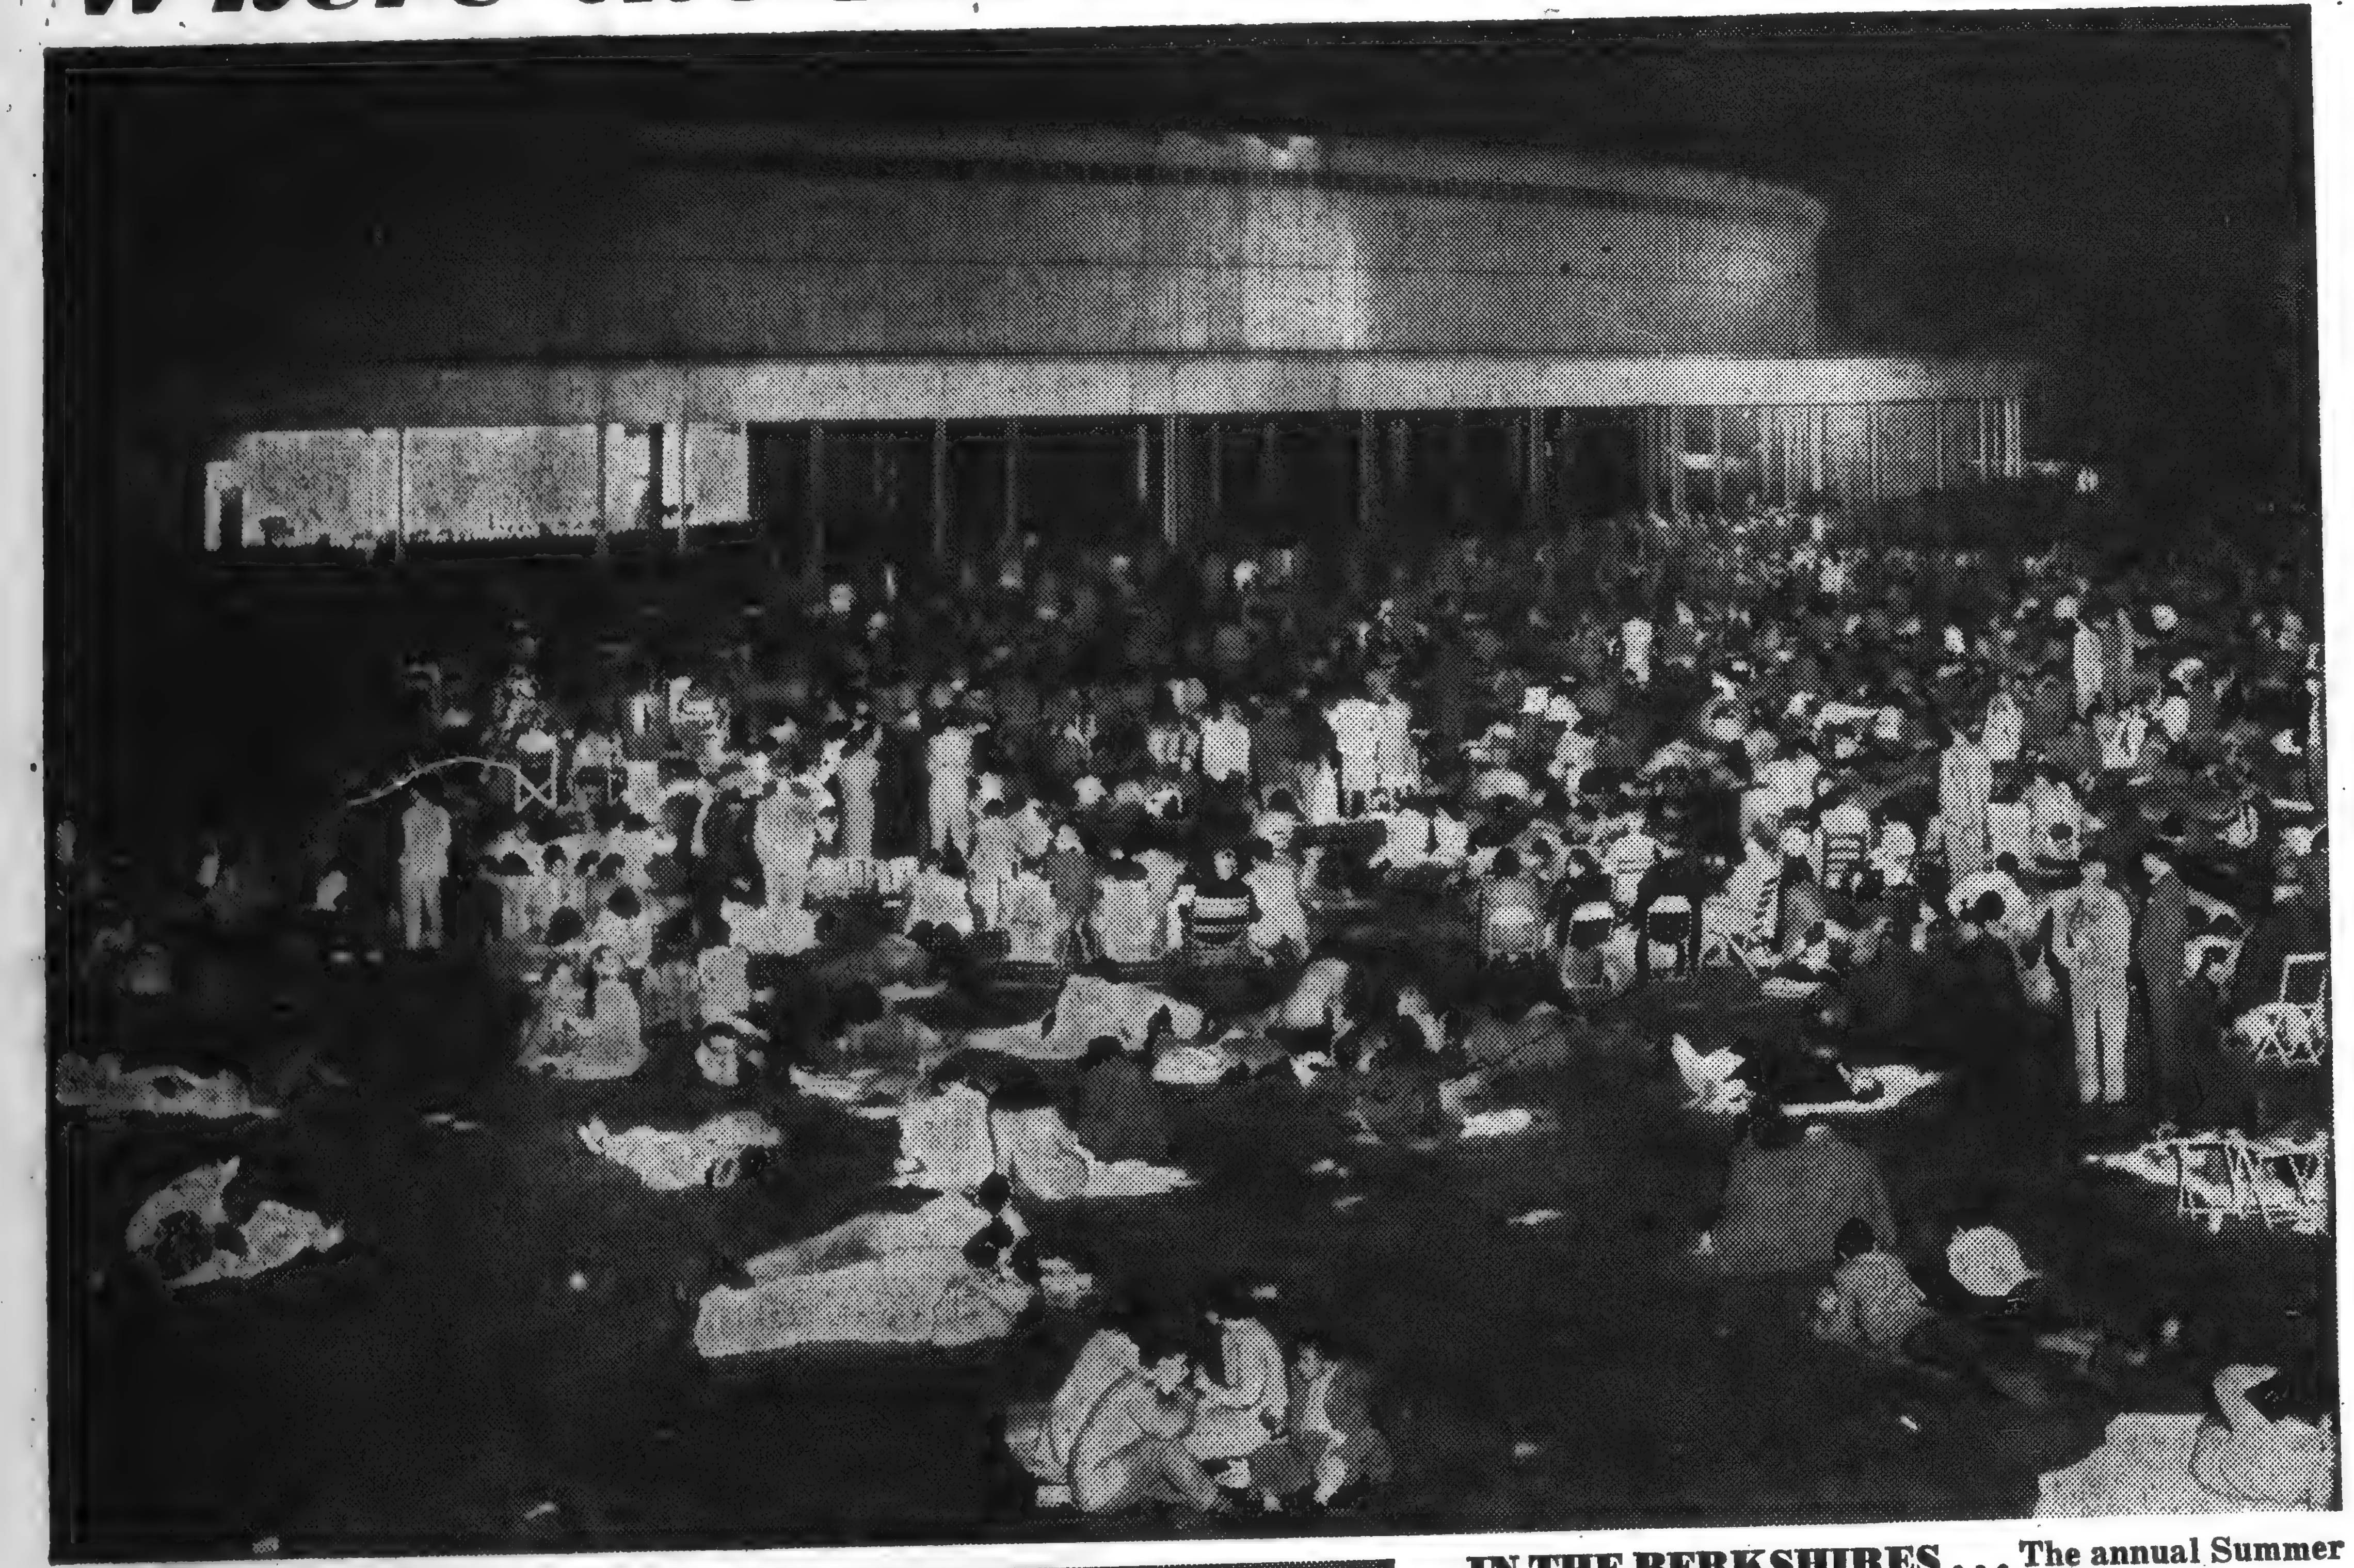
Sunday, 3.30 PM
Serge Koussevitzky conducting
Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra, with 2 pianos .... Martinu
Lukas Foss and Bernard Zighera, soloists
Pavane .... Ravel
Bolero .... Ravel
Symphony No. 4 in F minor..Tchaikovsky

Seats are on sale at the box office for the concerts tonight and Saturday. No tickets remain for the closing program on Sunday. A large audience is expected to listen from the lawn.

Becket

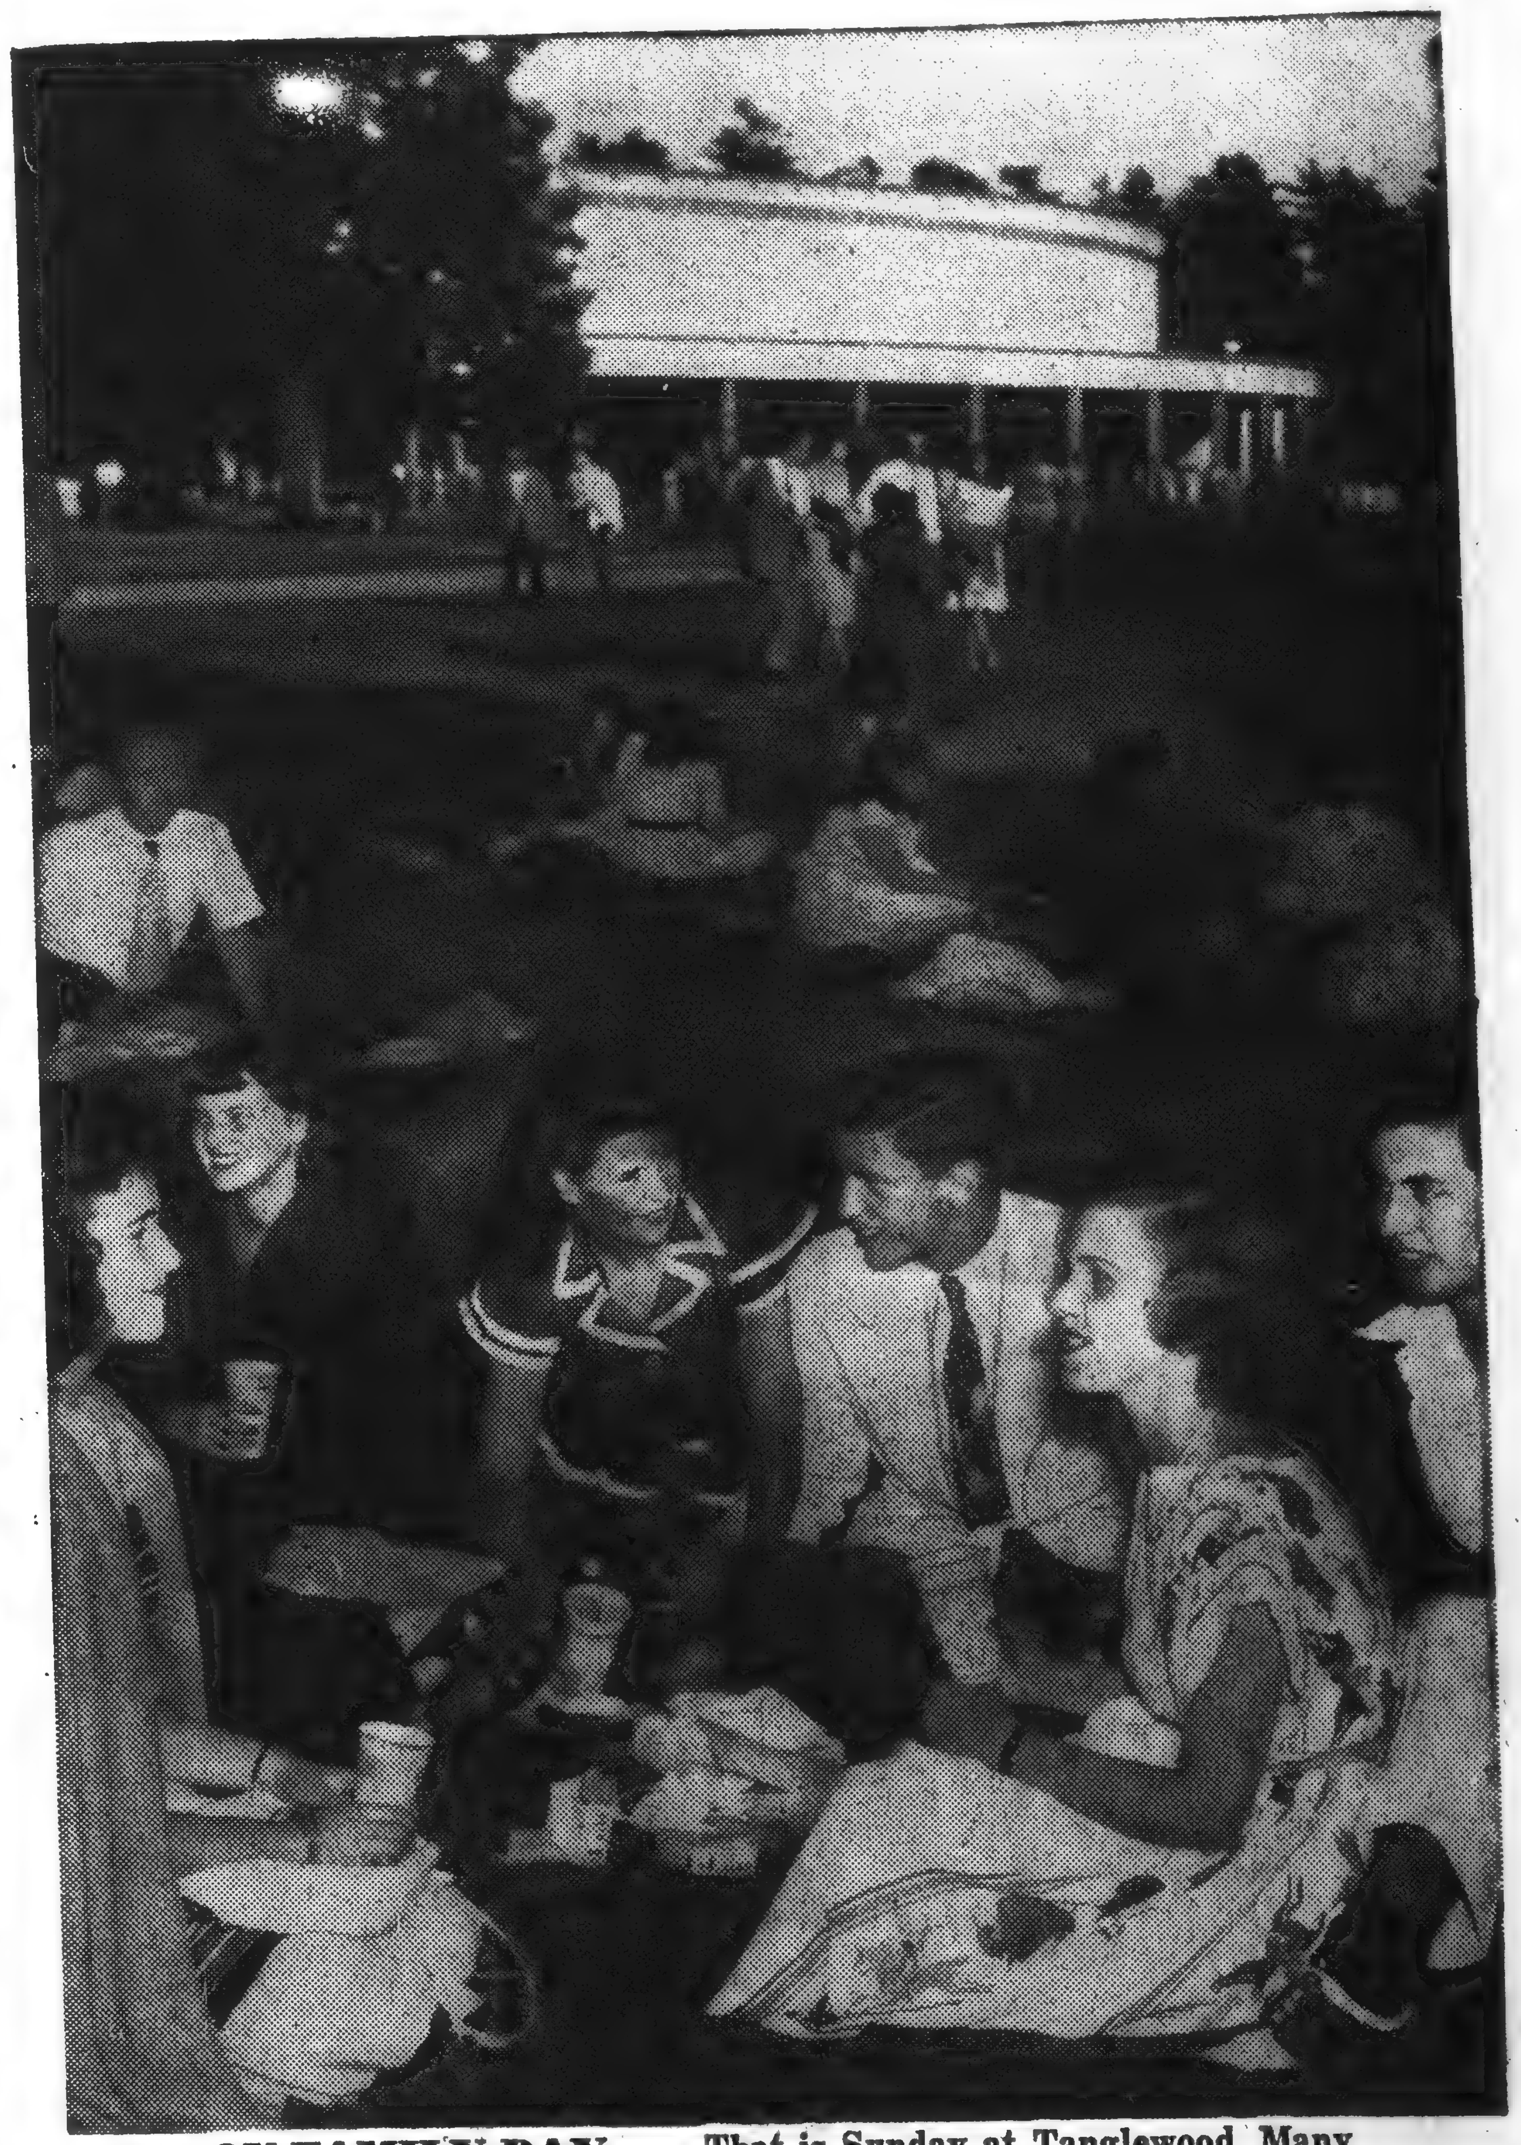
"Thunderhead," in technicolor, plus cartoon and short. Becket School, Monday 8 PM.—Adv. —11

Where the Music Lovers Gather



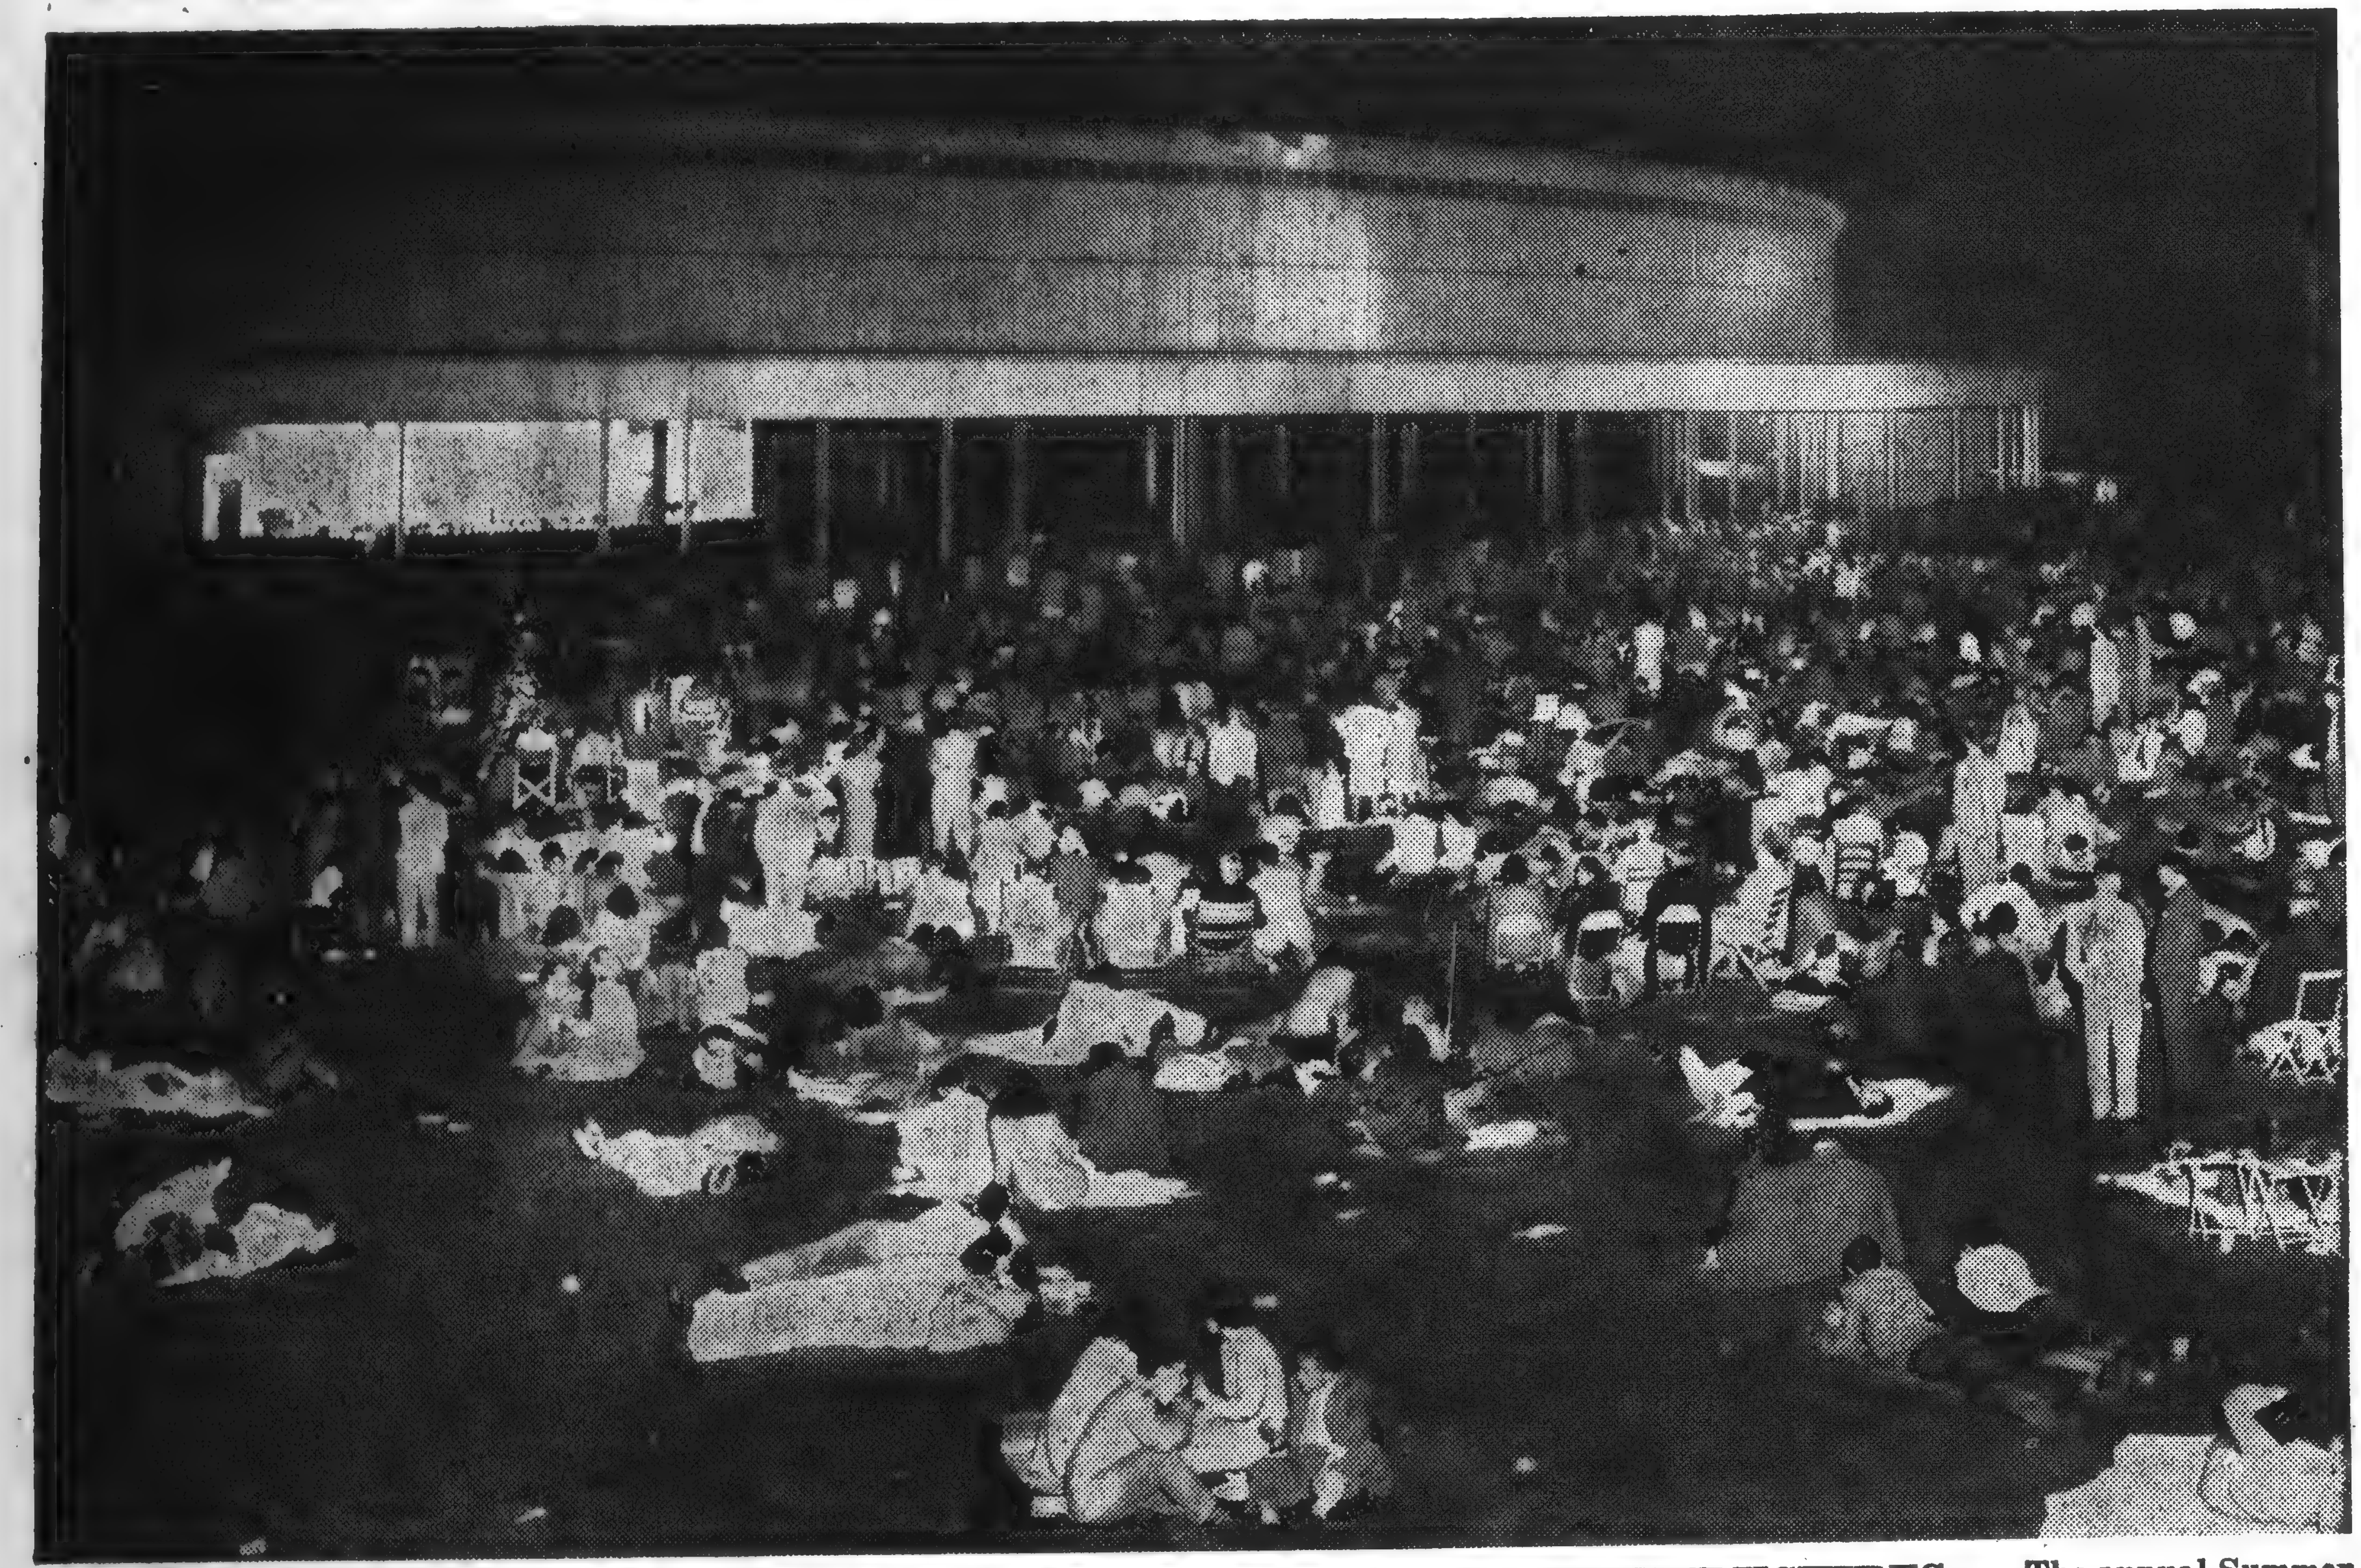
IN THE BERKSHIRES . . . The annual Summer musical event—the Berkshire Music Festival—is now approaching the close of its 13th season near Lenox, Mass. Here thousands of music lovers gather—in the huge Music Shed and on the adjacent lawns to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. On concert days and night—the throngs arrive early and an hour before concert time the lawn at Tanglewood swarms with sightseers. The Music Shed, which seats more than 6,000 persons, was built in 1938 at a cost of nearly $100,000. Eighty-two per cent of the contributions to the cost came from residents.

THE MAESTRO BOWS . . . Conductor Serge Koussevitzky and some of the members of the Boston Symphony take a bow at the close of a concert. The Berkshire Music Festival will close its 1947 season next Sunday. In addition to the concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky is in charge of the Summer school—the Berkshire Music Center. Instruction is offered in orchestral and choral conducting, orchestral playing and chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing and ensemble playing. Concerts are given by the students.



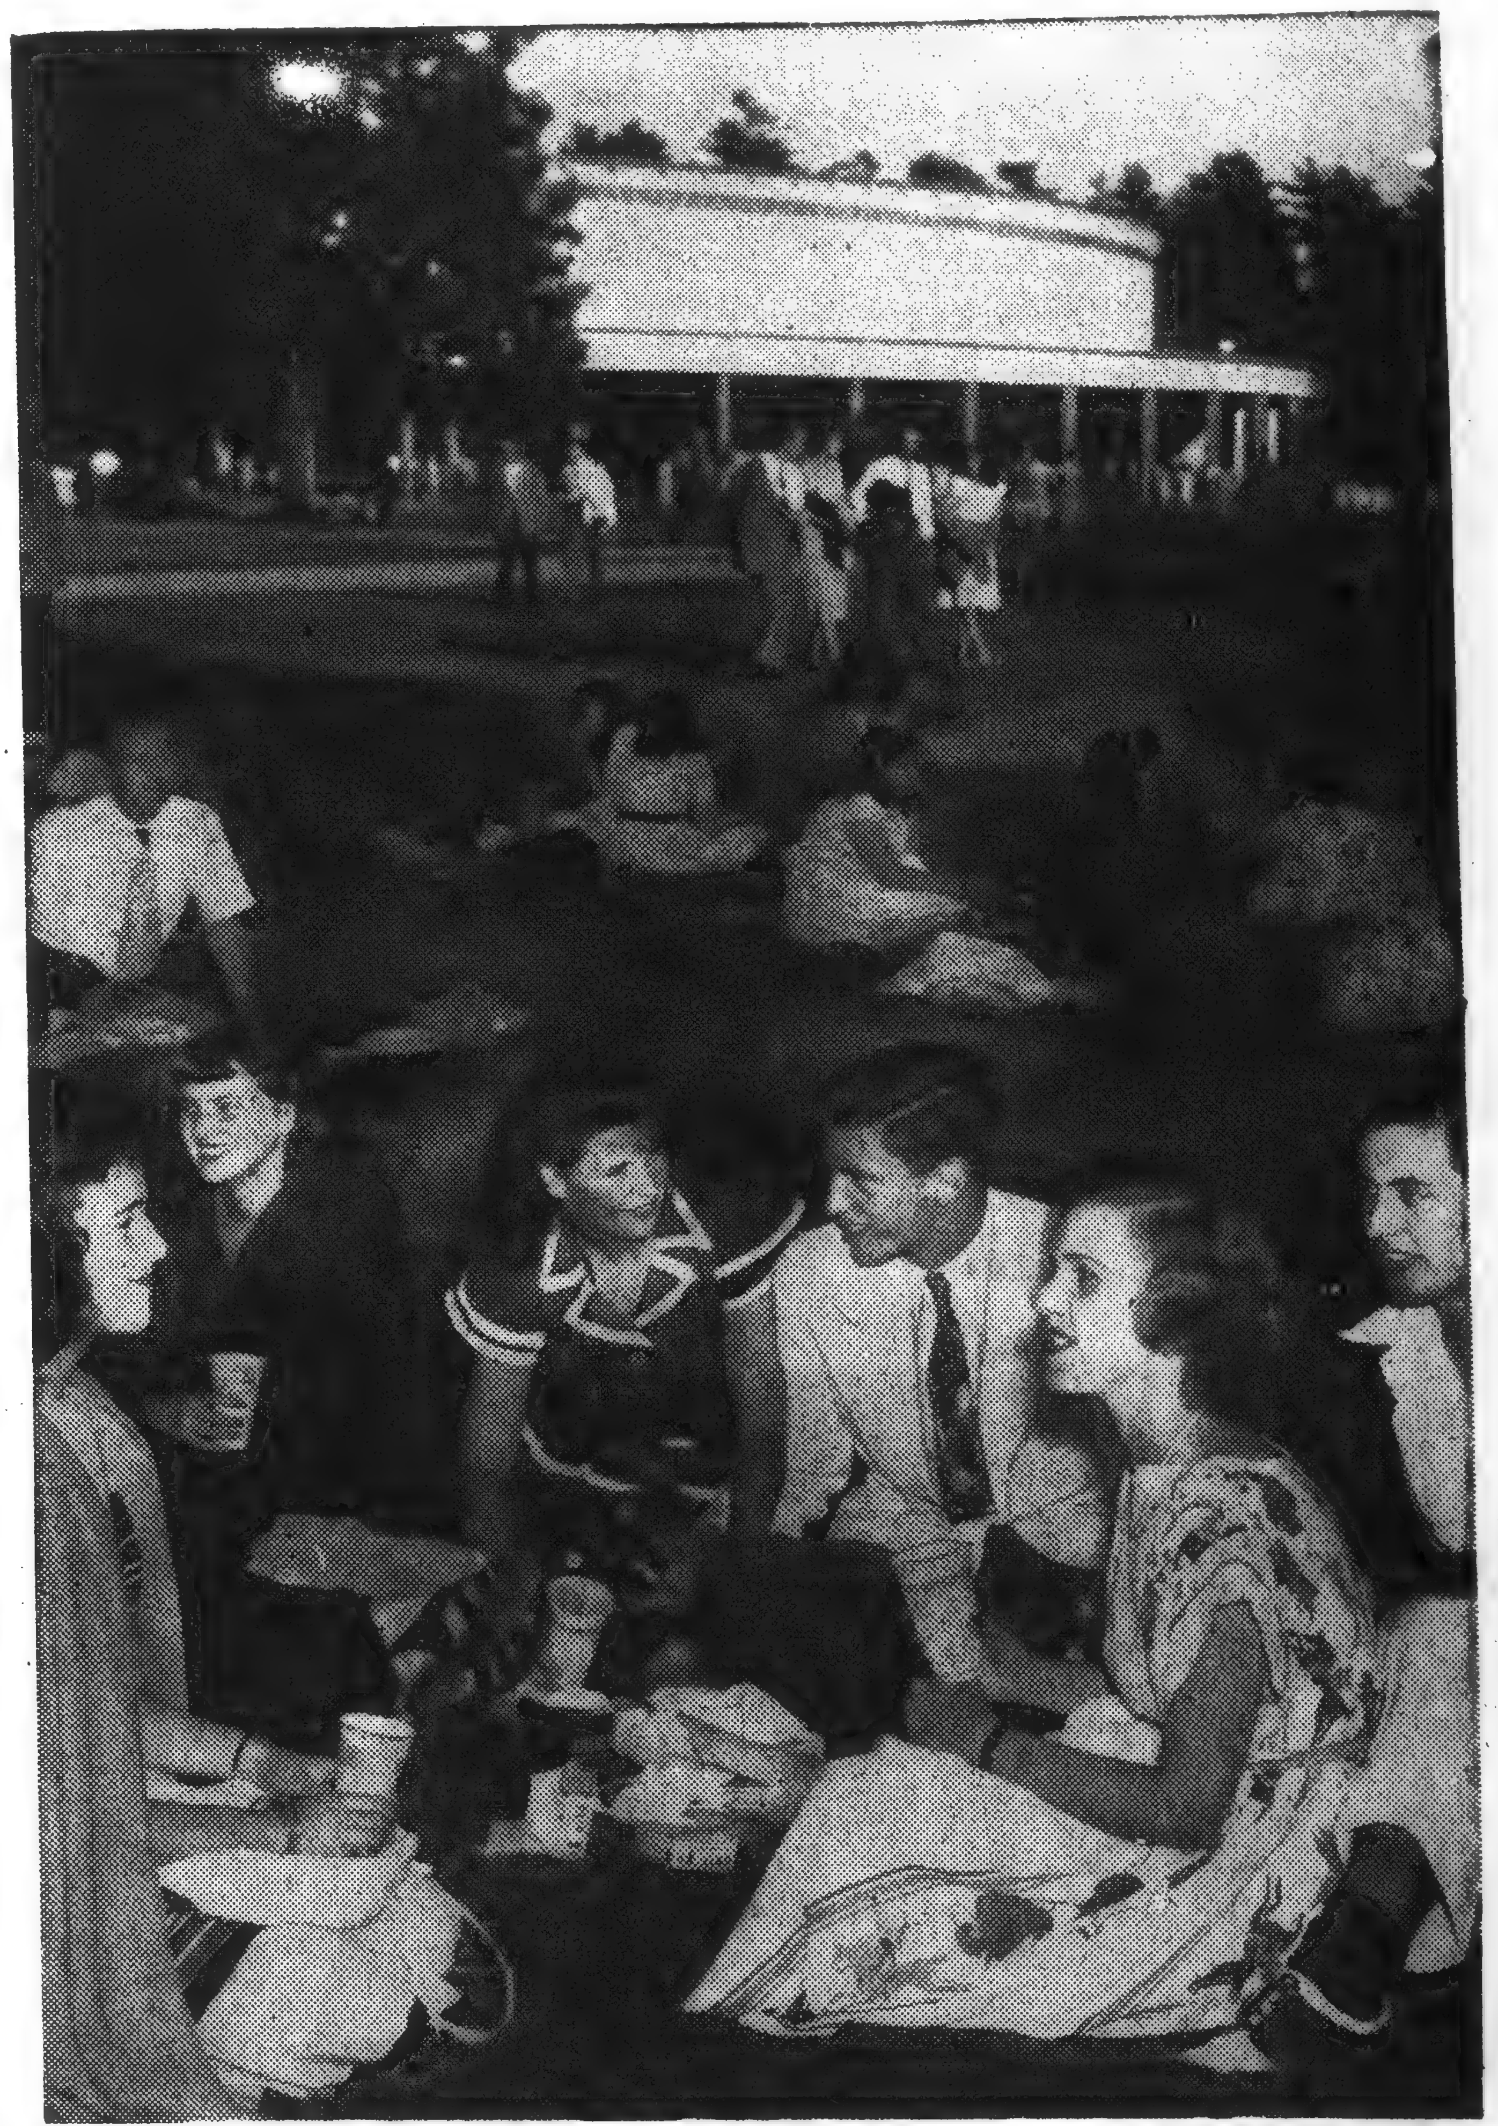
ON FAMILY DAY . . . That is Sunday at Tanglewood. Many groups have picnics on the spacious lawns. The concert patrons come from every State in the Union, according to a survey of parked automobiles. They take their music intently and likewise enjoy the beauty the Berkshires afford before and after concerts and during intermissions. Thousands of the concert-goers are young people—in their 'teens and twenties, giving ample proof that Young America isn't all for swing and jitterbug music.

Where the Music Lovers Gather



IN THE BERKSHIRES . . . The annual Summer musical event—the Berkshire Music Festival—is now approaching the close of its 13th season near Lenox, Mass. Here thousands of music lovers gather—in the huge Music Shed and on the adjacent lawns to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. On concert days and night—the throngs arrive early and an hour before concert time the lawn at Tanglewood swarms with sightseers. The Music Shed, which seats more than 6,000 persons, was built in 1938 at a cost of nearly $100,000. Eighty-two per cent of the contributions to the cost came from residents.

THE MAESTRO BOWS . . . Conductor Serge Koussevitzky and some of the members of the Boston Symphony take a bow at the close of a concert. The Berkshire Music Festival will close its 1947 season next Sunday. In addition to the concerts, Dr. Koussevit[illegible] in charge of the Summer school—the Berkshire Music Center. Instruction is offered in orchestral and choral conducting, orchestral playing and chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing and ensemble playing. Concerts are given by the students.



ON FAMILY DAY . . . That is Sunday at Tanglewood. Many groups have picnics on the spacious lawns. The concert patrons come from every State in the Union, according to a survey of parked automobiles. They take their music intently and likewise enjoy the beauty the Berkshires afford before and after concerts and during intermissions. Thousands of the concert-goers are young people—in their 'teens and twenties, giving ample proof that Young America isn't all for swing and jitterbug music.

6—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, Aug. 7, 1947 ★

Replica of Hawthorne's House Will Be Dedicated Next Year

Mrs. Guy Gannett Announces Plan To Christen Building at Special Federation Day at Music Center in 1948

The replica at Tanglewood of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "little red cottage" will be dedicated in the opening week of the Berkshire Music Center in 1948, according to tentative plans announced today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me.

In Lenox to inspect the progress of the building, Mrs. Gannett, former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, initiated early in her presidency the project of reconstructing the cottage to contain practice studios for the school.

"We will christen the building with a federation day at which we shall hope to have a large attendance from the New England States, and at least a scattered representation from all sections of the country," she said. The program, as tentatively outlined, will include a reception and tea, and formal dedication ceremonies. Winners of federation competitions who are or have been students at the Berkshire Music Center will be present.

"Four winners are in the student body this summer," Mrs. Gannett said. "They are Paula Lencher, who received our $1000 young artists vocal prize in 1945, and who sang Elettra in "Idomeneo"; Joan Brainerd, our 1947 young artist voice winner; Adele Addison, New England district winner in the Paul Lavalle scholarship auditions; and Ruthabeth Krueger, violinist, who won a federation scholarship for strings at the Berkshire Music Center in nationwide competitive examinations in 1942. Miss Addison and Miss Brainerd were members of the cast of the opera. We hope to have these young people and possibly others back for the dedication of the building."

To Restore Oval Garden

Mrs. Gannett added that the federation hopes to secure an impressive exhibit of Hawthorne memorabilia for display during the dedication week. Conferences have been held with representatives of the Berkshire Garden Center regarding the restoration of the oval garden in front of the "little red house" as it was in Hawthorne's day.

"We will invite our national president, Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, and other national officers to attend the dedication," said Mrs. Gannett, who is permanent chairman.

Originally it was the intention to complete the structure, to be an exact replica of the former Hawthorne house, so that the two practice studios which it will provide would be available for use in the current season, but unavoidable delay in securing a building permit, bad weather and labor shortages delayed construction. When finished it will contain the practice rooms seating 36 persons each, a reception room, a powder room and kitchenette facilities.

6—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Friday, Aug. 8, 1947 ★★

Bernstein Leads Orchestra As Final Festival Series Opens

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Boston Symphony orchestra played the 10th program in the 10th Berkshire Festival last night at Tanglewood with Leonard Bernstein occupying the podium as guest conductor for the second time this season. This was the first of the three concerts which comprise the final week end of what will probably be the Festival's record year.

An unsettled sky and various light showers in the early evening made the outlook rather indefinite, but by opening time clear weather seemed quite certain. The air was fairly heavy and humid for strings. The program consisted of two of the older classic symphonies placed around the Hindemith violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist. Miss Posselt played superbly. A relaxed confidence in her technique and her broad sweeping bow served her in the intricacies of her assignment. He tone was full and warm and her conception of the concerto completely within her grasp. Hindemith, however, has posed a most difficult task: his orchestration is copious to ponderous, and when he pits the solo violin against the French horn section, as occurs in the final movement, it behooves the listener to try to understand the music as a whole and not to try to tune in the soloist above the background. On that basis the music has a much greater appeal, at least in comparable instances. The slow movement allowed Miss Posselt's tone to be conveyed in its most distinctive and eloquent richness, as it had also been heard in the principal theme of the first movement.

Bernstein Knows the Score

Bernstein's offerings were the Haydn B flat symphony, No. 102, and the Schumann C major, No. 2. His control over the orchestra was absolute, and was based on a thorough knowledge of the scores and a well-planned system of communication with the orchestra. A conductor has two requisites: He must know how he would like the music at hand to sound, and he must be able to fashion the tone production of the orchestra to his mold. Bernstein is not the kind of conductor who beats time and then when he hears what comes out says: "That's what I want." He works the other way around. He says: "This is what I want," and proceeds to get it. We support this type of approach. It places the responsibility unequivocally on the shoulders of the conductor. He deserves complete praise, or blame, as the case may be, for the results.

Bernstein's Haydn (he conducted the Rochester orchestra in this same symphony in the Pittsfield High School auditorium last winter) leaves very little to chance. Practically every possibility is foreseen. He implanted a brilliance in the spirited movements and a vital intensity in the slow movements. He has still a bit of the path to traverse to convince his audience that he is playing from the heart. The same gesture reappears too obviously at given idioms. He worked over and polished the minuet to the point of dullness.

The Schumann reached incandescent salience in the heavenly adagio. The introduction to the first movement had not completely conveyed the same penetration. Bernstein's youthful zest in the scherzo demanded more than the Boston Symphony Orchestra first violin section could supply. The terrific pace caused the theme in the violins to become swallowed when they descended below the A string, and to become doubly obscured by too much tone in the cellos et al. We fear that lithe speed, accented rhythm and the impact of forceful, precise chords sometimes evokes indiscriminate enthusiasm, which, in turn, may influence artists to believe their efforts are worthy of maintainence and development. Bernstein's undebatable musical affluence includes some of the finest attributes possessed by any of the candidates of his age, but a convincing cognizance of the potentialities of the strings in particular and of the tonal results of the orchestra in general, rather than the visible means of producing them would assist in the progress he makes on every reappearance.

The last two concerts of the Festival will be conducted by Robert Shaw tomorrow evening and by Dr. Koussevitzky on Sunday afternoon.

Young Named B. & A. Freight Agent Here

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 34,815)

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

JUL 3 - 1947

Racket Record Intact

BOSTON, July 3. (AP) The Boston Symphony Orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "anvil chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who would raise voices loud enough—with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "World Peace Jubilee and International Music Festival" of 75 years ago.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the anvil chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah" from Handel's oratorio, "Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firemen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many of the music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 3 1947

Boston Chorus Lacks Volume And Anvils

BOSTON, July 3 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "anvil chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who would raise voices loud enough — with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the 1872 World Peace Jubilee and International Music Festival.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the anvil chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah!" from Handel's oratorio, "Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firemen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many of the music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D [illegible])

This Clipping From
CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

JUL 3 1947

Anvil Chorus Venture Failure in Boston

BOSTON, July 3 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city "Anvil Chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who would raise voices loud enough—with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "World Peace Jubilee and International Music festival" of nearly three-quarters century ago.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000 and Conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the Anvil Chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah!" from Handel's Oratorio, "Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firemen beating 200 anvils.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,480) (S 3,325)

This Clipping From HOBART, OKLA.
DEMOCRAT-CHIEF

JUN 29 1947

If All Goes Well, Conductor Hopes To Rock Nation With "Anvil Chorus"

BOSTON, une 27. —(U.P.)—If all goes well, Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Arthur Fielder hopes to make the loudest musical noise next Wednesday that the nation has heard in 55 years.

"I'm looking for 20,000 singers," he said. "I want to get them all together on the esplanade and duplicate the concert that rocked the world' staged by bandleader Patrick Saarfield Gilmore in 1872."

Fiedler, a little man with a huge imagination, said he had appealed to singing societies, glee clubs and choirs to join him and his symphony musicians in a rip-snorting rendition of the "Anvil Chorus"—with english words.

"I want everyone who likes to sing to send me a postcard and say they'll sing with me," Fiedler said. "I hope they come from New York and Kansas and Canada as they did for Gilmore."

Fiedler admitted he wouldn't have 2,000 instrumentalists as did the mustached maestro of the eighteenth century. He added glumly that he wouldn't have artillery and musketry to help him out as did Gilmore.

"But we'll have electric amplification and that should give us a lot of volume," he said triumphantly. "We aren't asking the fire department to join us like Gilmore did, because we have a giant electric organ that can make out-of-this-world noises."

For Gilmore's ear-buster, a special colleseum was constructed near Boston's park square. It held the huge band, 20,000 vocalists and an audience of 40,000. The ruckus was to celebrate the end of the Franco-Prussian war.

Fiedler's show will be outdoors. If it doesn't rock the world, as Gilmore claimed his extravaganza would, it certainly should rock Boston.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,813)

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

JUL 3 - 1947

Boston Symphony Needed Audience For 'Anvil Chorus'

BOSTON, July 3 (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "Anvil Chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who would raise voices loud enough, with the beat of anvils, to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "world peace jubilee and international music festival" of nearly three quarters century ago.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and Conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the Anvil Chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah!" from Handel's oratorio, "Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firemen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many of the music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 7,654)

This Clipping From
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

JUL 3 1947

Anvil Chorus Only a Whisper

BOSTON, July 3 (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "anvil chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who would raise voices loud enough—with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "world peace jubilee and international music festival" of nearly three quarters century ago.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and Conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the Anvil chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah!" from Handel's oratorio, "Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firemen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 9,568)

This Clipping From TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 3 - 1947

Musicians Try Hard In Anvil Chorus

BOSTON, July 3 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "anvil chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who raise voices loud enough—with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "World Peace Jubilee and International Music Festival" of nearly three quarters century ago.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the anvil chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and "Hallelujah" from Handel's oratorio, Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the Jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firmen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many of the music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 129,670)

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS

JUL 5 - 1947

DISC Discussions

By VINCENT E. CLARK

The recent spell of hot weather may have its effect on those who like to trip the light fantastic and there is no more appropriate music for this than the Latin motif, as supplied by none other than that master of such music, Xavier Cugat. This week Columbia has released a new record by him and his boys, with Buddy Clark doing the vocals, of two Latin numbers. The first, The Story of Sorrento, provides a melodic tune with pleasant lyrics, while the other, Hugo and Igo, has a humorous [illegible] the danceable tempo that has made Cugat such a favorite.

Bringing back a number of the favorite dance tunes of a few years ago, Les Brown's Columbia album, Sentimental Journey, will provide a favorite grouping for an evening's pastime. Brown, aided by the voices of Doris Day and Bunch Stone, as well as his well-trained orchestra, gives out with such numbers as Sentimental Journey, Twilight Time, Bizet Has His Day, A Good Man is Hard to Find, Mexican Hat Dance, Out of Nowhere, Daybreak Serenade and Leap F[illegible]

[illegible] issued, for those [illegible] Bach's compositions, an excellent album recorded by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of two of the master's suites, No. 2 and No. 3, in the latter of which occurs the famous Air for G String. This album was recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., where the Boston orchestra plays its annual summer schedule, and it is an excellent performance.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,362) (S 94,069)

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR

JUL 3 - 1947

11:30—WFMJ — Selections from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the first and second movements of Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 2, E minor, played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, are to be offered on "Orchestra Hall."

Friday

10:25—WFMJ—Lawrence Phelps Tower, authority on early American history who claims that Betsy Ross did not make the first American flag, will be the guest on "Magazine of the Air."

7:00 p. m.—WRRN—Songs America has been singing on July 4 since the first Independence Day will be offered by Burl Ives.

7:45—WFMJ—Esther Hamilton is to give a history of "The Man on the Monument." Robert Witt, son of Attorney and Mrs. Alvy T. Witt of 353 Arlington St., will play "Rhapsody in Blue." The 17-year-old pianist is a pupil of Sister Joan of the Ursuline Community.

8:00—WFMJ—The well-known picture, "The Spirit of '76," was painted in Ohio by an Ohioan, and its history will be told on "The Ohio Story."

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

DEERFIELD REVIEW
DEERFIELD, ILL
7/3/47

New Soprano To Be Ravinia 2nd Week Soloist

A new soprano and a new symphonic work will be presented at Ravinia during the second week of the twelfth annual Festival, with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. A complete listing of next week's programs is offered on Page 5 of this issue.

The soprano is Dorothy Dow, who made her professional debut just two months ago with Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra and has since won for herself considerable acclaim on Broadway in Virgil Thompson's "Message from Home".

The symphonic work is Paul Creston's "Symphony No. 2, Opus 35" which was introduced by the New

(Continued from page 3)

York Philharmonic under Rodzinski in 1944.

The week's series of concerts opens on Tuesday evening, July 8, at 8:30 o'clock, when Ormandy presents the Bach-Ormandy "Passacaglia in C Minor" in its first Ravinia programming, followed by the Brahms "Symphony No. 3," and the Beethoven "Symphony No. 5."

Miss Dow will make the first of two appearances at the Thursday evening, July 10, concert at 8:30 o'clock, singing three solos—Verdi's "Pace, Pace" from "La Forza del Destina," Massenet's "Il est doux" from "Herodiade," and Verdi's "Ritorna Vincitor" from "Aida."

The evening's concert will open with the Bach-Ormandy "Toccata in C Major" which Ormandy introduced at Ravinia in 1942. The Schubert Seventh symphony will occupy the entire second half of the program.

On Saturday evening, July 12, at 8:30, Ormandy will play the Brahms "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" and will follow it with the Creston "Symphony No. 2, Opus 35." This work, which has also been presented by the Boston Symphony, is in two movements, ~~Introduction~~ and Song and Interlude and Dance.

The second half of the program will be devoted to the Franck "Symphony in D Minor."

With Miss Dow as soloist, an all-Wagner program will be given on Sunday afternoon, July 13, at 4:00. The opening number will be the Prelude to "The Mastersingers".

Miss Dow will then sing "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin" and Isolde's Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," the orchestra playing the Prelude from the same opera. The second half of the program will open with "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and "Siegfried's Death and Funeral Music," from "Damnation of the Gods."

Miss Dow will conclude the program with Brunnhilde's "Immolation Scene."

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Baltimore, Md.
Afro-American
7/5/47

Thomas to Conduct Boston Symph at Next Year's 'Pops'

A. Jack Thomas, composer-musician, has been invited to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra next year at Symphony Hall through the entire porgram of the fifth annual Colored American Night's "pops" concert.

He has just returned from the "Bean City," where last week he directed the orchestra in a number, "Dance Calinda," composed by 30-year-old Ulyssey Kay of Columbia University.

This will be the first time that a colored conductor has been invited to return and conduct a whole program. Clarence Cameron White and Dean Dixon, both have directed the Boston orchestra in previous years.

Prior to the concert, Mr. Thomas gave a 20-minute talk over the Radio Station WDHD on music and interracial cooperation.

He was entertained at the summer home of Attorney and Mrs. William S. West at Cape Cod, and at the Businessmen's Club in Boston, with Arthur Freidler, regular conductor of the symphony orchestra, among the guests.

He was accompanied to Boston by his wife and Mrs. Blanche McRae, a sister-in-[illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 9,568)

This Clipping From TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 3 - 1947

Musicians Try Hard In Anvil Chorus

BOSTON, July 3 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's hopes of approaching the noise made by the city's "anvil chorus" of 1872 fell short by a lot of sound last night.

The idea was to obtain about 20,000 chorus singers who raise voices loud enough—with the beat of anvils—to give off sound waves to compare with those of the "World Peace Jubilee and International Music Festival" of nearly three quarters century ago.

Only 38 registered for the chorus.

Critics agreed, however, that the audience, estimated by police at 34,000, and conductor Arthur Fiedler's musicians made a brave try as voices were raised in rendition of the anvil chorus from Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore" and 'Hallelujah" from Handel's oratorio, Messiah."

But their efforts were described by the experts as nothing compared to the Jubilee event. That festival had 20,000 choristers and red-shirted Boston firmen beating 200 anvils.

Last night there were but two anvils, and many of the music lovers were described as a little too timid with their vocal talent.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 129,670)

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS

JUL 5 - 1947

DISC Discussions

By VINCENT E. CLARK

The recent spell of hot weather may have its effect on those who like to trip the light fantastic and there is no more appropriate music for this than the Latin motif, as supplied by none other than that master of such music, Xavier Cugat. This week Columbia has released a new record by him and his boys, with Buddy Clark doing the vocals, of two Latin numbers. The first, The Story of Sorrento, provides a melodic tune with pleasant lyrics, while the other, Hugo and Igo, has a humorour lilt in the danceable tempo that has made Cugat such a favorite.

Bringing back a number of the favorite dance tunes of a few years ago, Les Brown's Columbia album, Sentimental Journey, will provide a favorite grouping for an evening's pastime. Brown, aided by the voices of Doris Day and Bunch Stone, as well as his well-trained orchestra, gives out with such numbers as Sentimental Journey, Twilight Time, Bizet Has His Day, A Good Man is Hard to Find, Mexican Hat Dance, Out of Nowhere, Daybreak Serenade and Leap Frog.

[illegible] has issued, for those [illegible] Bach's compositions, an excellent album recorded by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of two of the master's suites, No. 2 and No. 3, in the latter of which occurs the famous Air for G String. This album was recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., where the Boston orchestra plays its annual summer schedule, and it is an excellent performance.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 77,362) (S 94,069)

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR

JUL 3 - 1947

11:30—WFMJ — Selections from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the first and second movements of Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 2, E minor, played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, are to be offered on "Orchestra Hall."

Friday

10:25—WFMJ—Lawrence Phelps Tower, authority on early American history who claims that Betsy Ross did not make the first American flag, will be the guest on "Magazine of the Air."

7:00 p. m.—WRRN—Songs America has been singing on July 4 since the first Independence Day will be offered by Burl Ives.

7:45—WFMJ—Esther Hamilton is to give a history of "The Man on the Monument." Robert Witt, son of Attorney and Mrs. Alvy T. Witt of 353 Arlington St., will play "Rhapsody in Blue." The 17-year-old pianist is a pupil of Sister Joan of the Ursuline Community.

8:00—WFMJ—The well-known picture, "The Spirit of '76," was painted in Ohio by an Ohioan, and its history will be told on "The Ohio Story."

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Baltimore, Md.
Afro-American
7/5/47

Thomas to Conduct Boston Symph at Next Year's 'Pops'

A. Jack Thomas, composer-musician, has been invited to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra next year at Symphony Hall through the entire porgram of the fifth annual Colored American Night's "pops" concert.

He has just returned from the "Bean City," where last week he directed the orchestra in a number, "Dance Calinda," composed by 30-year-old Ulyssey Kay of Columbia University.

This will be the first time that a colored conductor has been invited to return and conduct a whole program. Clarence Cameron White and Dean Dixon, both have directed the Boston orchestra in previous years.

Prior to the concert, Mr. Thomas gave a 20-minute talk over the Radio Station WDHD on music and interracial cooperation.

He was entertained at the summer home of Attorney and Mrs. William S. West at Cape Cod, and at the Businessmen's Club in Boston, with Arthur Freidler, regular conductor of the symphony orchestra, among the guests.

He was accompanied to Boston by his wife and Mrs. Blanche McRae, a sister-in-law of

---

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

DEERFIELD REVIEW
DEERFIELD, ILL
7/3/47

New Soprano To Be Ravinia 2nd Week Soloist

A new soprano and a new symphonic work will be presented at Ravinia during the second week of the twelfth annual Festival, with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. A complete listing of next week's programs is offered on Page 5 of this issue.

The soprano is Dorothy Dow, who made her professional debut just two months ago with Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra and has since won for herself considerable acclaim on Broadway in Virgil Thompson's "Message from Home".

The symphonic work is Paul Creston's "Symphony No. 2, Opus 35" which was introduced by the New

(Continued from page 3)

York Philharmonic under Rodzinski in 1944.

The week's series of concerts opens on Tuesday evening, July 8, at 8:30 o'clock, when Ormandy presents the Bach-Ormandy "Passacaglia in C Minor" in its first Ravinia programming, followed by the Brahms "Symphony No. 3," and the Beethoven "Symphony No. 5."

Miss Dow will make the first of two appearances at the Thursday evening, July 10, concert at 8:30 o'clock, singing three solos—Verdi's "Pace, Pace" from "La Forza del Destina," Massenet's "Il est doux" from "Herodiade," and Verdi's "Ritorna Vincitor" from "Aida."

The evening's concert will open with the Bach-Ormandy "Toccata in C Major" which Ormandy introduced at Ravinia in 1942. The Schubert Seventh symphony will occupy the entire second half of the program.

On Saturday evening, July 12, at 8:30, Ormandy will play the Brahms "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" and will follow it with the Creston "Symphony No. 2, Opus 35." This work, which has also been presented by the Boston Symphony, is in two movements, Introduction and Song and Interlude and Dance.

The second half of the program will be devoted to the Franck "Symphony in D Minor."

With Miss Dow as soloist, an all-Wagner program will be given on Sunday afternoon, July 13, at 4:00. The opening number will be the Prelude to "The Mastersingers".

Miss Dow will then sing "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin" and Isolde's Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," the orchestra playing the Prelude from the same opera. The second half of the program will open with "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and "Siegfried's Death and Funeral Music," from "Damnation of the Gods."

Miss Dow will conclude the program with Brunnhilde's "Immolation Scene."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,884) (S 51,201)

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KAN.
CAPITAL

JUL 6 1947

Tanglewood Bach Album Is Now Being Released

Bach Suites No. 2 and No. 3, recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the Berkshire Music Festival at the Tanglewood theater in Lenox, Mass., last summer are now being released by Victor in album form.

With Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ conducting and Georges Laurent, solo flutist, the suites are performed with the same instrumentation as that for which the composer wrote, 225 years ago.

Laurent's liquid solo passages are heard in the second suite and the third includes the famous "Air for G String." Both are, strictly speaking, chamber music but have been considered of concert rank in this country.

For listeners who revel in the provocative Latin rhythms, Victor has also produced four double ten-inch platters, bringing typical rhumba and congo numbers played by Desi Arnaz and orchestra. They include: "Tabu" and "La Comparista," in which Arnaz takes the vocal spots; "Tico Tico," the firey Brazilian samba with Rene Touzet at the piano and the classic "Peanut Vendor" which inspires a rhumba with a peanut whistle.

Instrumental numbers are: "Siboney," "Green Eyes," "Brazil and "Babalu." In the latter, there is just a touch of Arnaz doing a bit of vocal—not exactly as an obbligato.—Ki

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 4 - 1947

Six Concerts Next Week, Tanglewood

Students and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, the 13th, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, the 15th, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katim, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and Piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all students programs.

The chorus of department 5 will give a concert at 4.30 Thursday afternoon, the 10th and in the evening at 8.15 the students of department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department 2 will give its second program Friday evening, the 11th at 8.15 in the Festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 369,047) (S 376,981)

This Clipping From
DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

JUL 6 - 1947

THE NEW RECORDS

Quantity Is High and Quality, Too

LOOKING OVER THE RELEASES of recent weeks by RCA Victor, one is impressed by the quantity as well as the quality of albums and single recordings to come out of the pressing rooms.

Among them, to which space accords but brief mention, are Beecham's ingenious and musical melange of Handel compositions under the title "The Great Elopement" with the London Philharmonic.

Others are Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, which was heard here during last season's symphony season; The Bach Cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," with the estimable RCA Victor Chorale under Robert Shaw, and a set of some of the noblest of oratorio arias, sung by Norman Cordon, including excerpts from "The Messiah," "The Creation," "St. Matthew Passion," "St. Paul" and "Elijah."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 14,217)

This Clipping From
BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES

JUL 5 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By LEONARD LYONS

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall St. bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up." . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

* * *

LEONARD LYONS

OBIT: George Summerlin, the State Department's Chief of Protocol—who died this week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

* * *

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-producing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky scholarships.

* * *

SCIENCE DEPT.: In the Stork Club Wednesday night Charles Cambridge Green, the jeweler, was expressing his customary skepticism about all people and people's behavior. "But take a man like Einstein," said Paul Stewart, the director. "In 1903 Einstein predicted that in the last week of June, 1947, a new star would appear in the sky" . . . "So?" Green scoffed . . . "So," said Stewart, "last week the scientists looked in the sky with their big glasses, and there was the star" . . . "Proves nothing," Green stated. "The kid was guessin'."

* * *

SOCIAL NOTE: Ferenc Molnar tells of a night in Venice, years ago, when Morris Gest gave a party on a boat he had hired for the Canal Festival, in the Grand Canal, where 4,000 gondolas and other craft were participating in the festival. Gest noticed a man he knew standing at the rail of the next boat. He shouted greetings, to Charles Evans Hughes, and then added: "Meet Ferenc Molnar, the famous playwright and wit" . . . Hughes bowed in acknowledgment. "Say something to Mr. Hughes," whispered Gest. Molnar, mindful only of the Venetian moon and the music, finally said something to Hughes. He shouted: "Sing 'Valencia' " . . . "And if I ever meet Charles Evans Hughes again," sighed Molnar, "I must ask him something which has puzzled me ever since. For all I saw was his beard moving. I don't know whether he was singing 'Valencia,' or saying that he didn't know the words."

* * *

THE ORIGIN
ROMEIK
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 21,369) (S 24,631)

This Clipping From
DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

JUL 6 - 1947

New Records In Review: Concert, Popular

By JOHN V. BLALOCK

BACH: SUITES No. 2, in B. Minor, and No. 3, in D. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, conductor; Georges Laurent, solo flute. RCA Victor: M or DM-1123; five 12-inch records.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have already made the concert record public conscious of the Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Concert Theater. This was notably done with the recording (RCA Victor M or DM-1050) of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and No. 4. Some critics complained that they found the recording somewhat thin because of the relatively small number of players (approximately 30) used by Koussevitzky. But the average listener immediately detected a pronounced improvement in the acoustical quality of the Tanglewood recording.

Other recordings made at Tanglewood by the same company of artists have met with generally enthusiastic praise. Yet RCA Victor's release of the Bach Suites for Orchestra No. 2 and No. 3, also by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, seems to me to make the advantages of the Tanglewood Concert Theater more apparent. And since this serves as a replacement for the superb recordings by Adolf Busch and his Chamber Players of the same works, added significance is placed on the release.

Again, as in the recordings of the Brandenburg Concertos, Koussevitzky's orchestra is reduced in size, to good advantage. The Suites for Orchestra were written for a small orchestra (in comparison with the orchestras of today), and it is only logical to believe that they are heard in truer style when performed by a more conservative body of players. This is more true of the Suite No. 2, since in the Suite No. 3 parts for the tympani and trumpets were scored. If there are some evidences of thinness, they are only of academic interest; the average listener will find ample body and richness in sounds and tone.

The famous Boston strings do, however, slip a little on popular "Air for G String" in Suite No. . I don't know what happened; perhaps the engineers faltered or Koussevitzsky held the strings in too strict obedience. And, too, Koussevitzky may have attempted to cut away the popular fringes that have been added by modern orchestras. But, in any case, something important is lacking; the playing of the "Air" is not in keeping with the general excellence of the recording.

Georges Laurent, first flutist of the Boston Symphony, is heard in the solo parts of the Suite No. 2 in extremely good tone. This album is indispensable to collections of Bach recordings.

* * *

RUSSIAN MELODIES. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, Ralph Berkowitz, piano. Columbia Masterworks M-MM-684; three 10-inch records.

The famous "Five" in Russian music are represented in the romantic idom by Gregor Piatigorsky, renowned 'celloist, and Pianist Ralph Berkowitz in this album. Cui with "Orientale," Rachmaninoff with "Vocalise," Anton Rubenstein with "Melody in F," Rimsky-Korsakov with "Song of India" (taken from the opera, "Sadko"), and Tschaikovsky with "None But the Lonely Heart" and "Chanson Triste."

The combination of 'cello and piano is sometimes hard to take; some recordings would indicate that recording engineers are greatly at odds as to the proper way to blend the two. It is therefore, a pleasant experience that comes from listening to this Columbia Masterworks recording. The 'cello and piano don't vie with each other, although it is obvious that the former is the big voice and is intended to be the solo instrument. Piatigorsky and Berkowitz, through excellent playing and mutual respect, prove that joint talent can be as one. And the engineers prove that good 'cello-piano recordings can be made.

* * *

On The Popular Side

Frankie Carle puts emphasis on the dance beat in his new Columbia album, "Carle Comes Calling" (S-129; four 10-inch records). Joined by the "rhythm section," he takes the piano through the tunes: "Star Dust," Canadian Capers," "I'll Get By," "Deep Purple," "Penthouse Serenade," "I Want a Girl," "Chopin's Polonaise in Boogie," and "If You Were the Only Girl." The album is what Carle fans ordered.

* * *

Columbia Records, Inc., has established a new "Archives" series, to "make available to the public many of the greatest records in the history of the recording industry." The first to be issued is a record made by Al Jolson with Guy Lombardo's orchestra in 1932: "April Showers" and "Rock-A-Bye Your Baby with a Dixie Melody." It's a gem. Well recorded, it offers Jolson in a good vigorous voice which pulls your ears to it. The movies have brought back a great deal of popularity to Jolson, and it is records like this one which will keep us from neglecting Al again.

NAL
IKE
INGS
ORK 11, N.Y.
-8860
493,080)
From CALIF.

947 er music pro

n added to the Berkshire Festiod, Mass. Sponzabeth Sprague tion of the Liss, the concerts by the Gordon the Albeneri ogram includes Schnabel.) and odwind Ensem-

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,884) (S 51,201)

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KAN.
CAPITAL

JUL 6 1947

Tanglewood Bach Album Is Now Being Released

Bach Suites No. 2 and No. 3, recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the Berkshire Music Festival at the Tanglewood theater in Lenox, Mass., last summer are now being released by Victor in album form.

With Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ conducting and Georges Laurent, solo flutist, the suites are performed with the same instrumentation as that for which the composer wrote, 225 years ago.

Laurent's liquid solo passages are heard in the second suite and the third includes the famous "Air for G String." Both are, strictly speaking, chamber music but have been considered of concert rank in this country.

For listeners who revel in the provocative Latin rhythms, Victor has also produced four double ten-inch platters, bringing typical rhumba and congo numbers played by Desi Arnaz and orchestra. They include: "Tabu" and "La Comparista," in which Arnaz takes the vocal spots; "Tico Tico," the firey Brazilian samba with Rene Touzet at the piano and the classic "Peanut Vendor" which inspires a rhumba with a peanut whistle.

Instrumental numbers are: "Siboney," "Green Eyes," "Brazil and "Babalu." In the latter, there is just a touch of Arnaz doing a bit of vocal—not exactly as an obbligato.—Ki

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 4 - 1947

Six Concerts Next Week, Tanglewood

Students and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, the 13th, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, the 15th, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katims, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and Piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all students programs.

The chorus of department 5 will give a concert at 4.30 Thursday afternoon, the 10th and in the evening at 8.15 the students of department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department 2 will give its second program Friday evening, the 11th at 8.15 in the Festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 369,047) (S 376,981)

This Clipping From
DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 6 - 1947

THE NEW RECORDS

Quantity Is High and Quality, Too

LOOKING OVER THE RELEASE of recent weeks by RCA Victor, one is impressed by the quantity as well as the quality of albums and single recordings to come out of the pressing rooms.

Among them, to which space [illegible] but brief mention, are Beecham's ingenious and musical melange of Handel compositions under the title "The Great Elopement" with the London Philharmonic.

Others are Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, which was heard here during last season's symphony season; The Bach Cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," with the estimable RCA Victor Chorale under Robert Shaw, and a set of some of the noblest of oratorio arias, sung by Norman Cordon, including excerpts from "The Messiah," "The Creation," "St. Matthew Passion," "St. Paul" and "Elijah."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 14,217)

This Clipping From
BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES

JUL 5 - 1947

K THE BOAT

ailroad Wre
Human Erro

N HEATH respondent)

—Most train ac-by the carelessorkmen, expert ns the yellow," when the train he ignores sig-danger ahead.

rders, in haste umes he knows

ks a switch, or t looking at the e it is set right.
rgets to change his train is lances casually ls to see that is wrong. A besn't think it ugh to cause

ion. A checker enough to disshipper did not securely.
wreck. People e injured. And is a railroader fireman, a flag-f 89 Interstate ission reports t have taken ast 13 months which 149 were k injured, were essness of train dispatchers and caution signals crashed the rear lander. A Jerse neer (71 years o a light, crashed a ger train, killed o

The Broadway
neer didn't stop ded into the rear
Limited. Three d

That's just a sa Excessive spee tions where both mon sense say "
47 and injured 71
cidents.

The Powhatan on a 35-mile curv hurt. A Long going 20 miles a where he was re to stop on sight.
motive—two dead

A special on loaded with couldn't stop at meeting place, ra half past, crash another train—on

Speed on

The Red Arro mile curve at hurt. The Tra
40-mile curve at —six dead; 132 h

Careless switch injured 12 in 13

Seven were ki
jured because t understood, forgo ders to meet oth track roads

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 21,369) (S 24,631)

This Clipping From DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

JUL 6 - 1947

New Records In Review: Concert, Popular

By JOHN V. BLALOCK

BACH: SUITES No. 2, in B. Minor, and No. 3, in D. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, conductor; Georges Laurent, solo flute. RCA Victor: M or DM-1123; five 12-inch records.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have already made the concert record public conscious of the Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Concert Theater. This was notably done with the recording (RCA Victor M or DM-1050) of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and No. 4. Some critics complained that they found the recording somewhat thin because of the relatively small number of players (approximately 30) used by Koussevitzky. But the average listener immediately detected a pronounced improvement in the acoustical quality of the Tanglewood recording.

Other recordings made at Tanglewood by the same company of artists have met with generally enthusiastic praise. Yet RCA Victor's release of the Bach Suites for Orchestra No. 2 and No. 3 also by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, seems to me to make the advantages of the Tanglewood Concert Theater more apparent. And since this serves as a replacement for the superb recordings by Adolf Busch and his Chamber Players of the same works, added significance is placed on the release.

Again, as in the recordings of the Brandenburg Concertos, Koussevitzky's orchestra is reduced in size, to good advantage. The Suites for Orchestra were written for a small orchestra (in comparison with the orchestras of today), and it is only logical to believe that they are heard in truer style when performed by a more conservative body of players. This is more true of the Suite No. 2, since in the Suite No. 3 parts for the tympani and trumpets were scored. If there are some evidences of thinness, they are only of academic interest; the average listener will find ample body and richness in sounds and tone.

The famous Boston strings do, however, slip a little on popular "Air for G String" in Suite No. 3. I don't know what happened; perhaps the engineers faltered or Koussevitzky held the strings in too strict obedience. And, too, Koussevitzky may have attempted to cut away the popular fringes that have been added by modern orchestras. But, in any case, something important is lacking; the playing of the "Air" is not in keeping with the general excellence of the recording.

Georges Laurent, first flutist of the Boston Symphony, is heard in the solo parts of the Suite No. 2 in extremely good tone. This album is indispensable to collections of Bach recordings.

* * *

RUSSIAN MELODIES. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, Ralph Berkowitz, piano. Columbia Masterworks M-MM-684; three 10-inch records.

The famous "Five" in Russian music are represented in the romantic idom by Gregor Piatigorsky, renowned 'celloist, and Pianist Ralph Berkowitz in this album. Cui with "Orientale," Rachmaninoff with "Vocalise," Anton Rubenstein with "Melody in F," Rimsky-Korsakov with "Song of India" (taken from the opera, "Sadko"), and Tschaikovsky with "None But the Lonely Heart" and "Chanson Triste."

The combination of 'cello and piano is sometimes hard to take; some recordings would indicate that recording engineers are greatly at odds as to the proper way to blend the two. It is therefore, a pleasant experience that comes from listening to this Columbia Masterworks recording. The 'cello and piano don't vie with each other, although it is obvious that the former is the big voice and is intended to be the solo instrument. Piatigorsky and Berkowitz, through excellent playing and mutual respect, prove that joint talent can be as one. And the engineers prove that good 'cello-piano recordings can be made.

* * *

On The Popular Side

Frankie Carle puts emphasis on the dance beat in his new Columbia album, "Carle Comes Calling" (S-129; four 10-inch records). Joined by the "rhythm section," he takes the piano through the tunes: "Star Dust," Canadian Capers," "I'll Get By," "Deep Purple," "Penthouse Serenade," "I Want a Girl," "Chopin's Polonaise in Boogie," and "If You Were the Only Girl." The album is what Carle fans ordered.

* * * *

Columbia Records, Inc., has established a new "Archives" series, to "make available to the public many of the greatest records in the history of the recording industry." The first to be issued is a record made by Al Jolson with Guy Lombardo's orchestra in 1932: "April Showers" and "Rock-A-Bye Your Baby with a Dixie Melody." It's a gem. Well recorded, it offers Jolson in a good vigorous voice which pulls your ears to it. The movies have brought back a great deal of popularity to Jolson, and it is records like this one which will keep us from neglecting Al again.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 245,375) (S 493,080)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

JUL 8 1947

Three chamber music programs have been added to the concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress, the concerts will be given by the Gordon String Quartet, the Albeneri Trio (whose program includes a trio by Artur Schnabel,) and the Berkshire Woodwind Ensem-

[81]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,823) (S 12,995)
This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE
5 1947

THE LYON'S DEN

By Leonard Lyons

Business Dept.: Bernard Baruch expressed his opinion to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall St. bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet that is the bottom. From then on it's up" . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

George Summerlin, the State department's chief of protocol—who died this week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

Music Dept.: During the Berkshire festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 300 Koussevitzky scholarships.

Science Dept.: In the Stork club last night Charles Cambridge Green, the jeweler, was expressing his customary skepticism about all people and people's behavior. "But take a man like Einstein," said Paul Stewart, the director. "In 1903 Einstein predicted that in the last week of June, 1947, a new star would appear in the sky" . . . "So?" Green scoffed . . . "So," said Stewart, "last week the scientists looked in the sky with their big glasses, and there was the star" . . . "Proves nothing," Green stated. "The kid was guessin'."

Social Note: Ferenc Molnar tells of a night in Venice, years ago, when Morris Gest gave a party on a boat he had hired for the Canal Festival, in the Grand canal, where 4000 gondolas and other craft were participating in the festival. Gest noticed a man he knew, standing at the rail of the next boat. He shouted greetings, to Charles Evans Hughes and then added: "Meet Ferenc Molnar, the famous playwright and wit" . . . Hughes bowed in acknowledgement. "Say something to Mr. Hughes," whispered Gest. Molnar, mindful only of the Venetion moon and the music," finally said something to Hughes. He shouted: 'Sing Valencia' " . . . "And if I ever meet Charles Evans Hughes again," sighed Molnar, "I must ask him something which has puzzled me ever since. For all I saw was his beard moving. I don't know whether he was singing 'Valencia,' or saying that he didn't know the the words."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,465)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 6 1947

Future Of Poor Remuneration Confronts American Composers

The plight of the American composer in particular, and of American music in general, inevitably provokes a disturbing thought or two in the minds of those who love serious music, especially right now as many future American composers have just graduated from the country's schools of music.

Specifically, the plight of the American composer is like the weather—many discuss it, but nothing is done. Certainly not even the least informed on musical matters is naive enough to suppose that any American composer of serious music makes his living from composing music for the concert hall. It is a sad commentary on the general state of musical affairs (though, of course, it always has existed) that those few who are blessed with the talents for making a contribution, however small, to one of the noblest arts, should be forced to spend most of their time in making a living at some other occupation. In other words, the blunt fact is that American composers practice their art as an avocation, or if you will, as a hobby. The majority make their living from teaching, either privately or in one of our music institutions.

Even among the musical fraternity, composers are the most poorly remunerated for their efforts. The performing musician, in at least the major symphony orchestras, is better paid than the composer whose music (American, that is) he too infrequently plays.

That Hollywood Lure

A few American composers have, more by necessity than inclination, succumbed to the lure of Hollywood "gold", for which they can hardly be censured. Writing music for "pictures" is unquestionably the most lucrative field open at present to composers though the least satisfying personally because of the peculiar limitations imposed upon them. The test of a good "movie" score is that we be "not conscious of it."

This is hardly an inspiring objective for a composer. Despite this, much good music has been written for the films and a somewhat belated recognition of this fact is now having a logical and happy result. Much music, which formerly was an absolute loss at the theater in an aesthetic musical sense, is now made into suites for performance in the concert hall, where it is "heard" for the first time.

The inferior position, to say the least, that American compositions occupy in the symphonic repertoire is too obvious to mention. American composers are making some progress, however slight, against the entrenched conservatism of most of our symphonic organizations. However, the latter are not wholly to blame for the unfortunate situation.

New works are more expensive to perform, principally for two reasons. First, a performing rights fee must be paid to the composer where none is required for the performance of the old "war horses." This fee is insignificant compared to the second reason which is that new works require much more rehearsal time than those of the standard repertoire. (Rehearsal time at the New York Philharmonic runs around $600 per hour). Both of these facts preclude the performance of an extended repertoire of American works, particularly the newer ones, by the majority of our 30,000 symphony orchestras, including our own New Haven Symphony Orchestra, which operate on an extremely limited budget.

Boon To Composers

The broadcasting and recording companies have become a boon to American composers though this is not wholly altruistic on their part. Their aim is to provide entertainment and as a consequence, they are constantly in search of new ideas and are therefore more receptive to new music. Furthermore, monetary considerations are the least of their worries in contrast to the symphonic organizations which have to keep a wary eye on the expense sheet. Many an American work has had its premiere "on the air" and as a result now occupies a place in the repertoire of many symphony orchestras.

The American composer will never really come into his own until we have developed a sufficiency of native conductors. Foreign conductors do not fully understand American music just as American conductors do not wholly comprehend foreign compositions.

Nurtured in the European tradition, the subtleties that require attention for a realistic performance of much native music, principally rhythmic considerations, escape the foreign conductors. A few of them, notably Serge Koussevitzky and Dimitri [redacted]een friendly to contemporary American works and have given creditable and intelligent readings of them.

West Is Receptive

We here in the East pride ourselves on living in the "stronghold of culture" and still regard our Western compatriots as being somewhat in the "wild and woolly" stage. However, it is a fact and one in which we should take no especial pride, that American composers fare better at the hand of our Western symphony organizations than they do in the East, quantitatively if not qualitatively as regards performances of their works. This may come as a shock to many people but perhaps it may shake some of us out of our complacency. And if anyone should desire to satisfy himself about the matter, a comparison of the program schedules of last season should be convincing evidence.

The pioneer spirit still lingers in the West—at least they have never become so shackled with tradition as we have here in the East. So perhaps the best advice that could be given to the embryo composer as he goes forth to make his way in a hostile musical world (an actual state of affairs though not an intentional one) is to reiterate the historic advice of a great American, "Go West, young man, go West."

Third Pop Concert

The third "Pop" concert of the summer series to be held at the Yale Bowl on Tuesday evening, July 15, will feature the music of Victor Herbert and Richard Rodgers. Playing in the newly dedicated Carroll C. Hincks Concert Shell, the New Haven Symphony is expected to attract a large audience, if the numbers at the first two concerts are any indication of their popularity.

Officials of the New Haven Junior Chamber of Commerce who sponsor these musical events, advise that tickets are now on sale for the third concert at various outlets and urge all concert-goers to get them soon. Several hundred persons were unable to attend the last concert because the Bowl was filled to capacity as limitations were placed on the sale of tickets so that each person attending could see and hear.

Leroy Anderson, famous conductor and composer, will be the guest conductor at this concert and four of his own compositions are listed for performance, namely "Promenade", "The Syncopated Clock", "Serenata" and "Jazz Pizzicato.'

The concert will open with the third movement from Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, to be followed by Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers of Nurnberg."

A group of Victor Herbert's best known melodies will be presented in an arrangement by Harold Sanford as well as two symphonic arrangements by Mr. Anderson of Rodgers' tunes. The latter include a selection from "Carousel" and "Richard Rodgers Waltzes." The concert will conclude with Sousa's most popular march—"The Stars and Stripes Forever."

PIANIST APPOINTED

The New Haven Conservatory of Music has just announced the appointment of Anton Rovinsky, famous pianist, as the new head of the piano department. Mr. Rovinsky will supervise piano instruction and will be available to advanced students of the keyboard. He also will offer a master class for professional pianists.

Born in New York City, he was a child prodigy at eight, made a tour of Canada at the age of 10, and then studied with Carl Friedberg and Artur Schnabel in Berlin and Isidore Philipp in Paris.

Mr. Rovinsky has made extensive concert tours abroad and has appeared as soloist with symphony orchestras in Paris, Berlin, Dresden and Vienna. In this country, he has performed in New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities. He is equally well known for his interpretation of the modern composers as well as the works of the standard piano repertoire.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Next Sunday, July 13, the first concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening July 15, when the program will be repeated.

The all-Bach program includes the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon, with strings; Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for strings; two Concertos for two pianos, the first in C minor, the other in C major; Suite No. 1 in C major. The piano soloists will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

The second program of the series to be given on Sunday, July 20 and repeated on Tuesday evening, July 22, will be devoted to works by Mozart. The program follows: Serenade in B flat major, for wind instruments; Divertimento in B flat major, for violin, two horns and strings; Symphony in E flat major, No. 26; Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), No. 41.

A song recital by Mary Elizabeth Stone, soprano, and Ruth Benson, alto, was held recently in Center Church House. The singers were assisted by Laurel Baust, pianist and Pauline Voorhees, accompanist.

[82]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)
This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 6 - 1947

WNBH-ABC continues a new candid series of shows, begun at a different time last week, but now heard at 7 tonight. It promises to be the most candid program on the air. The program is called Candid Microphone and consists of interviews with the man in the street with the angle that the man doesn't know he's being interviewed. Men who work this show carry mikes with them but they are hidden under a scarf, up an arm, under a coat lapel, in a flower vase or under a piece of paper. Interviewers go everywhere and ask all sorts of questions. About six persons will be interviewed in the half hour. And, so that no one's feelings are hurt, no names are used on the air, everyone remaining anonymous.

The recent public interest in the passing of the Taft-Hartley Labor Act made many a steady listener out of dial twisters who heard snatches of WNBH-ABC's two public service shows given over to Labor and Management. The programs, one entitled Labor, USA, and the other, the NAM Show, are departures in radio programing. The American Broadcasting Company gives labor and management 15 minutes each every week in which to present their divergent views. For half of the year, the CIO has had Labor show. The AFL takes the remaining 26 weeks. On the management side, it's the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce who divide up the year.

The AFL just has started its series on Labor, USA, heard at 6:45 Friday nights. Management now is presenting the NAM Summer show at 7:15 the same night, featuring a combination of business facts with tunes by the Song Spinners Quartet.

Still on the labor subject, America's Town Meeting is scheduled to tackle the question: "Will the Taft-Hartley Act Increase Production and Promote Industrial Peace?" at 8:30 this Thursday night.

Latest addition to the popular WNBH-ABC morning lineup is the Galen Drake show at 11:30. Mr. Drake is one of radio's best-known commentators in the philosophical vein and has won several awards for possessing the most convincing voice on the air. He is heard every morning Monday through Friday.

Serious music fans get a front-row seat for the five open-air concerts to be broadcast by WNBH-ABC the next five Tuesday nights. They're the broadcasts of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, from the Charles River shell this Tuesday and from the Berkshire Music Festival on succeeding weeks. Arthur Fiedler conducts the Esplanade concert this week with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the podium for the Berkshire concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchesta.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 6 1947

Music

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

STUDENTS and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 13, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for two pianos and string orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theatre concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albenelri Trio, with Milton Katins, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and 'cello, and for violin, 'cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

The chorus of department five will give a concert at 4:30 Thursday afternoon, July 10, and in the evening at 8:15 the students of department four will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department two will give its second program Friday evening, July 11 at 8:15 in the festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and subscriptions to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 239,219)

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR

JUL 5 - 1947

Flickers Here and Yon

John Cozens—third John of Coliseum chorus triangle with Clark and Lynn—is elected head of Toronto O.M.T.A., unanimously chosen to deputize for Mrs. R. Smith, who is ill. Organizing conductor of much-touted Tallis choir publicity expert for the "Con," and author of carols-books, lecturer at Wycliffe college, is one of best-informed young musicians in Toronto . . . one of John's pleasantest publicity jobs of late is the fact that of many scholarships at the "Con," the total to date is $7,900. Man most responsible is Principal Arnold Walter, whose knowledge of progressive human nature will soon be on a par with his musical scholarship. Walter's erudition on what makes the niftiest deharmonized unmetricality dating back to fifth-century plainsong and choral harmonies like "Sumer is I-cumen in" is a high type of scholastic pundity.

Title of book on orchestra-folk queried about by a music-lover in Goderich is "Dictators of Baton," by D. Ewen, published in Canada by Ambassador Book Co., 12 Richmond St. Month of June, S. Hersenhoren has conducted Buffalo Philharmonic in four "Pops;" so popular he has been asked back for an engagement in August. Six weeks of Berkshire festival, opening July 1, he will deputize with Koussevitsky of Boston Symphony. Hannikainen, now associate conductor of Chicago orchestra, conducted in Berlin, Warsaw, Stockholm, Riga, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, before baton-izing in Duluth. Jean Dickenson sings at Old Home Week of July 13, Belleville; co-participants, Jimmie Shields and Leo Barkin. Big-time celebration in Bay of Quinte hillside town where Hon. M. Bowell, Premier, used to live.

U.S. summer theatres as per New York Herald's Geo-Thespian map, are from Canadian border to North Carolina and as far west as New York . . . Much talk about "Great Expectations" film, but "Farmer's Daughter" struck a high average One of latest shooting-matches is "Imagination" now being wrestled by Gordon Kanin; a Coleman-star prodigy of which Kanin says "Insanity is in, but not dragging in psychoanalysis . . . Moore, veteran producer of "It Happened on Fifth Avenue," revealed that in '90 he played in "Nugget Nell." The audience giggled every time he drew a gun—so he drifted into laugh-liners.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 4,897) (S 4,897)

This Clipping From
BIG SPRING, TEXAS
HERALD

JUL 13 1947

BOSTON SYMPHONY

From the theatre-concert hall a Tanglewood, Mass., on the spacious grounds of the summer hom of the Boston Symphony Orchestra KBST, via the American Broadcasting Company on Tuesday wil present the first of a series of fou programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzk will conduct the Boston Symphon Orchestra in the four Tuesda broadcasts, which will be heard a 7:30 p. m.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,475)

This Clipping From BELLEVILLE, ILL.
NEWS-DEMOCRAT

One Man's Opinion

By WALTER KIERNAN

Distributed by International News Service

It is surprising to find Petrillo still shaping the musical future of the nation . . . many thought he was repealed by the last congress.

Little Caesar now is fighting chain broadcasting of music . . . He wants to fix it so that Toscanini can visit every local station in a station wagon.

The present schedule reads: December . . . musicians stop making records, January . . . musicians stop making chain broadcasts, February . . . musicians stop making money.

Fortunately Jimmy has no control over soap opera or John would have to have another wife in every broadcast city.

Twenty years ago the AFM leadership was fighting talking pictures. . . Petrillo demonstrates that he is the logical successor to that brilliant leadership.

Somehow he's got the idea that on Symphony could be ston there would be a iture ahead in Peoria iddle and his six fiddles.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 163,767) (S 217,780)

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

JUL 13 1947

Music-for-All Festival Set

The Boston Symphony orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "music-for-all" field day at Tanglewood, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire music center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

Old Recordings Featured

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915, when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with score by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio, with engieners and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra over a coast-to-coast network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,975)

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

JUL 12 1947

Berkshire Festival To Open Tomorrow With Bach Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will open tomorrow afternoon with an all-Bach concert, to be repeated Tuesday evening. The theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, appropriate for listening to the music of Bach and Mozart, whose work will be played the following Sunday and Tuesday, it is expected will be filled, with an over-flow audience on the lawn. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct an orchestra of chamber proportions, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concertos for two pianos.

While the audience for the Bach and Mozart programs will be far smaller than for the three major week ends of the Festival, thousands of persons will hear the concerts in the smaller hall, including critics from many newspapers and magazines.

The program for tomorrow at 3.30 and Tuesday at 8.30 follows:

Suite No. 1 in C major.
Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for strings.
Concerto for two pianos, in C minor.
Concerto for two pianos, in C major.
Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for 2 horns, 3 oboes and bassoon, with strings.

Tickets for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Seats in the hall are obtainable for Tuesday evening's concert, which will be the first of four programs to be broadcast over WBEC, the ABC network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 48,307) (S 97,521)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 13 1947

Tanglewood Symphonies To Be Aired

From the theater-concert hall in Tanglewood on the spacious grounds of the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company Tuesday night will present the first of four programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the four Tuesday broadcasts, which will be heard over WORC.

The broadcasts this year will include one of Bach, one of Mozart, a special broadcast and a concluding program which will be devoted to the presentation of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" in its entirety.

The opening broadcast will feature duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff in two numbers.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 6 1947

Music

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

STUDENTS and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 13, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for two pianos and string orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theatre concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albenelri Trio, with Milton Katins, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and 'cello, and for violin, 'cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

The chorus of department five will give a concert at 4:30 Thursday afternoon, July 10, and in the evening at 8:15 the students of department four will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of department two will give its second program Friday evening, July 11 at 8:15 in the festival shed, and on Sunday morning at 10:30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and subscriptions to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,975)
This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL
JUL 12 1947

Berkshire Festival To Open Tomorrow With Bach Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will open tomorrow afternoon with an all-Bach concert, to be repeated Tuesday evening. The theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, appropriate for listening to the music of Bach and Mozart, whose work will be played the following Sunday and Tuesday, it is expected will be filled, with an over-flow audience on the lawn. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct an orchestra of chamber proportions, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concertos for two pianos.

While the audience for the Bach and Mozart programs will be far smaller than for the three major week ends of the Festival, thousands of persons will hear the concerts in the smaller hall, including critics from many newspapers and magazines.

The program for tomorrow at 3.30 and Tuesday at 8.30 follows:

Suite No. 1 in C major.
Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 for strings.
Concerto for two pianos, in C minor.
Concerto for two pianos, in C major.
Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, for 2 horns, 3 oboes and bassoon, with strings.

Tickets for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each program. Seats in the hall are obtainable for Tuesday evening's concert, which will be the first of four programs to be broadcast over WBEC, the ABC network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 239,219)
This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR

JUL 5 - 1947

Flickers Here and Yon

John Cozens—third John of Coliseum chorus triangle with Clark and Lynn—is elected head of Toronto O.M.T.A., unanimously chosen to deputize for Mrs. R. Smith, who is ill. Organizing conductor of much-touted Tallis choir publicity expert for the "Con," and author of carols-books, lecturer at Wycliffe college, is one of best-informed young musicians in Toronto . . . one of John's pleasantest publicity jobs of late is the fact that of many scholarships at the "Con," the total to date is $7,900. Man most responsible is Principal Arnold Walter, whose knowledge of progressive human nature will soon be on a par with his musical scholarship. Walter's erudition on what makes the niftiest deharmonized unmetricality dating back to fifth-century plainsong and choral harmonies like "Sumer is I-cumen in" is a high type of scholastic pundity.

Title of book on orchestra-folk queried about by a music-lover in Goderich is "Dictators of Baton," by D. Ewen, published in Canada by Ambassador Book Co., 12 Richmond St. Month of June, S. Hersenhoren has conducted Buffalo Philharmonic in four "Pops;" so popular he has been asked back for an engagement in August. Six weeks of Berkshire festival, opening July 1, he will deputize with Koussevitsky of Boston Symphony. Hannikainen, now associate conductor of Chicago orchestra, conducted in Berlin, Warsaw, Stockholm, Riga, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, before baton-izing in Duluth. Jean Dickenson sings at Old Home Week of July 13, Belleville; co-participants, Jimmie Shields and Leo Barkin. Big-time celebration in Bay of Quinte hillside town where Hon. M. Bowell, Premier, used to live.

U.S. summer theatres as per New York Herald's Geo-Thespian map, are from Canadian border to North Carolina and as far west as New York . . . Much talk about "Great Expectations" film, but "Farmer's Daughter" struck a high average One of latest shooting-matches is "Imagination" now being wrestled by Gordon Kanin; a Coleman-star prodigy of which Kanin says "Insanity is in, but not dragging in psychoanalysis . . . Moore, veteran producer of "It Happened on Fifth Avenue," revealed that in '90 he played in "Nugget Nell." The audience giggled every time he drew a gun—so he drifted into laugh-liners.

220

JUL 13 1947

Tanglewood Symphonies To Be Aired

From the theater-concert hall in Tanglewood on the spacious grounds of the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company Tuesday night will present the first of four programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the four Tuesday broadcasts, which will be heard over WORC.

The broadcasts this year will include one of Bach, one of Mozart, a special broadcast and a concluding program which will be devoted to the presentation of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" in its entirety.

The opening broadcast will feature duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff in two numbers.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 4,897) (S 4,897)
This Clipping From
BIG SPRING, TEXAS
HERALD

JUL 13 1947

BOSTON SYMPHONY

From the theatre-concert hall a Tanglewood, Mass., on the spacious grounds of the summer hom of the Boston Symphony Orchestra KBST, via the American Broadcasting Company on Tuesday wil present the first of a series of fou programs from the Berkshire Music Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzk will conduct the Boston Symphon Orchestra in the four Tuesda broadcasts, which will be heard a 7:30 p. m.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,475)
This Clipping From BELLEVILLE, ILL.
NEWS-DEMOCRAT
1947

One Man's Opinion

By WALTER KIERNAN
Distributed by International News Service

It is surprising to find Petrillo still shaping the musical future of the nation . . . many thought he was repealed by the last congress.

Little Caesar now is fighting chain broadcasting of music . . . He wants to fix it so that Toscanini can visit every local station in a station wagon.

The present schedule reads: December . . . musicians stop making records, January . . . musicians stop making chain broadcasts, February . . . musicians stop making money.

Fortunately Jimmy has no control over soap opera or John would have to have another wife in every broadcast city.

Twenty years ago the AFM leadership was fighting talking pictures. . . Petrillo demonstrates that he is the logical successor to that brilliant leadership.

Somehow he's got the idea that if the Boston Symphony could be held to Boston there would be a brighter future ahead in Peoria for Willy Kiddle and his six fiddles.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 163,767) (S 217,780)
This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

JUL 13

Music-for-All Festival Set

The Boston Symphony orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "music-for-all" field day at Tanglewood, Mass., Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals, and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire music center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

Old Recordings Featured

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony orchestra of 10-year intervals back to 1915, when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with score by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio, with engieners and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra over a coast-to-coast network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 14 1947

2000 Hear Bach Program At Tanglewood Opening

Theatre-Concert Hall Filled and Crowd Overflows Onto Lawn—Luboshutz and Nemenoff Are Soloists

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Tanglewood season opened fficially yesterday afternoon when n orchestra of some 30 men from the first chairs of Boston Symphony rchestra and led by their eminent ~~conductor,~~ Serge Koussevitzky, layed a Bach program to an audience of 2000, only half of whom could find seats within the theatre-concert hall. This was one of the series of two programs to be given on consecutive Sunday afternoons and repeated on the respective following Tuesday evenings in continuation of the wartime established custom which proved so successful. In those days when transportation was such a major problem, the Bach-Mozart concerts, started really as a substitute, supplied such great satisfaction that they have become an indispensable and integral part of the season.

The program consisted of the first suite, in C major, the first and last of the Brandenburg concertos and the C minor and the C major concertos for two pianos in which the soloists were the famed duo-pianists Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz.

Koussevitzky's Reins Loose

Dr. Koussevitzky wisely allowed Bach's fluency to play itself. He held the ensemble with an easy discipline but with a loose rein which was aptly reflected in the performance. The allegro following the introductory Grave of the Suite was announced with clear and firm conviction and the succeeding dance movements were played without exaggeration nor undue stress, a gratifyingly welcome procedure, albeit a dangerous one, for there is a desired middle ground in Bach between excess and banality. Koussevitzky with his conceded wont found it exactly yesterday afternoon.

The sixth Brandenburg, in E flat, is written for violas and cellos, with a piano playing the thorough bass. The solos were played by the first desk men of the orchestra's viola section, Di Pasquale and Cauhape. This, our favorite among the Brandeburgs, did not always attain its stirring potentialities. The beseeching appeal of the second theme of the first movement was not realized. After the vigor of the opening, Bach writes a lovely sensitive contrasting phrase which provides a perfect foil and balance. Nor did the final movement receive the memorably incisive rhythmic attack it usually receives in the same hands. The F major concerto (the first) provided the expert small wind instrument section an occasion to show their flawless prowess and artistry.

Soloists Recalled Many Times

The orchestral accompaniment to the two-piano concertos is full and complementary, often spreading to fairly elaborate polyphony but the balance was beautifully maintained so that the soloists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff with exemplary authority and confident facility made their statements in the true Bach style. With no little aid from the conductor the whole performance was inspired with a vital cogency. This was conspicuously noteworthy in both final movements. The fugue of the C major concerto was proclaimed with fearless and secure verve. The slow-movement, the only one in which the accompanying orchestra is silent, was a bit too much according to plan. Its lack of spontaneity made it seem long, whereas a trifle more variety, still within the confines of accepted tradition, might have lifted it to the high plane of all its surrounding pages. The soloists played without deviation with a beautiful and unforced tone and with a ductile line. With an excelling sense of tone values they consistently maintained the proper relationship with the orchestra which so often has more of importance to say than mere support. The audience accorded them a vehement demonstration of their unreserved approval and they were recalled many times.

This program will be repeated tomorrow evening. The other program in this particular set will be devoted to Mozart and will be played next Sunday afternoon and repeated the following Tuesday evening.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)
This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 13 1947

WNBH NEWS

All-Bach Tanglewood Concert To Be Broadcast Tuesday

Summer-time means Berkshire Music Festival time for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and this Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the orchestra in the first of four broadcasts to be heard at 8:30 over WNBH-ABC.

This, the seventh season of the festival, will come from the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Tuesday night's broadcast will feature an all-Bach program. The following week it will be an all-Mozart program, then a special broadcast and a concluding program devoted to the presentation of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" in its entirety.

At Tanglewood, students in the six-week session meet a distinguished faculty of 45, including the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for advanced work in their specialties. The students are chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for the five departments of instruction after consideration of their qualifications.

* * *

Walter Winchell awards an eagerly awaited prize on his WNBH-ABC program at 9 tonight. The prize is a completely furnished six-room house and it goes to the winner of the grand prize-winning "Fight Cancer" slogan contest. Winchell will read the winning slogan on tonight's show, climaxing the contest which brought in more than 25,000 entries from every State. Following announcement of the award, the model home will be moved to a site of the winner's choice anywhere in the United States. The plot of land was included in the prize offering.

* * *

WNBH continues its coverage of the Sargent Field boxing matches at 10 this Tuesday night with what it considers one of the stellar attractions of the year. Jimmy Gleason will be at the ringside to broadcast a blow-by-blow description of the Willie Pep-Paulie Jackson fray. Pep of Hartford is world's featherweight champion. Jackson, an up-and-coming challenger, is a part Indian from Reading, Pa. The fight is due to go 10 rounds. In the event the skies threaten that night, the fight will go on a little earlier and WNBH will start its broadcast at 9:30.

* * *

WNBH-ABC goes from comedy to chills at 10:30 Wednesday night. While madcap Henry Morgan is on vacation, Boris Karloff, the old Hollywood horror man, will fill in each week in a series entitled "Lights Out."

WNBH Shavings: Paul Whiteman Assembly salutes the Louisiana National Guard's 39th Division at 8:30 Wednesday night with "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans" featured in the "then and now" spot. . . . The story of "The Loaves and Fishes" is dramatized on the Greatest Story Ever Told at 6:30 tonight. Incidentally, William Stoess, musical director of the show, has one of the most difficult music assignments in radio. Each week the conductor-composer must play music that is religious in theme and melody but must not be identified with any particular sect. Consequently the composer must spend most of his time composing original music. . . . David Harding, Counterspy, solves a race track murder at 5:30 this afternoon . . . Sponsors of the Green Hornet and Famous Jury Trials are awarding portable wire recorders as prizes in a new contest . . . A Medical Corps captain, in charge of the Tropical Disease Hospital, speaks on the Doctors Talk It Over at 10 tomorrow night . . . Malcolm Morse Jr. of Boston is the latest addition to the WNBH announcing staff . . . "Blondes Are Sometimes Fickle." That's the name of the story to be dramatized on the Listening Post at 10:45 Thursday morning . . . Francisco Oliviera's Portuguese Hour will be heard from the Sharp Street Grounds in South Dartmouth for the next three Sundays.

O.W.G

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 14 1947

Koussevitzky's Concert Thrills 2000 at Lenox

Maestro Shares Honors With Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Pianists, at Tanglewood

Lenox, July 13 — An audience of 2000 this afternoon heard the initial all-Bach program, forerunner of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The theater-concert hall, which seats 1200, was filled and there were 800 general admissions sold to outside benches with hundreds spread out upon the lawn, taking chances on ominous thunder storms, which held off.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted 30 pieces from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and shared honors with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists. They were given an ovation and recalled four times at the conclusion of the Concerto in C Major No. 2. They also played with equal acclaim in the concerto for two pianos and string orchestra.

The maestro, who will be 73 on the 26th, revealed undiminished vigor and the usual demonstrative Tanglewood audience was thrilled by his art, especially in, two Brandenburg concertos. Suite No. 1 in C Major also was played. The perfect acoustics of the cosy concert hall, finished in natural pine, is well adapted for the full enjoyment of an afternoon of Bach. The program will be repeated Tuesday evening.

New Tanglewood buildings, scattered on its broad acres, include a rehearsal stage for the full orchestra, a workshop for stage craft, a kitchen and cafeteria built especially for the 425 music school students now registered and enlarged press accommodations. On Hawthorne Ave. visitors noted under construction the replica of the Nathaniel Hawthorne cottage, which the Salem novelist occupied in 1850.

The new building is on the exact location of the "Hawthorne shrine" that was burned June 22, 1890. A part of the old cellar wall was found intact and several fireplace irons and kettles were discovered. Removal of two large flat stones revealed 15 feet of water in the 30-foot stone-lined Hawthorne well. Delay in construction of the cottage, which is being financed at a reported cost of $12,000 by the American Federation of Musicians, has forced postponement of dedication until next year.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., will present a concert in the theater.

Festival officials meanwhile made plans for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network.

The entire music shed will become a motion picture studio that night during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio plans to film the festival in action.

[84]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 15 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~in an all-Bach~~ concert tonight in the theatre-concert hall, repeating the program heard by an over-flow audience of 2000 Sunday afternoon. Starting at 8.30, it will be the first of four Tuesday evening programs to be carried over WBEC and the ABC network.

Pierre Lubosnutz and Genia Nemenoff will be solosists for concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos. Other numbers will be the suite No. 1 in C major, and Brandenburg concertos No. 6 for strings and No. 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon, with strings. Tickets are on sale at the box office.

Tomorrow Night's Concert

The last of a series of three chamber music concerts, the gift to the Berkshire Music Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, will be given by the Berkshire Wood-Wind Ensemble tomorrow evening at 8.15. The program follows:

Sinfonia Concertante Quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn (with piano accompaniment) .... Mozart
Fantasy Quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp .... Kornsand
La Cheminee du Roi Rene, suite for wood-wind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon) .... Milhaud
Rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet .... Honegger
Sextet, Op. 39, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano .... Hill

The quintet and the rhapsody have been dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge. The latter will be performed for the first time.

Members of the ensemble are: James Pappoutsakis, flute; William Valkenier, French horn; Viktor Polatschek, clarinet; Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn; Raymond Allard, bassoon; assisted by Emil Kornsand, viola; and Bernard Zighera, piano and harp.

The public is invited. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will have seats in the reserved section.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 95,986)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD
JUL 13 1947

Berkshire Festival to Draw Crowds

Thousands will be strolling over the wonderful lawns at Lenox, Mass., this afternoon to hear the opening concert of the Berkshire festival.

On Tuesday it will be broadcast over WJZ from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. and one of the Tuesdays will offer Beethoven's Ninth symphony to be played in full by the Boston symphony conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

A special event is on the festival bill for Tuesday night, July 29.

Movies will be taken of the audience for a Hollywood picture, and along with that night's concert in Tanglewood shed, records old and new will be played, to be compared with the actual orchestra.

Koussevitsky will conduct Berlioz overture The Roman Carnival, while the motion pictures are made of the listening audience.

The remainder of the program is called The March of Fidelity, and will be devoted to a comparison of phonograph records with the orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 14 1947

2000 Hear Bach Program At Tanglewood Opening

Theatre-Concert Hall Filled and Crowd Overflows Onto Lawn—Luboshutz and Nemenoff Are Soloists

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Tanglewood season opened officially yesterday afternoon when an orchestra of some 30 men from the first chairs of Boston Symphony Orchestra and led by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, played a Bach program to an audience of 2000, only half of whom could find seats within the theatre-concert hall. This was one of the series of two programs to be given on consecutive Sunday afternoons and repeated on the respective following Tuesday evenings in continuation of the wartime established custom which proved so successful. In those days when transportation was such a major problem, the Bach-Mozart concerts, started really as a substitute, supplied such great satisfaction that they have become an indispensable and integral part of the season.

The program consisted of the first suite, in C major, the first and last of the Brandenburg concertos and the C minor and the C major concertos for two pianos in which the soloists were the famed duo-pianists Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz.

Koussevitzky's Reins Loose

Dr. Koussevitzky wisely allowed Bach's fluency to play itself. He held the ensemble with an easy discipline but with a loose rein which was aptly reflected in the performance. The allegro following the introductory Grave of the Suite was announced with clear and firm conviction and the succeeding dance movements were played without exaggeration nor undue stress, a gratifyingly welcome procedure, albeit a dangerous one, for there is a desired middle ground in Bach between excess and banality. Koussevitzky with his conceded wont found it exactly yesterday afternoon.

The sixth Brandenburg, in B flat, is written for violas and cellos, with a piano playing the thorough bass. The solos were played by the first desk men of the orchestra's viola section, Di Pasquale and Cauhape. This, our favorite among the Brandeburgs, did not always attain its stirring potentialities. The beseeching appeal of the second theme of the first movement was not realized. After the vigor of the opening, Bach writes a lovely sensitive contrasting phrase which provides a perfect foil and balance. Nor did the final movement receive the memorably incisive rhythmic attack it usually receives in the same hands. The F major concerto (the first) provided the expert small wind instrument section an occasion to show their flawless prowess and artistry.

Soloists Recalled Many Times

The orchestral accompaniment to the two-piano concertos is full and complementary, often spreading to fairly elaborate polyphony but the balance was beautifully maintained so that the soloists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff with exemplary authority and confident facility made their statements in the true Bach style. With no little aid from the conductor the whole performance was inspired with a vital cogency. This was conspicuously noteworthy in both final movements. The fugue of the C major concerto was proclaimed with fearless and secure verve. The slow-movement, the only one in which the accompanying orchestra is silent, was a bit too much according to plan. Its lack of spontaneity made it seem long, whereas a trifle more variety, still within the confines of accepted tradition, might have lifted it to the high plane of all its surrounding pages. The soloists played without deviation with a beautiful and unforced tone and with a ductile line. With an excelling sense of tone values they consistently maintained the proper relationship with the orchestra which so often has more of importance to say than mere support. The audience accorded them a vehement demonstration of their unreserved approval and they were recalled many times.

This program will be repeated tomorrow evening. The other program in this particular set will be devoted to Mozart and will be played next Sunday afternoon and repeated the following Tuesday evening.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)
This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 13 1947

WNBH NEWS

All-Bach Tanglewood Concert To Be Broadcast Tuesday

Summer-time means Berkshire Music Festival time for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and this Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the orchestra in the first of four broadcasts to be heard at 8:30 over WNBH-ABC.

This, the seventh season of the festival, will come from the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Tuesday night's broadcast will feature an all-Bach program. The following week it will be an all-Mozart program, then a special broadcast and a concluding program devoted to the presentation of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" in its entirety.

At Tanglewood, students in the six-week session meet a distinguished faculty of 45, including the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for advanced work in their specialties. The students are chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for the five departments of instruction after consideration of their qualifications.

* * *

Walter Winchell awards an eagerly awaited prize on his WNBH-ABC program at 9 tonight. The prize is a completely furnished six-room house and it goes to the winner of the grand prize-winning "Fight Cancer" slogan contest. Winchell will read the winning slogan on tonight's show, climaxing the contest which brought in more than 25,000 entries from every State. Following announcement of the award, the model home will be moved to a site of the winner's choice anywhere in the United States. The plot of land was included in the prize offering.

* * *

WNBH continues its coverage of the Sargent Field boxing matches at 10 this Tuesday night with what it considers one of the stellar attractions of the year. Jimmy Gleason will be at the ringside to broadcast a blow-by-blow description of the Willie Pep-Paulie Jackson fray. Pep of Hartford is world's featherweight champion. Jackson, an up-and-coming challenger, is a part Indian from Reading, Pa. The fight is due to go 10 rounds. In the event the skies threaten that night, the fight will go on a little earlier and WNBH will start its broadcast at 9:30.

* * *

WNBH-ABC goes from comedy to chills at 10:30 Wednesday night. While madcap Henry Morgan is on vacation, Boris Karloff, the old Hollywood horror man, will fill in each week in a series entitled "Lights Out."

WNBH Shavings: Paul Whiteman Assembly salutes the Louisiana National Guard's 39th Division at 8:30 Wednesday night with "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans" featured in the "then and now" spot . . . The story of "The Loaves and Fishes" is dramatized on the Greatest Story Ever Told at 6:30 tonight. Incidentally, William Stoess, musical director of the show, has one of the most difficult music assignments in radio. Each week the conductor-composer must play music that is religious in theme and melody but must not be identified with any particular sect. Consequently the composer must spend most of his time composing original music . . . David Harding: Counterspy, solves a race track murder at 5:30 this afternoon . . . Sponsors of the Green Hornet and Famous Jury Trials are awarding portable wire recorders as prizes in a new contest . . . A Medical Corps captain, in charge of the Tropical Disease Hospital, speaks on the Doctors Talk It Over at 10 tomorrow night . . . Malcolm Morse Jr. of Boston is the latest addition to the WNBH announcing staff . . . "Blondes Are Sometimes Fickle." That's the name of the story to be dramatized on the Listening Post at 10:45 Thursday morning . . . Francisco Oliviera's Portuguese Hour will be heard from the Sharp Street Grounds in South Dartmouth for the next three Sundays.

O.W.G

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 14 1947

Koussevitzky's Concert Thrills 2000 at Lenox

Maestro Shares Honors With Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Pianists, at Tanglewood

Lenox, July 13 — An audience of 2000 this afternoon heard the initial all-Bach program, forerunner of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The theater-concert hall, which seats 1200, was filled and there were 800 general admissions sold to outside benches with hundreds spread out upon the lawn, taking chances on ominous thunder storms, which held off.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted 30 pieces from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and shared honors with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianists. They were given an ovation and recalled four times at the conclusion of the Concerto in C Major No. 2. They also played with equal acclaim in the concerto for two pianos and string orchestra.

The maestro, who will be 73 on the 26th, revealed undiminished vigor and the usual demonstrative Tanglewood audience was thrilled by his art, especially in two Brandenburg concertos. Suite No. 1 in C Major also was played. The perfect acoustics of the cosy concert hall, finished in natural pine, is well adapted for the full enjoyment of an afternoon of Bach. The program will be repeated Tuesday evening.

New Tanglewood buildings, scattered on its broad acres, include a rehearsal stage for the full orchestra, a workshop for stage craft, a kitchen and cafeteria built especially for the 125 music school students now registered and enlarged press accommodations. On Hawthorne Ave. visitors noted under construction the replica of the Nathaniel Hawthorne cottage, which the Salem novelist occupied in 1850.

The new building is on the exact location of the "Hawthorne shrine" that was burned June 22, 1890. A part of the old cellar wall was found intact and several fireplace irons and kettles were discovered. Removal of two large flat stones revealed 15 feet of water in the 30-foot stone-lined Hawthorne well. Delay in construction of the cottage, which is being financed at a reported cost of $12,000 by the American Federation of Musicians, has forced postponement of dedication until next year.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., will present a concert in the theater.

Festival officials meanwhile made plans for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network.

The entire music shed will become a motion picture studio that night during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio plans to film the festival in action.

[84]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 15 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach concert tonight in the theatre-concert hall, repeating the program heard by an over-flow audience of 2000 Sunday afternoon. Starting at 8.30, it will be the first of four Tuesday evening programs to be carried over WBEC and the ABC network.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will be solosists for concerto in C minor and concerto in C major for two pianos. Other numbers will be the suite No. 1 in C major, and Brandenburg concertos No. 6 for strings and No. 1 for two horns, three oboes and bassoon, with strings. Tickets are on sale at the box office.

Tomorrow Night's Concert

The last of a series of three chamber music concerts, the gift to the Berkshire Music Center of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, will be given by the Berkshire Wood-Wind Ensemble tomorrow evening at 8.15. The program follows:

Sinfonia Concertante Quartet for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn (with piano accompaniment) .... Mozart
Fantasy Quintet for flute, English horn, clarinet, viola and harp .... Kornsand
La Cheminee du Roi Rene, suite for wood-wind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon) .... Milhaud
Rapsodie for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet .... Honegger
Sextet, Op. 39, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn and piano .... Hill

The quintet and the rhapsody have been dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge. The latter will be performed for the first time.

Members of the ensemble are: James Pappoutsakis, flute; William Valkenier, French horn; Viktor Polatschek, clarinet; Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn; Raymond Allard, bassoon; assisted by Emil Kornsand, viola; and Bernard Zighera, piano and harp.

The public is invited. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will have seats in the reserved section.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 95,986)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD
JUL 13 1947

Berkshire Festival to Draw Crowds

Thousands will be strolling over the wonderful lawns at Lenox, Mass., this afternoon to hear the opening concert of the Berkshire festival.

On Tuesday it will be broadcast over WJZ from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. and one of the Tuesdays will offer Beethoven's Ninth symphony to be played in full by the Boston symphony conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

A special event is on the festival bill for Tuesday night, July 29.

Movies will be taken of the audience for a Hollywood picture, and along with that night's concert in Tanglewood shed, records old and new will be played, to be compared with the actual orchestra.

Koussevitsky will conduct Berlioz overture The Roman Carnival, while the motion pictures are made of the listening audience.

The remainder of the program is called The March of Fidelity, and will be devoted to a comparison of phonograph records with the orchestra.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

TAUNTON, MASS
GAZETTE
7/14/47

Music Festival Opens With Bach Program

LENOX, Mass., July 14 (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. (EDT) in the theater concert hall.

Hednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network (ABC).

The entie theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro - Goldwyn Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 90,878)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 14 1947

Music Festival Attracts 2000

By Gazette Staff Correspondent

LENOX, July 14 — An audience of two thousand attended the opening concert of the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky conducted forty members of the Boston Symphony in a program of works by Johann Sebastian Bach. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff were duo-piano soloists.

The program included the "Suite No. 1 in C major," "Brandenburg Concertos I and VI" and "Concertos in C major and C minor" for two pianos and orchestra.

Although the welcome accorded the conductor was somewhat less demonstrative than in former years, there was a consistent interest that at times rose to great enthusiasm in the works of the German master.

Audience reaction reached its peak at the conclusion of each of the concertos for two pianos. The pianists, Pierre Luboshutz and his wife Genia Nemenoff, abandoned their practice of performing from memory, but nevertheless gave inspired and engrossing performances of the exacting Bach scores. They will be heard at the forthcoming Worcester Festival in Mozart's "Concerto for Two Pianos."

Yesterday's program will be repeated tomorrow night. Next Sunday afternoon and the following Tuesday evening, an all-Mozart program will be presented in the same Opera-Concert Hall.

On Thursday evening, July 24, the first of three series of week-end concerts will begin in the Tanglewood Shed, followed by concerts on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The Sunday concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein with William Primrose as viola soloist.

The following two series will include a Beethoven cycle beginning Thursday, July 31, with an extra Beethoven concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. The final group of miscellaneous programs will begin Aug. 7.

Other soloists will include Jacob Lateiner and Joseph Battista, pianists, and Ruth Posselt, violinist.

All seats for these concerts are taken but admission to the grounds may be obtained.

R. M.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 16,233) (S 16,298)

This Clipping From
PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
JUL 14 1947

Lyons' Den

By LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Gazette

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends last week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall street bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up" . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

OBIT: George Summerlin, the State department's chief of protocol—who died last week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Kossevitsky scholarships.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
CHRONICLE
JUL 14 1947

Tanglewood Crowd of 2,000 Hears First Concert of 1947

Koussevitzky Directs Chamber Music Orchestra in Performance of Bach's Piano and Brandenburg Concertos as Gates of Famous Music Resort Open to Public for First Time This Year in Advance of Regular Festival Concert Series—800 Listen on Lawns Outside Concert Hall Despite Threat of Rain.

A program devoted entirely to music by Bach, played by an orchestra of chamber music proportions under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, attracted an audience of about 2,000 to Tanglewood in Lenox yesterday afternoon. The concert marked the opening of the 1947 Berkshire Music Festival, which will continue through July and early August.

The all-Bach program, which will be repeated at 8.30 o'clock Tuesday evening, is the first of two special programs to be presented in advance of the usual three series of diversified concerts by the full Boston Symphony orchestra. Next week's feature will be an all-Mozart program, which also will be played Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night.

Yesterday's concert was not presented in the vast "music shed," but in the small theater-concert hall, which is better adapted to music of this type. The 1,200 seats of the hall were filled, and about 800 people, despite a threat of rain which did not materialize, sat on the lawns outside.

The feature of the program was the playing of two of Bach's exacting piano concertos. The guest artists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, who joined the orchestra for the presentation of the Concerto in C major, No. 2, and the Concerto for two pianos and string orchestra, received an enthusiastic ovation.

The program opened with the Suite No. 1 in C major, followed by the First Brandenburg concerto. The concluding selection was the Sixth Brandenburg concerto.

Visitors at Tanglewood yesterday were able to inspect several new facilities, including a rehearsal stage for the full symphony orchestra, a workshop for stagecraft, a kitchen and cafeteria for the 425 students enrolled in the school conducted in conjunction with the Festival, and enlarged press accommodations. Although a replica of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 is under construction and was to have been dedicated this year, delays in building have forced postponement of this event until next year. The construction is being financed by the American Federation of Musicians.

Activities at Tanglewood this week include a concert Wednesday night in the theater by the Berkshire Woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

One of the unusual events of this year's festival will be the "Music for All" program, July 29, when the audience will have an opportunity to compare the actual playing of the orchestra with records made in past years and by the most up-to-date methods. During the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night the proceedings will be filmed by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,049)

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUL 14 1947

Bach Program Opens Season At Tanglewood

LENOX (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood Concert Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network (ABC).

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 144,999) (D 41,048)

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUL 14 1947

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIV[illegible]ERT

Opens 1947 Berkshire Festival Before 2000 at Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., July 13.—(AP)—Some 2000 persons filled the Tanglewood Concert Hall to overflowing today as the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire festival with an all-Bach program.

Rain threatened for a time but held off until after the concert.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos. They were enthusiastically received.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in the Theater Concert Hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., will present a concert in the theater.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 28,849)

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
JUL 14 1947

Overflow Crowd At Tanglewood

Hub Symphony Gives All-Bach Program

Lenox, Mass., July 14. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 Sunday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artist in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled Music For All. The first half will be broadcast over a National network (ABC).

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture that night. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 106,614)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
JUL 14 1947

MUSIC FE[illegible] OPENS

LENOX, [illegible] Symphony [illegible] 1947 Berks[illegible] all-Bach [illegible] flow crow[illegible] Tanglewoo[illegible] Serge Kou[illegible] orchestra [illegible] with Pier[illegible] Nemenoff [illegible] concerto [illegible]

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

TAUNTON, MASS
GAZETTE
7/14/47

Music Festival Opens With Bach Program

LENOX, Mass., July 14 (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra opened its ~~1947~~ Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. (EDT) in the theater concert hall.

Hednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network (ABC).

The entie theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro - Goldwyn Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,049)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 14 1947

Bach Program Opens Season At Tanglewood

LENOX (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened ~~its 1947 Berkshire~~ Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood Concert Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All." The first half will be broadcast over a national network (ABC).

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 90,878)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 14 1947

Music Festival Attracts 2000

By Gazette Staff Correspondent

LENOX, July 14 — An audience of two thousand attended the opening concert of the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky conducted forty members of the Boston Symphony in a program of works by Johann Sebastian Bach. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff were duo-piano soloists.

The program included the "Suite No. 1 in C major," "Brandenburg Concertos I and VI" and "Concertos in C major and C minor" for two pianos and orchestra.

Although the welcome accorded the conductor was somewhat less demonstrative than in former years, there was a consistent interest that at times rose to great enthusiasm in the works of the German master.

Audience reaction reached its peak at the conclusion of each of the concertos for two pianos. The pianists, Pierre Luboshutz and his wife Genia Nemenoff, abandoned their practice of performing from memory, but nevertheless gave inspired and engrossing performances of the exacting Bach scores. They will be heard at the forthcoming Worcester Festival in Mozart's "Concerto for Two Pianos."

Yesterday's program will be repeated tomorrow night. Next Sunday afternoon and the following Tuesday evening, an all-Mozart program will be presented in the same Opera-Concert Hall.

On Thursday evening, July 24, the first of three series of week-end concerts will begin in the Tanglewood Shed, followed by concerts on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The Sunday concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein with William Primrose as viola soloist.

The following two series will include a Beethoven cycle beginning Thursday, July 31, with an extra Beethoven concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 5. The final group of miscellaneous programs will begin Aug. 7.

Other soloists will include Jacob Lateiner and Joseph Battista, pianists, and Ruth Posselt, violinist.

All seats for these concerts are taken but admission to the grounds may be obtained.

R. M.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 16,233) (S 16,298)
This Clipping From
PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

JUL 14 1947

Lyons' Den

By LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Gazette

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends last week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall street bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up" . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you'll buy."

OBIT: George Summerlin, the State department's chief of protocol—who died last week—was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA-Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston Symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording. The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Kossevitsky scholarships.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 144,999) (D 41,048)
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 14 1947

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIV[illegible]ERT

Opens 1947 Berkshire Festival Before 2000 at Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., July 13.—(AP)—Some 2000 persons filled the Tanglewood Concert Hall to overflowing today as the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire festival with an all-Bach program.

Rain threatened for a time but held off until after the concert.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos. They were enthusiastically received.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in the Theater Concert Hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., will present a concert in the theater.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
CHRONICLE

JUL 14 1947

Tanglewood Crowd of 2,000 Hears First Concert of 1947

Koussevitzky Directs Chamber Music Orchestra in Performance of Bach's Piano and Brandenburg Concertos as Gates of Famous Music Resort Open to Public for First Time This Year in Advance of Regular Festival Concert Series—800 Listen on Lawns Outside Concert Hall Despite Threat of Rain.

A program devoted entirely to music by Bach, played by an orchestra of chamber music proportions under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, attracted an audience of about 2,000 to Tanglewood in Lenox yesterday afternoon. The concert marked the opening of the 1947 Berkshire Music Festival, which will continue through July and early August.

The all-Bach program, which will be repeated at 8.30 o'clock Tuesday evening, is the first of two special programs to be presented in advance of the usual three series of diversified concerts by the full Boston Symphony orchestra. Next week's feature will be an all-Mozart program, which also will be played Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night.

Yesterday's concert was not presented in the vast "music shed," but in the small theater-concert hall. which is better adapted to music of this type. The 1,200 seats of the hall were filled, and about 800 people, despite a threat of rain which did not materialize, sat on the lawns outside.

The feature of the program was the playing of two of Bach's exacting piano concertos. The guest artists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, who joined the orchestra for the presentation of the Concerto in C major, No. 2, and the Concerto for two pianos and string orchestra, received an enthusiastic ovation.

The program opened with the Suite No. 1 in C major, followed by the First Brandenburg concerto. The concluding selection was the Sixth Brandenburg concerto.

Visitors at Tanglewood yesterday were able to inspect several new facilities, including a rehearsal stage for the full symphony orchestra, a workshop for stagecraft, a kitchen and cafeteria for the 425 students enrolled in the school conducted in conjunction with the Festival, and enlarged press accommodations. Although a replica of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1850 is under construction and was to have been dedicated this year, delays in building have forced postponement of this event until next year. The construction is being financed by the American Federation of Musicians.

Activities at Tanglewood this week include a concert Wednesday night in the theater by the Berkshire Woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

One of the unusual events of this year's festival will be the "Music for All" program, July 29, when the audience will have an opportunity to compare the actual playing of the orchestra with records made in past years and by the most up-to-date methods. During the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night the proceedings will be filmed by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 28,849)
This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 14 1947

Overflow Crowd At Tanglewood

Hub Symphony Gives All-Bach Program

Lenox, Mass., July 14. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened ~~its 1947 Berkshire~~ Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 Sunday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artist in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled Music For All. The first half will be broadcast over a National network (ABC).

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture that night. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 106,614)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 14 1947

MUSIC FE[illegible] OPENS

LENOX, [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] opened its 1947 Berksh[illegible] an all-Bach pro[illegible] overflow crowd [illegible] at the Tanglewood [illegible] Hall. Dr. Serge Kou[illegible] conducted an orchestra o[illegible] with Piee[illegible] and Genia Nemenoff [illegible] in the concerto fo[illegible]

owd of 2,0 ncert of 19

Music Orchestra and Brandenburg
s Music, Resort Op s Year in Advance o es—800 Listen on L spite Threat of Rai which is better adap ic of this type. The 1,200 the hall were filled, and abo ple, despite a threat o ch did not materialize, lawns outside.

The feature of the program playing of two of Bach's piano concertos. The gue Pierre Luboshutz and enoff, who joined the orc the presentation of the Co C major, No. 2, and the for two pianos and chestra, received an enthu tion.

The program opened wit ite No. 1 in C major, fo the First Brandenburg co e concluding selection w xth Brandenburg concerto. Visitors at Tanglewood ye re able to inspect several ities, including a rehearsa the full symphony orch orkshop for stagecraft, a d cafeteria for the 425 rolled in the school cond njunction with the Festi larged press accommodat ough a replica of the co pied by Nathaniel Hawt 50 is under construction have been dedicated lays in building have fo nement of this event ar. The

s Mark
P FOOD SHOP"
Vegetables and Su
— Open Sat. P. M.

r's festival will be the program, July 29

THE ORIGIN
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPIN
20 W. 19th St., NEW YOR
Tel. CHelsea 3-88

Cir. (D 106,614)

This Clipping Fro
SYRACUSE, N. Y
HERALD JOURNA

JUL 14 1947

SIC FESTIVAL OPENS
LENOX, Mass. (AP)—The phony Orchestra 7 Berkshire festival an Bach program before an over- crowd of 2,000 Sunday at the glewood Concert Hall. e Koussevitzky conducted an estra of chamber proportions Pieer Luboshultz and Genia enoff as guest artists in the rto for two pianos.

* * *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 51,107)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 14 1947

Symphonic Lesson in Bach Opens Tanglewood Season

[illegible] of 18th Century proportions and [illegible] idiom of symphonic fireworks, [illegible] Symphony Orchestra yesterday [illegible] Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., [illegible] a crowd of some 2,000 students [illegible] Theater-Concert Hall.

[illegible] Koussevitzky presented [illegible] Bach [illegible] the conductor was [illegible] tering the Old Master."

'Musical Mathematics'

[illegible] as a [illegible] maze of musical mathematics," the program was highlighted by the appearance of Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, a man-and-wife [illegible] in the Con[illegible] String O[illegible] Concerto [illegible] String O[illegible] No. 2. Here [illegible] only conce[illegible] — a letter [illegible] a difficult [illegible] inventive [illegible] new in Bach.

The Lubo[illegible] has achieved a [illegible] two-piano con[illegible] because its [illegible] back to duets fash[illegible] entertainment of [illegible] times stilted [illegible] mars piano tea[illegible] difficult phraseol[illegible] composers is m[illegible] the accent being [illegible] ment rather tha[illegible] technique.

For those w[illegible] "old reliables," K[illegible] sented two of [illegible] Concertos — No[illegible] each offered in [illegible] and sharper att[illegible] is associated w[illegible] ings to the Pri[illegible] burg in 1721, w[illegible] to fame centers [illegible] liked Bach—and [illegible]

A Lesson Worth Hearing

Dr. Koussevitzk[illegible] program with Su[illegible] Major, probably [illegible] of the summer [illegible] glewood, who [illegible] son in the pres[illegible] of a Bach "model" along [illegible] of a "pops" conce[illegible] superb mus[illegible] ing of intricat[illegible] doubtedly [illegible] yet pleased [illegible] self.

Continuing [illegible] new-in-music" [illegible] yesterday's off[illegible] the center ann[illegible] of event for [illegible] July 29, [illegible] phony [illegible] gram, "Mu[illegible] theater will [illegible] ture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," with a major Hollywood studio filming the festival for a short subject to be presented across the nation.

The Bach concert will be presented again at 8:30 p. m. tomorrow. Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress at Washington, will appear. An all-Mozart program has been scheduled for next Sunday by the full symphony.—L. J. E.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 105,279)

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 14 1947

Bach Program Opens Festival In Berkshires

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pieer Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concert for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event of the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Kousevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All."

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn Mayer Studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 48,307) (S 97,521)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 14 1947

Tanglewood Opens With All-Bach Program

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday — Surrounded by the verdant beauty of the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky and forty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon officially set into motion the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood with a concert of music by Bach. Soloists were that incomparale pair of piano poets, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

It has become traditional for these Tanglewood premiers to rouse the enthusiasm of every one but the weatherman. Yesterday afternoon he maintained a constant threat. For a while it looked as if the famous duo-pianists would suffer the same experience as in 1945 when their performance of the Mozart "Concerto, for Two Pianos" was interrupted twice because of a heavy downpour that provided serious competition.

Full Capacity Audience

The concert was given in the opera-concert hall which bulged to its fullest capacity of 1200 while several hundred more auditors covered the surrounding terrain and listened to the music from a distance.

With the advancing years, Serge Koussevitky's initial entrances upon the scene have been acknowledged by ever-greater ovations. Yesterday afternoon's audience, which, contrary to custom, remained seated when he appeared, accorded him a warm but comparatively reserved welcome. His reaction was that same graciousness, dignity, and confidence.

The greatness of the music of Bach has been a foregone conclusion for at least the past century. There are those who dismiss its complex weavings with a shrug of the shoulders, and that is their privilege. Yesterday's audience was, for the most part, composed of intellectuals and seasoned concert-goers. If there were those among them who have been of the opinion that a full program of Bach is a large order of musical mathematics, they might well have been given cause to revise this theory.

Test of Bach Music

In any case, the program was a test of the power of Bach's music only if one were to judge it in the most orthodox sense.

The program follows: "Suite No. 1 in :C Major," "Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6 and 1," "Piano Concerti in C Major and C Minor."

The triumph accorded the duo-pianists more than rivalled that of the conductor. We have written many times of Luboshutz and Nemenoff (and will have still another opportunity during the forthcoming Worcester festival). There is always something new to say.

The clearest description of their performances of the two piano concerti is to call them musical conversations with appropriate remarks by the orchestra. It isn't simple to arrive at a theory as to just how they combine two keyboards into one great art. The physical factors involved of correlating dynamics, phrasing, and technic are but a small part of it. As a matter of fact, their two distinct personalities are ever in evidence.

Craftsmanship Evident

Particularly in the "Concerto in C Major" (the more brilliant of the two) the involved merging of voices was handled with craftsmanship and the choral climaxes were brilliantly punctuated by the orchestra. It was the "Adagio" movement that dominated the entire work with a beautiful entente between keyboards without orchestral background.

The "Concerto in C Minor" made vivid dialogue between instruments, more serious in content and tonally of deeper hues. The rhythmic outlines were more sharply drawn (except for the concluding movement of the other work) and the general effect was one of greater grandeur rather than sobriety.

Orchestral Portions

The solo orchestral portions were the very essence of refined playing. The "Suite No. 1 in C Major" opened with broad, sweeping lines. These deviated into lighter but assertive contrapuntal themes with remarkably clear dynamic boundaries. The two "Minuet" movements were unusually heavy in character but the beautiful work of the woodwinds offset a quality of cumbersomeness.

The "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6," scored for two solo violas accompanied by two more violas, four cellos, one bass viol, and piano, is like handling a fragile piece of rare china. It was played with lucidity and finesse.

Mozart Next Sunday

Next Sunday afternoon, an all-Mozart concert will be given in the same auditorium, and the following Thursday evening, the three week-ends of concerts will begin in the shed. There are no seats available for these concerts, but there are tickets to admit you to the grounds from which the music may be clearly heard.

Be warned that you will be unwise to plan at this late date to remain here overnight, for there are no housing accomodations within many miles. Unless I am a poor prophet, audiences beginning July 24 will run to tens of thousands.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 4,17F)

This Clipping From
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

JUL 14 1947

Symphony Has Festival in Berkshires

LENOX, Mass., July 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. (EDT) in the Theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29 when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a National Network (ABC). The entire theatre will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

owd of 2,0 ncert of 19

Music Orchestra and Brandenburg
Music Resort O
Year in Advance o es—800 Listen on pite Threat of Rai which is better adap ic of this type. The 1,20 he Hall were filled, and ab ple, despite a threat o ch did not materialize, lawns outside.

The feature of the progra playing of two of Bach's piano concertos. The gu s, Pierre Luboshutz and enoff, who joined the or the presentation of the C C major, No. 2, and the o for two pianos and heatre, received an enth tion.

The program opened wi
ite No. 1 in C major, f
the First Brandenburg co e concluding selection w xth Brandenburg concerto Visitors at Tanglewood ye re able to inspect several ities, including a rehears the full symphony orch orkshop for stagecraft, a d cafeteria for the 425 rolled in the school cond njunction with the Fest larged press accommoda ough a replica of the co pied by Nathaniel Haw 50 is under construction have been dedicated lays in building have fo nement of this event
ar. The

s Mark
P FOOD SHOP"
, Vegetables and Su
— Open Sat. P. M.

e festival will be the

THE ORIGIN
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPIN
0 W. 19th St., NEW YOR
Tel. CHelsea 3-88
Cir. (D 106,614)

This Clipping Fro
SYRACUSE, N.
HERALD JOURN

JUL 14 1947

SIC FESTIVAL OPENS
LENOX, Mass. (AP)—The nphony Orchestra open
Berkshire festival with an Bach program before an over-crowd of 2,000 Sunday at the lewood Concert Hall. Dr. e Koussevitzky conducted an estra of chamber proportions
Pieer Luboshultz and Genia noff as guest artists in the rto for two pianos.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 14 1947

Symphonic Lesson in Bach Opens Tanglewood Season

Employing an orchestra of 18th Century proportions and studiously avoiding the more popular idiom of symphonic fireworks, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday opened the 1947 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with an all-Bach program before a crowd of some 2,000 students and guests which overflowed the Theater-Concert Hall.

Taking full advantage of a rustic setting that gave him an all but perfect acoustical background, Kaussevitzky presented a forceful interpretation of Bach that in some instances surprised the hardened concertgoer and in some cases drew from the many festival students the assertion that the conductor was "outmastering the Old Master."

'Musical Mathematics'

Described by one critic as a "grand and melodious maze of musical mathematics," the program was highlighted by the appearance of Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, a man-and-wife piano duo, as guest artists in the Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Major, No. 2. Here was Dr. Koussevitzky's only concession to the "moderns" – a letter-perfect reading of a difficult score that yet had the inventive sparkle of "something new in Bach."

The Luboshutz-Nemenoff team has achieved a mastery rare in two-piano combinations, perhaps because its inception dates back to duets fashioned for the entertainment of friends. The ofttimes stilted phrasing which mars piano teams in the more difficult phraseologies of "name" composers is missing in this duo, the accent being on entertainment rather than on display of technique.

For those who demand the "old reliables," Koussevitzky presented two of the Brandenburg Concertos — No. 1 and No. 6 — each offered in a more forceful and sharper attack than usually is associated with Bach's offerings to the Prince of Brandenburg in 1721, whose chief claim to fame centers on the fact he liked Bach—and music, too.

A Lesson Worth Hearing

Dr. Koussevitzky opened the program with Suite No. 1 in C Major, probably for the benefit of the summer students at Tanglewood, who were given a lesson in the presentation of a Bach "model" along the lines of a "pops" concert, retaining a superb musicianship and blending of intricate melody that undoubtedly would have surprised —yet pleased the composer himself.

Continuing the "something-new-in-music" note that marked yesterday's offering, directors of the center announced an added event for the festival program July 29, when the Boston Symphony will be featured in a program, "Music for All." The theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," with a major Hollywood studio filming the festival for a short subject to be presented across the nation.

The Bach concert will be presented again at 8:30 p. m. tomorrow. Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress at Washington, will appear. An all-Mozart program has been scheduled for next Sunday by the full symphony.—L. J. E.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 105,279)

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 14 1947

Bach Program Opens Festival In Berkshires

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire Festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2,000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pieer Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concert for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday.

Wednesday night the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event of the festival program July 29, when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music for All."

The entire theater will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn Mayer Studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 48,307) (S 97,521)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 14 1947

Tanglewood Opens With All-Bach Program

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday — Surrounded by the verdant beauty of the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky and forty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon officially set into motion the twelfth Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood with a concert of music by Bach. Soloists were that incomparale pair of piano poets, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff.

It has become traditional for these Tanglewood premiers to rouse the enthusiasm of every one but the weatherman. Yesterday afternoon he maintained a constant threat. For a while it looked as if the famous duo-pianists would suffer the same experience as in 1945 when their performance of the Mozart "Concerto for Two Pianos" was interrupted twice because of a heavy downpour that provided serious competition.

Full Capacity Audience

The concert was given in the opera-concert hall which bulged to its fullest capacity of 1200 while several hundred more auditors covered the surrounding terrain and listened to the music from a distance.

With the advancing years, Serge Koussevitky's initial entrances upon the scene have been acknowledged by ever-greater ovations. Yesterday afternoon's audience, which, contrary to custom, remained seated when he appeared, accorded him a warm but comparatively reserved welcome. His reaction was that same graciousness, dignity, and confidence.

The greatness of the music of Bach has been a foregone conclusion for at least the past century. There are those who dismiss its complex weavings with a shrug of the shoulders, and that is their privilege. Yesterday's audience was, for the most part, composed of intellectuals and seasoned concert-goers. If there were those among them who have been of the opinion that a full program of Bach is a large order of musical mathematics, they might well have been given cause to revise this theory.

Test of Bach Music

In any case, the program was a test of the power of Bach's music only if one were to judge it in the most orthodox sense.

The program follows: "Suite No. 1 in C Major," "Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6 and 1," "Piano Concerti in C Major and C Minor."

The triumph accorded the duo-pianists more than rivalled that of the conductor. We have written many times of Luboshutz and Nemenoff (and will have still another opportunity during the forthcoming Worcester festival). There is always something new to say.

The clearest description of their performances of the two piano concerti is to call them musical conversations with appropriate remarks by the orchestra. It isn't simple to arrive at a theory as to just how they combine two keyboards into one great art. The physical factors involved of correlating dynamics, phrasing, and technic are but a small part of it. As a matter of fact, their two distinct personalities are ever in evidence.

Craftsmanship Evident

Particularly in the "Concerto in C Major" (the more brilliant of the two) the involved merging of voices was handled with craftsmanship and the choral climaxes were brilliantly punctuated by the orchestra. It was the "Adagio" movement that dominated the entire work with a beautiful entente between keyboards without orchestral background.

The "Concerto in C Minor" made vivid dialogue between instruments, more serious in content and tonally of deeper hues. The rhythmic outlines were more sharply drawn (except for the concluding movement of the other work) and the general effect was one of greater grandeur rather than sobriety.

Orchestral Portions

The solo orchestral portions were the very essence of refined playing. The "Suite No. 1 in C Major" opened with broad, sweeping lines. These deviated into lighter but assertive contrapuntal themes with remarkably clear dynamic boundaries. The two "Minuet" movements were unusually heavy in character but the beautiful work of the woodwinds offset a quality of cumbersomeness.

The "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6," scored for two solo violas accompanied by two more violas, four cellos, one bass viol, and piano, is like handling a fragile piece of rare china. It was played with lucidity and finesse.

Mozart Next Sunday

Next Sunday afternoon, an all-Mozart concert will be given in the same auditorium, and the following Thursday evening, the three week-ends of concerts will begin in the shed. There are no seats available for these concerts, but there are tickets to admit you to the grounds from which the music may be clearly heard.

Be warned that you will be unwise to plan at this late date to remain here overnight, for there are no housing accomodations within many miles. Unless I am a poor prophet, audiences beginning July 24 will run to tens of thousands.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,171)

This Clipping From
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

JUL 14 1947

Symphony Has Festival in Berkshires

LENOX, Mass., July 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra opened its 1947 Berkshire festival with an all-Bach program before an overflow crowd of 2000 yesterday at the Tanglewood concert hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted an orchestra of chamber proportions with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists in the concerto for two pianos.

The all-Bach concert will be repeated at Tanglewood Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. (EDT) in the Theater concert hall.

Wednesday night the Berkshire woodwind ensemble, a gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress, Washington, will present a concert in the theater.

Plans were being made for an added event on the festival program July 29 when the symphony, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be featured in a program entitled "Music For All." The first half will be broadcast over a National Network (ABC). The entire theatre will become a motion picture studio during the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture" that night. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio plans to film the festival in action.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 9,234)

This Clipping From NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 14 1947

Boston Symphony Opens Season At Tanglewood Shed

The Boston Symphony, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, presented an all Bach program to an overflow audience yesterday at Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival. It marked the 1947 opening of the popular summer event.

The listener was at once struck by the majesty of this great composer's works, for the concert opened with a grave movement or the first of a set of eleven dances in his Suite number one in C major. The dances varied in tempo and mood, but were all handled with the ease, expertness and enjoyment one has learned to expect of Koussevitzky.

The sixth Branderburg concerto in B flat for strings which followed was most remarkable for its second adagio movement performed by two violas, two cellos and a bass viol. Only nine stringed instruments were used for this entire concerto, and the adagio was a lovely elaboration of two melodic ideas lead by the bass.

The pnanists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, were guest soloists for the next two selections, concertos for two pianos and string orchestra in C minor and C major number two. The adagio movements of both were outstanding again, the C minor rendition being effectively performed with a plucked string accompaniment to a beautifully performed melodic theme on the two pianos.

The adagio in the C major concerto was a duet for the two pianos alone. The last movements of each concerto were allegro and in sharp contrast to the quiet adagios. They were vigorous and lively and the C major one interesting because it embodied Bach's use of the fugue in which he surpasses all others.

The final selection on the program was the Brandenburg concerto number one in F major. The second and third movements of this selection were especially well presented; the adagio again impressive and this time strangely and vaguely oriental in its melodic line. The trio in the minuet or third movement was most acceptably executed and provided a change from the usual dialogue furnished throughout the Brandenburg concertos by the full string orchestra.

The large audience inside the acoustically perfected theatre and outside on the lawn around the building brought back the director and soloists for three or four bows after each selection. Although Bach is not so easy to listen to as some of the more popular composers, it was gratifying to see and hear the acclamation accorded Koussevitzky's direction and the orchestra's interpreation of this excellent program.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,679) (S 34,946)

This Clipping From
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR
JUL 22 1947

ALL-MOZART PROGRAM will comprise the second of the Berkshire Music Festival concerts to be presented at 7:30 p. m. today, WENR, from the concert-hall at Tanglewood, Mass., with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting. Mozart numbers to be heard are "Serenade in B-Flat Major for Wind Instruments" and the famous "Jupiter" Symphony No. 41, in C Major.

PHILIP BARRY'S COMEDY "HOLIDAY," will be dramatized on Studio One at 8:30 p. m. today, WBBM, WMBD, with Fletcher Markle in the leading role, and supporting leads played by Anne Burr and Everett Sloane. The plot concerns a carefree young man who believes that life should be enjoyed to the fullest and that holidays should be taken frequently in one's youth. Unfortunately, his fiancee, Julia, and her father, can't see it his way, and believe instead that business and power are the correct values.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 W

REXBURG, IDAHO
STANDARD
6/24/47

PROF. ANDERSON LEAVES TO ATTEND MUSIC CENTER

Prof. John M Anderson left this week to attend the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitsky director, to be held at Tanglewood the summer home of the Boston Symphony, just outside the city of Lenox, Mass.

He will participate in Dept. 2, orchestral conducting. This consists of atandance at daily renearsals under Dr. Koussivitsky, Mr. Brewstein, Elizar de Carvalho and Stanley Chapple; attendance of rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, daily class in conducting, led by Stanley Chapple, assisted by Bernstein, Robert Shaw, Hugh Ross, Berus Goldovsky and Julius Herford.

He will sing as a member of the festival chorus in Beethoven's 9th Symphony, Mozart's Requsm and Strovinsgky's Symphony of the Psalms, and attend Aaron Copland's chorus in American music

---

HENRY
THE ORIGIN
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPING B
220 West 19th St., New
Tel. CHelsea 3-

WHITE PLAINS
HERALD
7/25/47

Mozart's opera "Id the Berkshire M school at Tanglewood is director.

The production will conducted by ard Rychtarik will desi orchestra and singers, duction of "Peter Gri will consist of pupils
Music Center.

Two performances during the last week
Monday and Wedn
Aug. 4 and 6. Admi
invitation to friends
Music Center.

Mozart wrote his of Crete" in 1780, fourth year. It is con one of his greatest cause of its length an printed parts, it has only occasionally in parts exist in Americ ing copied for the duction.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 14 1947

Koussevitzky, Soloists Give All-Bach Program

Famed Conductor, Luboshutz and Nemenoff Accorded Ovation at Opening Concert in Berkshire Festival Series

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

The fine tradition of the Berkshire Music Festival gained fresh laurels yesterday afternoon with an all-Bach program by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Highlights of the opening concert of the 1947 season at Lenox were a beautiful reading of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B Flat by members of the string section, and the Concerto for two pianos and string orchestra in C Minor, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as guest artists.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 is a conversational piece, with two violins proposing the theme, which eventually becomes a general discourse between the violas, violins and bass. Dr. Koussevitzky employed nine pieces for his interpretation yesterday afternoon, and the entire production was sheer delight, from the opening measures of the lively allegro, through the more grave and stately adagio, and finishing with a brisk resumption of the original theme.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Audience Enthusiastic

This was the second piece on the opening program, and brought an ovation from the audience that overflowed the theater out onto the lawn.

This entire program will be repeated tomorrow evening, and if it carried nothing but this concerto, it would still be a tremendous musical experience.

Employing the most delicate shading, and alternately coaxing and demanding every contrapuntal nuance, Dr. Koussevitzky gave his audience an afternoon of music it will not soon forget.

The program opened with the Suite No. 1 in C Major, a series of dances with a strong melodic strain, a happy choice for the introduction of the Tanglewood series.

Closing the first half of the program, Duo-Pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff gave a beautifully accented discourse on the concerto for two pianos and string orchestra in C Minor, with the adagio so delicately balanced it seemed a breath would shatter it.

The pianists and string orchestra opened the second half with the concerto for two pianos in C Major, No. 2, the second movement of which gives the soloists a prime opportunity for a display of virtuosity. In this concerto the pianos are left to develop and accentuate the theme, while the orchestra is granted the power of occasional interpolation, which the conductor kept under perfect control, giving the pianists free rein in a rich and stylistic interpretation.

The afternoon closed with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 in F Major.

The concert next Sunday afternoon will be all Mozart, featuring the Divertimento in B Flat Major, the E-Flat Major Symphony No. 26, and the Symphony in C Major, more familiarly known as the "Jupiter." The afternoon concerts start at 3.30.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 63,227) (S 57,281)

This Clipping From
PEORIA, ILL.
JOURNAL TRANSCRIPT

JUL 15 1947

RADIO DAY BY DAY

Bradley Students Give World Peace Programs

By R. M. SHEPHERDSON
Radio Editor, The Peoria Journal

Out on Bradley university campus one of the most serious groups of students are those banded together in the university's student division of United World Federalists. Whether or not you agree with the ideas and aims of the organization, and the students are eager to explain their purposes, this is not the place or time to debate the case's merits or lack.

Which is by way of leading up to the announcement that the Bradley World Security Worship, under direction of Charles Barnhart, program director of WMBD, will present the first of a series of Tuesday night programs (WMBD) at 8 tonight under auspices of the Bradley student division of United World Federalists. Barnhart during the war wrote and produced for WMBD a series of plays which this writer considered one of the really fine contributions to the war effort.

• • •

"CONSPIRACY OUT OF Space" is the title of the first drama in the series of programs which is designed to demonstrate the need for action to maintain world peace. The programs have been written by nationally known writers. President David B. Owen will speak briefly on the first program.

• • •

BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra will be heard (WENR) at 7:30 tonight in the first of a series of four concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium. An all-Bach program will be performed.

Opening broadcast will feature duo-pianists Pere. Luboshutz and Genia Memenoff in two numbers. Program: Concerto for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor, Suite No. 1 in C Major, and Concerto No. 2 in C Major for Two Pianos and String Orchestra.

• • •

CHICAGO PHILHARMONIC orchestra will be heard (WGN) at 8:30 tonight in Vaughn-Williams' "London Symphony," Delius' "Song of Summer" and Benjamin's Overture to an Italian Comedy.

• • •

"AH, WILDERNESS!" by Eugene O'Neill will be given a radio version on "Studio One" (WBBM) at 8:30 tonight. Written by O'Neill in 1933, the play revolves about a typical American family who are preoccupied with the romantic fervor of their son, a high school senior, for a neighbor's daughter.

The girl's father forbids the girl and boy to see each other. In adolescent desperation the boy gets involved with a chorus girl and becomes riotously drunk. The boy's father, realizing the innocence of the escapade, helps his son straighten out his affairs normally and amiably.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,572)

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUL 25 1947

GUEST CONDUCTOR WILL LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY

Lenox, Mass., July 25 (AP)—For the first time in history, a guest conductor will lead the famed Boston symphony orchestra next Sunday at the Tanglewood music shed.

He is 29 year old Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

The orchestra opened its first program of the Berkshire symphonic music festival last night before [illegible] 7,000 persons.

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIK
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 1
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1947

7,000 Att
Of Berk

By EDGAR S. VAN OLIN

An estimated audience o usic lovers from all ove nited States and Canada, asse, when Dr. Serge K ky strode to the conductor m in the great music sh anglewood, Thursday nig ay tribute to the 73-year-old o, who is the presiding ge he Boston Symphony orche right moon overhead and ortable winds from off the hires, contributed to the r of festivity. Interspersed mong the audience were oston Grahmins, and disci
alph Waldo Emerson.

The opening of Series "A ngaged the interest of a c udience under cover, and housand members of the 'te t, lounging on the ca wns, upon which blanket een spread and folding tools toted in from the p rea, was a gala occasion.
ng the auditorium into tw ions were the boxes of th cribers, in formal attire, a ining men, women and ch hose names are inclu Who's Who in America." he intermission, this seg ociety came in for consi gling from the hoi polloi in nd sports clothes, permi e, at close range, bearers ames written in flaming n the scroll of American
Dr. Koussevitzky's progr concentrated exploration emporary (modern) and es d (classical) symphonic f inning with the rather to the mere layman) inha ntricasies of Honeggers hony for Strings," with rise finale introduction o

[87]

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
20 West 19th St., New York 11, N
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

REXBURG, IDAHO
STANDARD
6/24/47

OF. ANDERSON LEAVES ATTEND MUSIC CENTER

Prof. John M Anderson left th ek to attend the Berkshire Mu Center, Serge Koussevitsky ector, to be held at Ingle summer home of the Bosto mphony, just outside the cit Lenox, Mass.

e will participate in Dept. 2 hestral conducting. This con s of atandance at daily rehears under Dr. Koussivitsky, Mr wstein, Elizar de Carvalh and ley Chapple; attendance o earsals of the Boston Symph Orchestra, daily class in con ing, led by Stanley Chapple ted by Bernstein, Robert v, Hugh Ross, Borus Goldo- and Julius Herford.

will sing as a member of the yal chorus in Beethoven's 9th phony, Mozart's Requism and vinsgky's Symphony of the s, and attend Aaron Cop- chorus in American music.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIK PRESS CLIPPINGS
20 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11,
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,572)

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUL 25 1947

ST CONDUCTOR WILL D BOSTON SYMPHONY

ox. Mass., July 25 (AP)—For the ime in history, a guest con- will lead the famed Boston ony orchestra next Sunday Tanglewood music shed.
29 year old Leonard Bern- omposer-conductor and for- of Dr. Serge Koussivitzky ular conductor.
rchestra opened its first pro- the Berkshire symphonic stival last night before about sons.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
7/25/47

Sh s & Flats

Lon haired Lassie

vill be performed for the first time in Amer- , the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky

and Rich-
The pro-eason, kshire given val on enings, be by Berkshire

King twenty-by some but be-sence of erformed
Since no et is bevood pro-

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 26 1947

STUDENTS AT CONCERT

The entire student body and faculty of the music department of the Randall School attended the 24th concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., on Thursday.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1947

7,000 Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An estimated audience of 7,000 music lovers from all over the United States and Canada, rose en masse, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the conductor's podiom in the great music shed at Tanglewood, Thursday night, to pay tribute to the 73-year-old maestro, who is the presiding genius of the Boston Symphony orchestra. A bright moon overhead and comfortable winds from off the Berkshires, contributed to the general air of festivity. Interspersed among among the audience were many Boston Grahmins, and disciples of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The opening of Series "A" which engaged the interest of a capacity audience under cover, and some thousand members of the 'teen-age set, lounging on the capacious lawns, upon which blankets had been spread and folding campstools toted in from the parking area, was a gala occasion. Dividing the auditorium into two sections were the boxes of the subscribers, in formal attire, and contrasting men, women and children, whose names are included in "Who's Who in America." During the intermission, this segment of society came in for considerable ogling from the hoi polloi in slacks and sports clothes, permitted to see, at close range, bearers of the names written in flaming letters on the scroll of American history.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was a concentrated exploration of contemporary (modern) and established (classical) symphonic fare. Beginning with the rather muddy (to the mere layman) inharmonic intricasies of Honeggers "Symphony for Strings," with its surprise finale introduction of horns, magnificant instrumental chorale, he continued with the less obtuse (because more familiar) complexities of Debussy's use of descriptive tone coloring in translating action into sound with a magnificent reading and performance of the French impressionist's popular work, in three parts, "The Sea."

And it may be, that Dr. Koussevitzky was using a bit of musical psychology by bringing the concert to a close with the supurb performance of Brahms' melodious Symphony No. 2. For the uninitiate, the lovely melodies of the great German composer, sounded even more lovely, placed in contrast to their predecessors, whose unorthodox harmonic structure is, to a certain extent, an acquired musical pedagogy, and is to be congratulated for his courage and foresight in giving America glimpses of new works, which, but for him, might never be heard. At least the audience is given an opportunity to accept or reject this musical expression of a new and modern world. The conductor was recalled to the center of the stage again and again, following the Brahms to acknowledge the tumultuous applause—for Brahams also—with hand-clapping, shouts of "Bravo!" and, say it softly, one or two whistles, shattering the otherwise circumspect New England atmosphere. Perhaps the influence of Debussy and Honegger. hsopl ....ta shrdl etaoin shrdlud

---

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Pine Plains, N. Y.
Register
7/24/47

Berkshire Festival Season Opens Tonite

Mith the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Beston Symphony orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds", Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program seats remain.

The first concert by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will b held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston orchestra. It will be followed on Thursday afternoon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet

(Continued from Page 3)

No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahms' 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30 conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's Overture, "The Magic Flute"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 239,219)

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR

JUL 26 1947

Boston's Tanglewood Fest

Boston Symphony never did anything quite so sensationally big, even in Higginson's prime with baton-stars like Nikisch, Henschel, Gericke, as the 6-weeks midsummer-fest at Tanglewood in Berkshire Hills, Mass. The 1947 panorama is of a continuous crescendo of interest. Two Toronto auditors this summer are S. Hersenhoren—taking a special course in conducting with Koussevitsky—and B. Hambourg, whose interest is mainly personal. In tomorrow's cycle, Bernstein conducts his debut with the orchestra. "Music for all" program on Tuesday will be cyclopaedic with special exhibitions of radio, phonograph, movies, television; in the evening a special program with "Music in the Movies" from "Our Town" to Walton's score for Olivier's "Henry V."

Next week's Berkshire bill also includes the audience section of an M-G-M movie about "Tanglewood." An R.C.A. film, "Berkshire," will be made next week, when Nos. 1, 2, 3 of Beethoven's symphonies will be a prelude to Nos. 4 and 5 on Saturday, Nos. 6 and 7 on Sunday matinee, Aug. 3, and final Beethoven-fest on Tuesday (Aug. 5) evening with No. 8 and the choral ninth.

With such a gargantuan music-fest to get going, no wonder there was a slight delay in the broadcast last Sunday. The above scenario is a mere casual outline of the most significant summer-music event ever known—though the Wagner operas at Bayreuth and the music-fest at Mozart's birth city of Salzburg are two landmarks, neither of them so scientifically complex as the fest at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
West 19th St., New York 11,
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

REXBURG, IDAHO
STANDARD
6/24/47

OF. ANDERSON LEAVES ATTEND MUSIC CENTER
rof. John M Anderson left th k to attend the Berkshire M Center, Serge Koussevitsky ctor, to be held at Tanglewood summer home of the Bosto phony, just outside the cit
Lenox, Mass.
e will participate in Dept.
estral conducting. This co of atandance at daily rehears under Dr. Koussivitsky, M wstein, Elizar de Carvalho an ley Chapple; attendance arsals of the Boston Symph Orchestra, daily class in con ing, led by Stanley Chapple ted by Bernstein, Rober
, Hugh Ross, Borus Goldo-and Julius Herford. will sing as a member of the al chorus in Beethoven's 9th hony, Mozart's Requism and insgky's Symphony of the s, and attend Aaron Cop-chorus in American music.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11,
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,572)
This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUL 25 1947

T CONDUCTOR WILL
BOSTON SYMPHONY
x, Mass., July 25 (AP)—For the in history, a guest con-will lead the famed Boston orchestra next Sunday
Tanglewood music shed.
29 year old Leonard Berncomposer-conductor and for-of Dr. Serge Koussivitzky ar [illegible] chestra opened its first prothe Berkshire symphonic ival last night before about

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
7/25/47

Sharps & Flats

[illegible] Longhaired Lassie

Mozart's opera "Idom[illegible]" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in [illegible], Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be [illegible]ed and conducted by Boris Gold[illegible] [illegible] Richard Rychtarik will design [illegible] sets. The orchestra and singers, [illegible] the production of "Peter Grim[illegible] [illegible] season, will consist of pupils of [illegible] Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances wi[illegible] be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Ido[illegible]eneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 26 1947

STUDENTS AT CONCERT

The entire student body and faculty of the music department of the Randall School attended the 24th concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., on Thursday.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1947

7,000 Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An estimated audience of 7,000 music lovers from all over the United States and Canada, rose en masse, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the conductor's podiom in the great music shed at Tanglewood, Thursday night, to pay tribute to the 73-year-old maestro, who is the presiding genius of the Boston Symphony orchestra. A bright moon overhead and comfortable winds from off the Berkshires, contributed to the general air of festivity. Interspersed among among the audience were many Boston Grahmins, and disciples of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The opening of Series "A" which engaged the interest of a capacity audience under cover, and some thousand members of the 'teen-age set, lounging on the capacious lawns, upon which blankets had been spread and folding campstools toted in from the parking area, was a gala occasion. Dividing the auditorium into two sections were the boxes of the subscribers, in formal attire, and containing men, women and children, whose names are included in "Who's Who in America." During the intermission, this segment of society came in for considerable ogling from the hoi polloi in slacks and sports clothes, permitted to see, at close range, bearers of the names written in flaming letters on the scroll of American history.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was a concentrated exploration of contemporary (modern) and established (classical) symphonic fare. Beginning with the rather muddy (to the mere layman) inharmonic intricasies of Honeggers "Symphony for Strings," with its surprise finale introduction of horns, magnificant instrumental chorale, he continued with the less obtuse (because more familiar) complexities of Debussy's use of descriptive tone coloring in translating action [illegible]ound with a magnificent reading and performance of the French impressionist's popular work, in three parts, "The Sea."

And it may be, that Dr. Koussevitzky was using a bit of musical psychology by bringing the concert to a close with the supurb performance of Brahms' melodious Symphony No. 2. For the uninitiate, the lovely melodies of the great German composer, sounded even more lovely, placed in contrast to their predecessors, whose unorthodox harmonic structure is, to a certain extent, an acquired musical pedagogy, and is to be congratulated for his courage and foresight in giving America glimpses of new works, which, but for him, might never be heard. At least the audience is given an opportunity to accept or reject this musical expression of a new and modern world. The conductor was recalled to the center of the stage again and again, following the Brahms to acknowledge the tumultuous applause—for Brahams also—with hand-clapping, shouts of "Bravo!" and, say it softly, one or two whistles, shattering the otherwise circumspect New England atmosphere. Perhaps the influence of Debussy and Honegger.
hsopl ....ta shrdl etaoin shrdlud

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Pine Plains, N. Y.
Register
7/24/47

Berkshire Festival Season Opens Tonite

Mith the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Beston Symphony orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds", Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program seats remain.

The first concert by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will b held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston orchestra. It will be followed on Thursday afternoon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet

(Continued from Page 3)

No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

The first concert of series A of the Festival on Thursday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahms' 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal", Copland's Symphony No. 3 and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30 conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's Overture, "The Magic Flute"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 239,219)
This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR

JUL 26 1947

Boston's Tanglewood Fest

Boston Symphony never did anything quite so sensationally big, even in Higginson's prime with baton-stars like Nikisch, Henschel, Gericke, as the 6-weeks mid-summer-fest at Tanglewood in Berkshire Hills, Mass. The 1947 panorama is of a continuous crescendo of interest. Two Toronto auditors this summer are S. Hersenhoren—taking a special course in conducting with Koussevitsky—and B. Hambourg, whose interest is mainly personal. In tomorrow's cycle, Bernstein conducts his debut with the orchestra. "Music for all" program on Tuesday will be cyclopaedic with special exhibitions of radio, phonograph, movies, television; in the evening a special program with "Music in the Movies" from "Our Town" to Walton's score for Olivier's "Henry V."

Next week's Berkshire bill also includes the audience section of an M-G-M movie about "Tanglewood." An R.C.A. film, "Berkshire," will be made next week, when Nos. 1, 2, 3 of Beethoven's symphonies will be a prelude to Nos. 4 and 5 on Saturday, Nos. 6 and 7 on Sunday matinee, Aug. 3, and final Beethoven-fest on Tuesday (Aug. 5) evening with No. 8 and the choral ninth.

With such a gargantuan music-fest to get going, no wonder there was a slight delay in the broadcast last Sunday. The above scenario is a mere casual outline of the most significant summer-music event ever known — though the Wagner operas at Bayreuth and the music-fest at Mozart's birth city of Salzburg are two landmarks, neither of them so scientifically complex as the fest at Tanglewood.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (124,331)
This Clipping From BUSINESS WEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 26 1947

Super Radio Set

RCA jumps into custom-built receiver field with an ultra radio-phono-video combination. Retail cost: $1,700 to $4,000.

Amid the harmonic overtones of the Berkshire Music Festival, Radio Corp. of America next week will unveil its newest product: a superultra, 32-tube radio-phonograph-television set. It will cost up to $4,000.

• New Entrant—The event will mark RCA's entry into the custom-built radio field. For years RCA has been known as the great mass-producer of low-to-medium-priced radios. Now the company is bidding for recognition as maker of one of the world's most expensive receivers.

Many observers see the move as a try for the prestige that heretofore has surrounded such radio makers as Farnsworth (Capehart), Magnavox, and Scott. RCA does not deny that it may pick up some prestige. Company officials expect, however, that the primary reward for their venture will be cold dollar-and-cents profits.

• Idea Man—The idea of a custom-built radio germinated about two years ago in the mind of Frank Folsom, RCA's vice-president in charge of operations. Folsom was seeking a way to apply the experience gained in wartime electronic research to production of a topnotch consumer product. The radio-phonograph-television combination seemed like the answer.

To get the project rolling, Folsom, a one-time Montgomery-Ward vice-president, recruited a former shipmate from Ward's. After taking counsel with Joseph G. Wilson—still another ex-Ward's man now an RCA vice-president—Folsom selected Harriet H. Higginson to head the project. Miss Higginson had been in charge of Ward's fashion merchandising program.

• Market Survey—Then RCA conducted a survey to determine the market for an ultracostly receiver. It concluded that two groups would buy such a radio: (1) the wealthy; (2) those music lovers of lower income groups who were willing to spend a disproportionate percentage of their incomes on a superdeluxe music maker. In both classes, the company believes, there are plenty of potential customers.

Another survey discovery: About three-fourths of the purchases would be made or directly influenced by women. So Folsom decided that he had done the right thing in putting a woman in charge of the project.

• Parts on Test—For the new glamor radio RCA wanted the best possible parts. And it didn't care whether it made them or its competitors did. Since many of the high-priced radio manufacturers themselves bought parts from RCA, the firm decided that much of the radio's insides could come from its own shop. Some, however, probably could not. So the company tested its own and other manufacturers' equipment.

One press agent's dream of a test was made at New York's Lotos Club. Five competing loud speakers housed in identical cabinets broadcast a symphony concert to a group composed of Leopold Stokowski and several acoustical engineers. The broadcast was shifted from one speaker to another. At the conclusion of this blind test, the group settled on the RCA speaker.

As a result of other tests RCA decided to use its own parts throughout—except for the record-changer. And by autumn, RCA expects its own changer to replace the Thorens (Swiss) unit which the company now manufactures under a licensing arrangement.

• $1,700, and Up—The company untied its pursestrings in making the model. To style the cabinets which house the equipment, it selected such well-known designers as New York's Edward Wormsley, John Vassos, and T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings, and John Millington of the Baker Furniture Co. in Holland, Mich.

The outsize set, as it finally appears, comes in traditional, transitional, and modern styles. Or it can be engineered into the walls of a house. It has numerous refinements, including seven short-wave bands, FM and AM, an electronic station selector, and RCA television. Prices for the model range from $1,700 to $4,000, depending on the cabinet style and whether the television equipment is desired.

• Tie-In—For a while RCA considered setting up a separate company to handle the new receiver. But now the company has decided to merchandise it as a completely new line.

To set its marketing program in motion with the ultimate eclat, RCA thus chose the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as the place for its debut. There—under the auspices of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and RCA—assorted patrons of music and Americans in general will get their first look at the company's expensive brainchild.

• "Limited Edition"—Sets in this first group will be called the "Festival Series." In obtaining permission to use the Berkshire name, RCA set aside an initial "limited edition" of 200 sets to be offered on a subscription basis. Profits from the sale of these sets will provide scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center. The Berkshire models will not be placed on open public sale until 1948. And then they will be merchandised only through selected dealers.

RCA has not disclosed whether it will take advantage of its Berkshire promotion to push its other products. The possibilities are numerous, however, for applying the Berkshire's prestige to the sale of RCA's less expensive radios.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 45,966)
This Clipping From
TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
JUL 27 1947

The music of Dimitri Shostakovich continues to receive top-flight releases from the big companies. His Ninth Symphony, recently released by Columbia, now gets a waxing of parallel worth from Victor, through the medium of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. It was Koussevitzky who gave the work its American premiere at the 1946 Tagglewood festival.

In this the usual Slav pathos is missing. The symphony was called by the composer a "paean of victory" to celebrate the collapse of the Nazis. As such it lyric and humorous, a synthesis of unrestrained Muscovite mirth. The recording is good and the performance effective in dynamism and tonality.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 75,633) (S 90,427)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
JUL 27 1947

News of Festival

In the picturesque surroundings where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and imagined his "Tanglewood Tales," the Boston Symphony orchestra will present an innovation in musical festivals Tuesday.

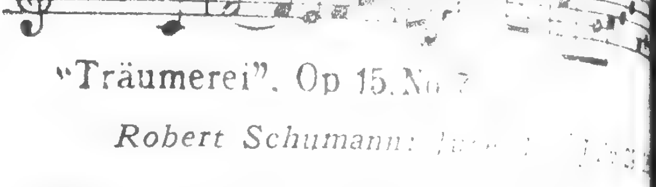
The music-for-all day at the Berkshire festival will feature a comprehensive program of motion pictures to illustrate the use of original music scores by prominent living composers, preceding the orchestra's Berkshire festival concert and broadcast, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 193,539)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 27

Berkshire Festival Series A Closes in Tanglewood Today

By F

"My piano is to me what his horse is to the Ar till now, my eye, my vibrated under my obeyed my every caprice.—



"Träumerei", Op 15 No 7

Robert Schumann

THIS SUNDAY afternoon in the 1947 Berkshire F the Boston Symphony Orch The program is made up by Mozart, Stravinsky's "L Symphony in C major, N event on Tuesday, July 29, to attract many visitors fr concert by the orchestra, be demonstrations of the for musical reproduction, pictures and television.

Beethoven Symphonies Series, July 31, Au

SERIES B, which will cover will begin Thursday night, July Saturday night, Aug. 2, ("Emporer") Piano Concerto Sixth ("Pastorale") and as soloist in the Piano C Sunday afternoon, Aug. series on Tuesday night, A complete performances of the "Choral" symphony. The 8:15 o'clock. The Berkshire Aug. 10.

Kirsten Flagstad to Sing In Chicago in Mid-

THE CHICAGO SYMPHONY Kirsten Flagstad in her fi country in Chicago Sunday aft Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" Chicago Symphony Orches Svanholm will appear as Tr Herbert Janssen as Kurvenal Mme. Flagstad's last opera Isolde in the Metropolitan departure for Norway. She in concert in New York manager of the Chicago Sy

"The human voice music; and whatever the ever bold the composer the virtuoso's execution, turn to the standard set by —Richard

Eugene Conley Will in Italy With American-Italian

WORD COMES to Syracuse operatic tenor, that he will ma with a company of American of Giorgio D'Andria, New York in this country: Christina Ca Vinay, Chilean tenor. The sched Sept. 2-7; in Milan, Sept. 8-15, San Carlo in Naples, Sept considerable success for Morni

A NUMBER of the larger weekly change of bill and not there has been an interesting Opera. "Die Fledermaus," by Johann Strauss delighted attendance of ten to eleven Post Dispatch and Herbert L the production, the former music that is music," and the role of Alfred. Carelli, earli success in Pittsburgh in "The Cat a beautifully," (notably in the Serenade Monk wrote that "Carelli, possessor of a no little to making the melodies delig conducts the St. Louis Municipal Opera. C tenor roles here, in Utica and in Binghamton Opera Company and with a company directed Brooklyn.

Opera Impresarios and Producers Announce Association Members

AN ASSOCIATION of opera impresarios and producers has been formed in New York City with the idea of solving common problems and for a better understanding between opera producers and employe unions. Among those present at a recent meeting: Frank Pelosi of the Philadelphia La Scala Company, Michael De Pace of The San Francisco Opera Association and the Trenton Opera Association, Fortune Gallo of the San Carlo Opera Co., Alfredo Salmaggi, the Popular Price Grand Opera, Inc. Luigi Dell' Orefice, Lyric Grand Opera Co., Paul Keppel of the Metropolitan Association; Giorgio D'Andria of the National Grand Opera, Joseph Listro of the Connecticut Opera Association, Philip of the Michigan Grand Opera of Detroit; Edward W. Snowdon of the Charles L. Wagner Office; Jack Petrill of the Associated Concert Bureau and Felix W. Salmaggi of the International Lyric Bureau.

Composers Press Award to Whitney, Glens Falls Music Supervisor

MAURICE WHITNEY, supervisor of music in Glens Falls, N. Y., public schools has won the Composers Press award for an Adagio and Fugue for woodwind quintet. The award: A $100 cash prize and 1947 publication. Other works chosen for publication: A Te Deum for mixed-chorus with organ accompaniment by Clair Leonard, member of Vassar College music faculty, and "The Piper," a song by Mary Alice Lippincott of Doylestown, Pa. The 1948 Publication Award contest of Composers Press calls for a song with a secular or religious poem as its text, an anthem for mixed chorus with organ accompaniment, or a quintet for clarinet, horn, violin, viola and cello, taking not more than five minutes for performance. The contest closes March 1, with application blanks available from the Composers Press, Inc., 853 Seventh av., New York, 19, N. Y.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 85,127) (S 119,595)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
JUL 27

Recor In Rev

By NORMAN

CH: Suites Number 2 in B Boston Symphony Orchestra or. valuable additi ings performed by Koussevitz ded during the 1946 Berkshire val in the Tanglewood Concert

Koussevitzky, in achieving enticity and a faithful por l of these Bach gems, uses vely the same size orchestra mon in Bach's time. The offer really is a must for chamber c lovers. The Suite Number 2 raced by the lovely flute play of Georges Laurent, first flutist e Boston Symphony. The Suite ber 3, of course, contains the ous "Air for the C String," one he most popular melodies in all ic. (RCA Victor, five 12-inch ords).

hakespeare: Spoken excerpts n "Henry V." Laurence Olivier, original music written by liam Walton for the Two Cities n, London Philharmonic Orches and Chorus conducted by lton.

When Olivier, who received the demy of Motion Picture Arts Sciences "Oscar" for directing, ducing and starring in "Henry returned to England in 1946, lowing his appearances with the Vic repertory in New York, he reed to record for RCA Victor erpts from the magnificent film duction. This album is the re t.

For the recorded version Olivier ected the most important solilo ies and speeches from the play, ding the lines of the chorus and ne other characters as well as ose of King Henry. Flavor of e film has been preserved by terpolation of musical episodes. ne could call this an important dition to disc libraries. Illumi ting notes are given by Dr. J. uncan Spaeth. (RCA Victor, four -inch records).

Item for Youngsters

RCA Victor has begun shipments its new line of children's records, ade of non-breakable stock in tomatic sequence, packaged in rd-packed record-story albums.

First to reach this desk is "Pan, e Piper," written and narrated Paul Wing with Russ Case's chestra and an imaginative score George Kleinsinger. This one lls the story of "The Reed That Grew Into an Orchestra," and is uite an achievement in children's ecordings, with a combination of ducational narrative, delightful antasy and fine musical back round.

Carle Comes Calling: Frankie Carle with rhythm section. Here

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (124,331)
This Clipping From BUSINESS WEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 26 1947

Super Radio Set

RCA jumps into custom-built receiver field with an ultra radio-phono-video combination. Retail cost: $1,700 to $4,000.

Amid the harmonic overtones of the Berkshire Music Festival, Radio Corp. of America next week will unveil its newest product: a superultra, 32-tube radio-phonograph-television set. It will cost up to $4,000.

• New Entrant—The event will mark RCA's entry into the custom-built radio field. For years RCA has been known as the great mass-producer of low-to-medium-priced radios. Now the company is bidding for recognition as maker of one of the world's most expensive receivers.

Many observers see the move as a try for the prestige that heretofore has surrounded such radio makers as Farnsworth (Capehart), Magnavox, and Scott. RCA does not deny that it may pick up some prestige. Company officials expect, however, that the primary reward for their venture will be cold dollar-and-cents profits.

• Idea Man—The idea of a custom-built radio germinated about two years ago in the mind of Frank Folsom, RCA's vice-president in charge of operations. Folsom was seeking a way to apply the experience gained in wartime electronic research to production of a topnotch consumer product. The radio-phonograph-television combination seemed like the answer.

To get the project rolling, Folsom, a one-time Montgomery-Ward vice-president, recruited a former shipmate from Ward's. After taking counsel with Joseph G. Wilson—still another ex-Ward's man now an RCA vice-president—Folsom selected Harriet H. Higginson to head the project. Miss Higginson had been in charge of Ward's fashion merchandising program.

• Market Survey—Then RCA conducted a survey to determine the market for an ultracostly receiver. It concluded that two groups would buy such a radio: (1) the wealthy; (2) those music lovers of lower income groups who were willing to spend a disproportionate percentage of their incomes on a superdeluxe music maker. In both classes, the company believes, there are plenty of potential customers.

Another survey discovery: About three-fourths of the purchases would be made or directly influenced by women. So Folsom decided that he had done the right thing in putting a woman in charge of the project.

• Parts on Test—For the new glamor radio RCA wanted the best possible parts. And it didn't care whether it made them or its competitors did. Since many of the high-priced radio manufacturers themselves bought parts from RCA, the firm decided that much of the radio's insides could come from its own shop. Some, however, probably could not. So the company tested its own and other manufacturers' equipment.

One press agent's dream of a test was made at New York's Lotos Club. Five competing loud speakers housed in identical cabinets broadcast a symphony concert to a group composed of Leopold Stokowski and several acoustical engineers. The broadcast was shifted from one speaker to another. At the conclusion of this blind test, the group settled on the RCA speaker.

As a result of other tests RCA decided to use its own parts throughout—except for the record-changer. And by autumn, RCA expects its own changer to replace the Thorens (Swiss) unit which the company now manufactures under a licensing arrangement.

• $1,700, and Up—The company untied its pursestrings in making the model. To style the cabinets which house the equipment, it selected such well-known designers as New York's Edward Wormsley, John Vassos, and T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings, and John Millington of the Baker Furniture Co. in Holland, Mich.

The outsize set, as it finally appears, comes in traditional, transitional, and modern styles. Or it can be engineered into the walls of a house. It has numerous refinements, including seven shortwave bands, FM and AM, an electronic station selector, and RCA television. Prices for the model range from $1,700 to $4,000, depending on the cabinet style and whether the television equipment is desired.

• Tie-In—For a while RCA considered setting up a separate company to handle the new receiver. But now the company has decided to merchandise it as a completely new line.

To set its marketing program in motion with the ultimate eclat, RCA thus chose the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as the place for its debut. There—under the auspices of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and RCA—assorted patrons of music and Americans in general will get their first look at the company's expensive brainchild.

• "Limited Edition"—Sets in this first group will be called the "Festival Series." In obtaining permission to use the Berkshire name, RCA set aside an initial "limited edition" of 200 sets to be offered on a subscription basis. Profits from the sale of these sets will provide scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center. The Berkshire models will not be placed on open public sale until 1948. And then they will be merchandised only through selected dealers.

RCA has not disclosed whether it will take advantage of its Berkshire promotion to push its other products. The possibilities are numerous, however, for applying the Berkshire's prestige to the sale of RCA's less expensive radios.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 45,966)
This Clipping From
TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
JUL 27 1947

The music of Dimitri Shostakovich continues to receive top-flight releases from the big companies. His Ninth Symphony, recently released by Columbia, now gets a waxing of parallel worth from Victor, through the medium of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. It was Koussevitzky who gave the work its American premiere at the 1946 Tagglewood festival.

In this the usual Slav pathos is missing. The symphony was called by the composer a "paean of victory" to celebrate the collapse of the Nazis. As such it lyric and humorous, a synthesis of unrestrained Muscovite mirth. The recording is good and the performance effective in dynamism and tonality.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 75,633) (S 90,427)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
JUL 27 1947

News of Festival

In the picturesque surroundings where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and imagined his "Tanglewood Tales," the Boston Symphony orchestra will present an innovation in musical festivals Tuesday.

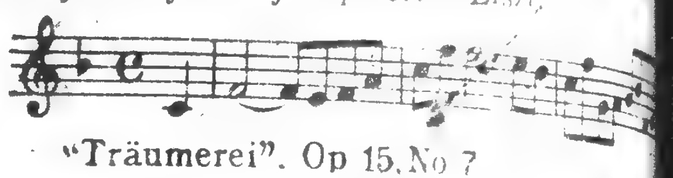
The music-for-all day at the Berkshire festival will feature a comprehensive program of motion pictures to illustrate the use of original music scores by prominent living composers, preceding the orchestra's Berkshire festival concert and broadcast, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 193,539)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 27 1947

Berkshire Festival Series A Closes in Tanglewood Today

By E. V. W.

"My piano is to me what his boat is to [illegible] what his horse is to the Arab; nay, it is more, [illegible] till now, my eye, my speech, my life. Its [illegible] vibrated under my passions, and its yielding [illegible] obeyed my every caprice."—Liszt.



"Träumerei". Op 15, No 7

Robert Schumann: June, 1810-July 29,

THIS SUNDAY afternoon's concert marks the [illegible] in the 1947 Berkshire Festival [illegible] Leonard Bernstein [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] The program is made up of the Overture to "The [illegible]" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" [illegible] Symphony in C major, No. 7. [illegible] event on Tuesday, July 29, is creating [illegible] to attract many visitors from distant [illegible] concert by the orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky [illegible] be demonstrations of the latest and [illegible] for musical reproduction, including [illegible] pictures and television.

Beethoven Symphonies in Next Series, July 31, Aug. 2-3

SERIES B, which will cover all the Symphonies [illegible] will begin Thursday night, July 31, with Nos. 1, 2 and 3 [illegible] Saturday night, Aug. 2, will bring Nos. 4 and 5 [illegible] ("Emporer") Piano Concerto [illegible] Sixth ("Pastorale") and Seventh [illegible] as soloist in the Piano Concerto [illegible] Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3. The [illegible] series on Tuesday night, Aug. 5, [illegible] complete performances of the Symphonies No. 8 and 9 "Choral" symphony. The other nights [illegible] 8:15 o'clock. The Berkshire Festival [illegible] Aug. 10.

Kirsten Flagstad to Sing in Opera In Chicago in Mid-November

THE CHICAGO SYMPHONY OPERA management [illegible] Kirsten Flagstad in her first postwar [illegible] country in Chicago Sunday afternoon [illegible] Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" [illegible] Chicago Symphony Orchestra. [illegible] Svånholm will appear as Tristan [illegible] Herbert Janssen as Kurvenal [illegible] Mme. Flagstad's last operatic [illegible] Isolde in the Metropolitan Opera [illegible] departure for Norway. She [illegible] in concert in New York and [illegible] manager of the Chicago Symphony [illegible]

"The human voice is really the foundation [illegible] music; and whatever the development of the [illegible] ever bold the composer's combinations, however [illegible] the virtuoso's execution, in the end they must [illegible] turn to the standard set by vocal music."—Richard

Eugene Conley Will Sing in Italy With American-Italian Artists

WORD COMES to Syracuse from Eugene Conley, [illegible] operatic tenor, that he will make a [illegible] with a company of American and [illegible] of Giorgio D'Andria, New York [illegible] in this country: Christina Carroll [illegible] Vinay, Chilean tenor. The schedule [illegible] Sept. 2-7; in Milan, Sept. 8-15; in [illegible] San Carlo in Naples, Sept. 24-30 [illegible] considerable success for Morning [illegible]

A NUMBER of the larger cities have opera this [illegible] weekly change of bill and notable [illegible] there has been an interesting season [illegible] Opera. "Die Fledermaus," (The Bat [illegible] by Johann Strauss delighted St. L[illegible] attendance of ten to eleven thousand [illegible] Post Dispatch and Herbert L. Monk [illegible] the production, the former describing [illegible] music that is music," and with tribute [illegible] the role of Alfred. Carelli, earlier in [illegible] success in Pittsburgh in "The Cat and [illegible] beautifully," (notably in the Serenade) [illegible] Monk wrote that "Carelli, possessor of a [illegible] no little to making the melodies delightful [illegible] conducts the St. Louis Municipal Opera. Ca[illegible] tenor roles here, in Utica and in Binghamton [illegible] Opera Company and with a company directed by [illegible] Brooklyn.

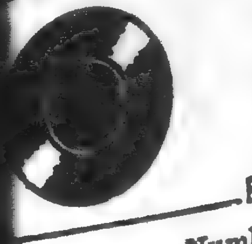
Opera Impresarios and Producers Announce Association Members

AN ASSOCIATION of opera impresarios and producers has been formed in New York City with the idea of solving common problems and for a better understanding between opera producers and employe unions. Among those present at a recent meeting: Frank Pelosi of the Philadelphia La Scala Company, Michael De Pace of The San Francisco Opera Association and the Trenton Opera Association; Fortune Gallo of the San Carlo Opera Co., Alfredo Salmaggi of the Popular Price Grand Opera, Inc. Luigi Dell' Orefice of the Lyric Grand Opera Co., Paul Keppel of the Metropolitan Opera Association; Giorgio D'Andria of the National Grand Opera Co., Joseph Listro of the Connecticut Opera Association, Philip Culcasi of the Michigan Grand Opera of Detroit; Edward W. Snowdon of the Charles L. Wagner Office; Jack Petrill of the Associated Concert Bureau and Felix W. Salmaggi of the International Lyric Bureau.

Composers Press Award to Whitney, Glens Falls Music Supervisor

MAURICE WHITNEY, supervisor of music in Glens Falls, N. Y., public schools has won the Composers Press award for an Adagio and Fugue for woodwind quintet. The award: A $100 cash prize and 1947 publication. Other works chosen for publication: A Te Deum for mixed-chorus with organ accompaniment by Clair Leonard, member of Vassar College music faculty, and "The Piper," a song by Mary Alice Lippincott of Doylestown, Pa. The 1948 Publication Award contest of Composers Press calls for a song with a secular or religious poem as its text, an anthem for mixed chorus with organ accompaniment, or a quintet for clarinet, horn, violin, viola and cello, taking not more than five minutes for performance. The contest closes March 1, with application blanks available from the Composers Press, Inc., 853 Seventh av., New York, 19, N. Y.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 85,127) (S 119,595)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
JUL 27 1947



Recor In Re

By NORMAN

CH: Suites Number 2 in B
Boston Symphony Orchestra
or. [illegible] valuable additi ings performed by Koussevit ded during the 1946 Berkshire val in the Tanglewood Concert
ter.

Koussevitzky, in achieving enticity and a faithful por-l of these Bach gems, uses ively the same size orchestra mon in Bach's time. The offer-really is a must for chamber c lovers. The Suite Number 2 raced by the lovely flute play-of Georges Laurent, first flutist e Boston Symphony. The Suite nber 3, of course, contains the ous "Air for the C String," one he most popular melodies in all ic. (RCA Victor, five 12-inch rds).

hakespeare: Spoken excerpts n "Henry V." Laurence Olivier, h original music written by liam Walton for the Two Cities n, London Philharmonic Orches-and Chorus conducted by lton.

When Olivier, who received the demy of Motion Picture Arts Sciences "Oscar" for directing, ducing and starring in "Henry returned to England in 1946, lowing his appearances with the Vic repertory in New York, he reed to record for RCA Victor erpts from the magnificent film duction. This album is the re-lt.

For the recorded version Olivier ected the most important solilo-ies and speeches from the play, ding the lines of the chorus and e other characters as well as se of King Henry. Flavor of e film has been preserved by erpolation of musical episodes.
e could call this an important dition to disc libraries. Illumiting notes are given by Dr. J. ncan Spaeth. (RCA Victor, four -inch records).

Item for Youngsters

RCA Victor has begun shipments its new line of children's records, de of non-breakable stock in tomatic sequence, packaged in rd-packed record-story albums.

First to reach this desk is "Pan, e Piper," written and narrated Paul Wing with Russ Case's chestra and an imaginative score
George Kleinsinger. This one lls the story of "The Reed That rew Into an Orchestra," and is uite an achievement in children's ecordings, with a combination of ducational narrative, delightful antasy and fine musical back-round.

Carle Comes Calling: Frankie arle with rhythm section. Here

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 85,127) (S 119,595)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUL 2

Records In Review

By NORMAN NAIRN

BACH: Suites Number 2 [illegible] B minor and Number 3 in D. [illegible] Serge Koussevitzky, con[illegible] to the series of Bach re[illegible] and the Bostonians and [illegible] Here is [illegible] Koussevitzky [illegible] and a [illegible] Bach [illegible] same size orch[illegible] common to Bach's time. The [illegible] really is a must for chamber [illegible] The Suite Number 2 is graced by the lovely flute playing of Georges Laurent, first flutist of the Boston Symphony. The S[illegible] of the finest performances [illegible] music. (RCA Victor, five 12-inch records).

Shakespeare: Spoken excerpts from "Henry V." Laurence Olivier, with original music written by William Walton for the Two Cities Film, London Philharmonic Orchestra and Chorus conducted by Walton.

When Olivier, who received the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences "Oscar" for directing, producing and starring in "Henry V," returned to England in 1946, following his appearances with the Old Vic repertory in New York, he agreed to record for RCA Victor excerpts from the magnificent film production. This album is the result.

For the recorded version Olivier selected the most important soliloquies and speeches from the play, reading the lines of the chorus and nine other characters as well as those of King Henry. Flavor of the film has been preserved by interpolation of musical episodes. One could call this an important addition to disc libraries. Illuminating notes are given by Dr. J. Duncan Spaeth. (RCA Victor, four 12-inch records).

Item for Youngsters

RCA Victor has begun shipments of its new line of children's records, made of non-breakable stock in automatic sequence, packaged in hard-packed record-story albums.

First to reach this desk is "Pan, the Piper," written and narrated by Paul Wing with Russ Case's orchestra and an imaginative score by George Kleinsinger. This one tells the story of "The Reed That Grew Into an Orchestra," and is quite an achievement in children's recordings, with a combination of educational narrative, [illegible] fantasy and fine musical background.

Carle Comes Calling: Frankie Carle with rhythm section. H[illegible] eight sides with Frankie's best solo work and just enough rhythm to make for good dancing. [illegible] Contents: "Star Dust," "Canadian Capers," "I'll Get By," "Deep Purple," 'Penthouse Serenade," 'I Want a Girl," "Chopin's Polonaise in Boogie," and "If You Were the Only Girl." (Columbia, four 10-inch records).

Sentimental Journey: Les Brown. A slick first album by this popular band leader, comprising some of his best offerings. A combination of solid beat and some smoothies. Contents: "Sentimental Journey," "Twilight Time," "A Good Man Is Hard to Beat," 'Bizet Has His Day," "Mexican Hat Dance," "Leap Frog," "Out of Nowhere," 'Daybreak Serenade." (Columbia, four 10-inch records).

Jack Teagarden Items

Jack Teagarden, one of the really great figures in jazz, now heads a combo of eight outstanding musicians for RCA Victor, and in the swing classics category they offer "Say It Simple" and "A Jam Session at Victor." Assisting Jack's trombone and vocals are Cliff Stickland, sax; Peanuts Hucko, clarinet; Max Kaminsky, trumpet; Gene Schroeder, piano; Chuck Wayne, guitar; Jack Lesberg, bass; Dave Tough, drums. Other populars:

RCA Victor: Tex Beneke, "When the Summer Is Over" and "Without Music;' Freddy Martin, "The Lady from 29 Palms" and "Cumana;" Charlie Spivak, "Fine Thing" and "Stop Throwin' Rocks at the Devil;" Lonzo and Oscar, "Ole Buttermilk Sky" and "Take Them Cold Feet Outa My Back;" Page Cavanaugh Trio, "Love's Got Me in a Lazy Mood" and "Triskaidekaphobia;" Rosalie Allen, "O Silver Wings to San Antone" and "I'll Never Grieve."

Columbia: Kay Kyser, "A Trout, No Doubt" and "Dreamland;" Les Brown, "Fine Thing" and "Oh My Achin' Heart" Golden Gate Quartet, "Pray for the Lights to Go Out" and "High, Low and Wide;" Johnny Bond, "Don't Look Now" and "Rock My Cradle Once Again."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 68,294) (S 38,950)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 27 1947

'Music for All' July 29 At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—In the peaceful picturesque surroundings where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and imagined his "Tanglewood Tales," the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present an innovation in musical festivals, Tuesday, July 29. Its "Music For All" day will feature a comprehensive program of motion pictures to illustrate the use of original music scores by prominent living composers, preceding the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert and broadcast, Serge Koussevitsky conducting.

Among those whose works will be heard in this novel presentation are Aaron Copland, winner of the Pulitzer Prize and Critics' Circle Award, and Arthur Honegger, both members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. With films selected on the basis of dramatic as well as musical worth, the program will open with exerpts from Walt Disney's new historic animation, "Mickey's Grand Opera."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,465)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 27 1947

Operatic Night Will Bring 'Footlighters' For Pop Concert

"Operatic Night" at the Yale Bowl "Pop" concert next Tuesday evening at 8:15, will feature the "Footlight Favorites" in a group of favorite arias from some of the great operas. The quartet of singers, who made such a hit here last Summer, consists of Adelaide Abbot, coloratura soprano; Lucielle Browning, contralto; Edward Kane, tenor, and Frank Wennerholm, baritone.

After relinquishing his baton to Mr. Anderson for the last concert in the current "Pop" series which is under the sponsorship of the New Haven Junior Chamber of Commerce, Harry Berman will be back to conduct the local symphony orchestra in an operatic program. The first half of the program will include Rossini's overture to his "Italians in Algeria," the prelude to Verdi's "La Traviata," selections from "Carmen," by Bizet, and the melodious waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Richard Strauss.

In the second half, the four singers will be heard in both group and solo numbers. The group presentations include the quartet from Flotow's "Martha," an adaptation of a French ballet; the quartet medley from the gay operetta "La Vie Parisienne," by Offenbach; the quartet from "Faust," by Gounod, which depicts the contrasting personalities of Marguerite and her old guardian Martha, as well as those of Faust and Mephistopheles.

Several Solo Numbers

Among the solo numbers will be the ever popular "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" sung by Miss Browning, and La Reve from "Manon," by Massenet (one of the more popular operas in the modern repertoire), offered by Mr. Kane. He also will sing "La Donna e Mobile" from "Rigoletto," by Verdi. Adelaide Abbot will present as her solo number the Bell Song from "Lakme," by Delibes, a coloratura selection reflecting the native tradition of India. Mr. Wennerholm will be heard in the Prologue from Leoncavallo's opera "Pagliacci," which hints at the story of the tragedy.

There has been a great demand for tickets, though reserved and general admission tickets still are available at local agencies. As usual, the "Pop" concert flags will appear on downtown buildings if the concert is to be held at the scheduled time. In the event of rain, the performance will be given on the first clear evening.

Two command performances at 10 Downing Street, one under the patronage of the Queen of England and the other sponsored by Princess Mary Louise—a recital at the White House for the late President and Mrs. Roosevelt—the acclaim of two continents—all these honors materialized for a New Haven girl, Ray Lev, who originally took piano lessons as part of her general education. Miss Lev will appear this afternoon at 4 o'clock as guest artist with the Gordon String Quartet in a concert at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn.

London Debut At 17

Miss Lev made her London debut at the age of 17 while still a student, playing the Tschaikovsky Concerto under the late Sir Landon Ronald, and then toured Europe before returning to New York. Her American debut at Carnegie Hall in 1934 was followed by concert tours of the United States and Canada; appearances as soloist with symphony orchestras including the New York Philharmonic, the St. Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Rochester Symphonies; annual recitals at Carnegie Hall and radio engagements.

Her musicianship extends beyond the concert stage, for she has arranged Bach's "Bist Du Bei Mir" for two pianos, and in collaboration has made the piano arrangements for the book, "Treasury of Stephen Foster," a Book of the Month dividend for October, 1946.

The first Friday afternoon concert of the current series being presented at Music Mountain will be given August 1 at 3 o'clock. Louise Nippert will be featured in a group of songs and Paul Ulanowsky, pianist, will play with the Gordon String Quartet in a performance of the Brahms Piano Quintet. The Mozart Quartet in E flat major will complete the program.

The coming week promises to be an eventful one at Tanglewood. This afternoon's concert marks the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. The program is made up of the Overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, No 7.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 193,539)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 27 1947

Recordings

RCA VICTOR'S release of excerpts from Serge Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet" in a performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brings to records the most important portions of a composition destined to figure prominently in the annuals of music history. Espisodes from "Romeo and Juliet" featured on these discs comprise the first, second, fourth and seventh movements from the second of two suites, arranged by the composer when he found the original from the ballet somewhat unwieldy because of its length.

PROKOFIEFF began work on the score for "Romeo and Juliet" following the completion of his lyrics and brilliant Violin Concerta No. 2 in G Minor, which is available on RCA Victor Records in a recording by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Completed in September, 1935, and first played in concert form a month later in Moscow with the composer conducting, the ballet was the subject of furious controversy when it became known that it was to have a happy ending, contrary to Shakespeare's drama. Later, it was decided to adhere to the original Shakespearean plot.

[90]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,465)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 27 1947

Music For All

"Music for All," the special added event next Tuesday, will include demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments of science for musical reproduction—radio, phonograph, motion pictures, and television.

The evening program begins at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the The... Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim," and Henry V' will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

Illustrating how symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 P. M. in the Shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with engineers, director, and announcers operating in full view of the audience. The Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra with Organ, in D minor and Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 with Ella Goldstein as soloist will provide the broadcast portion of the concert.

During the playing of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, first motion pictures of a festival audience will be made for a film about Tanglewood.

The final part of the program entitled "The March of Fidelity" will include excerpts from Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff, and Beethoven, played both by the orchestra and in phonograph records made at various times during the past third of a century. The climax of this portion of the program will come with the introduction of "The Berkshire," first custom-made phonograph which will be played alongside the orchestra itself. So far as is known this is the first time such a comparison has ever been made before the public.

Beethoven Cycle

Next Thursday evening, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will open the Beethoven cycle with the composer's first three symphonies, to be followed Saturday evening, August 2, by the fourth and fifth symphonies and the fifth Piano Concerto (Emperor), with Jacob Lateiner as soloist. Both of these concerts will start at 8:15.

The sixth and seventh symphonies and the fourth Piano Concerto with Joseph Battista as soloist will be played on Sunday afternoon, August 3, at 3:30 and the cycle will be concluded on Tuesday evening, August 5, at 7:30 (note earlier hour) with the playing of the eighth and ninth symphonies.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1947

Bernstein Wins Ovation From Tanglewood Audience

Young Composer-Conductor Displays Rare Art in Leading Boston Symphony Concert

By Willard M. Clark

Tanglewood, July 27—Twenty nine years old Leonard Bernstein, making his debut at Tanglewood this afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, won a tremendous and well-deserved ovation from an audience of 8500 persons.

This young composer, pianist, conductor showed the many facets of his art in a formidable program which included the overture to Mozart's The Magic Flute, The Rites of Spring by Stravinsky, and the great C major symphony No. 7 by Schubert.

Bernstein, as he conducts, is rhythm personified yet his cues are as direct and precise as one could wish. One of his most ardent admirers, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky occupied Box No. 1. It is rumored that one of these days Bernstein may be conductor of the Boston Symphony. Even now, it would be a happy choice.

Still Vigorous, Fresh

Stravinsky's masterpiece The Rites of Spring, is not heard as often as it should be. It is just 25 years since its dissonances fell upon the astounded ears of an audience attending a concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Today, its complexities seem less, its dissonances less appalling while its vigor, its freshness remain.

One heard today a definite performance, a performance which caught and held the earthy tang of the first part, The Adoration of the Earth, and successfully evoked the mysterious murmurs and sonorities of The Sacrifice. Under Bernstein's direction, this work, written more than 30 years ago, emerged as significant as the day it was written.

Most Fascinating

It is a long distance from Stravinsky to Schubert, but in his culminating symphony, the seventh, or ninth if one prefers that opus number, one hears the most buoyant, fascinating and original of the Schubert symphonies. It was in his reading of this work that Mr. Bernstein revealed his poetic insight, his superb handling of dynamics and his sensitivity for melody. He summoned thrilling sonorities, yet had at his command the most delicate and beautiful of pianissimi, while his regard for phrase was a delight.

In his reading of the Mozart overture, he showed his familiarity with this school and brought to it the red-blooded, straight-forward reading it deserves.

Saturday Concert

Saturday night, 8000 persons heard Dr. Koussevitzky conduct two contemporary works in addition to the Berlioz Harold in Italy in which William Primrose, violist, appeared as soloist. The contemporary works were disappointing. Samuel Barber has written far better music than that in his overture to A School for Scandal.

Aaron Copland's third symphony has its moments, but they are few and far between. There are a few melodic moments and many more when melody is completely absent. The work lacks cohesion. There is effective use of brass and various percussion instruments. Dr. Koussevitzky gave it all it was worth and possibly made it sound better than it is.

Berlioz has written greater music than Harold in Italy, but it is music that still falls sweetly upon the ear. Frankly episodic, it moves through its tales of Italian life surely and easily. The viola is an integral part of the orchestration but is heard too seldom. When heard, the matchless tones which Mr. Primrose draws from his instrument soared through the shed, warm and vibrant. The audience was enchanted, and with reason.

Next Thursday the series of three concerts devoted to the symphonies of Beethoven begins. Thursday night brings the first, second and third symphonies.

It was announced that the student chorus and orchestra concert scheduled for Monday at 4.30 will not be given.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 32,724)
This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
PRESS
JUL 27 1947

and a touch of mystery.

At Boston: Mickey Mouse

A comprehensive program of motion pictures illustrating the use of original musical scores by important contemporary composers will be shown at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Music for All" field day at Bos- Tuesday of this week.

The curtain-raiser, incidentally, is the now historic Disney cartoon, "Mickey's Grand Opera."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 5,820) (S 5,787)
This Clipping From
BLACKWELL, OKLA.
JOURNAL-TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1947

Music World

NEW YORK, July 25—(U.P.)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, Aug. 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed part it has been performed only oc casionally in Europe. Since n parts exist in America, a full se is being copied for the Tanglewoo production.

American music needs consistent promotion and more frequent performances to achieve its proper place, in the opinion of F. Charles Adler, conductor of the Saratoga Music Festival, which opens a Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on Sept. 6.

"We glorify all kinds of American things, from antiques and ancestors to hot dogs and chorus girls," Adler observed. "Why not take a little time out and glorify American culture? Let's give American music a chance to be heard."

Adler, who has a fondness for listing premieres on his programs, gave 43 first performances at the Saratoga Festival last year. He has about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a musical culture," Adler continued, "until we foster American music. We have a large body of men and women in this country today writing music in a rich and varied tradition and experimenting with the future. They cannot live, they cannot learn, they cannot grow unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is controversial—especially that by Americans. Audiences are said to stay away from it, although it has been our experience that an audience not only accepts but enjoys the new when it is interestingly introduced.

"No audience should be asked to listen to 'all-American' programs. The listener should have variety, so that he may compare the present with the past. The composer should likewise be asked to measure his creative work against the accepted art of the past."

The NBC Symphony Orchestra will shift to Saturday evening broadcasts starting Saturday, Oct. 4. It will be heard from 6:30 to 7:30 p m., New York time.

The change, NBC announced, was made with the approval of Arturo Toscanini, permanent conductor. It moves the program to evening listening period after on Sunday afterno me.

Toscanini will resume his ection of the orchestra on Oct. The symphony was formed in and has been heard on the continuously since then with as permanent conducto

---

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/17/47

'Music For Al ield Day Announced B oussevitzky

The Boston Symphony O chestra and its music directo Serge Koussevitzky, announce "Music for All" field day at Ta glewood, Tuesday, July 29, sho ing latest advances in all for of musical reproduction.

The program will cover reco ing, radio, television, and moti pictures and will conclude w a special concert by the orche tra in addition to those alrea announced for the 1947 Be shire Festival. The event attract music critics and ot specially invited guests from entire country.

For the first time anywh the public will be invited to co pare symphonic recording sid side with the modern orche itself when RCA Victor int duces its first custom-made dio-phonograph. The new strument has been named Berkshire" in honor of the T glewood festivals and the two hundred sets have been marked for sale on an exclu ly subscription basis to be the Berkshire Music Cente olarship fund. The school ganized in 1939 by Dr. Kou vitzky for outstanding yo musicians stands to receive sizeable gift from these sales.

The second half of the gram is entitled "The Marc Musical Fidelity" and will ture recordings by the Bo Symphony Orchestra of year-intervals back to 1915 it became the first full-size phonic organization to play the phonograph.

As part of a film to be d buted by Metro-Goldwyn-M moving pictures will be mad the Festival audience fo first time. Before the co there will be a program of cerpts from several hit pictures with scores by A Copland and Arthur Hon who are on the faculty at glewood, and other impo contemporary composers films are being loaned by Artists Corporation, the Mu of Modern Art, and other es.

For the occasion the bea music shed will become a studio with engineers and nouncers working in full v the audience. The broa will be one of the regular T day evening series by the B Symphony Orchestra ove American Broadcasting Co coast-to-coast network.

...ars on the Sunday after ...ne.
Toscanini will resume h...
...ection of the orchestra on O...
The symphony was formed ...
and has been heard on ...
continuously since then wit...
...as permanent condu...

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

MILLERTON, N.Y.
NEWS
7/17/47

...deceased.
The Trustee for Alba Porter Atkin...
Ella L. Chipman u... said deceased havi...
his annual account...
period from June ...
June 2, 1947, for all...

The Boston Symphony
chestra and its music dir...
Serge Koussevitzky, annou...
"Music for All" field day at glewood, Tuesday, July 29, ing latest advances in all of musical reproduction.

The program will cover r... ing, radio, television, and ... pictures and will conclude a special concert by the ... tra in addition to those a... announced for the 1947 shire Festival. The even... attract music critics and specially invited guests fro... entire country.

For the first time any...
the public will be invited to pare symphonic recording ... side with the modern orc... itself when RCA Victor
duces its first custom-ma... dio-phonograph. The ne...
strument has been named Berkshire" in honor of the glewood festivals and the two hundred sets have bee... marked for sale on an exc... ly subscription basis to the Berkshire Music Cente... olarship fund. The scho...
ganized in 1939 by Dr. K... vitzky for outstanding musicians, stands to rec... sizeable gift from these sales.

The second half of the gram is entitled "The Ma...
Musical Fidelity" and wi... ture recordings by the Symphony Orchestra of year-intervals back to 1915 it became the first full-siz...
phonic organization to pl...
the phonograph.

As part of a film to be buted by Metro-Goldwyn-... moving pictures will be m...
the Festival audience fo... first time. Before the c...
there will be a program cerpts from several hit pictures with scores by Copland and Arthur Ho... who are on the faculty a... glewood, and other imp...
contemporary composers.
films are being loaned by Artists Corporation, the M... of Modern Art, and other es.

For the occasion the be... music shed will become studio with engineers an... nouncers working in full v...
the audience. The bro... will be one of the regular day evening series by the Symphony Orchestra ov...
American Broadcasting Co... coast-to-coast network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 16,354)

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER
JUL 27 1947

N... York July 26 UP—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be
...ormed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music
...ter, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tangle-
...d in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

...e production will be directed
...conducted by Boris Goldovsky.
...ard R...tark will design the
... The orchestra and singers,
...in ... production of "Peter
...mes ...ast season, will consist ...pupils o. the Berkshire Music
...ter.

...wo performances will be given
...ing the last week of the festi-
... on Monday and Wednesday
...nin... August 4 and 6. Admis-
...n w... by invitation to friends
...the Berkshire Music Center.

...Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo,
...ng of Crete" in 1780, in his
...enty-fourth year. It is consid-
...ed by some one of his greatest
...rks, but because of its length
... the absence of printed parts,
...has been performed only oc-
...ionally in Europe. Since no
...ts exist in America, a full set
...ing copied for the Tanglewood
...uction.

—

...merican music needs consistent
...motion and more frequent per-
...rmances to achieve its proper
...ace, in the opinion of F. Charles
...ler, conductor of the Saratoga
...usic Festival, which opens at ...aratoga Springs, N. Y., on Sep-
...ember 6.

"We glorify all kinds of Ameri-
...an things, from antiques and an-
...estors to hot dogs and chorus
...irls," Adler observed. "Why not
...ake a little time out and glorify American culture? Let's give American music a chance to be
...eard."

Adler, who has a fondness for
...isting premieres on his programs,
...ave 43 first performances at the Saratoga Festival last year. He
...ha: about 30 this year.

"We will never develop a musi...cal culture," Adler continued, "un...til we foster American music. We ...have a large body of men and women in this country today writing music in a rich and varied tradition and experimenting wth the future. They cannot live, they cannot learn, they cannot grow unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is controversial—especially that by Americans. Audiences are said to stay away from it, although it has been our experience that an audience not only accepts but enjoys the new when it is interestingly introduced.

"No audience should be asked to listen to 'all-Amreican' programs. The listener should have variety, so that he may compare the present with the past. The composer should likewise be asked to measure his creative work against the accepted art of the past."

—

The NBC Symphony orchestra will shift to Saturday evening broadcasts starting Saturday, October 4. It will be heard from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m., New York time.

The change, NBC announced, was made with the approval of Arturo Tuscanini, permanent conductor. It moves the program to an evening listening period after years on the Sunday afternoon time.

Toscanini will resume his direction of the orchestra on October 25. The symphony was formed in 1937 and has been heard on the air continuously since then with Toscanini as permanent conductor.

—

Joseph Szigeti, violinist, has left for a six-month concert tour of England and the Continent. He will appear in August at the Engadine Festival in Switzerland and at the Edinburgh International Festival of music and dance. Thereafter his tour will take him to France, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland and England. Szigeti returns to this country in mid-December for his annual coast-to-coast tour.

—

Fritz Mahler has been appointed conductor of the Erie (Pa.) Philharmonic. With his appointment, the orchestra is being completely professionalized. Its coming season will be expanded and negotiations are under way for important concert artists to appear as soloists.

A nephew of the famous composer Gustav Mahler, the conductor came to this country in 1936 and has since become an American citizen.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 369,047) (S 376,981)

This Clipping From
DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 27 1947

ON THE RECORDS

New Album Features Two Bach Concertos

BACH'S SECOND and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos are offered in an RCA Victor album, as played by a small orchestra from the Boston Symphony and conducted by Koussevitsky.

The so-called "toy trumpet" of the Second (a small trumpet in D flat of Bach's time) is played brilliantly by Roger Voisin.

The solo piano in the Fifth is played by Lukas Foss. The album, for fidelity in reproduction, far surpasses any of recent date. Georges Laurent's flute is heard exquisitely in obbligato.

* * *

CROSSING QUICKLY over a couple of centuries in music, Victor's album release includes a recording of Marc Blitzstein's virile "Airborne" Symphony, with the dynamic young conductor, Leonard Bernstein, conducting the New York City Symphony.

Robert Shaw doubles as narrator and conductor of the RCA Victor Chorale, and solo lines are by Charles Holland, tenor, and Walter Scheff, baritone.

The symphony, one of the few major works to emerge from the war, was written in large part in London in the days of the buzz bombings.

* * *

ANOTHER MODERN work which has been received enthusiastically by American audiences is the Ninth Symphony of Shostakovich. The Victor album is by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Koussevitzky conducting.

The light-hearted qualities of the work are developed in the fine Koussevitzy tradition. It's an album that should have considerable popularity.

An American recording debut by a distinguished English pianist is the feature of a recent album release by Columbia Records, with Cyril Smith playing the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 3 with the City of Birmingham Orchestra under George Weldon's direction.

For the many admirers of Rachmaninoff as a composer, the recording will come as a welcome performance. Pianist and orchestra explore the music's lush effects fully and to complete satisfaction.

* * *

DETROITERS WHO recall the brilliance of concerts by Guiomar Novaes are presented with an especial treat in a single Columbia record of the Caprice on Airs de Ballet, arranged by Saint-Saens from Gluck's opera "Alceste."

The music, under Mme. Novaes' ministration, is gay and lively—just what the doctor ordered for Summer listening.

Listeners who are conditioned to the so-called "modern" in music, as well as those who are trying intelligently to accustom themselves to it, would be well advised to give a hearing to the Columbia album containing the late Bela Bartok's Third piano concerto.

Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Georgy Sandor as soloist.

The combination is a good one, both pianist and conductor being Hungarian by background, and the music having its roots in Magyar folk music. The bright and shining effects of musicianly dissonance are applied with a deft hand by composer and performers.

—J. D. C.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Pine Plains, N.Y.
Register-Herald
7/17/47

"Music for All" at Tanglewood July 29

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orcrestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 125,806) (S 217,398)

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER

JUL 28 1947

Mozart Opera Premiere Set For Berkshire Festival

NEW YORK, JULY 27—(UP)

MOZART'S opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Two performances will be given during the last week of the festival on Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King Of Crete," in 1780 in his twenty-fourth year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

* * *

AMERICAN music needs con sistent promotion and more fre quent performances to achieve it proper place in the opinion of F
Charles Adler, conductor of th
Saratoga Music Festival, whic opens at Saratoga Springs, N. Y on September 6.

"We glorify all kinds of Amer can things from antiques and an cestors to hot dogs and choru girls," Adler observed. "Why no take a little time out and glorif
American culture? Let's giv American music a chance to b heard."

Adler, who has a fondness fo listing premieres on his program gave 43 first performances at th
Saratoga Festival last year. H has about [illegible] this year.

"We will never develop a musica culture," Adler continued, "unt we foster American music. W have a large body of men an women in this country today wri ing music in a rich and varie tradition and experimenting wit the future. They cannot live, the cannot learn, they cannot gro unless their music is played.

"New music admittedly is con troversial—especially that by Ame icans. Audiences are said to sta away from it, although it has bee our experience that an audienc not only accepts but enjoys the ne when it is interestingly introduce

"No audience should be aske to listen to 'all-American' pro grams. The listener should hav variety, so that he may compa
the present with the past. Th composer should likewise be aske to measure his creative wo against the accepted art of th past."

* * *

THE NBC Symphony Orchest will shift to Saturday evenin broadcasts starting Saturday, O tober 4. It will be heard fro
6:30 to 7:30 p. m., New York tim

The change, NBC announce was made with the approval
Arturo Toscanini, permanent co ducter. It moves the program an evening listening period aft years on the Sunday afternoon time.

Toscanini will resume his direction of the orchestra on October 25. The symphony was formed in 1937 and has been heard on the air continuously since then with Toscanini as permanent conductor.

* * *

JOSEPH SZIGETI, violinist, has left for a six-month concert tour of England and the Continent. He will appear in August at the Engadine Festival in Switzerland and at the Edinburgh International Festival of music and dance. Thereafter his tour will take him to France, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland and England. Szigeti returns to this country in mid-December for his annual coast-to-coast tour.

* * *

FRITZ MAHLER has been ap pinted conductor of the Erie (Pa.)
hilharmonic. With his appoint ent, the orchestra is being com letely professionalized. Its com ng season will be expanded and egotiations are under way for im ortant concert artists to appear s soloists.

A nephew of the famous com poser Gustav Mahler, the con ductor came to this country in 1930 and has since become an American citizen.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,931)

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 28 1947

Local Native Leads Symphony

LENOX, July 27 (AP)—Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old composer-conductor and former pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, today was guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in the third of the first series of Berkshire music festival concerts.

It was the first time anyone but Dr. Koussevitzky, who originated the idea of Tanglewood, had led the orchestra here. Bernstein, a native of Lawrence, won most applause from the 8,500 in attendance when the orchestra performed Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

The concert opened with Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute" and concluded with Schu

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 118,830) (S 204,456)

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

JUL 29 1947

By PAUL SPEEGLE

For those of you who feel that the radio doesn't give you enough "live" symphonic broadcasts—if you have tears, prepare to shed them now!

Not only has the Boston Symphony lost its sponsor, but so has the New York Philharmonic. And NBC, having sold the spot which used to be so gloriously filled by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arturo Toscanini, will move Signor Toscanini to Saturdays when he returns to the podium in the fall.

As of present indications both the American Broadcasting Company, with the Boston gang, and the Columbia Broadcasting System, with its Philharmonic, will keep these two programs going as sustainers.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,181) (S 41,945)

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH-HERALD-SUN

JUL 27 1947

Front Row, Center

By WESLEY FIRST

Maxwell Anderson's great hit drama, "Joan of Lorraine," in which Ingrid Bergmann shone like a polished jewel, may open the season at the Erie Playhouse this fall.

It was learned that L. Newell Tarrant, Playhouse director, is negotiating with the play's owners for production rights here.

Two other recent Broadway hits, "Dear Ruth" and Elmer Rice's "Dream Girl," are also subjects of negotiation by the dynamic Mr. Tarrant, this column was informed.

"Dream Girl" was the play Mr. Rice wrote for his wife, Miss Betty Field, and it enjoyed a tremendously successful run.

According to advices received here, all three plays may be staged during the season here, with one of them scheduled for use as an opener, provided a deal can be closed in time.

Meanwhile, the Playhouse reports tremendous response to its newly-initiated apprenticeship and fellowship programs.

As a matter of fact, the chances are good that the plans will be expanded to accommodate more than had been scheduled originally.

ROBERT KAEBNICK
With Westminster Choir

There will be an eight weeks course opened immediately this fall when the regular play season starts, and another course of the same length may be offered in February for the overflow.

Classes in the theater, and watching and participating in rehearsals will take up the apprentices' daytime hours, while acting or setwork will be docketed for the evenings.

Tentative plans call for the season to open the last week in September.

* * * *

FROM ALL reports, Fritz Mahler, new conductor of the Erie Philharmonic Orchestra, made a very measurably fine impression on those to whom he talked during his visit here last weekend.

He met directors and officers of the Erie Philharmonic Society, and made a rapid survey of the general facilities of the city.

Being out of the city at the time, this commentator unfortunately missed Mr. Mahler's visit.

The Austria-born and Europe-trained conductor will begin his duties as fulltime conductor of the local orchestra this coming season.

Philharmonic officials are optimistic over the future.

* * * *

A NOTE from Erie-born Will Sundy, band leader who is enjoying a steady climb to fame, reveals he is now playing at the Santa Rita Hotel in Tucson, Ariz., Rendezvous Room.

Will and the band are playing over the air on Station KTUC, CBS outlet in Tucson, six nights a week.

Hollywood's Bob Allen Productions took movies of the band last week.

* * * *

ROBERT KAEBNICK, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Kaebnick, 3803 Main St., Lawrence Park, has been engaged as a member of the world-famous Westminster Choir for th 1947-48 season.

John Finley Williamson, co ductor of the choir, revealed th information at Princeton, N. J., t this column last week.

Mr. Kaebnick is a graduate o
Lawrence Park High School, wher he was tenor soloist with the gl club.

He was a member of Covena
Choir, Federal Lee Whittlesey, d rector, and was a voice pupil
Miss Patte Peffer and Claren Reinhart.

The youthful musician w spend the summer at the Wes minster Choir training hea quarters in Manteo, N. C., a will tour with the group throu
New England, Canada, the mi west and the west coast n season.

Climaxing the season, Mr. Ka nick will sing with the choral gr in six Carnegie Hall performan with the New York Philharmon Symphony Orchestra, under Cha Muench and Bruno Walter.

THEATER ARTS Magazine its current issue, publishes s very interesting statistics regard the cost of experimenting on Br way.

Here is what Broadway's Exp mental Theater, Inc., spent season producing five plays:

Production costs $25,222. house expenses, $4,053.32; m bership costs, $2,514.57; and ing costs, $554, for total exp
tures of $32,344.86.

Total income was $26,493.04, ing a season's deficit of $5.8
The theater was donated.

It costs money on Broadwa matter how you cut it.

FERNANDE MERCIER S
Erie violinist and teacher, le week for Berkshire Music F school in Tanglewood, Mass., she will spend several we study and practice.

AN ALL-BRAHMS progra be performed by the Chau Symphony Orchestra und conductor Franco Autori a today in the Chautauqua theater.

At 8:30 p. m. Tuesday, t chestra will play a "Pops" cert, featuring tenor Irwin and including music by W
Bizet, Delibes, Morton Gou
Victor Herbert.

[illegible]

VERA BRODSKY wil soloist with the CBS S
3 p. m. today, when she
[illegible]

PETER LYONS' ad
"A Bill of Div
Dane's absorbing broadcast over One" program day.

This is consistently finest dramatic show Writing, direction and topnotch.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

...ow,

...r

...Y FIRST

... hit drama, "Joan of Lor-
...mann shone like a polished
... the Erie Playhouse this fall

...engaged as a member of the world-famous Westminster Choir for the 1947-48 season.

John Finley Williamson, con-ductor of the choir, revealed th... information at Princeton, N. J., ... this column last week.

Mr. Kaebnick is a graduate of Lawrence Park High School, where he was tenor soloist with the gl... club.

He was a member of Coven... Choir, Federal Lee Whittlesey, ...rector, and was a voice pupil ... Miss Patte Peffer and Claren... Reinhart.

The youthful musician w... spend the summer at the We... minster Choir training ... quarters in Manteo, N. C., ... will tour with the group th... New England, Canada, the ... west and the west coast ... season.

Climaxing the season, Mr. ...nick will sing with the choral ... in six Carnegie Hall perform... with the New York Philhar... Symphony Orchestra, under C... Muench and Bruno Walter.

* * * *

THEATER ARTS Magaz... its current issue, publishes ... very interesting statistics reg... the cost of experimenting on ...way.

Here is what Broadway's ...mental Theater, Inc., spe... season producing five plays:

Production costs $25,2... house expenses, $4,053.32; ...harship costs, $2,514.57; and ... ...ing costs, $554, for total ex... tures of $32,344.86.

Total income was $26,493.04, ... ing a season's deficit of $5,... The theater was donated.

It costs money on Broadw... matter how you do it.

* * * *

FERNANDE MERCIER S... ...ris violinist and teacher, le... week for Berkshire Music F... School in Tanglewood, Mass., ... she will spend several we... study and practice.

* * * *

AN ALL-BRAHMS progra... be performed by the Cha... Symphony Orchestra, un... conductor, Franco Autori, at ... today in the Chautauqua ... theater.

At 8:30 p. m. Tuesday, ... chestra will play a "Pops" ... cert, featuring tenor Irwin ... and including music by ... Bizet, Delibes, Morton Go... Victor Herbert.

James Friskin, pianist, ... soloist in the Wednesday n... cert, which will be an all-B... program. He will play th... Concerto. The program ... cludes the Egmont Over... the Fifth Symphony.

Next Saturday at 8:30 ... orchestra will play Brah... tions on a Theme by Jose... and Rachmaninoff's sec... concerto, with Jacques ... soloist. The program w... clude Rimsky-Korsakov's ... Caprice" and "Gymnoped... by Satie-Debussy.

* * * *

VERA BRODSKY wi... soloist with the CBS Sy... 8 p. m. today, when she ... nanyi's "Variations on ... Rhyme." Herbert Meng... duct the orchestra in S... ond Symphony and A... thorne's overture, "Str...

* * * *

PETER LYON'S ad... "A Bill of Divo... Dane's absorbin... broadcast over ... 8:30 ... One" program ...

This is consistently ... finest dramatic, show... writing, direction and ... topnotch.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
1947

...OUNG BRAZILIAN ...SPIRES ORCHESTRA ...T MUSIC FESTIVAL

..., THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

...NGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., ... 28.—... ...zar de Carvalho ... lovers of sym... music. ... 32-year-old ... conductor ... [illegible] ... among the symphony con-... ...ers of tomorrow.

...ewing in retrospect the ...erts and events of the opening ...kend of the 1947 Berkshire ... Festival, this observer feels ... most arresting aspect of ... four days was the appearance ... extraordinarily talented ... man.

...e expected to be excited by the ...ose Boston Symphony Orches-... and dynamic ... Koussevitzky, but the discovery of a ... talent like De Carvalho is ... a sudden flash of significance.

...standing Performance

...e occasion was Friday ... [illegible] ...er. Some of the players have ... with leading symphony or-...stras, others are talented stu-...ts or graduates of leading ...sic schools and conservatories.

...e orchestra did well under ... student conductors—Irving ... Harry John Brown and ...ard Samuel. But under De Car-... it sounded and played like a ...ned symphonic organization. ...held the players in the ... of ...hand, as it were, and they per-...med as orchestral players do ...n they have a leader who can ...re them and for whom they ... affection as well as respect.

...conducting without a score and ...h fluid graceful gestures, the ...ng man gave a reading of the ...ault Strauss "Death and Trans-...ration" that established him ...mediately as a conductor of sen-...e musical feeling and extraor-...ary power. His interpretation ... individual but entirely logical, ... breadth and big line of mature ...icianship being always present.

...est Ovation for Brazilian

...vations are invariably the rule ... Berkshire concerts. Everything ... the Center tends to heighten the ... concert enthusiasm to a ...er pitch. But in spite of the ...ly enthusiastic ovations at the ... major concerts of the week-... ovations by audiences number-... between 900 and 10,000 per-... the finest ovation was re-... for a comparatively un-...wn "good neighbor" from ...z...

... Carvalho ... recalled three ... to the ... persons who ... the Friday ... concert, ... as a charming and somehow ... capstone to the ovation ... a kiss on the brow from ... himself, who rushed to ... platform from his seat in the ... of the audience.

...er the Center closes De Car-... will conduct 25 concerts in ... returning to Boston in De-... There are well-authen-...ed rumors that he will be ... numerous guest appear-... in this country next season. ... not he is a young man ...

...osers Acknowledge Plaudits

... Koussevitzky directed beauti-... performances of Honegger's ... [illegible]

Shows Superior Talent

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO, young Brazilian, was outstanding as one of the conductors at the Berkshire Music Festival.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 28 1947

Copland Work Is Featured at Music Festival

Symphony No. 3 by American Composer Is Long, Brilliant Piece In Modern Idom

By D. E. RITZ

Aaron Copland's Symphony number 3, which was selected by the Music Critic's circle of New York as the "outstanding American orchestral work" heard in that city during the season past, was featured by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at the Saturday night Berkshire Festival concert. The program also included Samuel Barber's overture to "The School of Scandal" and the Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony with viola solo played by William Primrose.

The Copland symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music foundation and was first performed at the Boston Symphony concert of Oct. 18, 1946. For many the Saturday night performance was the first opportunity to hear the work. It is long and in the very modern idiom. That Copland knows his orchestration will be acknowledged by all, but there were many who did not admire the work in its entirety. To the reviewer the best parts were the third movement, "Andantino quasi allegretto" and the opening fanfare of the fourth movement. ... these the composer achieved re... musical expression of ideas.

Overture Delightful

The Barber overture, whi... opened the program, was a delig... and could only have been writ... by an American. Is directness ... integrity of expression were equ... charming. Both Mr. Barber and Copland were called to the p... form to share the applause ... tended to the orchestra and ... distinguished conductor.

The Berlioz' symphony con... cluded the program. The wor... was written originally for (al... though never played by) Paganin... and a Stradivarius viola which h... owned. It does not exploit th... technical possibilities of the sol... instrument but uses its particula... tonal quality as a commentary o... the ideas expressed by the orch... estra. Mr. Primrose uses th... 'Macdonald" Stradivarius viola an... his playing—as always—was flaw... less. At times there was a ten... dency for the solo instrument t... be overpowered by the orchestra... but this was due partly to th... acoustic conditions in the shed ... partly to the demands of the

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Sir. (13,747)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)
JUL 28 1947

RCA Custom Models to Bow At Music Fete

PHILADELPHIA, July 27. — RCA Victor's new custom-made radios and radio-phonograph combinations, reportedly ranging in price from $2,000 to $5,000, will be shown for the first time Tuesday afternoon prior to the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., it was disclosed here at the weekend.

A select group of 100 members of the press and top-drawer dealers will attend a reception and press preview after arriving by special chartered train from New York, it was learned. The dealers and writers will represent all sections of the country.

RCA's new Berkshire models, some of which will incorporate television receivers, will be displayed and operated for the first time after the group arrives in Pittsfield, Mass. Chartered buses will transport the party to Tanglewood for the inauguration of what RCA officials assert is the "biggest promotion ever attempted for the introduction of new models."

First public showing of the new models will be held Tuesday evening during the Berkshire Music Festival. An audience of more than 6,000 will attend as Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, helps to introduce the sets. Before a group of eminent musicians and critics, one of the Berkshire models will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky, with both the recorder and orchestra playing identical bars of the same number.

During the dramatic stage presentation of the new RCA line, live models will participate. Script for the show was written by Harold Desfor, director of RCA Victor's publicity department. Radio and movies also will be used during the program, billed as "Music for All."

For 10 days after Tuesday's presentation, RCA's Berkshire models will be on display in a house leased for the occasion at Lenox, Mass. RCA's sales staff will be on hand to write orders, in cooperation with local dealers. A percentage of the profits resulting from the sale of each set is earmarked for the Berkshire Music Festival, for the establishment of a scholarship fund, it was said.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,718) (S 11,786)

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
JUL 29 1947

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company and WHMA will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival tonight at 7:30 o'clock.

Designated as "Music for All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast will include taking of motion pictures by MGM for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 30 1947

Movies Vie With Music In Big Tanglewood Show

Crowd of 10,000 On Hand for Unusual Berkshire Festival Event, With Everything From Tchaikovsky to Mickey Mouse

BY W. HARLEY RUDKIN

The advance notices said to come early and bring a picnic lunch. So I went early, complete with lunch, only to find that pretty close to 10,000 other people had taken advantage of the suggestion, and they were there with their picnic lunches. But despite the crowd, there was no actual crowding, and the wide spacious lawns of Tanglewood took on all the aspects of fiesta, a Chamber of Commerce clambake, a summer fashion show, a teen-agers outing, and mother and dad out for an evening in the park.

There were movies in the theater and music in the great shed; there were movies being made; there was the history of the phonograph, and the latest thing in television. There were anxious patrons hoping against hope that they would be the ones to win the big door prize. There were milk shakes and hot dogs; family parties having themselves a large time under the trees; monitors wandering about the green urging the girls to take their giggles somewhere else; that if Tchaikovsky had wanted a giggle in Piano Concerto No. 1, he would have written it into the score.

It was a great afternoon and a great evening. They didn't give away dishes, but that was about the only thing missing. It was one of the greatest human, movie and musical shows you have ever seen in your life. If they do it again, don't miss it.

Movies And Music

The first major event of the evening was the showing of representative films, and the development of music in the motion pictures, in the theater-concert hall. The place was filled to overflowing, while disconsolate hundreds stood around impatiently outside, waiting for someone to faint and be carried out.

I was busy seeing people, and got to the theater about five minutes after the affair had started. Bearing my official, and important looking announcement that said I was a guest of the management and please to show me all courtesy, I brushed by the crowd and headed for the door.

A pleasant young man wearing glasses and a wilted look, took a peek at the announcement, showed me all courtesy, and said I couldn't go in. And he wouldn't let me in.

"All filled up," he intoned with the air of a man whose patience was way past the breaking point.

Well, it's no use covering a story if you can't see what's going on, so I took him at his word— and went in the side entrance where the attendant was busy watching the pictures himself.

They showed scenes from "Mayerling," "Our Town," "Alexander Nevsky," "The River," and Disney, and wound up with the stirring charge of the knights at Agincourt from Laurence (Pardon) Sir Laurence Olivier's tremendous production of "Henry V." (The audience hated to see this come to an end, and a lot of them stayed over to see the show again at 11.

Lunch And Tchaikovsky

Came a half-hour intermission, when ... [illegible] ... the concert in the shed, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a popular program, which opened with the Vivaldi concerto for Orchestra and Organ in D Minor.

About the time that Ella Goldstein, featured piano soloist, struck the first familiar bars of the Tchaikovsky concerto, the moon decided to ... [illegible] ... boys and girls who had elected to hear the concerto from the lawn very happy. ... [illegible] ... ing "Tonight We Love" to the main theme, until a monitor told ... to take it somewhere else. Miss Goldstein gave a crisp reading to this program piece, and received an ovation at its close.

After intermission came the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture, and it was then that the cameras of MGM went into action, for the filming of part of the "Story of Tanglewood," which will be brought out as a short for general release. And of course, everybody wanted to get into the movies. The program closed with excerpts from Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and the Beethoven "Egmont" overture. Then those who wanted to see the movies again dashed back to the theater. Yes sir, quite a day.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 29 1947

Tanglewood Music Festival Has Notable Program

Sunday afternoon's concert marked the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. The program was made up of the overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, Volume 7.

"Music for All," the special added event tomorrow is creating wide interest and is expected to attract many visitors from distant points. In addition to a full concert by the orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, there will be demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments of science for musical reproduction, including radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

The program begins at 7 p. m. with "Music in the Movies" at the Theater-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim" and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 p. m. in the shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday night series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast ABC network. Engineers, director and announcers will be operating in full view of the audience.

[94]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

ow,

r

Y FIRST

hit drama, "Joan of Lor gmann shone like a polishe
the Erie Playhouse this fall

ngaged as a member of the world famous Westminster Choir for the 1947-48 season.

John Finley Williamson, conductor of the choir, revealed the information at Princeton, N. J., this column last week.

Mr. Kaebnick is a graduate of Lawrence Park High School, where he was tenor soloist with the glee club.

He was a member of Coven Choir, Federal Lee Whittlesey, director, and was a voice pupil of Miss Patte Peffer and Claren Reinhart.

The youthful musician will spend the summer at the Westminster Choir training quarters in Manteo, N. C., will tour with the group New England, Canada, the west and the west coast season.

Climaxing the season, Mr. nick will sing with the chor in six Carnegie Hall perfo with the New York Philh Symphony Orchestra, under Muench and Bruno Walter.

* * * *

THEATER ARTS Maga its current issue, publishe very interesting statistics re the cost of experimenting on way.

Here is what Broadway's mental Theater, Inc., sp season producing five plays.

Production costs $25, house expenses, $4,053.32; bership costs, $2,514.57; and ing costs, $554, for total tures of $32,344.86.

Total income was $26,493.0 ing a season's deficit of The theater was donated.

It costs money on Broadw matter how you do it.

* * * *

FERNANDE MERCIER rie violinist and teacher, week for Berkshire Music school in Tanglewood, Mass. she will spend several weeks study and practice.

* * * *

AN ALL-BRAHMS program be performed by the Cha Symphony Orchestra, under conductor, Franco Autori, at today in the Chautauqua theater.

At 8:30 p. m. Tuesday, chestra will play a "Pops" cert, featuring tenor Irwin and including music by Bizet, Delibes, Morton Go Victor Herbert.

James Friskin, pianist, soloist in the Wednesday n cert, which will be an all-B program. He will play th Concerto. The program cludes the Egmont Over the Fifth Symphony.

Next Saturday at 8:30 orchestra will play Brah tions on a Theme by Jose and Rachmaninoff's sec concerto, with Jacques soloist. The program w clude Rimsky-Korsakov's Caprice" and "Gymnope by Satie-Debussy.

* * * *

VERA BRODSKY wi soloist with the CBS Sy 3 p. m. today, when she nanyi's "Variations on Rhyme." Herbert Meng duct the orchestra in S ond Symphony and thorne's overture, "Str

* * * *

PETER LYON'S ad "A Bill of Divo Dane's absorbin broadcast over ime" program day.

This is consistently finest dramatic show writing, direction and topnotch.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 266,701)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
1947

UNG BRAZILIAN SPIRES ORCHESTRA T MUSIC FESTIVAL

THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

[illegible]

anding Performance

[illegible]

est Ovation for Brazilian

[illegible]

Shows Superior Talent

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO, Brazilian, was outstanding as one of the conductors at the Berkshire Music Festival.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 28 1947

Copland Work Is Featured at Music Festival

Symphony No. 3 by American Composer Is Long, Brilliant Piece In Modern Idom

By D. E. RITZ

Aaron Copland's Symphony number 3, which was selected by the Music Critic's circle of New York as the "outstanding American orchestral work" heard in that city during the season past, was featured by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at the Saturday night Berkshire Festival concert. The program also included Samuel Barber's overture to "The School of Scandal" and the Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" symphony with viola solo played by William Primrose.

The Copland symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music foundation and was first performed at the Boston Symphony concert of Oct. 18, 1946. For many the Saturday night performance was the first opportunity to hear the work. It is long and in the very modern idiom. That Copland knows his orchestration will be acknowledged by all, but there were many who did not admire the work in its entirety. To the reviewer the best parts were the third movement, "Andantino quasi allegretto" and the opening fanfare of the fourth movement. In these the composer achieved real musical expression of ideas.

Overture Delightful

The Barber overture, which opened the program, was a delight and could only have been written by an American. Is directness and integrity of expression were equally charming. Both Mr. Barber and Mr. Copland were called to the platform to share the applause extended to the orchestra and its distinguished conductor.

The Berlioz' symphony concluded the program. The work was written originally for (although never played by) Paganini and a Stradivarius viola which he owned. It does not exploit the technical possibilities of the solo instrument but uses its particular tonal quality as a commentary on the ideas expressed by the orchestra. Mr. Primrose uses the "Macdonald" Stradivarius viola and his playing—as always—was flawless. At times there was a tendency for the solo instrument to be overpowered by the orchestra but this was due partly to the acoustic conditions in the shed partly to the demands of the

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Sir. (13,747)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)
JUL 28 1947

RCA Custom Models to Bow At Music Fete

PHILADELPHIA, July 27. — RCA Victor's new custom-made radios and radio-phonograph combinations, reportedly ranging in price from $2,000 to $5,000, will be shown for the first time Tuesday afternoon prior to the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., it was disclosed here at the weekend.

A select group of 100 members of the press and top-drawer dealers will attend a reception and press preview after arriving by special chartered train from New York, it was learned. The dealers and writers will represent all sections of the country.

RCA's new Berkshire models, some of which will incorporate television receivers, will be displayed and operated for the first time after the group arrives in Pittsfield, Mass. Chartered buses will transport the party to Tanglewood for the inauguration of what RCA officials assert is the "biggest promotion ever attempted for the introduction of new models."

First public showing of the new models will be held Tuesday evening during the Berkshire Music Festival. An audience of more than 6,000 will attend as Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, helps to introduce the sets. Before a group of eminent musicians and critics, one of the Berkshire models will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky, with both the recorder and orchestra playing identical bars of the same number.

During the dramatic stage presentation of the new RCA line, live models will participate. Script for the show was written by Harold Desfor, director of RCA Victor's publicity department. Radio and movies also will be used during the program, billed as "Music for All."

For 10 days after Tuesday's presentation, RCA's Berkshire models will be on display in a house leased for the occasion at Lenox, Mass. RCA's sales staff will be on hand to write orders, in cooperation with local dealers. A percentage of the profits resulting from the sale of each set is earmarked for the Berkshire Music Festival, for the establishment of a scholarship fund, it was said.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 11,718) (S 11,786)

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
JUL 29 1947

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company and WHMA will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival tonight at 7:30 o'clock.

Designated as "Music for All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast will include taking of motion pictures by MGM for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 30 1947

Movies Vie With Music In Big Tanglewood Show

Crowd of 10,000 On Hand for Unusual Berkshire Festival Event, With Everything From Tchaikovsky to Mickey Mouse

BY W. HARLEY RUDKIN

The advance notices said to come early and bring a picnic lunch. So I went early, complete with lunch, only to find that pretty close to 10,000 other people had taken advantage of the suggestion, and they were there with their picnic lunches. But despite the crowd, there was no actual crowding, and the wide spacious lawns of Tanglewood took on all the aspects of fiesta, a Chamber of Commerce clambake, a summer fashion show, a teen-agers outing, and mother and dad out for an evening in the park.

There were movies in the theater and music in the great shed; there were movies being made; there was the history of the phonograph, and the latest thing in television. There were anxious patrons hoping against hope that they would be the ones to win the big door prize. There were milk shakes and hot dogs; family parties having themselves a large time under the trees; monitors wandering about the green urging the girls to take their giggles somewhere else; that if Tchaikovsky had wanted a giggle in Piano Concerto No. 1, he would have written it into the score.

It was a great afternoon and a great evening. They didn't give away dishes, but that was about the only thing missing. It was one of the greatest human, movie and musical shows you have ever seen in your life. If they do it again, don't miss it.

Movies And Music

The first major event of the evening was the showing of representative films, and the development of music in the motion pictures, in the theater-concert hall. The place was filled to overflowing, while disconsolate hundreds stood around impatiently outside, waiting for someone to faint and be carried out.

I was busy seeing people, and got to the theater about five minutes after the affair had started. Bearing my official, and important looking announcement that said I was a guest of the management and please to show me all courtesy, I brushed by the crowd and headed for the door.

A pair of young men wearing glasses and a wilted look, took a peek at the announcement, showed me all courtesy, and said I couldn't go in. And he wouldn't let me in.

"All filled up," he intoned with the air of a man whose patience was way past the breaking point.

Well, it's no use covering a story if you can't see what's going on, so I took him at his word—and went in the side entrance where the attendant was busy watching the pictures himself.

The [illegible] scenes from "Mayerling," "Our Town," "Alexander Nevsky," "The River," and Disney, and wound up with the stirring charge of the knights at Agincourt from Laurence (Pardon) Sir Laurence Olivier's tremendous production of "Henry V." The audience hated to see this come to an end, and a lot of them stayed over to see the show again at [illegible].

Lunch And Tchaikovsky

Came a half-hour intermission, when [illegible] the concert in the shed, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a popular program, which opened with the Vivaldi Concerto for Orchestra and Organ in D Minor.

About the time that Ella Goldstein, featured piano soloist, struck [illegible] Tchaikovsky concerto, the moon decided to [illegible] boys and girls who had elected to hear the concert from the lawn very hap[illegible] sang "Tonight We Love" to the main [illegible] else. Miss Goldstein gave a fresh reading to this program piece, and received an ovation [illegible].

After intermission came the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture, and it was then that the cameras of MGM went into action, for the filming of part of the "Story of Tanglewood," which will be brought out as a short for general release. And of course, everybody wanted to get into the movies. The program closed with excerpts from Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and the Beethoven "Egmont" overture. Then those who wanted [illegible] again cashed back to the [illegible] a day.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 29 1947

Tanglewood Music Festival Has Notable Program

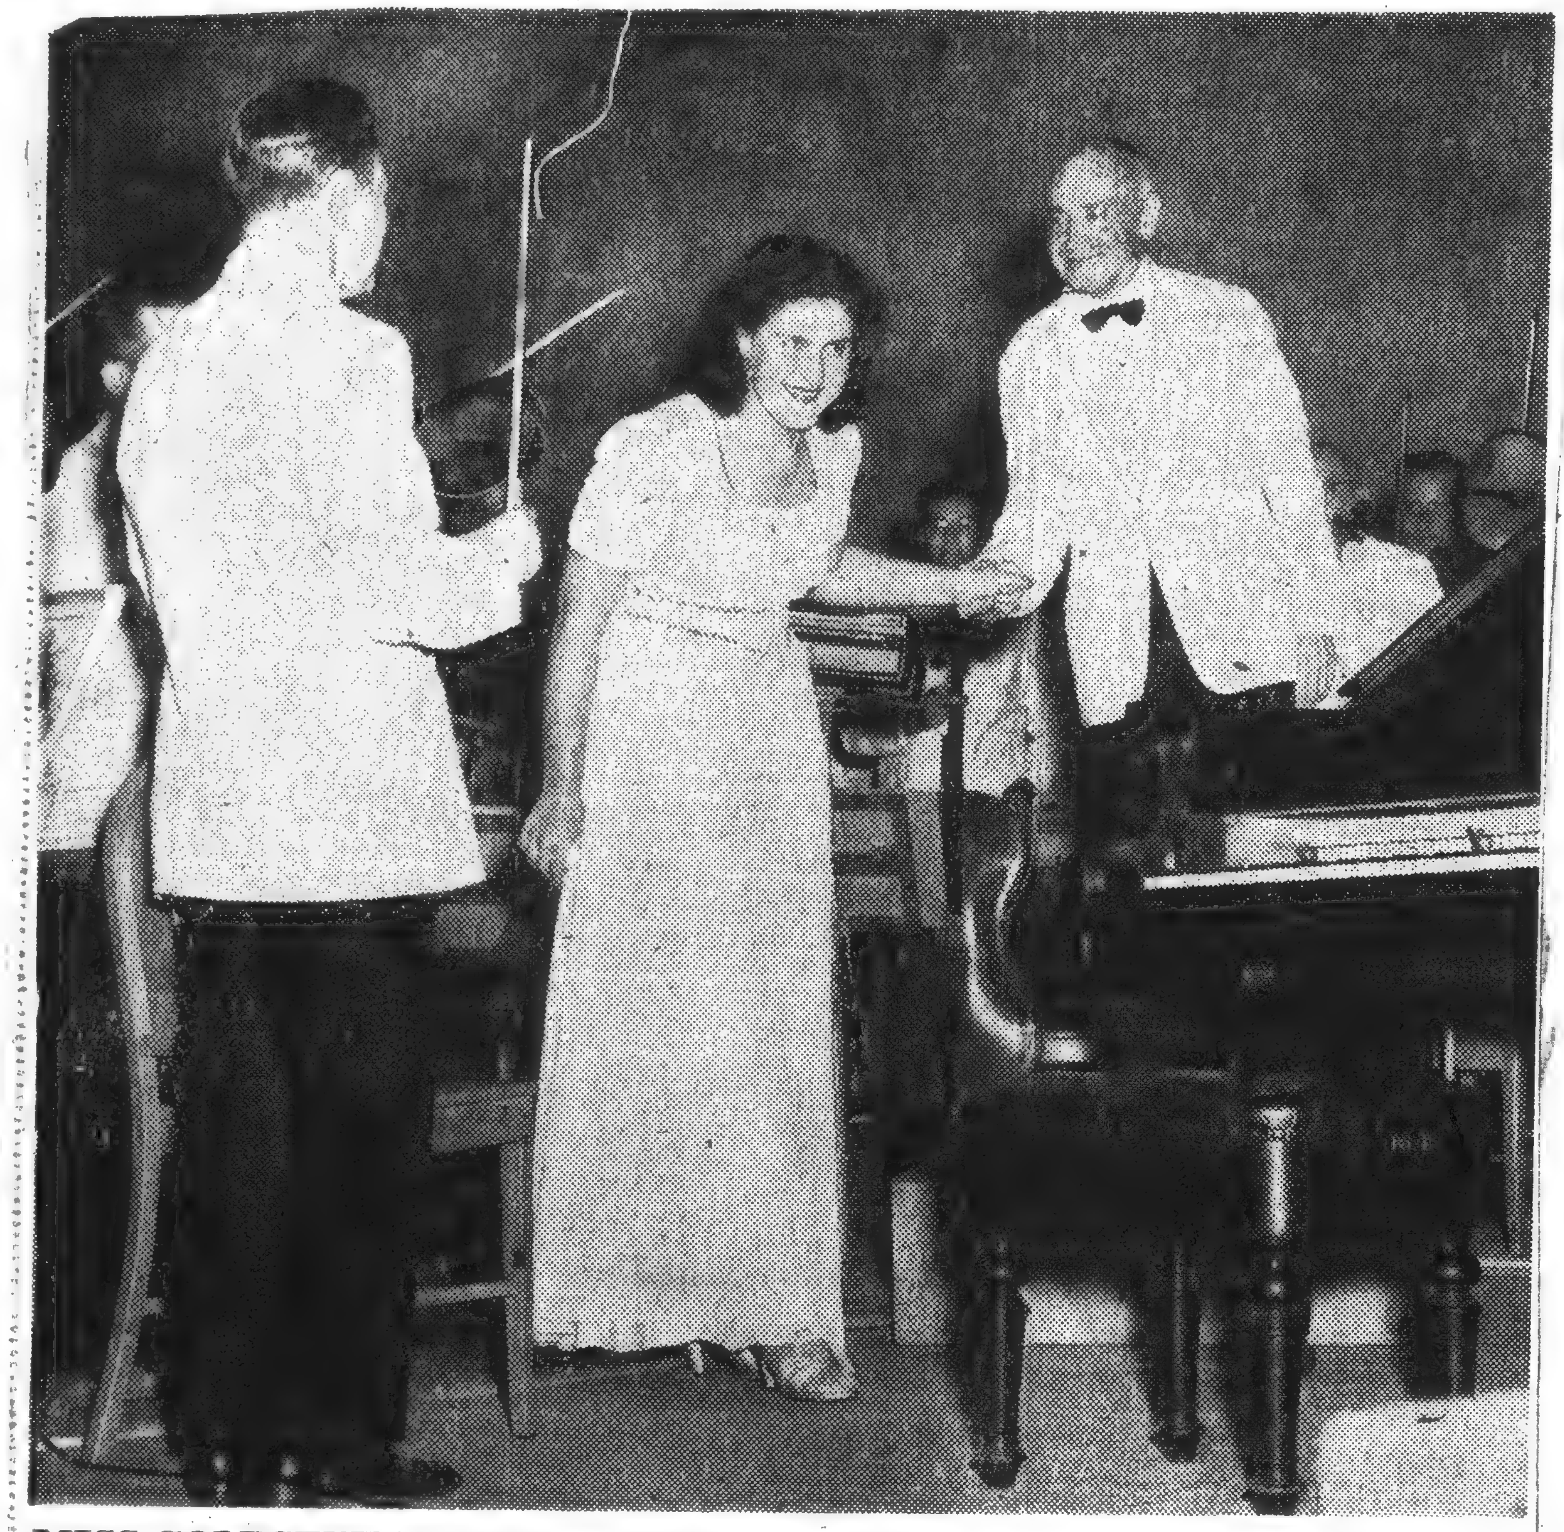
Sunday afternoon's concert marked the end of Series A in the 1947 Berkshire Festival, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. The program was made up of the overture to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Schubert Symphony in C major, Volume 7.

"Music for All," the special added event tomorrow is creating wide interest and is expected to attract many visitors from distant points. In addition to a full concert by the orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, there will be demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments of science for musical reproduction, including radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

The program begins at 7 p. m. with "Music in the Movies" at the Theater-Concert Hall. Scenes from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim" and "Henry V" will be shown in the most comprehensive program ever assembled to show the contribution of important contemporary composers to the motion pictures.

Illustrating how great symphonic music is carried to the nation by radio, the concert at 8:30 p. m. in the shed will be broadcast as one of the regular Tuesday night series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the coast-to-coast ABC network. Engineers, director and announcers will be operating in full view of the audience.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1947



MISS GOLDSTEIN TAKES A BOW: Ella Goldstein, soloist with the Boston Symphony in last night's concert in the Shed, acknowledges the vociferous plaudits of the [illegible] hands with Dr. Koussevitzky. At right, Concertmaster Richard Burgin gives her the official accolade of the violinist, congratulatory taps on the instrument with his bow.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1947

Palestinian Girl Impressive As Boston Orchestra Soloist

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Last night's carnival at Tanglewood was huge good fun for all, and no little credit for the general and happy atmosphere was the real spirit of sportsmanship with which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra entered into the schedule. The first half of the program in the Shed was broadcast on the orchestra's regular Tuesday evening hour and so it was the most seriously prepared.

The Vivaldi concerto in D minor for orchestra and organ was a vehicle to display the marvellously rich sonority of the orchestra's strings. Dr. Koussevitzky imparted his expected spark of vividness and proportion to the performance, but the real thrill of the evening was the performance of the Tchiakovsky B flat minor piano concerto with 20-year-old Ella Goldstein as soloist. Miss Goldstein, a personable and stalwart recent arrival from Palestine, is a member of the student body of the Berkshire Music Center. Her rendition of the familiar concerto, received, first of all, more than merely wonderful support from the [illegible] delighted leader of the orchestra. The accompaniment allowed her to soar to heights of virtuosity th[illegible] which anything less transporti[illegible] would have held her down to ear[illegible] But her completely adequate powerful and accurate technique permitted her to give the concerto an excitement and poetic beauty which left nothing to be desired. The unity of orchestra and soloist made for a remarkably well-knit and integral effort. There was never an instant nor a note which did not contribute its special character to the over-all conception, and tonally the soloist was superb both in the bravura passages and in the more gentle phrases with which Tchiakovsky has contrasted the more vigorous requirements. The ovation was colossal and spontaneous, and continued beyond the tabulating equipment of this reviewer.

The rest of the program was devoted to an attempt to show the recording history of the Boston orchestra in its relations with makers of records and phonographs. It was one of the most lavish and extravagant and well done jobs of public relations and advertising ever put over and the only one, to our knowledge, where the customers were made to pay to take it all in.

Some Don'ts for

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)
This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 31 1947

Concert Series B Will Open Tonight

Beethoven's Music to be Featured at Tanglewood in Movement That May Become Tradition.

Launching what Dr. Serge Koussevitzky declared is to be a tradition at the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight will present the first of a series of three concerts of Beethoven's music as Series B of the Festival opens at Tanglewood.

On his 73rd birthday anniversary last week, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that one week of the festival each year will be devoted to the music of a single composer, as a result of the success of a similar feature last year, when the music of Brahms was heard during one week. In addition to the three concerts in Series B, an "extra" concert, also devoted to Beethoven's music, will be presented next Tuesday night.

Tonight's audience will hear Dr. Koussevitzky lead the orchestra in the symphony No. 1 in C major, Symphony No. 2 in D major, and Symphony No. 3 "Eroica." Other concerts in the Beethoven cycle will be presented Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1947

Many Events At Museum Friday Night

Members' Program To Include Wide Range of Offerings

A boatload of events plus music and refreshments are scheduled for Friday evening's summer members' night at the Berkshire Museum. Speaker Frank Crowninshield, former editor of Vanity Fair and free lance writer for 20 years, will frame his talk on the premise that since the first world war there has been a marked decline in original or creative painting in the United States. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its exhibition lent by the Houghton Library in the small modern gallery upstairs, while in the Ellen Crane Memorial Room will hang Karl Zerbe's paintings in encaustic. Articles thus far contributed to the Aug. 6 auction will be on display downstairs, where photographs by James H. Thomas of Oneonta, N.Y., will hang in the main corridor.

John N. Burk, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony, said yesterday the star item in the symphony exhibition is the original manuscript of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "House of Seven Gables," said to have been written at Tanglewood. It is currently valued at $30,000. A second of the nine items to be shown is a letter written by Herman Melville to Hawthorne, sent from Pittsfield Aug. 13, 1852.

Gives by Truckload

The auction committee reported their largest single donor sent her gifts from New York Monday in a two-ton truck. The lot included a pump organ from the Longfellow house in Pittsfield, a couple if buffalo rugs, and believe it or not—a cumulative index to the National Geographic.

Not to be outdone in being organized for the coming fete, Mr. Thomas sent his photographs a week ago. They will be up before 8 Friday evening. He has had 450 picture hangings since 1939, and has had one-man shows at the Smithsonian Institute and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. A member of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain and the Photographic Society of America, Mr. Thomas will come from Oneonta with his wife for the activities.

The following committees have been working for Friday's party: Decoration, Mrs. Etta C. Heath and Mrs. Waldo Bailey; flowers, Mrs. Carey R. Kinney and Mrs. William A. Whittlesey; refreshments, Mrs. Wendell G. Ahern and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry; ushers, Mrs. Robert Gilson; membership, Miss Emma Lou Starke; dinner (for speaker, trustees and honored guests) Mrs. Walter L. Graves.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 19,521) (S 20,362)
This Clipping From
PORTSMOUTH, OHIO
TIMES
JUL 31 1947

ACCENT ON YOUTH

BOSTON—The official pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, one of the nation's topflight symphonic groups, is 24-years-old Lukas Foss, a well-known composer despite his youth.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE

Hold Musical Field Day at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Performance Tops Program as Pictures Are Taken

By D. E. RITZ

The "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on Tuesday was, as its name implied, designed to reach the general public. The affair was run as a benefit for the Berkshire music center.

It included a concert by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the opportunity to see motion pictures being made of both the orchestra and audience and a feature called "The March of Musical Fidelity," showing the development of musical recording.

The symphony program opened with the Vivaldi Concerto for orchestra and organ in D minor arranged by Alexander Siloti. This was followed by the Tchaikovsky piano concerto number 1 in B flat minor, opus 23, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist. Miss Goldstein has a marvelous technique and a tone that was completely adequate for playing with the orchestra. She was recalled [illegible] by the audience and was [illegible] applauded by the orchestra. Following intermission the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture was played while movie makers aimed their batteries of klieg lights and [illegible] at both orchestra and the audience of 6,000 (the [illegible] capacity of the auditorium.)

The program [illegible] after the recording [illegible] formance of [illegible] "Stars and Stripes Forever."

The Beethoven [illegible] will open tonight and [illegible] Saturday night, Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,657)
This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
[illegible] 1947

Mrs. J. W[illegible]bson has returned to her home at 128 Sound[illegible] Avenue [illegible] Stockbridge, Mass. where she stayed while attending the Be[illegible]re Music Festival. She was acc[illegible] by [illegible]ert of Harts[illegible] plans to spend [illegible]t at Alumnae [illegible]ge, which she [illegible] in the Sum[illegible] ear[illegible] [illegible] Thursday from

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 31 1947

Hold Musical Field Day at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Performance Tops Program as Pictures Are Taken

By D. E. RITZ

The "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on Tuesday was, as its name implied, designed to reach the general public. The affair was run as a benefit for the Berkshire music center.

It included a concert by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the opportunity to see motion pictures being made of both the orchestra and audience and a feature called "The March of Musical Fidelity," showing the development of musical recording.

The symphony program opened with the Vivaldi Concerto for orchestra and organ in D minor arranged by Alexander Siloti. This was followed by the Tchaikovsky piano concerto number 1 in B flat minor, opus 23, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist. Miss Goldstein has a marvelous technique and a tone that was completely adequate for playing with the orchestra. She was recalled repeatedly by the audience and was roundly applauded by the orchestra. Following intermission the Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture was played while movie makers aimed their batteries of kleig lights and cameras at both orchestra and the audience of 6,000 (the seating capacity of the auditorium.)

The program ended after the recording feature with a performance of Sousa, 'Stars and Stripes Forever.'

The Beethoven cycle will open tonight and renew on Saturday night, Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1947

Crowd of 7000 Attends 'Music for All' Event

History of Recorded Music Is Theme For Potpourri of Orchestral Numbers, Movies and Television at Tanglewood

The year's biggest clambake was held on the grounds of Tanglewood yesterday to honor a phonograph.

Starting at 4 in the afternoon and proceeding with ever-increasing momentum to 11 o'clock, the Berkshire Music Center and RCA-Victor joined forces in a potpourri of "music for all," live and reproduced, heralding 30 years of joint effort in the field of recorded sound.

7000 Attend

By nightfall, some 7000 were gathered in the Shed and on the surrounding lawns for the climaxing program in which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Vivaldi through Tchaikovsky, Berlioz and Beethoven to John Philip Sousa.

The first half of the evening, consisting of the Vivaldi and Tchaikovsky's piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, was on the air broadcast via the American Broadcasting Company as one of its regular Tuesday evening series, with the ABC engineers and their equipment sharing the stage with Dr. Koussevtizky and the orchestra.

In the Tchaikovsky, Ella Goldstein, who is studying at the Center, made her Festival debut and was roundly bussed on the forehead by Dr. Koussevtizky for her performance. Miss Goldstein received a tremendous ovation from the 6000 in the Shed and won further friends when, presented a bouquet by Dr. Koussevitzky, she tried to give it back to him.

During intermission, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer set up a battery of powerful spotlights along the front edge of the stage and along the west arcade of the Shed. When the audience returned, they were told they were going to be in the movies (MGM is making a short on "The Story of Tanglewood") and asked please to act natural. This resulted in large numbers of people finding it suddenly necessary to walk casually down an aisle in the general direction of the camera, which was set up on the west end of the stage. Filming was done during the first part of the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture, with Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra playing virtually unseen behind the row of spotlights, and at the end, when the audience gave the conductor and his men their usual warm accolade.

One box occupant, apparently even more interested than most in the scene-stealing, drank a bottle of beer with gestures during the

[illegible]ph Unveiled

[illegible]ning ended with an im- [illegible] considerably commercial

Fredric March Goes to the Movies At Tanglewood

Fredric March and his actress wife, Florence Eldredge, came for the "Music for All" program at Tanglewood yesterday and spent the major part of their several hours there at, of all places, the movies.

The cinema star and his wife, trying to avoid disrupting the program, went in the back of the opera hall and watched Charles Boyer, Laurence Olivier an others from the rear of th screen.

They left after hearing th first half of the evening concert unveiling of "The Berkshire," new RCA Victor radio phonogra which was enshrined backsta above the orchestra. Based on t theme of "The March of Music Fidelity," the progress of recorde music was illustrated through sid stage tableaux and selections b the orchestra recalling milestone in its long association with Victo Comment was read by Gene Hami ton, regular ABC announcer fo the BSO broadcasts. The orchestr played the introduction to Act 3 o "Lohengrin," which was the firs BSO recording and the first disk t be cut by a full-sized symphoni organization. The second souveni was a dance from the Rave "Daphnis and Chloe," which wa the first electrical recording to b made by the BSO. The alternatin tableaux showed the early talking machine and the subsequent development through the Orthophoni to the newest achievement in electronic reproduction. The orchestra then started the overture to Beethoven's "Egmont," halted halfway through and "The Berkshire" took over, with the green velvet curtains parting to reveal the radio-phonograph. The crowd applauded as the overture continued with Dr. Koussevitzky standing motionless on the podium and the orchestra at rest. For a few moments, the conductor shared spotlights with the phonograph, and then stepped down out of the ring of light and into the half-darkness of the stage, where he stood among his musicians until the recording ended.

'Music for All'

RCA Victor, however, came out second when Dr. Kousseyitzky and the orchestra brought the evening to an end with a spine-tingling version of "The Stars and Stripes Forever" which brought the whole audience to their feet.

The afternoon program, to which a special group of guests was invited, opened with a demonstration of "The Berkshire" conducted by RCA engineers and officials in the chamber music hall. With live talent and an earlier phonograph for comparison, the company put on an hour-long show illustrating the growing fidelity of musical reproduction.

Before the Shed concert and after it, the opera hall was the scene of a series of excerpts from noted motion pictures selected to show the role background music has taken in the cinema. The program opened with a Mickey Mouse, "Mickey's Opera," and progressed through such outstanding documentaries and regular films as Pare Lorentz' "The River," for which Virgil Thomson composed the music; the Lorentz "The City," and Hollywood's "Our Town," with scores by Aaron Copland, Berkshire Music Center faculty member, who was given a round of applause as his name appeared on the screen; the French "Mayerling," scored by Arthur Honegger; Lenfilm's "The Youth of Maxim," with music by Shostakovich; "Alexander Nevsky," for which Prokofieff composed the background music; and the noted British production of "Henry V," with score by William Walton. The "Alexander Nevsky" excerpt brought forth loud groans from the overflow audience of 1300 when it ended just as the German hordes crashed into the defending Russians and the battle was beginning to get exciting.

The film program was assembled by Francis Robinson, on loan to the Center for a month, from his duties as press agent for actress Katharine Cornell.

Completing the afternoon and early evening events was on-the-spot televising by an RCA crew in the garden. Receiving sets installed in open booths 10 to 15 feet from the camera allowed visitors to watch themselves being televised. The succeeding reactions of glee, shock and/or self-consciousness amused hundreds of onlookers and attracted candid photographers by the dozen. Toward the end of the demonstration, Lewis Perry, secretary of the Center, and several students participated in an informal program of interviews.

The celebrity list for the day was led by Fredric March and his actress-wife, Florence Eldredge.

Proceeds from the entire program will go to the Center.

---

of floods and other disasters get first claim to War Assets Adminis tration's vast hoard of surplus goods under a "mercy priority" that becomes effective today.

The new priority supersedes all existing claims. It may be invoked aid any area where the Presi ent has determined that an ergency exists.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 30 1947

Tanglewood "Music for All" Just Like Three-Ring Circus

Ella Goldstein Proves Brilliant Pianist; Movie Music Presented; History of Phonograph Given

Tanglewood, July 29—"Music for All" was the title given the special doings at Tanglewood this afternoon and evening. The occasion had all the earmarks of a three-ring circus. In the Little Theater one listened to music written for the films by such luminaries as Copland, Honneger, Prokofieff and Virgil Thomson. In the gardens people were televised and learned that to see yourself as ohters see you is not always unalloyed pleasure. And in the music shed one heard the Tanglewood debut of a sensational young pianist, Ella Goldstein who gave a superb performance of Tschaikowski's "Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor."

Miss Goldstein, a newcomer to this country and a student in the school here, is a pianist of remarkable abilities. She had the power and technical assurance to give the needed breadth and style to the concerto. Her rhythmn was excellent, her pianissimi delicate and her conception of the concerto just right. Her tempo brought out the full beauty of the work. It was not rushed nor did Dr. Koussevitzky push his orchestra, as he is wont to do at times when collaborating with a soloist.

Miss Goldstein was recalled seven times, brought the conductor on the stage twice and from him received a bouquet and the orchesra rose from its seats in her honor.

The concerto opened with a meticulous performance of the "Concerto for Orchestra and Organ in D Minor" as arranged by Alexander Silotti.

The concert was arranged, in part, to demonstrate the part the Boston Symphony Orchestra has played in development of the phonograph and radio. It was the first symphony ever to make records, and on the air it has the longest broadcasting season of any orchestra not organized expressly for radio.

History of Phonograph

The second part of the music shed program was given over to the history of the phonograph and was climaxed by the unveiling of RCA Victor's latest custom-made phonograph-radio-television set.

One heard both this instrument and the orchestra in a group of selections which included the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," which, by the way, was the first record the symphony ever made; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," and the overture to "Egmont" by Beethoven. it was informative and interesting historically and musically.

We almost forgot to mention one other thing. During the playing of the "Roman Carnival" by Berlioz, we were filmed. Batteries of huge kleig lights were turned on and the audience was supposed to act natural and react only to the music. One noticed a deal of primping going on, in spite of the music.

It was noted on the program that the new phonograph, appropriately named the "Berkshire," would be sold on a subscription basis for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Festival and if all were sold it would mean $100,000.

Everyone had a good time and everyone means between 7500 and 8000 persons.

Thursday night the second series of concerts devoted to the works of Beethoven opens with the playing of the first three symphonies.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,209)
This Clipping From
MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
ARGUS
JUL 31 1947

Miss Louisa Miccio, of 347 Tecumseh Avenue, is spending two weeks in Cornwallville, N. Y., after which she will attend the closing week's concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass. A concert pianist and teacher, Miss Miccio will resume teaching at her residence Sept. 2 and will continue her study of music under Edward Steuermann in New York City.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
3
JUL 31 1947

11 ATTRACTIONS IN FINAL WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony to Give 4 Concerts, Last for Year On Aug. 10

Tanglewood, Lenox, July 30—In the last week of the Tanglewood season that will close Aug. 10, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music Center will give seven performances.

Beethoven Cycle Ends Tuesday

Following the program of Beethoven's first three symphonies Thursday evening, July 31, and the fourth and fifth symphony with Piano Concerto No. 5 "Emperor" in which Jacob Lateiner will be the soloist Saturday evening, Aug. 2, the week will open with the playing of the sixth and seventh symphonies and Piano Concerto No. 4 Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3 and the conclusion of the Beethoven cycle with the eighth and ninth symphonies Tuesday, Aug. 5 at the earlier hour of 7.30.

Joseph Battista will be the soloist Sunday and the Festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will sing Schiller's "Ode to Joy", with Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass.

For the last week-end, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem", with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms".

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra," with 2 Pianos; Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero", and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events include opera scenes Friday afternoon at 4.30, and symphony concert Friday night, Aug. 1, by a student orchestra, a chamber music concert Sunday morning at 10.30, an auditors' orchestral concert Monday at 1.30 p. m., the first performance in America of Mozart's "Idomeneo", Monday evening; a chamber music concert, Eleazar deCarvalho conducting, Wednesday at 4.30; a second performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday evening; a symphony concert Thursday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday evening; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2.30 and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

Rehearsals for Festival concerts will be open to the public each Saturday morning for the benefit of the pension fund.

Inquiries and requests for tickets should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE [illegible] ROMEIKE
PRE[illegible]
220 W. 19th [illegible] YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel [illegible] 3-8860
Th[illegible] From
WH[illegible] S, N.Y.
REP[illegible] PATCH
J[illegible] 1947

Mrs. J. William B[illegible] turned to her home [illegible] view Avenue from [illegible] Mass., where she [illegible] tending the Berksh[illegible] tival. She was [illegible] Mrs. Arthur Schn[illegible] dale. Mrs. Robson [illegible] two weeks in Aust[illegible] House, V[illegible] Colle[illegible] also visite[illegible] mer.

[illegible]INAL
[illegible]EIKE
[illegible]PPINGS
[illegible]W YORK 11, N.Y.
[illegible]a 3-8860
[illegible],906)
[illegible]ng From [illegible]ER, PA.
[illegible]N

[illegible] Twists

Climaxing an all-day observance [illegible]ustrating the various activities of [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] WJZ-ABC network will pre[illegible]nt the third broadcast of its ser[illegible] from the Berkshire Music Fes[illegible] at Tanglewood, Mass., from [illegible] to 9:30 o'clock this evening. [illegible]e day's activities will include the [illegible]ing of motion pictures by MGM [illegible] a movie to be called "The Story [illegible] Tanglewood." Serge Koussevitzky [illegible] conduct the orchestra in the [illegible]oadcast in which Ella Goldstein, [illegible]anist, will be the soloist. The pro[illegible]am will include Vivaldi's Concer[illegible] in D Minor for Organ and Orch[illegible]ra, transcribed by Siloti for piano [illegible]d orchestra, and Tschaikowsky's [illegible]oncerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor for [illegible]ano and Orchestra

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 31 1947

Beethoven Cycle of Festival Opens at Tanglewood Tonight

Extra Concert To Be Given by Boston Symphony Tuesday—Jacob Lateiner And Joseph Battista To Be Soloists

The Beethoven cycle of the Berkshire Festival will open at ~~Tanglewood to~~night. For the first time there will be an extra concert, continuing the week-end series. In order that all nine of the Beethoven symphonies may be heard, a concert will be given Tuesday, to include the eighth and ninth symphonies. Also for the first time the entire program will be heard over the air, WBEC and the nationwide ABC network will carry it, starting at 7.30.

Tonight at 8.15 the orchestra will play Beethoven's first three symphonies; Saturday the fourth and fifth and the fifth piano concerto in E-flat major, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist. Sunday afternoon at 3.30 the sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and the seventh and the fourth piano concerto in G major, for which Joseph Battista will be the soloist.

The ninth program of the Festival, with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will include "Schiller's Ode to Joy." The soloists will be Frances Yeend, Eunice Alberts, James Pease and David Lloyd, soloists also for the Mozart "Requiem" next week end. The first three starred in "Peter Grimes" last season.

Tickets are on sale at the box office for the last rows in the Shed for the concerts tonight and Tuesday night. No seats remain for Saturday or Sunday. A large audience is expected to listen from the lawn.

ORIGINAL
MEIKE
S CLIPPINGS

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Sir. (13,747)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)
JUL 31 1947

RCA Berkshire Model

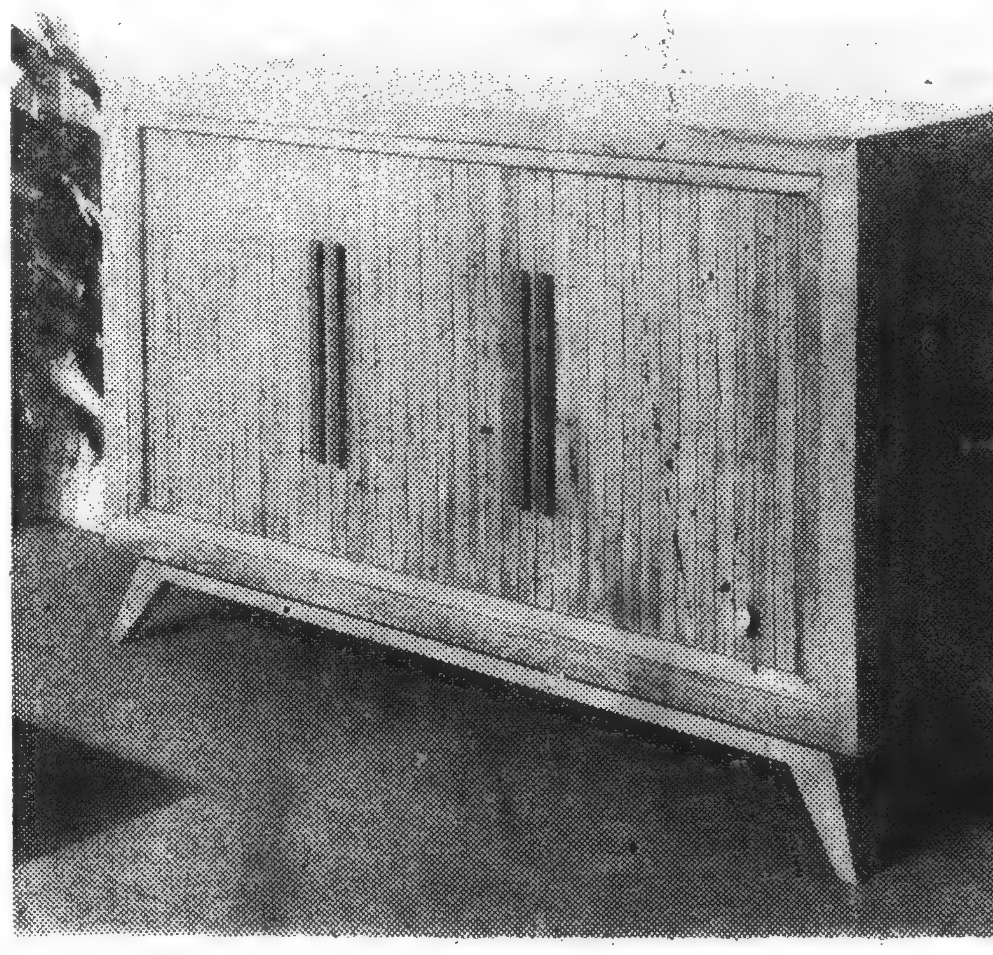

Photo by Peter A. Nyholm

This modern set is one of the four Berkshire models in RCA Victor's new Festival Series of custom-built radio-phonographs. It is priced at approximately $1,800, and introduced for the first time at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday night. ~~T. H. Robsjohn~~-Gibbins, New York designer, styled this model.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 31 1947

AROUND THE TOWN

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

DEMOCRACY at work in the Berkshires. "Tanglewood," the smoothest operating musical festival in America. Every nationality in the civilized world represented in the usual audiences of between 7,500 and 10,000 at every performance. Scores of school buses, pulling into the spacious parking lots, carrying thousands of bloused and bare-legged youngsters for their first shot at the "big time" in the world's music. Might not be a bad idea to hold sessions of the United Nations deliberations over in the Berkshires. At least harmony reigns supreme, with none "pulling a Gromyko" except, possibly an elderly Berkshirian leaving a few minutes early to negotiate the trip from his or her box to the waiting Rolls-Royce.

Thursday's special event, "Music for All," with the Koussevitzky musical theme: "Roman Carnival Overture" setting the stage, showing the progress of the newest reproducing stage from the wax cylinder days to the de luxe "Berkshire" machine, picking up the music of the live orchestra by means of a recording, defying even the most astute musical [illegible] to detect the change-over.

BERKSHIRE NOTES: A 20-year-old young lady by the name of Ella Goldstein, getting a first big chance, playing the famous Tchaikowsky piano concerto (No. 1) with the full Boston Symphony orchestra behind [illegible] Dr. Koussevitzky, kissing her on the forehead after a magnificent performance... Frederic Mar[illegible] cinema gentleman, spending a portion of "The Best Years" of his life over on the Tanglewood estate toting a blanket, and presumably a big lunch box, unrecognized and unapproached for an autograph by the thousands of milling music lovers, more intent on bagging the "John Hancock" of the 73-year-old maestro... the Mayor of Miami Beach in his tan tuxedo and beret to match... the dive-bombing moths, careening from the roof spotlights to the back of the neck of some Brahms lover... the elite of America, drinking [illegible] of coke bottles and [illegible] aged ice cream during [illegible] sions, and probably [illegible] kick of their liv[illegible] sion of their childh[illegible] ties "a dime a doz[illegible] ted even behind their [illegible] black glasses... [illegible] Albanians over at [illegible] you will see at [illegible] any bright [illegible]

MRS. GEORGE EDMUNDS quietly efficient [illegible] aging editor of [illegible] Eagle" who handl[illegible] of tickets, publi[illegible] bothersome ques[illegible] with out mussin[illegible] pretty head...the [illegible] young people, lying [illegible] the great lawns [illegible] great shed, and propp[illegible] the great elms, liste[illegible] ly to what must seem [illegible] be the music of [illegible] Truly, here IS Democra[illegible] and right in the back yard [illegible] city, famous for its political ramifications.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

PATERSON, N.J
EXAMINER
7/31/47

BEETHOVEN'S NINTH BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, better known as his "Choral Symph

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
TERRE HAUTE, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1947

World of Music

NEW YORK—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music For All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recordings side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its final custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 29 1947

Of Music and Musicians

"Music for All," an added event at Tanglewood, is being held today as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center. There will be a full concert by the orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting and demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments for musical reproduction including radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

The evening's program will begin at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the theater-concert hall. Scenes will be shown from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim" and "Henry V." For those unable to reach Tanglewood in time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the pictures at 11 p.m.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 19,624)
This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION
JUL 29 1947

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the program ~~(ABC, 8.30)~~ tonight will feature a 20-year-old pianist in Tschaikowsky's Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. During the day, MGM, will film a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood" which will include the filming of the broadcast. Important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years will also be played for the audience at Tanglewood. * * * Jeffrey Clay, vocalist, and Bobby Nicolson's orchestra provide your more popular Summer Serenade (ABC, 10), thus one network brings you two hours of music ranging all the way from classics to jive.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 31 1947

Beethoven Cycle of Festival Opens at Tanglewood Tonight

Extra Concert To Be Given by Boston Symphony Tuesday—Jacob Lateiner And Joseph Battista To Be Soloists

The Beethoven cycle of the Berkshire Festival will open at [redacted]ght. For the first time there will be an extra concert, continuing the week-end series. In order that all nine of the Beethoven symphonies may be heard, a concert will be given Tuesday, to include the eighth and ninth symphonies. Also for the first time the entire program will be heard over the air, WBEC and the nationwide ABC network will carry it, starting at 7.30.

Tonight at 8.15 the orchestra will play Beethoven's first three symphonies; Saturday the fourth and fifth and the fifth piano concerto in E-flat major, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist. Sunday afternoon at 3.30 the sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and the seventh and the fourth piano concerto in G major, for which Joseph Battista will be the soloist.

The ninth program of the Festival, with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will include "Schiller's Ode to Joy." The soloists will be Frances Yeend, Eunice Alberts, James Pease and David Lloyd, soloists also for the Mozart "Requiem" next week end. The first three starred in "Peter Grimes" last season.

Tickets are on sale at the box office for the last rows in the Shed for the concerts tonight and Tuesday night. No seats remain for Saturday or Sunday. A large audience is expected to listen from the lawn.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Sir. (13,747)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y., RETAILING
(Home Furnishings Edition)

JUL 31 1947

RCA Berkshire Model

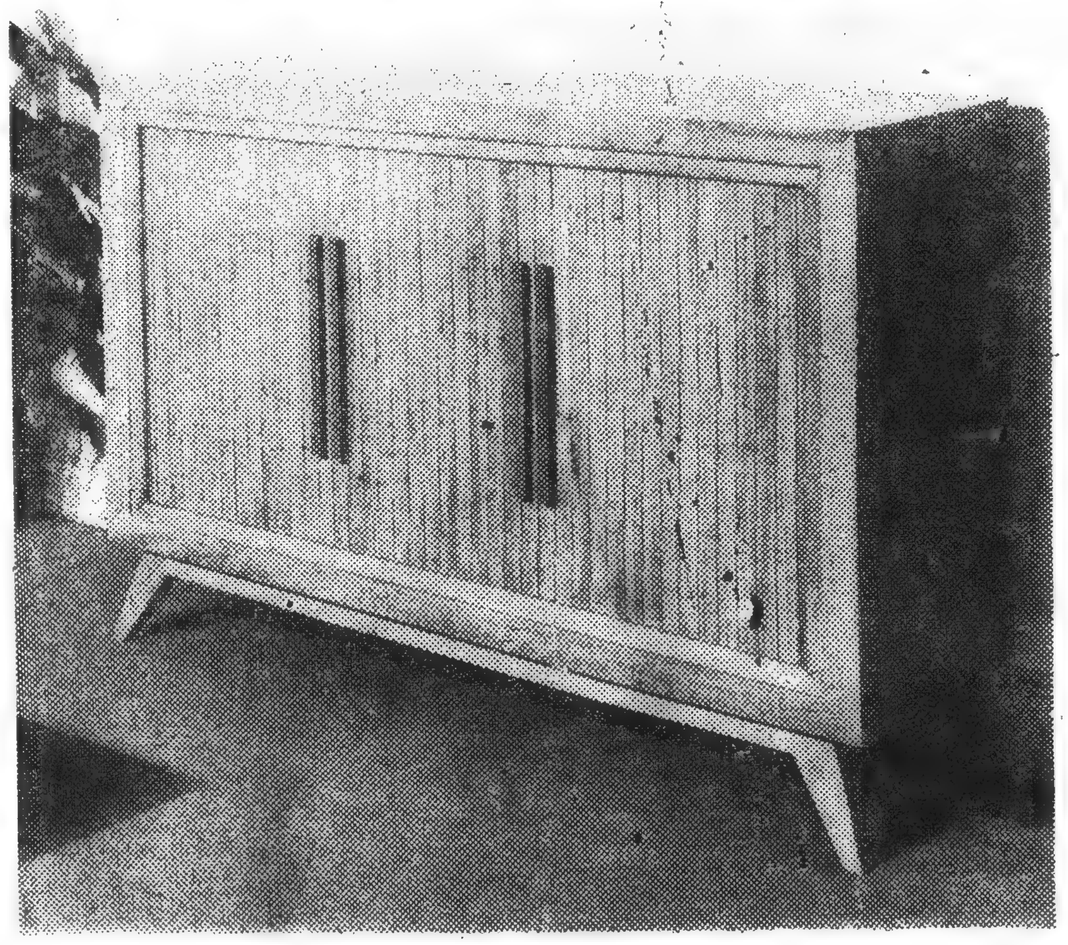

Photo by Peter A. Nyholm

This modern set is one of the four Berkshire models in RCA Victor's new Festival Series of custom-built radio-phonographs. It is priced at approximately $1,800, and introduced for the first time at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday night. ~~T. H. Robs~~john-Gibbins, New York designer, styled this model.

ORIGINAL
MEIKE
S CLIPPINGS

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 31 1947

AROUND THE TOWN

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

DEMOCRACY at work in the Berkshires. "Tanglewood," the smoothest operating musical festival in America. Every nationality in the civilized world represented in the usual audiences of between 7,500 and 10,000 at every performance. Scores of school buses, pulling into the spacious parking lots, carrying thousands of bloused and bare-legged youngsters for their first shot at the "big time" in the world's music. Might not be a bad idea to hold sessions of the United Nations' deliberations over in the Berkshires. At least harmony reigns supreme, with none "pulling a Gromyko" except possibly an elderly Berkshirian leaving a few minutes early to negotiate the trip from his [illegible] box to the waiting Rolls-Royce.

Thursday's special event, "Music for All," with the Koussevitzky musical theme: "Roman Carnival Overture" setting the stage, showing the progress of the [illegible] reproducing stage from the wax cylinder days to the de luxe "Berkshire" machine, picking up the music of the live orchestra by means of a recording, defying even the most astute musical [illegible] to detect the change-over.

BERKSHIRE NOTES: A [illegible] year-old young lady [illegible] of Ella Goldstein, get [illegible] big chance, playing [illegible] Tchaikowsky piano [illegible] 1) with the full Boston Symphony orchestra behind [illegible] Dr. Koussevitzky, kissing [illegible] the forehead after a magnificent performance. Frederic M[illegible] cinema gentleman, [illegible] portion of "The Best Years of [illegible] life over on the Tanglewood [illegible] tate toting a blanket, and [illegible] ably a big lunch box, [illegible] and unapproached for [illegible] graph by the thousands [illegible] music lovers, more intent on snagging the "John Hancock" of the 73-year-old maestro [illegible] Miami Beach [illegible] tuxedo and beret to match [illegible] bombing motors, careening from the roof spotlights to the [illegible] of the neck of some Brahms lover [illegible] the elite of America, [illegible] of coke bottles and [illegible] aged ice cream [illegible] sions, and [illegible] kick of their lives [illegible] sion of their childhood [illegible] ties "a dime a dozen" [illegible] ted even behind [illegible] black glasses [illegible] Albanians over [illegible] you will see [illegible] any bright [illegible]

MRS. GEORGE EDMUNDS [illegible] quietly efficient [illegible] aging editor [illegible] Eagle" who [illegible] of tickets, [illegible] bothersome [illegible] with out [illegible] pretty head [illegible] young people, [illegible] the great lawns [illegible] great shed, and [illegible] the great elms, [illegible] ly to what must [illegible] be the music of [illegible] Truly, here IS Democracy [illegible] and right in the back [illegible] city, famous for its political ramifications.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

PATERSON, N.J
EXAMINER
7/31/47

BEETHOVEN'S NINTH BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, better known as his "Choral Symphony", will be heard on the air in its entirety when it is broadcast over WJZ from the Berkshire Music Festival on Tuesday from 8:30 to 9:45 p.m.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the broadcast.

NEW YORK—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music For All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recordings side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 29 1947

Of Music and Musicians

"Music for All," an added event at Tanglewood, is being held today as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center. There will be a full concert by the orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting and demonstrations of the latest and finest instruments for musical reproduction including radio, phonograph, motion pictures and television.

The evening's program will begin at 7 o'clock with "Music in the Movies" at the theater-concert hall. Scenes will be shown from "Our Town," "Mayerling," "Alexander Nevsky," "The Plainsman," "The Youth of Maxim" and "Henry V." For those unable to reach Tanglewood in time for the first screening there will be a repeat performance of the pictures at 11 p.m.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 19,624)

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION

JUL 29 1947

Climaxing an all-day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the program ~~(ABC, 8:30)~~ tonight will feature a 20-year-old pianist in Tschaikowsky's Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor. During the day, MGM, will film a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood" which will include the filming of the broadcast. Important recordings made by the orchestra during the past 32 years will also be played for the audience at Tanglewood. * * * Jeffrey Clay, vocalist, and Bobby Nicolson's orchestra provide your more popular Summer Serenade (ABC, 10), thus one network brings you two hours of music ranging all the way from classics to jive.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
…, NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
…CHelsea 3-8860
…M. & E. 82,265)
…Clipping From
…GFIELD, MASS.
…ING UNION

…31 194…

…eneo" Will Be Given …anglewood Aug. 4 and 6

American Performance of Mozart's Opera to Be Under Direction of Boris Goldovsky

[illegible]

…and Idamante" from an earlier French libretto by Danchet for an opera "Idomenee" by Campra. The legend, set in ancient Greece, is similar to that of the biblical Jeptha, and involves the predicament of the king of Crete, who, in gratitude for escaping shipwreck, vows to the god Neptune to sacrifice the first one whom he meets upon his own shores. It is his own son, Idamante, who first meets him. Idomeneo seeks to save his son by sending him to Argos with Electra, the Princess of that country, but the Gods intervene, and decree that Idamante replace Idomenco on the throne of Crete, together with his true love, Ilia, prisoner of war from Troy.

Past Performances

[illegible]

Estimated of "Idomeneo"

[illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 29 1947

Radio Chatter

By MIKE MANN

The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Conductor

BRILLIANT MUSIC:

Climaxing an all day observance illustrating the various activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the American Broadcasting Company will present the third broadcast in its series from the Berkshire Music Festival at 8:30 tonight over WOKO. The program is an hour-long production.

Designated as "Music for All," the day's activities, in addition to the broadcast, will include the taking of motion pictures by M-G-M for a movie to be called "The Story of Tanglewood." This will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its summer home have been filmed for the screen.

With Serge Koussevitzky on the podium, the audience will see the filming of the ABC broadcast, with producer William L. Marshall, announcer Gene Hamilton and the engineering staff working in full view of the listeners.

The program includes the Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor for piano and orchestra, by Tchaikovsky, and the Concerto in D minor for Organ and Orchestra by Vivaldi.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
[illegible]

CLOSING TANGLEWOOD CONCERT ANNOUNCED

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Give Four More Performances

In the last week of the Tanglewood season that will close August 10, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music Center will give seven performances.

Following the program of Beethoven's first three symphonies this evening, and the the fourth and fifth symphony with Piano Concerto No. 5 "Emperor" in which Jacob Lateiner will be the soloist Saturday evening, the week will open with the playing of the sixth and seventh symphonies and Piano Concerto No. 4 Sunday afternoon, and the conclusion of the Beethoven cycle with the eighth and ninth symphonies Tuesday, August 5, at the earlier hour of 7:30 p. m.

Joseph Battista will be the soloist Sunday and the festival chorus, prepared by Robert Shaw, will sing Schiller's "Ode to Joy," with Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass.

For the last week-end, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday evening, August 7, Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemuth's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem," with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, August 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two Pianos; Ravel's "Pavane" and ""Bolero," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events for this coming week-end include opera scenes Friday afternoon at 4:30, and symphony concert Friday night by a student orchestra, conducted by students and Dr. Stanley Chapple; a chamber music concert Sunday morning at 10:30, and auditors' orchestral concert Monday at 1:30 p. m., the first performance in America of Mozart's "Idomeneo," Monday evening; a chamber music concert, Eleazar deCarvalho conducting, Wednesday at 4:30; a second performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday evening; a symphony concert Tuesday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday evening; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2:30, and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)
This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 31 1947

High-Fidelity Phonograph Bests Orchestra 'In Person'

By TIMON

Special to The BUFFALO EVENING NEWS and North American Newspaper Alliance.

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., July 31. —A new radiophonograph "took on" a full symphony orchestra here and in a David-and-Goliath exhibition which amazed 40-odd critics and hundreds of musical personalities assembled at Nathaniel Hawthorne's old home. The instrument won the contest hands down. The phonograph was tonally more pure and showed higher fidelity than the orchestra.

In its meteoric 30-year American career, musical reproduction on records has reached such a peak of fidelity that Leonard Bernstein recently had to conduct a recording orchestra in stockinged feet because his squeaky shoes were spoiling records.

Classics Rise in Popularity

Phonographs, however, have rarely matched the present-day qualities of the discs played on them—despite multiple speakers and other costly efforts to achieve tonal value. This despite the fact that 200 recording companies in the U.S. are now producing some 300,000,000 records a year. About 75,000,000 of these are classical recordings which demand great fidelity.

What's more, Gustav Mahler's scholarly Fourth Symphony sold more than 15,000 copies last year, and Bach's esoteric Goldberg variations for harpsichord, which sold maybe 50 copies in the U. S. in 1933, sold more than 29,000 albums when recorded again recently by the same performer, Wanda Landowska.

Prices High on New Model

This trend toward better music called for a new superlative phonograph which could equal the fidelity of records. Modern discs pick up without distortion the whole range of sounds audible to the human ear between 30 and 15,000 cycles, but the best phonograph can reproduce correctly only those notes between 80 and 4000 cycles; all the lower register of a piano, for example, is lost, and more than two-thirds of the entire range of a piccolo are lost.

Six months of intensive work by RCA-Victor technicians preceeded production of the radiophonographs premiered here in the "Berkshire" series. The instruments sell from $1800 to $4000 — that's right — each. In my opinion the instrument is not eight times better than $500 models now on the market—for the average listener. But for anyone with that much money to spend, this really is something.

Thought They Heard Strads

In the test here, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, alternated with a phonograph playing Beethoven's Egmont Overture and it was possible to distinguish between them only because the orchestra sounded worse.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 29 1947

Tanglewood First Series Ends Tonight

The Berkshire Festiva at Tanglewood will close its first series of concerts tonight, with "Music in the Movies," at 7 p. m. in the theater-concert hall and with Ella Goldstein as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:30 p. m. in the music shed.

In the later concert, the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will play Vivaldi's Orchestral Concerto in D Minor. Miss Goldstein will be heard in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. The "Roman Carnival" overture by Berlioz and a "March of Musical Fidelity," with excerpts from Wagner, Ravel, Prokofieff and Beethoven, will close the program.

The festival's Beethoven cycle will open Thursday at 8:15 p. m. with the composer's first three symphonies, the C Major, the D Major and the so-called "Eroica."

There will be two more concerts in this Series B group. The Beethoven Symphonies No. 4 in B Flat and No. 5 in C Minor and the Piano (Emperor) Concerto No. 5, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will be played at 8:15 p. m. Saturday. The Symphonies No. 6 (Pastorale) and No. 7 in A Major and the Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, with Joseph Battista as soloist, will be played at 3:30 p. m. Sunday.

At 7:30 p. m. Tuesday the Symphonies No. 8 in F Major and No. 9 with chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" will be heard. Soloists for the latter will be Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

This will conclude the Beethoven cycle and the varied Series C will start Thursday, Aug. 7.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)
This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 29 1947

BERKSHIRE CENTER STUDENTS INCLUDE 3 LOCAL MUSICIANS

Picture on the Picture Page.

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Editor

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Evidence that Buffalo is finding her place in the musical sun is represented in the fact that three local musicians—the largest representation from this city since the founding of the Berkshire Music Center — won the coveted honor of being accepted as students in the 1947 session of the Center at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Enjoying the wooded setting of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its annual Berkshire Festival are Joseph Wincenc, 64 Grosvenor Court, Kenmore, conductor of the Amherst Symphony Orchestra; Frank Knight Dale, 216 Ashland Ave., also a conductor, and Harry S. Taub, 26 Norwalk Ave., violinist.

"It's a grand place to exchange ideas and views on all matters musical," declared Mr. Wincenc. "The lectures are interesting and informative and the discussions following get really exciting at times."

Broadens Musical Horizon

Mr. Wincenc spoke enthusiastically of Eleazar De Carvalho and Leonard Bernstein, assistants to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the orchestral conducting department. Robert Shaw in the choral conducing department he termed a "terrific person," and Hugh Ross of the same department, "a real musical scholar."

For Mr. Dale the Berkshire Music Center is outstanding because of the "remarkable, even great, possibilities" it represents as a molder and builder of music life in this country.

For Mr. Taub, youngest of the three men, coming to the Center constitutes one of the finest experiences of his life, for "it has broadened my musical horizon and given me something to think about," he said. He has derived especial pleasure from his participation in readings of chamber-music scores by Prokofieff, Hindemith, Piston and others and from his orchestral experience, particularly under De Carvalho.

Mr. Wincenc, a graduate of Oberlin College, formerly was concertmaster of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

Played at Chautauqua

He has studied at the Juilliard School, Columbia and New York Universities and at the Conservatory of Music in Prague, Czechoslovakia. While overseas, Tech. Sgt. Wincenc was director of the San Carlo Opera Company Orchestra, known as the Mediterranean Symphony.

In Prague, he was the only American playing in the Prague Philharmonic Orchestra. He also has played with the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra.

An interesting note comes in the fact that Mr. Taub is a former pupil of Mr. Wincenc. The violinist will return to Oberlin next Fall as a senior. He is the official concertmaster of the Oberlin Orchestra and is majoring in music, his goal being to play in a major symphony orchestra. Twice awarded the Purple Heart, he spent three years in the Infantry, reaching the rank of sergeant.

He is a graduate of Bennett High School, and began studying violin when a little over 5 years old.

Conducted in Vienna

His teachers, previous to Mr. Wincence, were Ivan Shapiro and Helen Durrett. He appeared as soloist with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at a summer concert in Beaver Island State Park in 1939.

Mr. Dale, formerly assistant to Dr. Hans Weisse of the Theory Department of the Mannes School in New York City, has studied music and conducted in Vienna. While there he met, through Dr. Weisse, Felix Weingartner and studied conducting under the famous conductor.

The Vienna Philharmonic, which Mr. Dale conducted several times, was, he said, a "wonderful orchestra, probably, at the time it disbanded, the greatest." From 1942 until 1945 Mr. Dale was a member of the Military Intelligence Service of the War Department in Miami Beach. He founded and conducted the Northfield Orchestra in Northfield, Minn., taught at Carleton College, taught piano at the Mannes School from 1933 to 1939 and has lectured on musical subjects.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 29 1947

Bernstein Scores in Tanglewood Concert

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

From his elite seat in the row of boxes which disects the great music shed of Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, listened to his own superb organization, conducted by his hand picked protege, Leonard Bernstein, in a program which evidently pleased the 73-year old maestro, judging from the rapturous expression which suffused his ruddy countenance. And an audience of 8,500 music lovers felt much the same as the Boston Symphony orchestra's regular conductor as evidenced by the tremendous ovation given the 29-year old genius, particularly after the stunning performance of Stravinsky's musical recreation of the "Rite of Spring."

It may have been prophetical thinking on the part of Mr. Bernstein, conductor, composer and pianist when he wrote his symphonic ballet, "Facsimilie" a couple of years ago, for it was the consensus that Sunday's guest conductor, in interpretative artistry, conducting brilliance and orchestra-inspiring ability was a very clear carbon copy of his distinguished teacher, Dr. Koussevitzky.

Here is a young man, who, several years ago, came to Albany and conferred with several leaders in the musical life of the city, with the idea of starting a youth orchestra in this city as a "feeder" to the local symphony orchestra, but was allowed to slip from their grasp. He was taken up by Dr Koussevitzky, became the "fair-haired boy" of the maestro, and catapulted to the top of this generation's potential conductors. He is the Horation Alger counterpart in the artistic sphere of America.

Interest, naturally, centered on his reading of the Stravinsky work. For this one number he distained the use of a score. It was in front of him, but as far as we could accertain, he never so much as even glanced at it. In the Schubert "Seventh" symphony, which, incidentally, he conducted with romantic insight and flexibility, there was not even the customary music rack in front of him. However, it was "The Rite of Spring" which was a test of his ability ,with every choir of the orchestra receiving an unmistakable lead, and every change of its barbaric rhythm, being clearly indicated, resulting in an historic performance by this tremendously talented young American. It must have been an unique situation for Dr. Koussevitzky to sit on the sidelines, and "see himself as others see him" through his own, undimmed by time eyes as he himself, must have looked when he was the same age as this young guest conductor. But, in all justice to the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the intervening years have not dulled his musical perception nor curtailed his tremendous vitality. He can still come through with a "photo-finish" with his more youthful "facsimilie."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,679) (S 34,946)
This Clipping From
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

JUL 29 1947

Radio Today

Editor's note: This program schedule is subject to change without notice.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, third broadcast in the series from the festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be heard at 7:30 p. m. today, WENR, with Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old pianist, as soloist for both concert selections, "Concerto No. 1 in B Flat for Piano and Orchestra" by Tschaikowsky, and Vivaldi's "Converto in D Minor for Organ and Orchestra." Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the work.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,269)
This Clipping From NAMPA, IDAHO
FREE PRESS

JUL 29 1947

Tora Rehm Invite
Under Koussevitzk

A succession of musical honors was climaxed for Miss Tora Rehm of Nampa this month when she was asked to participate in the annual Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, just outside Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony.

According to word received here this week, Miss Rehm, who has won four successive scholarships to Northwestern university where she has been studying music, was given a complete scholarship to the Berkshire Music school.

To Appear Each Friday

During the six-week period in which the school is in session, Miss Rehm will appear each Friday with an advanced orchestra which gives a complete, professional concert under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Both vocal and instrumental instruction is carried on at the school participants for which are selected by members of the Boston symphony who visit many of the large cities in the nation to audition the better instrumentalists, singers pianists, composers and conductors Musicians who are selected are the invited to go to Tanglewood for si outstanding supervision.

Miss Rehm auditioned for the school in April and was given a complete scholarship. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Rehm of Nampa, she was graduated from Nampa high school, prior to going to Northwestern.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 34,945)
This Clipping From
MOBILE, ALA.
REGISTER

JUL 29 194

Over The Airlanes

Scotch Airs To Dominate Sigmund Romberg Show

'Blue Danube' Waltz Also To Be Presented By Orchestral Group

By ANTHONY LEIGHTON
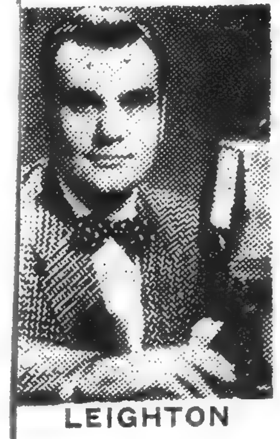
Register Radio Editor

Scotch airs hold the spotlight as composer-conductor Sigmund Romberg opens an Evening With Romberg with the 'Kilties March." Heard at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday over WALA, the NBC show presents "Blue Danube" waltz and an instrumental specialty and Reinhold Schmidt warbles "The Rangers Songs." Anne Jamison contributes sweet melodies.



LEIGHTON

Steve Wilson, crusading editor of CBS' Big Town, and his star reporter, Lorelei, succeed in outwitting desperate mobsters in an exciting episode of their war on crime, at 6 p.m. over WWL.

The Berkshire Music Festival, featuring Serge Koussevitzky on the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents the playing of important recordings made by the orchestra during the last 32 years, the programming alternating between recordings and "live" renditions. Time is 7:30 p.m. over WMOB from ABC. Ella Goldstein is pianist-soloist.

FINGER CUES: Bob Burns reported set to return to the air in the Fall as featured comic on the Dick Haymes show, rather than a show of his own . . . When Harold (Gildersleeve) Peary returns to NBC Sept. 10 he will be starting his seventh season as the "Great Gildersleeve" . . . WABB, Mobile Press Register station in preparation, now a member of the Alabama Assn. of Broadcasters.

OF SPECIAL NOTE: A highlight in the current series of public service programs presented by the Mobile Office of Social Security will be manager Cecil Simpson's talk to be aired at 11: a.m. Tuesday over WALA dealing with veterans of World War II and how they are affected by the 1946 amendments to the Social Security Act.

ROYAL ROMANCE: Princess Elizabeth's wedding will rival as far as the American radio coverage is concerned her uncle's abdication and her father's coronation

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 179,366)
This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

JUL 31 1947

River. According

ction of what fashionable young ust after the Civil War.

'Idomeneo' To Have American Premiere

NEW YORK, July 31.—(UP)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Performances will be given on Monday and Wednesday of next week, last week of the festival.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780, in his 24th year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-88
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

The second of three weekly chamber music concerts will be presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, at the theatre concert hall tonight at 8.15. The program will be presented by the Albeneri Trio.

First Opera Program To Be Given Tomorrow

Scenes from seven operas will be presented tomorrow evening in the first opera program at Tanglewood this season by students of the Berkshire Music Center. The performance at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Operas from which the scenes will be played are: "Hansel and Gretel" (Humperdinck), "Cosi fan tutte" (Mozart), "Rigoletto," (Verdi), "Lohengrin" (Wagner), "Carmen," (Bizet), Don Giovanni" (Mozart) and "Der Rosencavalier" (Richard Strauss).

Four Tanglewood Concerts To Be Broadcast

The first of a series of four radio broadcasts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Shed at Tanglewood will be aired next Tuesday at 8.30 P.M. The four concerts will include an all-Bach program, an all-Mozart performance, a special broadcast of motion picture excerpts by several contemporary composers, and a program devoted to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will be heard in two Bach compositions, concerto in C minor and concerto No. 2 in C major for two pianos and string orchestra, in the opening broadcast. All four concerts, scheduled for Tuesdays, will be broadcast by WBEC and the American Broadcasting Company.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 8 - 1947

NCERT TONIGHT:

uise Vosgerchian, noted Bos- pianist, will be soloist when second and final broadcast of Esplanade Concerts is pre- ed over Station WOKO from to 9:30 o'clock to night. Ar- Fiedler conducts the Boston mphony Orchestra.

n next Tuesday, the first o r broadcasts from the Berk- re Music Festival, with Dr ge Koussevitzky conducting be presented by ABC and KO. The climax of the fes al, Beethoven's "Ninth Sym ny," will be heard in its en ety on Aug. 5.

Miss Vosgerchian, born in Bos , studied with such interna nally renowned teachers yds Ondricek, Nadia Boulan and Nicolas Slonimsky. Sh made several appearance th the Boston "Pops" Orche , Fiedler conducting, and la son was soloist with the Bos Symphony Orchestra. La ason, also, she toured extensive with Ruth Posselt, violinist. Miss Vosgerchian will be sol in Liszt's first piano concert

* * *

ODERN HILLBILLY:

Zeke Manners, hillbilly troub ur and Western-type philos er, heard over over WOKO an BC Monday through Friday, e country's earliest rising e rtainer. He gets out of bed 30 a. m. Hollywood Time at his broadcast will reach t ast at 7:30 a. m.

Manners intersperses his son patter with a few turns at t o and accordion. He is a ngwriter.

s broadcast is visited by o he strangest audiences . ABC janitors and scr en have made it a habit in on his program going from their chores. Mann serves them coffee a nuts.

* * *

NG FAVORITE:

n Drake, radio's hom philosopher, heard Mond h Friday at 11:30 a. m. o O and ABC, attributes phone popularity to to sound completely and informal on his d ms.

he talks into the mi Drake keeps the image friend in his mind's ives to speak to this im he same easy informa uld use within the conf own home. Dressed itting clothes, he usu cigaret in one hand an ribled notes in the ot es the notes merely

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEI PRESS CLIPPIN
W. 19th St., NEW YOR
Tel. CHelsea 3-88
Cir. (D 24,508)
This Clipping Fr
MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS

JUL 9 - 19

Somehow he's got the ide if the Boston Symphony cou held to Boston there would brighter future ahead in F for Willy Kiddle and his Fiddles.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 29 1947

BERKSHIRE CENTER STUDENTS INCLUDE 3 LOCAL MUSICIANS

Picture on the Picture Page.

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Editor

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 29.—Evidence that Buffalo is finding her place in the musical sun is represented in the fact that three local musicians—the largest representation from this city since the founding of the Berkshire Music Center — won the coveted honor of being accepted as students in the 1947 session of the Center at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Enjoying the wooded setting of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its annual Berkshire Festival are Joseph Wincenc, 64 Grosvenor Court, Kenmore, conductor of the Amherst Symphony Orchestra; Frank Knight Dale, 216 Ashland Ave., also a conductor, and Harry S. Taub, 26 Norwalk Ave., violinist.

"It's a grand place to exchange ideas and views on all matters musical," declared Mr. Wincenc. "The lectures are interesting and informative and the discussions following get really exciting at times."

Broadens Musical Horizon

Mr. Wincenc spoke enthusiastically of Eleazar De Carvalho and Leonard Bernstein, assistants to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the orchestral conducting department. Robert Shaw in the choral conducing department he termed a "terrific person," and Hugh Ross of the same department, "a real musical scholar."

For Mr. Dale the Berkshire Music Center is outstanding because of the "remarkable, even great, possibilities" it represents as a molder and builder of music life in this country.

For Mr. Taub, youngest of the three men, coming to the Center constitutes one of the finest experiences of his life, for "it has broadened my musical horizon and given me something to think about," he said. He has derived especial pleasure from his participation in readings of chamber-music scores by Prokofieff, Hindemith, Piston and others and from his orchestral experience, particularly under De Carvalho.

Mr. Wincenc, a graduate of Oberlin College, formerly was concertmaster of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

Played at Chautauqua

He has studied at the Juilliard School, Columbia and New York Universities and at the Conservatory of Music in Prague, Czechoslovakia. While overseas, Tech. Sgt. Wincenc was director of the San Carlo Opera Company Orchestra, known as the Mediterranean Symphony.

In Prague, he was the only American playing in the Prague Philharmonic Orchestra. He also has played with the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra.

An interesting note comes in the fact that Mr. Taub is a former pupil of Mr. Wincenc. The violinist will return to Oberlin next Fall as a senior. He is the official concertmaster of the Oberlin Orchestra and is majoring in music, his goal being to play in a major symphony orchestra. Twice awarded the Purple Heart, he spent three years in the Infantry, reaching the rank of sergeant.

He is a graduate of Bennett High School, and began studying violin when a little over 5 years old.

Conducted in Vienna

His teachers, previous to Mr. Wincence, were Ivan Shapiro and Helen Durrett. He appeared as soloist with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at a summer concert in Beaver Island State Park in 1939.

Mr. Dale, formerly assistant to Dr. Hans Weisse of the Theory Department of the Mannes School in New York City, has studied music and conducted in Vienna. While there he met, through Dr. Weisse, Felix Weingartner and studied conducting under the famous conductor.

The Vienna Philharmonic, which Mr. Dale conducted several times, was, he said, a "wonderful orchestra, probably, at the time it disbanded, the greatest." From 1942 until 1945 Mr. Dale was a member of the Military Intelligence Service of the War Department in Miami Beach. He founded and conducted the Northfield Orchestra in Northfield, Minn., taught at Carleton College, taught piano at the Mannes School from 1933 to 1939 and has lectured on musical subjects.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,441) (S 94,524)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 29 1947

Bernstein Scores in Tanglewood Concert

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

From his elite seat in the row of boxes which disects the great music shed of Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, listened to his own superb organization, conducted by his hand picked protege, Leonard Bernstein, in a program which evidently pleased the 73-year old maestro, judging from the rapturous expression which suffused his ruddy countenance. And an audience of 8,500 music lovers felt much the same as the Boston Symphony orchestra's regular conductor as evidenced by the tremendous ovation given the 29-year old genius, particularly after the stunning performance of Stravinsky's musical recreation of the "Rite of Spring."

It may have been prophetical thinking on the part of Mr. Bernstein, conductor, composer and pianist when he wrote his symphonic ballet, "Facsimilie" a couple of years ago, for it was the consensus that Sunday's guest conductor, in interpretative artistry, conducting brilliance and orchestra-inspiring ability was a very clear carbon copy of his distinguished teacher, Dr. Koussevitzky.

Here is a young man, who, several years ago, came to Albany and conferred with several leaders in the musical life of the city, with the idea of starting a youth orchestra in this city as a "feeder" to the local symphony orchestra, but was allowed to slip from their grasp. He was taken up by Dr Koussevitzky, became the "fair-haired boy" of the maestro, and catapulted to the top of this generation's potential conductors. He is the Horation Alger counterpart in the artistic sphere of America.

Interest, naturally, centered on his reading of the Stravinsky work. For this one number he distained the use of a score. It was in front of him, but as far as we could accertain, he never so much as even glanced at it. In the Schubert "Seventh" symphony, which, incidentally, he conducted with romantic insight and flexibility, there was not even the customary music rack in front of him. However, it was "The Rite of Spring" which was a test of his ability, with every choir of the orchestra receiving an unmistakable lead, and every change of its barbaric rhythm, being clearly indicated, resulting in an historic performance by this tremendously talented young American. It must have been an unique situation for Dr. Koussevitzky to sit on the sidelines, and "see himself as others see him" through his own, undimmed by time eyes as he himself, must have looked when he was the same age as this young guest conductor. But, in all justice to the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the intervening years have not dulled his musical perception nor curtailed his tremendous vitality. He can still come through with a "photo-finish" with his more youthful "facsimilie."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,679) (S 34,946)

This Clipping From
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

JUL 29 1947

Radio Today

Editor's note: This program schedule is subject to change without notice.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, third broadcast in the series from the festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be heard at 7:30 p. m. today, WENR, with Ella Goldstein, 20-year-old pianist, as soloist for both concert selections, "Concerto No. 1 in B Flat for Piano and Orchestra" by Tschaikowsky, and Vivaldi's "Converto in D Minor for Organ and Orchestra." Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the work.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 34,945)

This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
REGISTER

JUL 29 1947

Over The Airlanes

Scotch Airs To Dominate Sigmund Romberg Show

'Blue Danube' Waltz Also To Be Presented By Orchestral Group

By ANTHONY LEIGHTON
Register Radio Editor

Scotch airs hold the spotlight as composer-conductor Sigmund Romberg opens an Evening With Romberg with the 'Kilties March.' Heard at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday over WALA, the NBC show presents "Blue Danube" waltz and an instrumental specialty and Reinhold Schmidt warbles "The Rangers Songs." Anne Jamison contributes sweet melodies.

Steve Wilson, crusading editor of tion, now a member of the Alabama Assn. of Broadcasters.

OF SPECIAL NOTE: A highlight in the current series of public service programs presented by the Mobile Office of Social Security will be manager C[illegible] Simpson's talk to be aired at [illegible] a.m. Tuesday over WALA dealing with veterans of World War II and how they are affected by the 1946 amendments to the Social Security Act.

ROYAL ROMANCE: Princess Elizabeth's wedding will rival, as far as the American radio coverage is concerned, her uncle's abdication and her father's coronation

ESTATE!! GREAT GOODNESS!--THIS MYSTERY IS JIG-SAWING TOGETHER... PIECE BY PIECE!
TAIN."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,269)

This Clipping From NAMPA, IDAHO
FREE PRESS

JUL 29 1947

Tora Rehm Invited to Music Festival Under Koussevitzky, Boston Conductor

A succession of musical honors was climaxed for Miss Tora Rehm of Nampa this month when she was asked to participate in the annual Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, just outside Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony.

According to word received here this week, Miss Rehm, who has won four successive scholarships to Northwestern university where she has been studying music, was given a complete scholarship to the Berkshire Music school.

To Appear Each Friday

During the six-week period in which the school is in session, Miss Rehm will appear each Friday with an advanced orchestra which gives a complete professional concert under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction.

Both vocal and instrumental instruction is carried on at the school, participants for which are selected by members of the Boston symphony who visit many of the larger cities in the nation to audition the better instrumentalists, singers, pianists, composers and conductors. Musicians who are selected are then invited to go to Tanglewood for six weeks of concentrated study under outstanding supervision.

Miss Rehm auditioned for the school in April and was given a complete scholarship. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Rehm of Nampa, she was graduated from Nampa high school, prior to going to Northwestern.

INCORPORATES

AL

E

rom MO.
TIMES
L 31 1947

According what fashionable young er the Civil War.

omeneo' To Have American Premiere

NEW YORK, July 31.—(UP)—Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky is director.

The production will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

Performances will be given on Monday and Wednesday of next week, last week of the festival.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete," in 1780, in his 24th year. It is considered by some one of his greatest works, but because of its length and the absence of printed parts, it has been performed only occasionally in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

The second of three weekly chamber music concerts will be presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Elizabeth [illegible] Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, at the theatre concert hall tonight at 8.15. The program will be presented by the Alb[illegible] Trio.

First Opera Program To Be Given Tomorrow

Scenes from seven operas will be presented tomorrow evening in the first opera program at Tanglewood this season by students of the Berkshire Music Center. The performance at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Operas from which the scenes will be played are: "Hansel and Gretel" (Humperdinck), "Cosi fan tutte" (Mozart), "Rigoletto," (Verdi), "Lohengrin" (Wagner), "Carmen," (Bizet), Don Giovanni" (Mozart) and "Der Rosencavalier" (Richard Strauss).

Four Tanglewood Concerts To Be Broadcast

The first of a series of four radio broadcasts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Shed at Tanglewood will be aired next Tuesday at 8.30 P.M. The four concerts will include an all-Bach program, an all-Mozart performance, a special broadcast of motion picture excerpts by several contemporary composers, and a program devoted to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will be heard in two Bach compositions, concerto in C minor and concerto No. 2 in C major for two pianos and string orchestra, in the opening broadcast.

All four concerts, scheduled for [illegible] broadcast by American Broad-

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 8 - 1947

NCERT TONIGHT:

uise Vosgerchian, noted Bos- pianist, will be soloist when second and final broadcast of Esplanade Concerts is pre- ted over Station WOKO from to 9:30 o'clock to night. Ar- r Fiedler conducts the Boston mphony Orchestra.

On next Tuesday, the first of r broadcasts from the Berk- re Music Festival, with Dr. ge Koussevitzky conducting, be presented by ABC and OKO. The climax of the fes- al, Beethoven's "Ninth Sym- ony," will be heard in its en- ety on Aug. 5.

Miss Vosgerchian, born in Bos- studied with such intern- nally renowned teachers yds Ondricek, Nadia Boulan and Nicolas Slonimsky. She made several appearance th the Boston "Pops" Orches Fiedler conducting, and las son was soloist with the Bos n Symphony Orchestra. Las son, also, she toured extensive with Ruth Posselt, violinist. Miss Vosgerchian will be solo in Liszt's first piano concerto

• • •

ODERN HILLBILLY:

Zeke Manners, hillbilly trouba ur and Western-type philoso er, heard over over WOKO an BC Monday through Friday, e country's earliest rising en rtainer. He gets out of bed 30 a. m. Hollywood Time at his broadcast will reach st at 7:30 a. m.

Manners intersperses his son d patter with a few turns at th no and accordion. He is al ongwriter.

is broadcast is visited by the strangest audiences o. ABC janitors and scru en have made it a habit in on his program going from their chores. Mann serves them coffee a nnuts.

• • •

NG FAVORITE:

en Drake, radio's hom philosopher, heard Mond h Friday at 11:30 a. m. O and ABC, attributes phone popularity to to sound completely and informal on his ms.

he talks into the mic Drake keeps the image friend in his mind's ves to speak to this he same easy informa ld use within the conf own home. Dressed tting clothes, he usu igaret in one hand ibled notes in the ot the notes merely

---

THE ORIGINAL OMEI PRESS CLIPPIN
19th St., NEW YOR
Tel. CHelsea 3-88
Cir. (D 24,508)

This Clipping Fro
MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS

JUL 9 - 19

Somehow he's got the ide if ~~the Boston Symphony~~ cou held to Boston there would brighter future ahead in for Willy Kiddle and his Fiddles.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 8 - 1947

ONCERT TONIGHT:

[illegible] Vosgerchian, noted Boston pianist, will be soloist when [illegible] the final broadcast of the Esplanade Concerts is presented over Station WOKO from [illegible] to [illegible] o'clock tonight. Arthur Fiedler conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On next Tuesday, the first of [illegible] broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be presented by ABC and WOKO. The climax of the festival, Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," will be heard in its entirety on Aug. [illegible]

Miss Vosgerchian, born in Boston, studied with such internationally renowned teachers as Glazer Ondricek, Nadia Boulanger and Nicolas Slonimsky. She has [illegible] several appearances with the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Fiedler conducting, and last season was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Last season, also, she toured extensively with Ruth Posselt, violinist.

Miss Vosgerchian will be soloist in Liszt's first piano concerto.

* * *

MODERN HILLBILLY:

Zeke Manners, hillbilly troubadour and Western-type philosopher, heard over over WOKO and ABC Monday through Friday, is the country's earliest rising entertainer. He gets out of bed at 3:30 a. m. Hollywood Time so that his broadcast will reach the East at 7:30 a. m.

Manners intersperses his songs and patter with a few turns at the piano and accordion. He is also a songwriter.

His broadcast is visited by one of the strangest audiences in radio. ABC janitors and scrubwomen have made it a habit to drop in on his program going to and from their chores. Manners now serves them coffee and doughnuts.

* * *

STRONG FAVORITE:

Galen Drake, radio's homespun philosopher, heard Monday through Friday at 11:30 a. m. over WOKO and ABC, attributes his microphone popularity to his ability to sound completely relaxed and informal on his daily programs.

When he talks into the microphone, Drake keeps the image of some friend in his mind's eye. He strives to speak to this image with the same easy informality he would use within the confines of his own home. Dressed in loose-fitting clothes, he usually has a cigaret in one hand and a few scribled notes in the other. He uses the notes merely as a guide.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,508)

This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS

JUL 9 - 1947

[illegible] got the idea that [illegible] Boston Symphony could be [illegible] Boston there would be a [illegible] future ahead in Peoria [illegible] Kiddle and his Six Fiddles.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,469) (S 24,386)

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
STATE JOURNAL
JUL 8 1947

"Carl Fasshauer, violinist on "Design for Listening," "Curtain Time," and the Dave Garroway show, is strutting. His son, Carl, Jr., has won a special scholarship at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony. The 22-year-old winner is first cellist in the Northwestern university orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,483)

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER
JUL 7 - 1947

Six Concerts Precede Berkshire Festival

Students and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 13, when Pierre Luboshutz and Cenia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct members of the Boston Sympony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theatre concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katims, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and 'cello and for violin, 'cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 7 1947

Tanglewood Lists Week's Concerts

Students and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts this week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milto Katims, viola, assisting. The pro gram will include Trios by Arthu Schnabel for violin, cello an piano, Villa-Lobos for violin. vio and cello, and for violin, cello an piano in E Flat by Schubert. Thi concert will be open to membe of the Soicety of Friends of th Berkshire Music Center, like a tudent programs.

The chorus Department 5 wi ive a concert at 4:30 Thursda fternoon and in the evening :15 the students of Department vill play scenes from operas. Th rchestra of Department 2 wi ive its second program Frida vening at 8:15 in the Festiv hed, and on Sunday morning 0:30 the chamber music orche a will play in the chamber m c hall.

Inquiries, requests for the ca ndar of events and subscriptio the Society of Friends of t erkshire Music Center should ddressed to Tanglewood, Len ass.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 7,420)

This Clipping From OIL CITY, PA.
BLIZZARD

JUL 7 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By LEONARD LYONS

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to some friends this week. He compared the public's present morale to a Wall Street bear market. "When the bear market hits bottom, that's when people are always more disturbed than at any other time. Yet, that is the bottom. From then on, it goes up." . . . Baruch added: "There is a simple solution to the economic problems of the world. It's this: You work and produce, and I'll buy. I work and produce, and you will buy."

Leonard Lyons

* * *

OBIT: George Summerlin, the state department's chief of protocol — who died this week — was confronted with countless diplomatic problems during his career. He confessed that his most difficult one was in greeting the man Italy sent to Washington as its ambassador, after its capitulation to the Allied forces . . . "When you greet the ambassador of a country you've been at war with," Summerlin was asked, "what's the first thing to do?" . . . "The first thing to do," said Summerlin, "is to forget it."

* * *

MUSIC DEPT.: During the Berkshire festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this month Serge Koussevitzky will be host to a group of eminent musicians and critics who will participate in a stunt launching a new record-reproducing instrument. The new machine, built by RCA, Victor, will be matched for fidelity of tone against a full symphony orchestra . . . The Boston symphony orchestra will play a few measures, and the machine will play a recording of the same measures by the same orchestra—and the critics will try to identify the original and the recording .The instrument will be called the "Berkshire." Two hundred will be sold to raise funds to be used for 200 Koussevitzky schol-

To Dominate omberg Sho

tion, now a member of the bama Assn. of Broadcasters.

OF SPECIAL NOTE: A light in the current series of lic service programs presented the Mobile Office of Social curity will be manager Ceci Simpson's talk to be aired at a.m. Tuesday over WALA de with veterans of World Wa and how they are affected by 1946 amendments to the Social curity Act.

ROYAL ROMANCE: Pri Elizabeth's wedding will rival far as the American radio co age is concerned, her uncle's dication and her father's cor tion.

THE ORIGI
ROME
PRESS CLIPP
220 W. 19th St., NEW Y
Tel. CHelsea 8
Cir. (D 22,1

This Clipping
PITTSFIELD,
BERKSHIRE E

JUL 9 - 194

Tanglew

Concert Tonight

The second of chamber music con presented to the Be Center by the Coolidge Foundation of Congress, at the hall tonight at 8.15. will be presented by Trio.

First Opera Progra To Be Given Tomo

Scenes from seven presented tomorrow first opera program this season by st Berkshire Music Ce formance at 8.15 concert hall will be bers of the Society the Berkshire Musi Operas from wh will be played are Gretel" (Humperdi tutte" (Mozart), "R di), "Lohengrin" (men," (Bizet), Don zart) and "Der (Richard Strauss).

Four Tanglewood To Be Broadcast

The first of a seri broadcasts by the Bo Orchestra from the wood will be aired at 8.30 PM. The fou include an all-Bach all-Mozart performan broadcast of motion erpts by several composers, and a pro o Beethoven's Ninth Pierre Luboshutz Nemenoff, duo-pianis heard in two Bach concerto in C minor No. 2 in C major fo and string orchestra, g broadcast.

All four concerts, uesdays, will be WBEC and the Am sting Company.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,107)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 8 - 1947

CONCERT TONIGHT:

[illegible] Vosgerchian, noted Boston pianist, will be soloist when the second and final broadcast of the Esplanade Concerts is presented over Station WOKO from [illegible] to [illegible] o'clock tonight. Arthur Fiedler conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On next Tuesday, the first of [illegible] from the Berkshire Music Festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be presented by ABC and WOKO. The climax of the festival, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, will be heard in its entirety in August.

Miss Vosgerchian, born in Boston, studied with such internationally renowned teachers as Gladys Ondricek, Nadia Boulanger and Nicolas Slonimsky. She has made several appearances with the Boston Pops Orchestra, Fiedler conducting, and last season was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Last season, also, she toured extensively with Ruth Posselt, violinist.

Miss Vosgerchian will be soloist in Liszt's first piano concerto.

* * *

MODERN HILLBILLY:

Zeke Manners, hillbilly troubadour and Western-type philosopher, heard over over WOKO and ABC Monday through Friday, is the country's earliest rising entertainer. He gets out of bed at [illegible] a. m. Hollywood Time so that his broadcast will reach the East at 7:30 a. m.

Manners intersperses his songs and patter with a few turns at the piano and accordion. He is also a songwriter.

His broadcast is visited by one of the strangest audiences in radio. ABC janitors and scrubwomen have made it a habit to drop in on his program going to [illegible] from their chores. Manners [illegible] serves them coffee and doughnuts.

* * *

STRONG FAVORITE:

Galen Drake, radio's home-[illegible] philosopher, heard Monday through Friday at 11:30 a. m. over WOKO and ABC, attributes his microphone popularity to his ability to sound completely relaxed and informal on his daily [illegible].

[illegible] into the microphone, Drake keeps the image of [illegible] in his mind's eye. He [illegible] to speak to this image with the same easy informality he would use within the confines of his own home. Dressed in loose-fitting clothes, he usually [illegible] a cigaret in one hand and a [illegible] scribled notes in the other. He uses the notes merely as a [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,508)

This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS

JUL 9 - 1947

[illegible] got the idea that [illegible] Symphony could be [illegible] Boston there would be a [illegible] ahead in Peoria [illegible] Kyaile and his Six [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,469) (S 24,386)

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
STATE JOURNAL
JUL 8 1947

Carl Fasshauer, violinist on "Design for Listening," "Curtain Time," and the Dave Garroway show, is strutting. His son, Carl, Jr., has won a special scholarship at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony. The 22-year-old winner is first cellist in the Northwestern university orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,483)

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER
JUL 7 - 1947

Six Concerts Precede Berkshire Festival

Students and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts next week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 13, when Pierre Luboshutz and Cenia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct members of the Boston Sympony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theatre concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repeated.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katims, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, 'cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and 'cello and for violin, 'cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 7 1947

Tanglewood Lists Week's Concerts

Students and friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will hear six concerts this week, culminating with the program of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, when Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will play the solo parts in the Concertos for Two Pianos and String Orchestra in C Minor and C Major. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an orchestra of chamber proportions.

The program will include the Brandenburg Concertos No. 1 and No. 6 and the Suite No. 1 in C Major. While all seats in the theater concert hall have been sold for this concert, those who wish to hear it may listen from the lawn or attend the performance Tuesday evening, July 15, when the program will be repealed.

Wednesday evening the second chamber music concert to be sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will be given by the Albeneri Trio, with Milton Katims, viola, assisting. The program will include Trios by Arthur Schnabel for violin, cello and piano, Villa-Lobos for violin, viola and cello, and for violin, cello and piano in E Flat by Schubert. This concert will be open to members of the Soicety of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, like all student programs.

The chorus Department 5 will give a concert at 4:30 Thursday afternoon and in the evening at :15 the students of Department 4 will play scenes from operas. The orchestra of Department 2 will give its second program Friday evening at 8:15 in the Festival hed, and on Sunday morning at 0:30 the chamber music orchestra will play in the chamber music hall.

Inquiries, requests for the calendar of events and subscriptions to the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center should be addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 7,420)

This Clipping From OIL CITY, PA.
BLIZZARD

JUL 7 - 1947

The Lyons Den

By LEONARD LYONS

BROADWAY GAZETTE

BUSINESS DEPT.: Bernard Baruch expressed his optimism to me friends this week. He compared the public's present morale a Wall Street bear market. en the bear market hits bot- that's when people are always disturbed than at any other Yet, that is the bottom. From n, it goes up." . . . Baruch "There is e solution economic of the 's this: k and nd I'll k and d you orge the rt- of ho — was confronted iplomatic problems er. He confessed ficult one was in n Italy sent to ambassador, aft- to the Allied you greet the country you've Summerlin was first thing to thing to do," forget it."

Leonard Lyons

the Berk- wood, Mass., vitzky will nent musi- ll partici- a new t. The Victor, of tone rchestra orches- s, and ording same ll try e re- be un- us to vitzky schol-w & Company.

Stocks

gh	Low	Last
		26
....	24½	11⅜
....	11	12½
....	71

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 7 - 1947

'Music for All' Field Day Slated For Berkshire Center the 29th

Latest Advances in All Forms of Musical Reproduction Will Bring Guests From All Over Country

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its ~~music director, Serge Koussevitzky~~, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood Tuesday, the 29th, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction .

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first 200 sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The school, organized in 1939 by Dr. Koussevitzky for outstanding young musicians, stands to receive a sizeable gift from these initial sales.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of ten-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

As part of a film to be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers. The films are being loaned by United Artists Corporation, the Museum of Modern Art, and other sources.

For the occasion the beautiful music shed will become a vast studio with engineers and announcers working in full view of the audience. The broadcast will be one of the regular Tuesday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the American Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast network.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 10 1947

Tanglewood

Opera Scenes Tonight

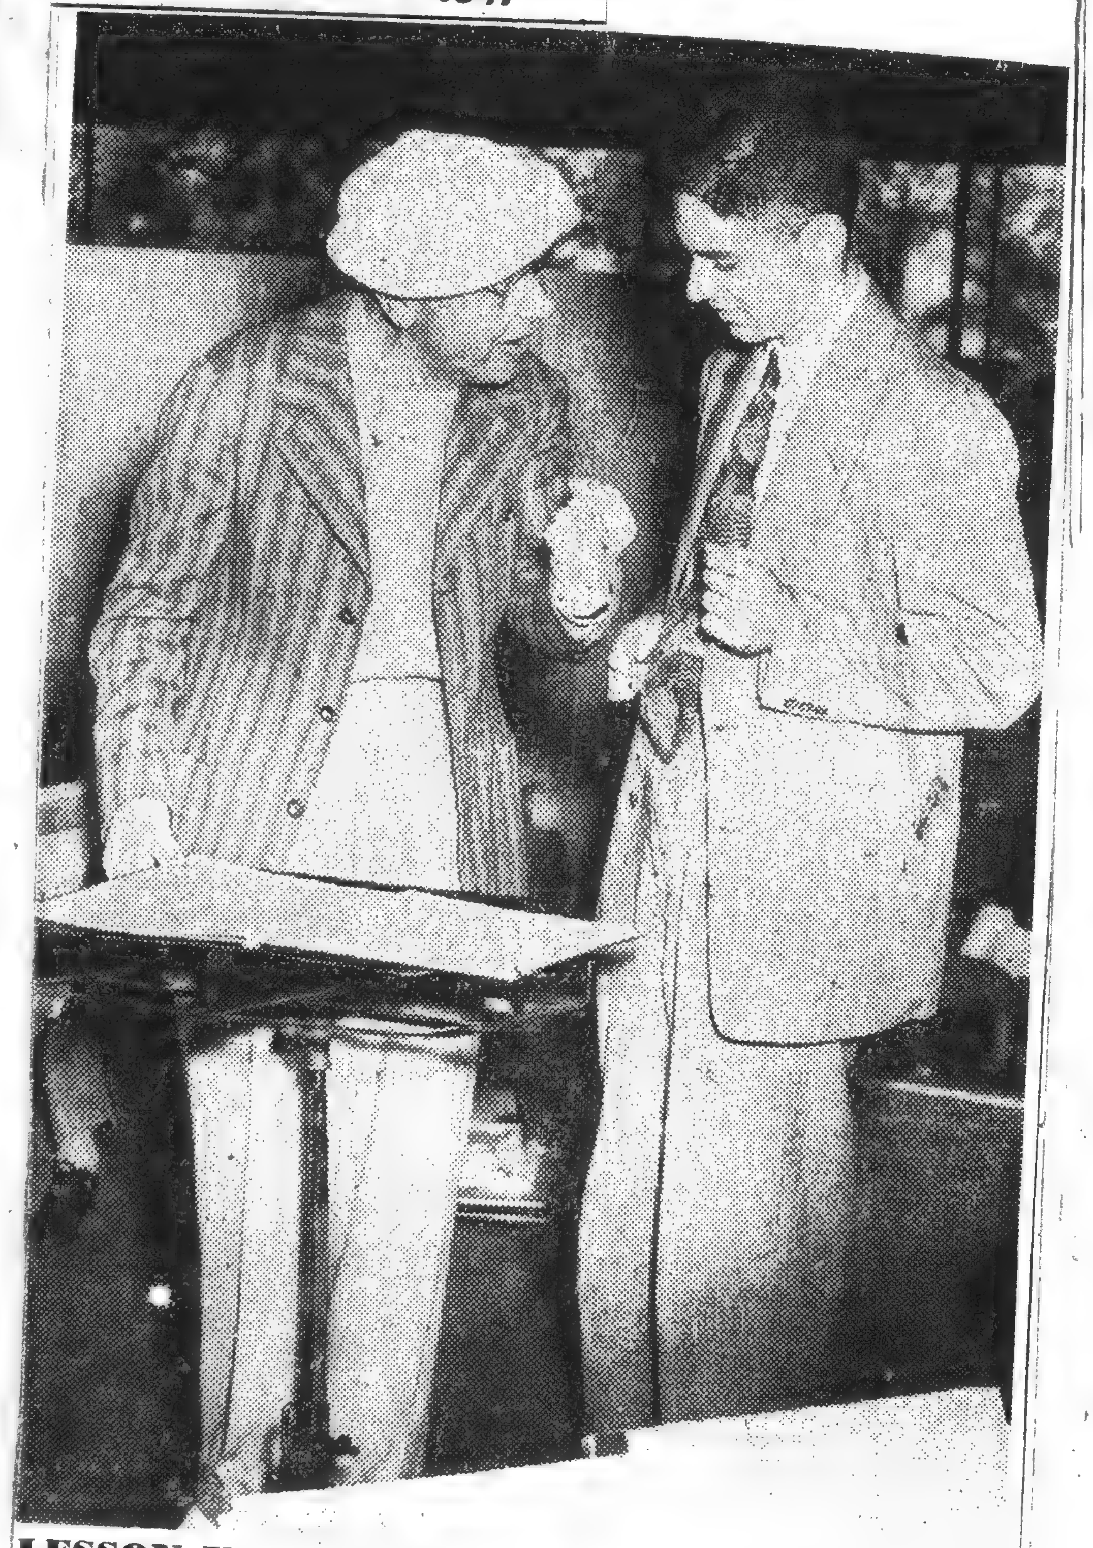
The first opera performance of the season at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall will include scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Rigoletto," "Cosi fan Tutte," "Lohengrin," "Carmen," "Don Giovanni" and "Rosenkavalier." The performance was prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik and Frederick Cohen.

Designer Visits Conductor

Robert Edmond Jones, famous theatrical designer, has spent the past two days in Lenox, consulting with ~~Serge Koussevitzky,~~ music director of ~~the Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra, and the management on plans for staging the "music for all" field day July 29. Mr. Jones interrupted his vacation in Milton, N.H., to come to Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 10 1947



LESSON IN OOMPH: Serge Koussevitzky indicates the need of a little more con brio for ~~the benefit of 21-year-old~~ Claude Frank, one of the outstanding students in the conductor's course in conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. A native of Nuernberg, Germany, Frank went to France in 1938 to study piano with Artur Schnabel, left for America two days before the Germans entered Paris. He resumed his studies with Schnabel in New York and attended Columbia University until he went into the U.S. Army in 1944. He served in Europe and later with occupation troops in Japan. He is now preparing for his New York debut as a pianist in December.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. [illegible]265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 10 1947

Berkshire Festival Will Open Sunday

In the third week of the Berkshire Music Center, eight concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

Sunday morning at 10.30 the chamber music group will give a concert. In the afternoon at 3.30, with Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, as guest artists in two concertos, Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, in the theater-concert hall, with a second performance Tuesday evening at 8.15. Tuesday afternoon at 4.30, in the theater-concert hall, there will be a program by the orchestra and chorus of Department 5.

On Wednesday evening at 8.15 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the last of a weekly series of three chamber music concerts presented to the center by the Elizabeth ~~Sprague Coolidge~~ Foundation in the Library of ~~Congress. The~~ program will include the Sinfonia Concertante Quartet by Mozart; the first performance of the Fantasy Quintet dedicated by Kornsand to Mrs. Coolidge; La Cheminee du Roi Rene by Milhaud; Rapsodie for Piano, Flute, Oboe and Clarinet by Honegger; and Sextet, Op. 39 by Hill.

The chorus of Department 5 will sing Thursday afternoon at 4.30 and at 8.15 opera scenes will be performed. On Friday evening the school orchestra, led by students of conducting and by members of the faculty will give its third weekly concert in the Festival shed.

Seats are available for the extra concert on Tuesday, Aug. 5, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's 8th and 9th symphonies.

All events at Tanglewood, excepting the Festival concerts and rehearsals, are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Inquiries, the calendar of events and tickets may be obtained at the office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. For those who wish to hear the Festival concerts from the lawn, tickets will be on sale at the box office three hours before each program.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIK
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)
This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 10 1947

Tanglewood To Present Music Field Day July 29

A "Music [illegible] field da[illegible] will be held [illegible] at Tanglewood, Le[illegible] [illegible]ored by the Boston Sym[illegible]chestra and its music [illegible]erge Koussevitzky. A[illegible] vances in a[illegible] forms of m[illegible]oduction wi[illegible] be presented.

The p[illegible] cover record[illegible] ing, radio, tele[illegible] and motio[illegible] pictures [illegible] nclude with [illegible] special [illegible] the orchestr[illegible] in addition [illegible] already an[illegible] nounced [illegible] 1947 Berkshir[illegible] Festival.

[illegible] the[illegible] [illegible] par[illegible] symphonic [illegible] side [illegible] modern [illegible] RVA Vic[illegible] custom-ma[illegible] The new [illegible] named "The Berk[illegible] of the Tangle[illegible] the first 200 [illegible] marked [illegible] subscription [illegible]

Berkshire Music [illegible] ship fund.

The second half of [illegible] entitled "The M[illegible] Fidelity" and will [illegible] ings by th[illegible] Boston [illegible] Orchestra [illegible] back to 1915 [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIK
PRESS CLIPPINGS
20 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 1
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,91
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUL 11 19

Tanglewo 'Music fo

The Boston Symphony O Serge Koussevitzky con will ~~give a special~~ concert Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29.

Ella Golds

Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the y Ella Goldstein as the solo orchestral concerto with or D minor by Vivaldi, Berlio man Carnival Overture, the duction to Act III of Lo Beethoven's Overture to E and excerpts from Ravel's D and Chloe second suite, and fiev's The Love for Three O

This event will be called for All" and will be of unprec ed character in that it is de to show the three developm science by which symphonic has found a greatly widened —the phonograph, the radi motion pictures.

Tanglewood will be equ to demonstrate the Orchestra tribution in the first two of developments by means of a wide broadcast, and a comp of phonograph recordings by the organization at various with the direct playing of the music by the Orchestra itsel

The motion picture camera photograph the audience in for a forthcoming film The of Tanglewood.

Before the concert there special showing from outsta films to which contemporary posers have contributed the m scores. They will be shown Theatre-Concert Hall, the a of the opera departme

---

THE ORIGINAL
OMEI
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 1
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 128,959 (S 189,963)
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's

By ALICE

COULD HAVE BEEN

Serge Koussevitzky, direc ll as conductor of the Bo season of the music sch

This summer 420 young d 19 foreign countries a usical oasis. From these s, vocalists and instrume [illegible], is a T school dedication address ssevitzky made an odd t. "Music," he said, ched a dangerous impasse ountry. Its spread among ses at too rapid a pace lted in a misconception of a means of entertain enjoyment." I pon ese words and decided he making a sideswipe at kies. But Bill Judd, son manager of the Berkshire Festival, assures me all the meant was that while ng music is pleasant far more satisfaction in

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,912)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUL 11 1947

Tanglewood Adds Special 'Music for All' Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29.

Ella Goldstein

Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture, the Introduction to Act III of Lohegrin, Beethoven's Overture to Egmont, and excerpts from Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe second suite, and Prokofiev's The Love for Three Oranges.

This event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public —the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures.

Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the Orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nationwide broadcast, and a comparison of phonograph recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the Orchestra itself.

The motion picture cameras will photograph the audience in shots for a forthcoming film The Story of Tanglewood.

Before the concert there will be a special showing from outstanding films to which contemporary composers have contributed the musical scores. They will be shown at the Theatre-Concert Hall, the auditorium of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. The program of films will include music by Honegger, Prokofiev, Walton, Copland, and Virgil Thomson.

The first portion of the program by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be broadcast (8:30-9:30 E.D.S.T.) on the ABC coast-to-coast network. He will conduct Berlioz's Roman Carnival while the motion pictures are made of the listening audience. The remainder of the program is called "The March of Fidelity," and will be devoted to a comparison of Victor phonograph records and the Orchestra in actual performance.

Each disc will be played on a phonograph of its own period. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the Introduction to Act III from Lohegrin. The same music will then be heard in the recording of 1915, when the Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for discs.

The Orchestra's first orthophonic electrical recordings of 20 years ago and the increased volume and fidelity of 1935 will be demonstrated in the next numbers. The most rceent recording yet to be released and capturing the orchestral range and dynamics to a greater degree than ever before, is Beethoven's Overture to Egmont. It will be played on the newly designed custom-made RCA Victor radio phonograph called "The Berkshire" which will be introduced to the public for the first time at this concert and will be compared with the sound of the Orchestra itself.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-88
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 4

This Clipping F
W BEDFORD,
ANDARD-T

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,894)

This Clipping From
LACONIA, N. H.
CITIZEN

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's New York

BY ALICE HUGHES

Marriage and Music Thrive in Berkshire Music Center)

NEW YORK—Wish I could have been in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This summer 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumantalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

In his school dedication address Dr Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. Its spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a 'sideswipe at disk jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Music Festival, assures me all the Maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

The music at the Berkshire Music Center, which is in Lenox, Mass., never fails to soothe my spirit. The summer school, too, is an uplifting institution. But I must admit the romantic undercurrents absorb me as much as the musical savvy. Located on the idyllic Tanglewood estate which figured in some of Hawthorne's tales, it was willed to Koussy by some adoring old ladies, for the purpose to which he has put it. What better place for love to flourish than under blue skies in a green valley shaded with trees and perfumed with flowers? Is it any wonder that ten percent of the students come out of the six-weeks school musically inspired and matrimonially betrothed?

* * *

HAIRSTYLE REVOLT — The long hemline isn't the only fashion change women are beefing about. Now come the milliners who say they want women's ears covered in order to wear the new hat styles. Ears have enjoyed freedom for several years to contribute that "well-scrubbed" look that's been so popular. Now they'er due for retirement, and some women, particularly the top glamor models, don't like it.

Here's what raven-haired Pat Ryan has to say on the subject: "The hound dog drape? It makes a girl look years older when her ears are covered. Not for me." But red-headed Rosemary Craig is more amenable. She's decided to muffle her ears for fashion: "My husband likes to see me keep up with the latest styie trends. Covered ears are age-making, but as long as my husband likes me that

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
0 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 203,600)

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

JUL 13 1947

he Berkshire Festival Site of Experiment

'anglewood, Lenox, Mass—The ston Symphony Orchestra and music director, Serge Kousse-zky, announce a "Music for " field day at Tanglewood July showing latest advances in all ms of musical reproduction.

'he program will cover record-, radio, television, and motion tures and will conclude with a cial concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when one manufacturer introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

Moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and othe important contemporary compo ers.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 128,959 (S 189,963)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's New York

By ALICE HUGHES

WISH I COULD HAVE BEEN in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This summer 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumentalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

In his school dedication address Dr. Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. Its spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a sideswipe at disk jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Festival assures me all the Maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

(Copyright, 1947, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

JUL 13 194

Boston Symphony Plans Musical Field Day

BOSTON, July 12.—(Sp)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will hold a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra, in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event is expected to attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,912)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUL 11 1947

Tanglewood Adds Special 'Music for All' Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a special concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday evening, July 29.

Ella Goldstein

Coming in the middle of the Berkshire Festival weeks, but apart from the Festival itself, the concert will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with the youthful Ella Goldstein as the soloist, an orchestral concerto with organ in D minor by Vivaldi, Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture, the Introduction to Act III of Lohegrin, Beethoven's Overture to Egmont, and excerpts from Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe second suite, and Prokofiev's The Love for Three Oranges.

This event will be called "Music for All" and will be of unprecedented character in that it is designed to show the three developments of science by which symphonic music has found a greatly widened public —the phonograph, the radio, and motion pictures.

Tanglewood will be equipped to demonstrate the Orchestra's contribution in the first two of these developments by means of a nationwide broadcast, and a comparison of phonograph recordings made by the organization at various times with the direct playing of the same music by the Orchestra itself.

The motion picture cameras will photograph the audience in shots for a forthcoming film The Story of Tanglewood.

Before the concert there will be a special showing from outstanding films to which contemporary composers have contributed the musical scores. They will be shown at the Theatre-Concert Hall, the auditorium of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. program of films will include by Honegger, Prokofiev, W Copland, and Virgil Thomso

The first portion of the by the full Boston Symph chestra under Dr. Kou will be broadcast (8:30-9 S.T.) on the ABC coa network. He will conduc Roman Carnival while pictures are made of t audience. The remai program is called "T Fidelity," and will be comparison of Victo records and the Orc performance.

Each disc will phonograph of its Koussevitzky will chestra in the I III from Lohegr will then be he of 1915, when Dr. Karl Mu full-size sym play for dis

The Orc electrical ago and fidelity strated most r release tral r er Beet It v sig F compa Orchestra

---

THE ORIGINA
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPIN
220 W. 19th St., NEW YO
Tel. CHelsea 3-8
Cir. (D 53,082) (S

This Clipping F
V BEDFORD,
NDARD-T

10

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 128,959 (S 189,963)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's New York

By ALICE HUGHES

WISH I COULD HAVE BEEN in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This summer 420 young men and women students from 40 states and 19 foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumentalists. The brilliant young conductor, Leonard Bernstein, is a Tanglewood product.

In his school dedication address Dr. Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. It's spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a sideswipe at disk jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Festival assures me all the Maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

(Copyright, 1947, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,894)

This Clipping From
LACONIA, N. H.
CITIZEN

JUL 11 1947

A Woman's New York

BY ALICE HUGHES

Marriage and Music Thrive in Berkshire Music Center)

NEW YORK—Wish I could have been in the Berkshires last week when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Tanglewood Music Center as well as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the fifth season of the music school he founded three years before the war. This summer 420 young men and women students from forty states and nineteen foreign countries are studying for six weeks in this lovely musical oasis. From these courses will emerge conductors, composers, vocalists and instrumantalists. The brilliant young conductor Leonard Bernstein is a Tanglewood product.

In his school dedication address Dr Koussevitzky made an odd statement. "Music," he said, "has reached a dangerous impasse in this country. Its spread among the masses at too rapid a pace has resulted in a misconception of music as a means of entertainment and enjoyment." I pondered these words and decided he must be making a sideswipe at disk jockies. But Bill Judd, son of the manager of the Berkshire Music Festival, assures me all the Maestro meant was that while ear-tickling music is pleasant there is far more satisfaction in really learning to understand music. The more you know about it, the better you enjoy it, says Koussy.

The music at the Berkshire Music Center, which is in Lenox, Mass., never fails to soothe my spirit. The summer school, too, is an uplifting institution. But I must admit the romantic undercurrents absorb me as much as the musical savvy. Located on the idyllic Tanglewood estate which figured in some of Hawthorne's tales, it was willed to Koussy by some adoring old ladies, for the purpose to which he has put it. What better place for love to flourish than under blue skies in a green valley shaded with trees and perfume with flowers? Is it any wonde that ten percent of the student come out of the six-weeks scho musically inspired and matr monially betrothed?

* * *

HAIRSTYLE REVOLT — The long hemline isn't the only fashion change women are beefing about. Now come the milliners who say they want women's ears covered in order to wear the new hat styles. Ears have enjoyed freedom for several years to contribute that "well-scrubbed" look that's been so popular. Now they'er due for retirement, and some women, particularly the top glamor models, don't like it.

Here's what raven-haired Pat Ryan has to say on the subject: "The hound dog drape? It makes a girl look years older when her ears are covered. Not for me." But red-headed Rosemary Craig is more amenable. She's decided to muffle her ears for fashion: "My husband likes to see me keep up with the latest style trends. Covered ears are age-making, but as long as my husband likes me that

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 203,600)

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

JUL 13 1947

The Berkshire Festival Site of Experiment

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television, and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event will attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

For the first time anywhere the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when one manufacturer introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph.

The second half of the program is entitled "The March of Musical Fidelity" and will feature recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 10-year-intervals back to 1915 when it became the first full-size symphonic organization to play for the phonograph.

Moving pictures will be made of the Festival audience for the first time. Before the concert there will be a program of excerpts from several hit motion pictures with scores by Aaron Copland and Arthur Honegger, who are on the faculty at Tanglewood, and other important contemporary composers.

JUL 13 194

Boston Symphony Plans Musical Field Day

BOSTON, July 12.—(Sp)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will hold a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The program will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures, and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra, in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival. The event is expected to attract music critics and other specially invited guests from the entire country.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116,216)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 16 1947

Mozart's 'Idomeneo' American Premiere

Since no parts of Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" exist in America, a full set has been copied for the American premiere in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the nights of Aug. 4-6, in the Theater-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Festival. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The program is announced as a major activity of the opera department, directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will be pupils of the Berkshire Music Center. This center is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer School of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is director. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

* *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 16 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will play tonight at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall. The program will be the last of three weekly concerts presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the Coolidge Foundation. Members of the Friends Society are invited to sit in the reserved section. The public is invited.

Concert Postponed

The program planned for tomor-

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 16 1947

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,872) (S 80,138)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 16 1947

Mozart Opera Listed As Tanglewood Event

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo, King of Crete," will be given for the first time in America, when it is presented as the major activity of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Boris Goldovsky will direct and conduct the performances. Richard Rychtarik is designing the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in last year's "Peter Grimes," will be pupils of the Music Center, which is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school. The opera will be sung in the original Italian.

Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 16 1947

Mozart Opera to Have American Debut at Tanglewood in August

'Idomeneo, King of Crete,' Will Be Performed by Opera Department of Berkshire Music Center

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director. The production is announced as the major activity of the Opera Department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances in the Theatre-Concert Hall during the last week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his 24th year. It is generally considered one of his greatest woks, but owing to its length and the absence of pinted parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Boris Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

TANGLEWOOD SINGERS—The theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, is shown above with a part of the 1947 Berkshire Music Center's 425 registrants from 40 states and 19 foreign countries. The platform leader is Hugh Ross, choral department instructor. The current series of Bach and Mozart concerts of two each are being given in the concert hall, which has a seating capacity of 1200, compared with more than 6000 for the music shed.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,100)
This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

JUL 15 1947

Portland Press Herald

Litwin To Play Rhapsody In Blue As Music Shell Guest Artist Tonight

Leo Litwin

Concert Series Will Begin At 8.15 O'Clock

Leo Litwin, well known as a pianist and conductor, will play his famed arrangement of Gershwin's Rhapsody In Blue, when he appears at 8.15 p. m. today as guest artist at the first of this season's Greater Portland Memorial Music Shell open air concerts, Clinton W. Graffam, jr., program chairman, has announced.

Litwin was soloist in the first American performance of the Warsaw Concerto and also the Cornish Rhapsody, both in concert and on nationwide radio networks. Currently among the first four in nationwide sales for this type of music is the recording of Warsaw Concerto in which Litwin appears as piano soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Conductor of the Boston Orchestral Ensemble, composed of 25 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which has toured throughout New England, and also of the Boston Distaff Orchestra, composed of 20 women musicians and featured on sponsored radio programs, Litwin recently originated a new series of concerts in New England Mutual Hall in Boston. These concerts feature music from the classics to the more popular favorites, adapted and arranged exclusively for the use of this orchestra.

As a pianist Litwin has been heard with the Boston Pops Orchestra and with the Boston Esplanade Orchestra. He received his early musical education in Boston under Jesus Maria Sanroma and later studied in New York under the great American pianist, Josef Lhevinne.

Accompanying him on Rhapsody will be the Music Shell Pops Orchestra under the baton of Graffam. Other selections to be presented on this program in the new shell at South Portland include: The Lorrain March, Ganne; Dance of the Hours from La Gioconda, Ponchielli; selections from Oklahoma, Rodgers, Poet and Peasant Overture, Russian Sailors Dance from the ballet Red Poppy, Gliere; and The Blue Danube Waltzes, Strauss.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 19 1947

MUSIC NOTES

The first series of concerts—Series A—at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., will be inaugurated on Thursday. With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony, the program will consist of Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms Second Symphony. On Saturday evening the following works will be presented: Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture, Copland's Third Symphony and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," the latter with William Primrose as viola soloist. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Sunday afternoon concert, which consists of two works—Schubert's C major Symphony (No. 7) and Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps."

Prior to the opening of Series A, an all-Mozart concert will be presented tomorrow afternoon and Tuesday evening, under Koussevitzky's direction. Included on the program are the Serenade in B flat, the Divertimento in B flat, the Symphony in E flat (No. 26) and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116,216)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 16 1947

Mozart's 'Idomeneo' American Premiere

Since no parts of Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" exist in America, a full set has been copied for the American premiere in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the nights of Aug. 4-6, in the Theater-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Festival. Admission will be by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The program is announced as a major activity of the opera department, directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will be pupils of the Berkshire Music Center. This center is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer School of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is director. ~~The opera will be sung~~ in the original Italian language.

* *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,872) (S 80,138)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 16 1947

Mozart Opera Listed As Tanglewood Event

Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo, King of Crete," will be given for the first time in America, when it is presented as the major activity of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Boris Goldovsky will direct and conduct the performances. Richard Rychtarik is designing the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in last year's "Peter Grimes," will be pupils of the Music Center, which is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school. The opera will be sung in the original Italian.

Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,100)

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

JUL 15 1947

Portland Press Herald—Portland,

Litwin To Play Rhapsody In Blue As Music Shell Guest Artist Tonight

Leo Litwin

Concert Series Will Begin At 8.15 O'Clock

Leo Litwin, well known as a pianist and conductor, will play his famed arrangement of Gershwin's Rhapsody In Blue, when he appears at 8.15 p. m. today as guest artist at the first of this season's Greater Portland Memorial Music Shell open air concerts, Clinton W. Graffam, jr., program chairman, has announced.

Litwin was soloist in the first American performance of the Warsaw Concerto and also the Cornish Rhapsody, both in concert and on nationwide radio networks. Currently among the first four in nationwide sales for this type of music is the recording of Warsaw Concerto in which Litwin appears as piano soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Conductor of the Boston Orchestral Ensemble, composed of 25 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which has toured throughout New England, and also of the Boston Distaff Orchestra, composed of 20 women musicians and featured on sponsored radio programs, Litwin recently originated a new series of concerts in New England Mutual Hall in Boston. These concerts feature music from the classics to the more popular favorites, adapted and arranged exclusively for the use of this orchestra.

As a pianist Litwin has been heard with the Boston Pops Orchestra and with the Boston Esplanade Orchestra. He received his early musical education in Boston under Jesus Maria Sanroma and later studied in New York under the great American pianist, Josef Lhevinne.

Accompanying him on Rhapsody will be the Music Shell Pops Orchestra under the baton of Graffam. Other selections to be presented on this program in the new shell at South Portland include: The Lorrain March, Ganne; Dance of the Hours from La Gioconda, Ponchielli; selections from Oklahoma, Rodgers, Poet and Peasant Overture, Russian Sailors Dance from the ballet Red Poppy, Gliere; and The Blue Danube Waltzes, Strauss.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 16 1947

Tanglewood

Concert Tonight

The Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will play tonight at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall. The program will be the last of three weekly concerts presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the ~~Coolidge~~ Foundation. Members of the Friends Society are invited to sit in the reserved section. The public is invited.

Concert Postponed

The program planned for tomorrow afternoon by the chorus of Department 5 has been postponed until Monday afternoon at 4.30.

Opera Tomorrow Night

Scenes from the following operas will be presented tomorrow evening at 8.15 by students of the opera department: The forest scene from "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; grave-yard scene from "Don Giovanni," Mozart; Air de Lia from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; excerpt from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; the dungeon scene from "Fidelio," Beethoven.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 16 1947

Mozart Opera to Have American Debut at Tanglewood in August

'Idomeneo, King of Crete,' Will Be Performed by Opera Department of Berkshire Music Center

Mozart's opera "Idomeneo" will be performed for the first time in America by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director. The production is announced as the major activity of the Opera Department, and will be directed and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the sets. The orchestra and singers, as in the production of "Peter Grimes" last season, will consist of pupils of the Berkshire Music Center.

There will be two performances in the Theatre-Concert Hall during the last week of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday evenings, August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart wrote his "Idomeneo, King of Crete" in 1780, in his 24th year. It is generally considered one of his greatest woks, but owing to its length and the absence of pinted parts, it has only occasionally been performed in Europe. Since no parts exist in America, a full set is being copied for the Tanglewood production. Boris Goldovsky has edited the score, preserving all the important scenes. The opera will be sung in the original Italian language.

TANGLEWOOD SINGERS—The theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, is shown above with a part of the 1947 Berkshire ~~Music Center's~~ 425 registrants from 40 states and 19 foreign countries. The platform leader is ~~Hugh Ross~~, choral department instructor. The current series of Bach and Mozart concerts of two each are being given in the concert hall, which has a seating capacity of 1200, compared with more than 6000 for the music shed.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 19 1947

MUSIC NOTES

The first series of concerts—Series A—at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., will be inaugurated on Thursday. With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony, the program will consist of Honegger's Symphony for Strings, Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms Second Symphony. On Saturday evening the following works will be presented: Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture, Copland's Third Symphony and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," the latter with William Primrose as viola soloist. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Sunday afternoon concert, which consists of two works—Schubert's C major Symphony (No. 7) and Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps."

Prior to the opening of Series A, an all-Mozart concert will be presented tomorrow afternoon and Tuesday evening, under Koussevitzky's direction. Included on the program are the Serenade in B flat, the Divertimento in B flat, the Symphony in E flat (No. 26) and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,124)

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 15 1947

Your
TOWN CRIER

Let's talk about personalities! Gus Bernier, announcer at WMUR, has just returned from his vacation—and what a ribbing he's taking because he has no tan. Gus refuses to talk except to point out that just because you go on a vacation is no reason you automatically have to acquire a tanning from the sun. * * * Eric Castle is vacationing, too—but will be around to do his program regularly. There's a lad with so many outside interests which are still indoors, that the only tan he'll get will be from a sun lamp. * * * L. H. B. of Manchester wants to know if something can't be done to stop "the horrible noise, miscalled music, that accompanies almost every story told on the radio?" He's quite violent about it—but I have to set him right. It isn't Petrillo's fault. It's just that radio producers have to have something to set scenes, indicate a lapse of time, and establish a general mood for the story. Music does it very well—if it isn't too loud or too much out of hand. The thing for L. H. B. to do is write and blast the producer of the particular programs which offend him.

Edith Doe, the New Hampshire lark who sung her way into the hearts of many a WMUR listener sometime ago, has completed her work at the University of Chicago, and won her Master's degree. She also holds down a job as superintendent of music in a school just outside Chicago. She'll be home (Northwood, N. H.) for a vacation the first two weeks in August. And if she doesn't appear on my program for an interview, it won't be because I didn't try to get her to come back for a visit.

"I'm bored," says Norm Bailey maestro of the morning Smile-Awhile program at WKXL in Concord. "All this talk of flying discs: Pooh! I've been a flying disc jockey for years!" What Bailey means, of course, is that he not only emcees many of WKXL's disc shows, but is also an avid "fly-boy" at the local airport. So, from now on, it's Norm Bailey, F. D. J.—Flying Disc Jockey! * * * Ann Anagnostos is the charming dark-haired beauty who runs the Hellenic Hour on WFEA every Sunday from 9 to 9:30 a. m. As a side line to this activity, she is sales secretary at the station, taking dictation from two salesmen, the manager, and arranging and typing out program presentations. On top of that she turns out to be the manager's secretary during vacation periods. In other words, she's a willing and very cooperative person—known around WFEA as a "swell kid," all five-foot three of her. For the program she writes the commercials herself—in Greek, and sometimes in English. She picks out the records, writes and puts the show together, and then goes on the air. It's quite a little job—but she likes it, and revels in the fact that she's Manchester's only female disc—jockey—possibly the only one in the state. She even likes to have her program criticized—provided that it is constructive criticism.

Billboard magazine is trying to find a new word to replace "disk-jockey" which, it thinks, is lacking in dignity. So far—in my opinion—the best of those suggested is "Disconcerter." It certainly fits Bernie Mack and Scott Douglass, according to their fans.

"Ah Wilderness!" one of the works of the great American dramatist, Eugene O'Neill, will be presented in Studio One tonight (CBS, 9:30). Everett Sloane will play Nat Miller, the role portrayed on the stage by Will Rogers and George M. Cohan, and in the movie by Lionel Barrymore. Don Harron, brilliant 20-year-old Canadian actor, makes his American debut in radio as Nat's son Richard, a part he also played on the Canadian stage. * * * The seventh season of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be brought to radio listeners beginning tonight (ABC, 8:30). It's an all-Bach program, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony, and featuring both the C Minor and C Major concerti for two pianos and string orchestra. Should be impressive listening.

Hear YOUR TOWN CRIER weekdays at 12:45 over WMUR

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 16 1947

Ten Aural Treats, Starting with Mozart

Tanglewood Menu

With the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds", Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program, seats remain.

* * *

THE FIRST CONCERT by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master of he Boston Orchestra. It will be followed on Thursday afternon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by Department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

* * *

SERIES A OF THE Festival start on Thursday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Henegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahm's 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 97,626) (S 93,402)

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 20 1947

Mozart Opera At Tanglewood

"Idomeneo," Mozart opera previously unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, it was announced yesterday by the Berkshire Music Center, school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The opera will be performed twice in the theater-concert hall on August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation on the part of the friends of the center. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the center, will conduct.

Mozart wrote the opera for the court opera in Munich in 1700, when he was 24.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 19 1947

DISC DATA

NEVER were truer words spoken when the record makers offer "the music you want when you want it." The only limit is one's purse. Bach fans will go wild over Victor's album by the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting, playing Suites 2 and 3 by the Papa Johann. It's superbly done. So, too, is the colossal album by Columbia (50 sides in three volumes) of Handel's "12 Concerti Grossi," beautifully recorded by Adolph Busch's Chamber Players. Real stuff!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 65,966) (S 86,786)

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUL 20 1947

Koussevitzky Plans Musical Field Day

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (33,169)

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 19 1947

Advice for Bigotees

Dear Sirs: Those who plan to attend the Berkshire Music Festival may be interested to know that a Massachusetts statute makes it unlawful to discriminate against anyone on account of race or color, and in addition to imposing a stiff criminal penalty grants to the aggrieved person a right to collect civil damages (Gen. Laws, Chap. 272, Sec. 98).

EDWARD SPIEGEL

Boston July 1

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 193,539)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 20 1947

Boston Symphony in Demonstration Of Music as Movie Background

By MARJORIE TURNER

IN CASE ANYONE should think that motion pictures have no advanced in the artistic social scale, we were very interested to receive a dispatch from the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerning the "Music for All" field day at the Berkshire Music Festival July 29.

THE "MUSIC FOR ALL" field day is the Boston Symphony's contribution to the Tanglewood festival, and on that day they plan to present the most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original music scores.

IGINAL
EIK
LIPPINGS
W YORK 11, N
8-8860
(Sat. 209,766)
ing From RK, N. Y.
UN

1947

NOTES

ries of concerts—
Berkshire Festival
Mass., will be in-sday. With Serge
ucting the Boston
ogram will consist phony for Strings,
Mer," and the mphony. On Sat-
following works
Barber's "School
rture, Copland's
d Berlioz's "Har-latter with Wil-iola soloist. Leon-conduct the Sun-
cert, which con-
rks—Schubert's C
(No. 7) and Stra-Printemps."
ning of Series A, cert will be preternoon and Tues-
r Koussevitzky's
on the program in B flat, the flat, the Sym-
(No. 26) and the ny.

[104]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,124)

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 15 1947

Your
TOWN CRIER

Let's talk about personalities! Gus Bernier, announcer at WMUR, has just returned from his vacation—and what a ribbing he's taking because he has no tan. Gus refuses to talk except to point out that just because you go on a vacation is no reason you automatically have to acquire a tanning from the sun. * * * Eric Castle is vacationing, too—but will be around to do his program regularly. There's a lad with so many outside interests which are still indoors, that the only tan he'll get will be from a sun lamp. * * * L. H. B. of Manchester wants to know if something can't be done to stop "the horrible noise, miscalled music, that accompanies almost every story told on the radio?" He's quite violent about it—but I have to set him right. It isn't Petrillo's fault. It's just that radio producers have to have something to set scenes, indicate a lapse of time, and establish a general mood for the story. Music does it very well—if it isn't too loud or too much out of hand. The thing for L. H. B. to do is write and blast the producer of the particular programs which offend him.

Edith Doe, the New Hampshire lark who sung her way into the hearts of many a WMUR listener sometime ago, has completed her work at the University of Chicago, and won her Master's degree. She also holds down a job as superintendent of music in a school just outside Chicago. She'll be home (Northwood, N. H.) for a vacation the first two weeks in August. And if she doesn't appear on my program for an interview, it won't be because I didn't try to get her to come back for a visit.

"I'm bored," says Norm Bailey maestro of the morning Smile-Awhile program at WKXL in Concord. "All this talk of flying discs: Pooh! I've been a flying disc jockey for years!" What Bailey means, of course, is that he not only emcees many of WKXL's disc shows, but is also an avid "fly-boy" at the local airport. So, from now on, it's Norm Bailey, F. D. J.—Flying Disc Jockey! * * * Ann Anagnostos is the charming dark-haired beauty who runs the Hellenic Hour on WFEA every Sunday from 9 to 9:30 a. m. As a side line to this activity, she is sales secretary at the station, taking dictation from two salesmen, the manager, and arranging and typing out program presentations. On top of that she turns out to be the manager's secretary during vacation periods. In other words, she's a willing and very cooperative person—known around WFEA as a "swell kid," all five-foot three of her. For the program she writes the commercials herself—in Greek, and sometimes in English. She picks out the records, writes and puts the show together, and then goes on the air. It's quite a little job—but she likes it, and revels in the fact that she's Manchester's only female disc—jockey—possibly the only one in the state. She even likes to have her program criticized—provided that it is constructive criticism.

Billboard magazine is trying to find a new word to replace "disk-jockey" which, it thinks, is lacking in dignity. So far—in my opinion—the best of those suggested is "Disconcerter." It certainly fits Bernie Mack and Scott Douglass, according to their fans.

"Ah Wilderness!" one of the works of the great American dramatist, Eugene O'Neill, will be presented in Studio One tonight (CBS, 9:30). Everett Sloane will play Nat Miller, the role portrayed on the stage by Will Rogers and George M. Cohan, and in the movie by Lionel Barrymore. Don Harron, brilliant 20-year-old Canadian actor, makes his American debut in radio as Nat's son Richard, a part he also played on the Canadian stage. * * * The seventh season of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be brought to radio listeners beginning tonight (ABC, 8:30). It's an all-Bach program, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony, and featuring both the C Minor and C Major concerti for two pianos and string orchestra. Should be impressive listening.

Hear YOUR TOWN CRIER weekdays at 12:45 over WMUR

GINAL
EIK
PPINGS
W YORK 11, N
8-8860
(Sat. 209,766)
ng From K, N. Y.
N
1947

NOTES of concerts—

Berkshire Festival
ass., will be in-sday. With Serge
ucting the Boston
ogram will consist phony for Strings,
Mer," and the
mphony. On Sat-
following works
Barber's "School
rture, Copland's
d Berlioz's "Har-
latter with Wil-iola soloist. Leon-conduct the Sun-
cert, which con-
rks—Schubert's C
(No. 7) and Stra-Printemps."
ning of Series A, cert will be preternoon and Tues-
r Koussevitzky's
on the program
in B flat, the flat, the Sym-(No. 26) and the y.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 16 1947

Ten Aural Treats, Starting with Mozart

Tanglewood Menu

With the major Berkshire Festival opening Thursday night, 10 musical events will be held at Tanglewood next week, beginning with an all-Mozart program Sunday afternoon, to be repeated Tuesday evening.

For the Mozart concert, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Serenade for Winds", Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"), Symphony in E flat major and Divertimento for Strings and Horns. All seats are taken for Sunday, but those who wish may buy tickets to listen from the lawn. For the Tuesday program, seats remain.

* * *

THE FIRST CONCERT by students of the Berkshire Music Center, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 by the orchestra of department 5, under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master of he Boston Orchestra. It will be followed on Thursday afternon by a choral concert by members of the same department and Friday evening by a symphony concert in the Festival shed by Department 2 orchestra, at which Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

Wednesday evening at 8:15 the Juilliard String Quartet of New York will play a program of American music including William Schuman's String Quartet No. 3, Aaron Copland's Two Pieces for String Quartet, a String Quartet by Wallingford Riegger and the first performance of a Quartet by Harold Shapero.

SERIES A OF THE Festival start on Thursday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Henegger, who flew from Paris last week to teach composition at the school. It will include "The Sea", Three Orchestral Sketches by Debussy and Brahm's 2nd Symphony. The Saturday evening program will consist of Barber's Overture, "School for Scandal," Copland's Symphony No. 3, and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, with a viola solo by William Primrose, acting head of the chamber music department at Tanglewood.

The series will conclude with a concert on Sunday afternoon, July 27, at 3:30, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program: Mozart's "Overture, 'The Magic Flute'"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Schubert's Symphony in C major.

A rehearsal of the Festival orchestra Saturday morning at 10 will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund. Tickets for Festival concerts may be obtained at Tanglewood. Admission to the grounds for those who wish to listen from the lawn will be sold at the box office three hours before each concert.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 97,626) (S 93,402)

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 20 1947

Mozart Opera At Tanglewood

"Idomeneo," Mozart opera previously unheard in this country, will be produced at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, it was announced yesterday by the Berkshire Music Center, school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The opera will be performed twice in the theater-concert hall on August 4 and 6. Admission will be by invitation on the part of the friends of the center. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the center, will conduct.

Mozart wrote the opera for the court opera in Munich in 1700, when he was 24.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 266,701)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 19 1947

DISC DATA

NEVER were truer words spoken when the record makers offer "the music you want when you want it." The only limit is one's purse. Bach fans will go wild over Victor's album by the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting, playing Suites 2 and 3 by the Papa Johann. It's superbly done. So, too, is the colossal album by Columbia (50 sides in three volumes) of Handel's "12 Concerti Grossi," beautifully recorded by Adolph Busch's Chamber Players. Real stuff!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 65,966) (S 86,786)

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUL 20 1947

Koussevitzky Plans Musical Field Day

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Serge Koussevitzky, announce a "Music for All" field day at Tanglewood July 29, showing the latest advances in all forms of musical reproduction.

The story will cover recording, radio, television and motion pictures and will conclude with a special concert by the orchestra in addition to those already announced for the 1947 Berkshire Festival.

For the first time, the public will be invited to compare symphonic recording side by side with the modern orchestra itself when RCA Victor introduces its first custom-made radio-phonograph. The new instrument has been named "The Berkshire" in honor of the Tanglewood festivals and the first two hundred sets have been earmarked for sale on an exclusively subscription basis to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (33,169)

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 19 1947

Advice for Bigotees

Dear Sirs: Those who plan to attend the Berkshire Music Festival may be interested to know that a Massachusetts statute makes it unlawful to discriminate against anyone on account of race or color, and in addition to imposing a stiff criminal penalty grants to the aggrieved person a right to collect civil damages (Gen. Laws, Chap. 272, Sec. 98).

EDWARD SPIEGEL

Boston July 1

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 193,539)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 20 1947

Boston Symphony in Demonstration Of Music as Movie Background

By MARJORIE TURNER

IN CASE ANYONE should think that motion pictures have not advanced in the artistic social scale, we were very interested to receive a dispatch from the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerning the "Music for All" field day at the Berkshire Music Festival July 29.

THE "MUSIC FOR ALL" field day is the Boston Symphony's contribution to the Tanglewood festival, and on that day they plan to present the most comprehensive program of motion pictures ever assembled to illustrate the use of original music scores.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (450,259)

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK

JUL 21 1947

MUSIC

Tanglewood Teacher

For the second time in his 55 years, Arthur Honegger was on United States soil. Until next December, the noted Swiss-French composer is leaving behind him his beloved Paris—the dome of the Sacré-Coeur he can see from his apartment window, the Moulin-Rouge just across the street. Starting last week, Honegger until Aug. 10 will teach a selected class in composition at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer music school in Massachusetts which is Serge Koussevitzky's answer to any American ~~who feels~~ he must go to Europe for proper "finishing."

Honegger first came to the United States in 1929 as a guest conductor for the Boston Symphony. Like the current visit, that, too, was arranged by Koussevitzky. Their association is a long one, dating back to the early '20s in Paris when Honegger, as a member of "Les Six," was known as one of music's young revolutionaries. Koussevitzky, then in Paris with his own orchestra, premièred in 1924 Honegger's now-famous "Pacific 231," an evocation of the locomotive in modern musical terms. During the Berkshire Festival this summer, Koussevitzky will conduct Honegger's second symphony, the "Symphony for Strings," and on July 29 excerpts from his film music for "Pygmalion" and "Mayerling" will be played.

Under the Elms: Honegger's surroundings at the Berkshire Music Center could hardly be more unlike the rooftops and chimneys of his Montmartre in Paris. Lenox, Mass., where he is living, is about a mile and a half from Tanglewood, the Center's home grounds. Downs Cottage, where he has a room, is shaded by 200-year-old elms. Colonial New England, grown luxuriant and manicured with the years, is the atmosphere. Honegger's classes are held in the Lenox library building, once the county courthouse. Here Honegger meets nine students who come from such assorted spots as Houston, Tulsa, Detroit, and Colorado Springs. Class is held from 9 a.m. until 12:30 p.m., with afternoon sessions three times a week.

"I find it very fatigant," he said last week. "Three hours I must speak English. I must say precise things and I don't find the words." Although he is apt to use "learn" for "teach," his English is actually very good. "We cannot learn to compose to another person," he says, "because composition is such a personal thing. I only give my advice because I am an older person. I try to liberate them from the old-fashioned forms. What is terrible about music is that people teach only with old music. It is just as if you teach language with archaic forms. In Paris you hear only Beethoven symphonies. When a pianist comes, he plays Chopin and Liszt. It is like a car going downhill without gas."

Right now, Honegger is also working on a new composition of his own—a score for the Sophocles "Oedipus" which Pierre Blanchard will present next season in Paris. The translation will be by André Obey, and the décor will be Pablo Picasso's. Now that he has written four symphonies, Honegger says he is through with that form. "Today a composer cannot write so many symphonies," he philosophizes: "Haydn and Mozart lived in a time when the public wanted new music."

Ruth Orkin

Honegger in Lenox, Mass.

After the Music Center closes, Honegger is scheduled to go to Mexico City, where he will conduct the Orquesta Sinfónica on Aug. 15 and 17. From Mexico, he plans to tour South America, where he has concert dates in Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, and Peru. He will come back to the United States in December but, since he leaves immediately for France, he will miss the American première of his "Joan of Arc at the Stake," which the New York Philharmonic has scheduled for Charles Münch to conduct in January.

Although Honegger's parents were Swiss, he was born at Le Havre, and has spent most of his life in France. He is generally identified with the French modern school and says quite frankly that he could not imagine living anywhere but in Paris. His wife is a fine pianist and is now teaching at the Ecole Normale. But his 15-year-old daughter Pascale has no interest whatsoever in music as a career. "She likes cooking," Honegger says proudly. "All the time she studies cooking books. In our world today," he adds a trifle wistfully, "a good cook has a much better position than a composer."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,872) (S 80,138)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 1 - 1947

Tanglewood Concert Will Be Given Tonight

The Berkshire Music Center announces a student concert tonight at 8:15 at the festival shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The concert will be conducted by students by Serge Koussevitzky and Dr. Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky and dean of the music school.

The program includes: Overture to "Fidelio," Beethoven; serenade and music for 16 solo voices and Spirituals, Morton Gould; Second Piano Concerto, Rachmaninoff.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

Plays at Festival Tomorrow

Caught in an informal pose studying piano scores in front of the great shed at Tanglewood, Jacob Latiener, 18, pauses a moment in his preparations for appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival tomorrow ~~evening.~~ The young, Havana-born musician will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5, commonly called the "Emperor" Concerto. The orchestra will play Beethoven's 4th and 5th symphonies.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1

Berkshire Symphonic Cycle Opens at Berkshire Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in First Three Symphonies; Fourth and Fifth Tomorrow Evening

A week's devotion to Ludwig van Beethoven, in the master's symphonic form, opened in beauty last night at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the first three symphonies, climaxed by a superb reading of the third—the "Eroica."

The fourth and fifth will be heard tomorrow night; the fifth piano concerto completing the program. The fourth piano concerto will be added to the sixth and seventh symphonies Sunday afternoon, and the series will end Tuesday night with the last of Beethoven symphonies, the eighth and ninth.

Berkshire Festivalgoers are indebted to Dr. Koussevitzky for the opportunity to hear all the composer's symphonies, not to say greatest works, in a single series. The merits of such a venture are manifest. But it is worthy of passing mention that much too often we hear one or two and far too seldom, the others.

This is true particularly of the fourth, eighth and ninth, which are rarely heard beyond the confines of metropolitan music centers, and to a lesser extend the first and second. The fifth and seventh have become familiar to most of us beyond the line of musical intelligence and good health.

"I know what happened to Beethoven's fifth," quipped an early morning radio humorist recently, "it was stolen." For non-alcoholic readers, it must be explained: [illegible] other evils, [illegible] and as such is a [illegible] more costly liquids.

If the symphony [illegible] at least for a year [illegible] do us all great good.

Those of us who [illegible] ven quartets, played [illegible] group at Smith [illegible] war, remember that [illegible] the finest experiences [illegible] lives. We came to know [illegible] as we had not known, [illegible] We watched his [illegible] 18th century simplicity and [illegible] ment in the Haydn-Mozart [illegible] rebellious maturity and [illegible] emotional restraint. We [illegible] we were shaken with [illegible] from acceptance of all [illegible] before.

For the student, the [illegible] way to the composer's [illegible] chestral diversions found [illegible] phony are disturbing [illegible] and confuse.

The average [illegible] difficulties in his [illegible] ven this week. [illegible] crease as the series [illegible] we refuse to quibble, [illegible] and we rejoice in [illegible] pleasure—unbroken by [illegible] to lesser authors.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the [illegible] were prepared to make the [illegible] last night's opening. They [illegible] roundly and well.

D. H. W.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (450,259)

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK

JUL 21 1947

MUSIC

Tanglewood Teacher

For the second time in his 55 years, Arthur Honegger was on United States soil. Until next December, the noted Swiss-French composer is leaving behind him his beloved Paris—the dome of the Sacré-Coeur he can see from his apartment window, the Moulin-Rouge just across the street. Starting last week, Honegger until Aug. 10 will teach a selected class in composition at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer music school in Massachusetts which is Serge Koussevitzky's answer to any American ~~who feels~~ he must go to Europe for proper "finishing."

Honegger first came to the United States in 1929 as a guest conductor for the Boston Symphony. Like the current visit, that, too, was arranged by Koussevitzky. Their association is a long one, dating back to the early '20s in Paris when Honegger, as a member of "Les Six," was known as one of music's young revolutionaries. Koussevitzky, then in Paris with his own orchestra, premièred in 1924 Honegger's now-famous "Pacific 231," an evocation of the locomotive in modern musical terms. During the Berkshire Festival this summer, Koussevitzky will conduct Honegger's second symphony, the "Symphony for Strings," and on July 29 excerpts from his film music for "Pygmalion" and "Mayerling" will be played.

Under the Elms: Honegger's surroundings at the Berkshire Music Center could hardly be more unlike the rooftops and chimneys of his Montmartre in Paris. Lenox, Mass., where he is living, is about a mile and a half from Tanglewood, the Center's home grounds. Downs Cottage, where he has a room, is shaded by 200-year-old elms. Colonial New England, grown luxuriant and manicured with the years, is the atmosphere. Honegger's classes are held in the Lenox library building, once the county courthouse. Here Honegger meets nine students who come from such assorted spots as Houston, Tulsa, Detroit, and Colorado Springs. Class is held from 9 a.m. until 12:30 p.m., with afternoon sessions three times a week.

"I find it very fatigant," he said last week. "Three hours I must speak English. I must say precise things and I don't find the words." Although he is apt to use "learn" for "teach," his English is actually very good. "We cannot learn to compose to another person," he says, "because composition is such a personal thing. I only give my advice because I am an older person. I try to liberate them from the old-fashioned forms. What is terrible about music is that people teach only with old music. It is just as if you teach language with archaic forms. In Paris you hear only Beethoven symphonies. When a pianist comes, he plays Chopin and Liszt. It is like a car going downhill without gas."

Right now, Honegger is also working on a new composition of his own—a score for the Sophocles "Oedipus" which Pierre Blanchard will present next season in Paris. The translation will be by André Obey, and the décor will be Pablo Picasso's. Now that he has written four symphonies, Honegger says he is through with that form. "Today a composer cannot write so many symphonies," he philosophizes: "Haydn and Mozart lived in a time when the public wanted new music."

Ruth Orkin

Honegger in Lenox, Mass.

After the Music Center closes, Honegger is scheduled to go to Mexico City, where he will conduct the Orquesta Sinfónica on Aug. 15 and 17. From Mexico, he plans to tour South America, where he has concert dates in Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, and Peru. He will come back to the United States in December but, since he leaves immediately for France, he will miss the American première of his "Joan of Arc at the Stake," which the New York Philharmonic has scheduled for Charles Münch to conduct in January.

Although Honegger's parents were Swiss, he was born at Le Havre, and has spent most of his life in France. He is generally identified with the French modern school and says quite frankly that he could not imagine living anywhere but in Paris. His wife is a fine pianist and is now teaching at the Ecole Normale. But his 15-year-old daughter Pascale has no interest whatsoever in music as a career. "She likes cooking," Honegger says proudly. "All the time she studies cooking books. In our world today," he adds a trifle wistfully, "a good cook has a much better position than a composer."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

Plays at Festival Tomorrow

Caught in an informal pose studying piano scores in front of the great shed at Tanglewood, Jacob Latiener, 18, pauses a moment in his preparations for appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival ~~tomorrow evening~~. The young, Havana-born musician will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5, commonly called the "Emperor" Concerto. The orchestra will play Beethoven's 4th and 5th symphonies.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1,

Berkshire Symphonic Cycle Opens at Berkshire Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in First Three Symphonies; Fourth and Fifth Tomorrow Evening

A week's devotion to Ludwig van Beethoven, in the master's symphonic form, opened in beauty last night at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the first three symphonies, climaxed by a superb reading of the third—the "Eroica."

The fourth and fifth will be heard tomorrow night; the fifth piano concerto completing the program. The fourth piano concerto will be added to the sixth and seventh symphonies Sunday afternoon, and the series will end Tuesday night with the last of Beethoven symphonies, the eighth and ninth.

Berkshire Festivalgoers are indebted to Dr. Koussevitzky for the opportunity to hear all the composer's symphonies, not to say greatest works, in a single series. The merits of such a venture are manifest. But it is worthy of passing mention that much too often we hear one or two and far too seldom, the others.

This is true particularly of the fourth, eighth and ninth, which are rarely heard beyond the confines of metropolitan music centers, and to a lesser extend the first and second. The fifth and seventh have become familiar to most of us beyond the line of musical intelligence and good health.

"I know what happened to Beethoven's fifth," quipped an early morning radio humorist recently. "It was stolen." For non-alcoholic readers, it must be explained: A "fifth," among other evils, is a fifth of a gallon and as such is a container of the more costly liquids.

If the symphony were stolen, too—at least for a year or two—it would do us all great good.

Those of us who heard the Beethoven quartets, played by the Pro Arte group at Smith College before the war, remember that series as one of the finest experiences in our listening lives. We came to know the master as we had not known him before. We watched his development from 18th century simplicity and contentment in the Haydn-Mozart idiom to rebellious maturity and freedom from emotional restraint. We [illegible] we were shaken with the [illegible] from acceptance of all that had [illegible] before.

For the student, the [illegible] way to the composer's [illegible] Orchestral diversions found in the symphony are disturbing; they bewilder and confuse.

The average listener may find like difficulties in his approach to Beethoven this week. Obstacles will increase as the series progresses. But we refuse to quibble, academically, and we rejoice in evenings of solid pleasure—unbroken by introductions to lesser authors.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were prepared to make the most of last night's opening. They did it roundly and well.

D. H. W.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,872) (S 80,138)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 1 - 1947

Tanglewood Concert Will Be Given Tonight

The Berkshire Music Center announces a student concert tonight at 8:15 at the festival shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The concert will be conducted by students by Serge Koussevitzky and Dr. Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky and dean of the music school.

The program includes: Overture to "Fidelio," Beethoven; serenade and music for 16 solo voices and Spirituals, Morton Gould; Second Piano Concerto, Rachmaninoff.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,580) (S 25,711)

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1947

INSIDE RADIO

by PAUL LUTHER

Mel Blanc and Cliff Arquette, both of whom received the bad news from their respective sponsors during the past few months, are set to return to the air lanes sometime during October. They will co-star in a feature titled Point Sublime. A top rated program on the west coast for several years, Point Sublime was shelved recently at the request of Blanc and Arquette because of the limited coverage. But now it's for a coast-to-coast hookup to be sponsored by the insurance company which last year backed the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Time and network are yet to be selected with ABC most likely to get the nod.

This is really going back but I wonder how many of you remember the crystal days of 1924 and Jerry Sullivan who became famous for his "WQJ the Calumet Baking Powder, Rainbow Garden Station, Chi-cago?" Remember? Anyway, Jerry and the wife dropped in to see us the other evening on their first visit to the east. He tells me that while he's long since retired from the mike, he still misses it and keeps in touch with a number of the old timers who were the real pioneers of broadcasting. His unusual station identification was partly responsible for making him one of the best known announcers of the mid 20's and he got his job when the station owner fired the regular announcer because he talked too much. Sometimes I think we could use more managers with ideas along those lines today.

— o —

This will probably be denied, but I hear that the sponsors are far from happy with the new ABC morning feature Welcome Traveller. A replacement is being sought to take over at an early date. Same bankroller is committed to another thirteen-week cycle of Mystery of The Week and will also part company with this one about Jan. 1st.

Interesting note on "who dunits" is this. While they are considered one of the best commercial features, 30 minutes once a week, they have so far failed to pay off on a five-a-week basis. Proving that while fans enjoy their murders and chills, they prefer to have them dished up at one and the same sitting. Leave us not let death linger.

Every season brings a new crop of show ideas and this year is no exception. Two of the better ones now making the agency rounds are H. T. Webster's The Timed Soul and Jimmy Hatlo's They'll Do It Everytime. You should be hearing if a couple of smart sponsors can be weaned away from present program patterns.

— o —

"Is Bret Morrison singing on the air now? If so, what time and station?" asks Mrs. C. L. Duprey.

Not at present. He has, however, been signed for a five-minute series to begin sometime next month over the Mutual network at 3:30 p. m. Monday through Friday. I understand, too, that following the success of his two previous appearances on the CBS Aunt Jenny strip, for which he wrote the script, played the lead and also sang, he has been scheduled for a return visit at a time still to be selected.

— o —

H. M. Maxon writes: "I haven't heard Pat Barnes on the air for a good number of years and I just wondered if he's still broadcasting and if so what program is he on?"

Pat is still very much on the air but I don't believe he has a network show right now. He's been associated with the New York outlet of ABC for several years, doing an early morning disc jockey show. He is very hale and hearty even though he can boast of one of the longest careers in wireless.

— o —

"Would you please tell me who plays the part of 'Agatha' on The Romance of Helen Trent, also something about her?" asks Mrs. J. F. L., Cumberland.

Originally the part was portrayed by a Chicago actress, Marie Nelson, but following her death, three years ago, Bess McCammon took over and has played it ever since. Bess is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, where she first entered radio in 1934. After seven years in the Ohio city, she moved to Chicago and played feature roles on such well-known strips as Women In White, Stepmother, Today's Children and many others. A resident of New York now for nearly two years, she may be heard as "Mrs. Evans" on Road of Life and "Mrs. King" on Lone Journey. A widow, Bess has sons for whom she finds time to keep house in addition to maintaining a very active air schedule.

— o —

A Listener writes: "Is comedian George Jessel on the air. If so, what time and station?"

No, Mr. Jessel is off the air. He is now a motion picture producer in Hollywood.

— o —

If you have a question about radio or some network personality just address your card or letters to the Cumberland Times, Inside Radio, Larchmont, N. Y.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

Tape Recording of Tanglewood Activities Broadcast by WACE

Program Today, Lasting Hour and Half, Sets Precedent; Has Many Pleasing Features

Radio history in this area was made over WACE yesterday with a special hour and a half broadcast entitled "The Story of Tanglewood". By means of an on-the-spot tape recording, a general over-all picture of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra was brought to radio listeners. Interviews with noted musicians and students were heard, as were descriptions of the grounds. In the background could be heard the talk and laughter of musicians, music lovers and students as they milled about the huge Berkshire Music Center near Lenox. The tope recorder picked up the sound of a violinist practicing in the woods and the violinist was approached for an interview.

Kris Martin, "Concert Hour" commentator at WACE, spent all day Tuesday at Tanglewood with a tape recorder. He toured the grounds, with Ward Gaston, superintendent of the property, supplying interest-

On his walk around Tanglewood, formerly a huge private estate, Martin stopped the musicians and composers he met and held brief interviews. He encountered Ella Goldstein, youthful soloist in Tuesday night's performance of the Tschaikowsky Piano Concerto, broadcast over the ABC network. Also interviewed on the tape recorder are Aaron Copland, noted American composer; Hugh Ross, British choral director; George E. Judd, general manager of the Boston Stymphony Orchestra; Robert Shaw, conductor of the Collegiate Chorale, and others. March, whose most recent film is "The Best Years of Our Lives", was in the audience at Tuesday night's concert.

The voices of students attending the Berkshire Music Center from Canada, Holland, Sweden, Russia and South American countries are also down on the tape recorder. Their comments on Tanglewood, the United States and American music are of unusual interest.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1947

Continued on Page 22

ALL-BEETHOVEN SERIES IS BEGUN AT TANGLEWOOD

7500 Hear First, Second and Third Symphonies Superbly Played

By Willard M. Clark

The first concert of the second series of Tanglewood concerts, all of which will be devoted to the symphonies and concertos of Beethoven, drew an audience of 7500 people to the grounds tonight. All were well repaid for Dr. Koussevitzky and his men performed the first, second and third symphonies in superb fashion. Never have we heard so fine a performance of the first symphony, a more sensitive unfolding of the second, or more monumental performance of the third.

Reduced Orchestra

It was pleasant to sit back and listen to Beethoven to know what was coming next and not have the ear aggravated by the dissonances and eratic rhythms of some of the moderns. Dr. Koussevitzy used a slightly reduced orchestra for the first symphony. This was what should be. Its inherent grace, so close to that of Haydn, its simple melodies need no great orchestra to enhance their beauties. It was interesting to watch the growth of the composer in the second symphony. The orchestral colors are more delicately varied, making the music clear and luminous from beginning to end, giving to each movement its individual character conceived in smoothly

ed in transpar-

hty third symthat conductor heights. Here
ated force, wide motional rage.
contrasts when ly in confidant

one who mar-ces to proclaim
r and rebellion,
was a memor-
highlight of the

in the series ay night when symphonies will no concerto in
This will be iner.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1947

THESE DAYS

By George E. Sokolsky

Music in the Hills

I am not a musician nor even a music critic. But I like to go to concerts. Every other Sunday during the winter when I am in New York I go to Carnegie Hall to listen to the Philharmonic. During the summer when I am up in the Berkshires in Massachusetts I go to Tanglewood three times each week to listen to the Boston Symphony during the festival.

I do not try to understand music as I do a table of statistics or the politics of Henry Wallace. There are scientists called musicologists who devote themselves to understanding music. With them it is like mathematics; something with formulae.

I just go to listen. I like Tanglewood most of all because I can see the pine-covered hills and the sky while I listen. I even like it when it rains. Sometimes it is good to listen to music and rain. It is soothing.

This year I shall hear all nine of Beethoven's symphonies, one right after the other in order. That will be a new experience for me, although I have tried it with records. Still, records are not the same as sitting in the big shed in Tanglewood up in the green Berkshires. No records can be like that.

I know that I shall stretch my legs, relax, maybe chew a cigar and listen. Do I know why Beethoven wrote No. 1 or No. 5 or No. 9? No! And I don't care. It would be the same to me if his name were Smith or Jones. All I want to do is to listen and to be transported to the infinite.

So the musicians spoil it all for me. They play something by Aaron Copland that hits me over the head. To me it is no longer music because I cannot listen. I am pushed. I am kicked around. It has something to do with the Century of the Coming Man or the Nazi or communists or other busybodies. It is a factory, a mill, a mine. It is terrific—that is, the noise is terrific.

Then I come the next day and they give me a dose of Stravinsky, which sounds in places like a million G. I.s rubbing dungarees on tin washboards. The rubbing is fearsome. I am told that it all has to do with some kind of ancient Russian springtime ritualistic dance. If that is a Russian springtime, then those people have never walked down a lane with a pretty girl in the newness of the year. If that is the music they used to dance to, it must have been done with caterpillar tractors.

The critics say this is absolute music, but I am a simple fellow who likes Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert and even Jerome Kern and Gershwin. But do I have to like noise, too? Do I have to go to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony produce the sounds of a newspaper pressroom? Maybe the critics like the arithmetic of music; as for me, give me beauty of melody, rapture of expression, intensity of feeling. I leave the physics of the celestial orbs to the atomic scientists. Their music is, boom! That's really what Copland and Stravinsky sound like to me—just a lot of boom.

Maybe I ought not to step into the domain of the music critics. They apparently know what it is all about and like it. Or maybe, up at Tanglewood, they ought to have special sessions for critics and musicologists and such experts who can do their calculus while they watch Maestro Koussevitzky or his protege, Leonard Bernstein, belabor their minions through the cacophony called modern music. But for simple folks who just want to listen to beauty this fare is too heady like vodka spiked with anisette.

And the question arises: Why must everything modern be so exhibitionistic, so bombastic, so tough on the ear and the soul? Why must it all sound like a lie—like a small boy's lie? Why must even music be so unmannerly, so gross, so grotesque? Youth tells me it is the spirit of the age—two wars with a depression in between. What a spiritless age!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,580) (S 25,711)

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES

INSIDE RADIO

by PAUL LUTHER

M[illegible] B[illegible] the Cat[illegible] [illegible] received [illegible] positive sponsors [illegible] few months are set [illegible] air lanes [illegible]. They will [illegible] titled Point Sublime [illegible] program on the west [illegible] several years, Point Sublime [illegible] recently [illegible] Blanc and Arquette [illegible] because of [illegible] coverage. But now it [illegible] coast-to-coast hook-up to be [illegible] company which [illegible] backed the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Time and network are yet to be selected [illegible] ABC most likely to get the n[illegible]

This [illegible] going back but I wonder how many of you remember the crystal [illegible] 1924 and Jerry Sullivan [illegible] famous for his "WQJ the Calumet Baking Powder, Rainbo Garden Station, Chi-cago?" Remember? Anyway, Jerry and the wife dropped in to see us the other evening on their first visit to the [illegible] He tells me that while he [illegible] retired from the mike, [illegible] it and keeps in [illegible] a number of the old timers who were the real pioneers of broadcasting. His unusual station identification was partly responsible for making him one of the best known announcers of the mid 20's and he got his job when the station owner fired the regular announcer because he talked too much. Sometimes I think we could use more [illegible] with ideas along those lines [illegible].

This will probably be denied but I hear that the sponsors are far from happy with the new ABC morning feature Welcome Traveller. A replacement is being sought to take over at an early date. Same bankroller is committed to another thirteen-week [illegible] of Mystery of The Week and will also part company with this [illegible] Jan. 1st.

Interesting [illegible] is this. While [illegible] considered one of the best [illegible] features, 30 minutes [illegible] a week, they have so far failed to pay off on a five-a-week basis. Proving that while fans enjoy [illegible] murders and chills, they prefer to have them dished up at [illegible] the same sitting. Leave [illegible] let death linger.

Every season brings a new crop of show ideas and this year is no exception. Two of the better ones now making the agency rounds are H. T. Webster's The Timed Soul and Jimmy Ha[illegible] They'll Do It Everytime. You [illegible] be hearing if a couple of [illegible] sponsors can be weaned away from present program patterns.

— o —

"Is Bret Morrison singing on the air now? If so, what time and station?" asks Mrs. C. L. Duprey.

Not at present. [illegible] been signed for [illegible] ies to begin so[illegible] over the Mutual [illegible] p. m. Monday through Friday. I understand, too, that following the success of his two previous appearances on the CBS Aunt Jenny strip for which he wrote [illegible] the lead and also [illegible] scheduled for a [illegible] time still to be selected [illegible] as a [illegible]

— o —

H. M. Maxon writes: "I haven't heard Pat Barnes on the air for a [illegible] number of years and I [illegible] wondered if he's still broadcasting and if so what program is he on?"

Pat is still ver[illegible] but I don't belie[illegible] work show right [illegible] associated with t[illegible] let of ABC for s[illegible] an early morning [illegible] He is very hale [illegible] though he can boa[illegible] longest careers in [illegible]

— o —

"Would you please tell me who plays the part of Agatha on The Romance of Helen Trent, also something about her?" asks Mrs. [illegible] Cumberland.

Originally the part was portrayed by a Chicago actress, Marie Nelson, but following her death three years ago, Bess McCammon took over and has played it ever since. Bess is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio where she first entered radio in 1934. After seven years in the Ohio city, she moved to Chicago and played feature roles on such well-known strips as Women In White, Stepmother, Today's Children and many others. A resident of New York now for nearly two years, she may be heard as "Mrs. Evans" on Road of Life and "Mrs. King" on Lone Journey. A widow, Bess has sons for whom she finds time to keep house in addition to maintaining a very active air schedule.

— o —

A Listener writes: "Is comedian George Jessel on the air. If so, what time and station?"

No, Mr. Jessel is off the air. He is now a motion picture producer in Hollywood.

— o —

If you have a question about radio or some network personality just address your card or letters to the Cumberland Times, Inside Radio, Larchmont, N. Y.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

Tape Recording of Tanglewood Activities Broadcast by WACE

Program Today, Lasting Hour and Half, Sets Precedent; Has Many Pleasing Features

Radio history in this area was made over WACE yesterday with a special hour and a half broadcast entitled "The Story of Tanglewood". By means of an on-the-spot tape recording, a general over-all picture of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra was brought to radio listeners. Interviews with noted musicians and students were heard, as were descriptions of the grounds. In the background could be heard the talk and laughter of musicians, music lovers and students as they milled about the huge Berkshire Music Center near Lenox. The tape recorder picked up the sound of a violinist practicing in the woods and the violinist was approached for an interview.

Kris Martin, "Concert Hour" commentator at WACE, spent all day Tuesday at Tanglewood with a tape recorder. He toured the grounds, with Ward Gaston, superintendent of the property, supplying interesting

On his walk around Tanglewood, formerly a huge private estate, Martin stopped the musicians and composers he met and held brief interviews. He encountered Ella Goldstein, youthful soloist in Tuesday evening's performance of the Tschaikowsky Piano Concerto, broadcast over the ABC network. Also interviewed on the tape recorder are Aaron Copland, noted American composer; Hugh Ross, British choral director; George E. Judd, general manager of the Boston Stymphony Orchestra; Robert Shaw, conductor of the Collegiate Chorale, and others. March, whose most recent film is "The Best Years of Our Lives", was in the audience at Tuesday night's concert.

The voices of students attending the Berkshire Music Center from Canada, Holland, Sweden, Russia and South American countries are also down on the tape recorder. Their comments on Tanglewood, the United States and American music are of unusual interest.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1947

THESE DAYS

By George E. Sokolsky

Music in the Hills.

I am not a musician nor even a music critic. But I like to go to concerts. Every other Sunday during the winter when I am in New York I go to Carnegie Hall to listen to the Philharmonic. During the summer when I am up in the Berkshires in Massachusetts I go to Tanglewood three times each week to listen to the Boston Symphony during the festival.

I do not try to understand music as I do a table of statistics or the politics of Henry Wallace. There are scientists called musicologists who devote themselves to understanding music. With them it is like mathematics; something with formulae.

I just go to listen. I like Tanglewood most of all because I can see the pine-covered hills and the sky while I listen. I even like it when it rains. Sometimes it is good to listen to music and rain. It is soothing.

This year I shall hear all nine of Beethoven's symphonies, one right after the other in order. That will be a new experience for me, although I have tried it with records. Still, records are not the same as sitting in the big shed in Tanglewood up in the green Berkshires. No records can be like that.

I know that I shall stretch my legs, relax, maybe chew a cigar and listen. Do I know why Beethoven wrote No. 1 or No. 5 or No. 9? No! And I don't care. It would be the same to me if his name were Smith or Jones. All I want to do is to listen and to be transported to the infinite.

So the musicians spoil it all for me. They play something by Aaron Copland that hits me over the head. To me it is no longer music because I cannot listen. I am pushed. I am kicked around. It has something to do with the Century of the Coming Man or the Nazi or communists or other busybodies. It is a factory, a mill, a mine. It is terrific—that is, the noise is terrific.

Then I come the next day and they give me a dose of Stravinsky, which sounds in places like a million G. I.s rubbing dungarees on tin washboards. The rubbing is fearsome. I am told that it all has to do with some kind of ancient Russian springtime ritualistic dance. If that is a Russian springtime, then those people have never walked down a lane with a pretty girl in the newness of the year. If that is the music they used to dance to, it must have been done with caterpillar tractors.

The critics say this is absolute music, but I am a simple fellow who likes Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert and even Jerome Kern and Gershwin. But do I have to like noise, too? Do I have to go to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony produce the sounds of a newspaper pressroom? Maybe the critics like the arithmetic of music; as for me, give me beauty of melody, rapture of expression, intensity of feeling. I leave the physics of the celestial orbs to the atomic scientists. Their music is, boom! That's really what Copland and Stravinsky sound like to me—just a lot of boom.

Maybe I ought not to step into the domain of the music critics. They apparently know what it is all about and like it. Or maybe, up at Tanglewood, they ought to have special sessions for critics and musicologists and such experts who can do their calculus while they watch Maestro Koussevitzky or his protege, Leonard Bernstein, belabor their minions through the cacaphony called modern music. But for simple folks who just want to listen to beauty this fare is too heady like vodka spiked with anisette.

And the question arises: Why must everything modern be so exhibitionistic, so bombastic, so tough on the ear and the soul? Why must it all sound like a lie—like a small boy's lie? Why must even music be so unmannerly, so gross, so grotesque? Youth tells me it is the spirit of the age—two wars with a depression in between. What a spiritless age!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1947

Continued on Page 22

ALL-BEETHOVEN SERIES IS BEGUN AT TANGLEWOOD

7500 Hear First, Second and Third Symphonies Superbly Played

By Willard M. Clark

The first concert of the second series of Tanglewood concerts, all of which will be devoted to the symphonies and concertos of Beethoven, drew an audience of 7500 people to the grounds tonight. All were well repaid for [illegible] and his men [illegible] the first, second and third symphonies in superb fashion. Never have we heard so fine a performance of the first symphony, a more sensitive unfolding of the second, or more monumental performance of the third.

Reduced Orchestra

It was pleasant to sit back and listen to Beethoven to know what was coming next and not have the ear aggravated by the dissonances and erratic rhythms of some of the moderns. Dr. Koussevitzy used a slightly reduced orchestra for the first symphony. This was what should be. Its inherent grace, so close to that of Haydn, its simple melodies need no great orchestra to enhance their beauties. It was interesting to watch the growth of the composer in the second symphony. The orchestral colors are more delicately varied, making the music clear and luminous from beginning to end, giving to each movement its individual character conceived in smoothly

ed in transpar-

thty third symthat conductor heights. Here
ated force, wide emotional rage, contrasts when
ly in confidant

one who mar-
ces to proclaim
r and rebellion.
was a memor-
highlight of the t in the series

ay night when symphonies will no concerto in
This will be iner.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,580) (S 25,711)

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
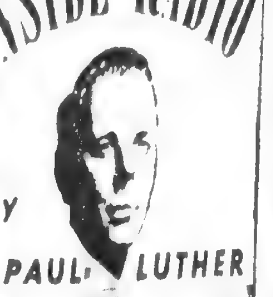
TIMES

INSIDE RADIO



by PAUL LUTHER

Mel Blanc and Cliff Arquette, both of whom received the bad news from their respective sponsors during the past few months, are set to return to the air lanes sometime during October. They will co-star in a feature titled Point Sublime. A top rated program on the west coast for several years, Point Sublime was shelved recently at the request of Blanc and Arquette because of the limited coverage. But now it's to be a coast-to-coast hook-up to be sponsored by the insurance company which last year backed the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Time and network are yet to be selected with ABC most likely to get the nod.

This is really going back but I wonder how many of you remember the crystal days of 1924 and Jerry Sullivan who became famous for his "WQJ the Calumet Baking Powder, Rainbo Garden Station, Chi-cago?" Remember? Anyway, Jerry and the missus dropped in to see us the other evening on their first visit to the east. He tells me that while he's long since retired from the mike, he still misses it and keeps in touch with a number of the old timers who were the real pioneers of broadcasting. His unusual station identification was partly responsible for making him one of the best known announcers of the mid 20's and he got his job when the station owner fired the regular announcer because he talked too much. Sometimes I think we could use more managers with ideas along those lines today.

This will probably be denied, but I hear that the sponsors are far from happy with the new ABC morning feature Welcome Traveler. A replacement is being sought to take over at an early date. Same bankroller is committed to another thirteen-week cycle of Mystery of The Week and will also part company with this one about Jan 1st.

Interesting note on "who dunits" is this. While they are considered one of the best commercial features, 30 minutes once a week, they have so far failed to pay off on a five-a-week basis. Proving that while fans enjoy their murders and chills, they prefer to have them dished up at one and the same sitting. Leave us not let death linger.

Every season [illegible] a new crop of show ideas and this year is no exception. Two of the better ones now making the agency rounds are H. T. Webster's The Timid Soul and Jimmy Hatlo's They'll Do It Everytime. You should be hearing if a couple of smart sponsors can be weaned away from present program patterns.

"Is Bret Morrison singing on the air now? If so, what time and station?" asks Mrs. C. L. Duprey.

Not at presen [illegible] been signed for [illegible] ies to begin so [illegible] over the Mutua [illegible] p. m. Monday [illegible] Friday. I understand, too [illegible] success of his tv [illegible] appearances on the CB [illegible] Aunt Jenny stri [illegible] for which he wro [illegible] the lead and al [illegible] scheduled for a [illegible] time still to be se [illegible]

H. M. Maxon writes: "I haven't heard Pat Barnes on the air for a good number of years and I just wondered if he's still broadcasting and if so what program is he on?"

Pat is still ve [illegible] but I don't beli [illegible] work show righ [illegible] associated with t [illegible] let of ABC for s [illegible] an early morning [illegible] He is very hale [illegible] hough he can b [illegible] ongest careers ir [illegible]

— o —

"Would you please tell me who plays the part of 'Agatha' on The Romance of Helen Trent, also something about her?" asks Mrs. I. F. L., Cumberland.

Originally the pa [illegible] by a Chicago actre [illegible] originated but following her dea [illegible] years ago, Bess McCammon took over and has played it ever since. Bess is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio where she first entered radio in 1934. After seven years in the Ohio city, she moved to Chicago and played feature roles on such well-known strips as Women In White, Stepmother, Today's Children and many others. A resident of New York now for nearly two years, she may be heard as "Mrs. Evans" on Road of Life and "Mrs. King" on Lone Journey. A widow, Bess has sons for whom she finds time to keep house in addition to maintaining a very active air schedule.

— o —

A Listener writes: "Is comedian George Jessel on the air. If so, what time and station?"

No, Mr. Jessel is off the air. He is now a motion picture producer in Hollywood.

— o —

If you have a question about radio or some network personality just address your card or letters to the Cumberland Times, Inside Radio, Larchmont, N. Y.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1947

Tape Recording of Tanglewood Activities Broadcast by WACE

Program Today, Lasting Hour and Half, Sets Precedent; Has Many Pleasing Features

Radio history in this area was made over WACE yesterday with a special hour and a half broadcast entitled "The Story of Tanglewood". By means of an on-the-spot tape recording, a general over-all picture of the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra was brought to radio listeners. Interviews with noted musicians and students were heard, as were descriptions of the grounds. In the background could be heard the talk and laughter of musicians, music lovers and students as they milled about the huge Berkshire Music Center near Lenox. The tape recorder picked up the sound of a violinist practicing in the woods and the violinist was approached for an interview.

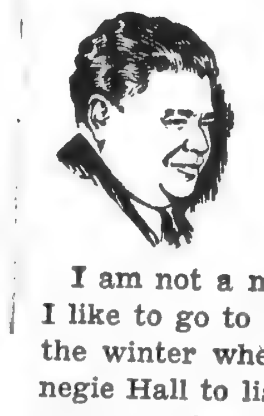
Kris Martin, "Concert Hour" commentator at WACE, spent all day Tuesday at Tanglewood with a tape recorder. He toured the grounds, with Ward Gaston, superintendent of the property, supplying interest-

On his walk around Tanglewood, formerly a huge private estate, Martin stopped the musicians and composers he met and held brief interviews. He encountered Ella Goldstein, youthful soloist in Tuesday evening's performance of the Tschaikowsky Piano Concerto, broadcast over the ABC network. Also interviewed on the tape recorder are Aaron Copland, noted American composer; Hugh Ross, British choral director; George E. Judd, general manager of the Boston Stymphony Orchestra; Robert Shaw, conductor of the Collegiate Chorale, and others. March, whose most recent film is "The Best Years of Our Lives", was in the audience at Tuesday night's concert.

The voices of students attending the Berkshire Music Center from Canada, Holland, Sweden, Russia and South American countries are also down on the tape recorder. Their comments on Tanglewood, the United States and American music are of unusual interest.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1947



THESE DAYS

Music in

I am not a musician nor even a music critic. But I like to go to concerts. Every other Sunday during the winter when I am in New York I go to Carnegie Hall to listen to the Philharmonic. During the summer when I am up in the Berkshires in Massachusetts I go to Tanglewood three times each week to listen to the Boston Symphony during the festival.

I do not try to understand music as I do a table of statistics or the politics of Henry Wallace. There are scientists called musicologists who devote themselves to understanding music. With them it is like mathematics; something with formulae.

I just go to listen. I like Tanglewood most of all because I can see the pine-covered hills and the sky while I listen. I even like it when it rains. Sometimes it is good to listen to music and rain. It is soothing.

This year I shall hear all nine of Beethoven's symphonies, one right after the other in order. That will be a new experience for me, although I have tried it with records. Still, records are not the same as sitting in the big shed in Tanglewood up in the green Berkshires. No records can be like that.

I know that I shall stretch my legs, relax, maybe chew a cigar and listen. Do I know why Beethoven wrote No. 1 or No. 5 or No. 9? No! And I don't care. It would be the same to me if his name were Smith or Jones. All I want to do is to listen and to be transported to the infinite.

So the musicians spoil it all for me. They play something by Aaron Copland that hits me over the head. To me it is no longer music because I cannot listen. I am pushed. I am kicked around. It has something to do with the Century of the Coming Man or the Nazi or communists or other busybodies. It is a factory, a mill, a mine. It is terrific—that is, the noise is terrific.

nding thing about base oom year, with the Yar draw, expecting their d a half million when ith the last third of the ing records as a win for man Red Embree, dup what the Tribe had done fore for their curly-haired

The trick will be to carr to six straight or better, seemed a matter largely Feller, the most costly
Veeck's baseball hope che

Win Game in Ninth

The Tribe tried hard ye twice coming from behin the Yankees and then over the deciding run in t on Catcher Jim Hegan's t
Joe Page, plus pinch swin
Bockman's long fly to cen

Even though his manag
Boudreau, who has been
Joe DiMaggio for the lea ting crown, had a fruit at the plate, owner Vee have been cheered by come, and Veeck is a can stand some good n cause he has been ba Cleveland hospital for operation on his war-right leg.

The leg had been a last November, and tryin an artificial limb too so the operation and thi dance to christen his began a new round of t Veeck, eventually lead second operation.

A strange seizure operative hiccups, a ne tion unexpected in his

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1947

Continued on Page 22

ALL-BEETHOVEN SERIES IS BEGUN AT TANGLEWOOD

7500 Hear First, Second and Third Symphonies Superbly Played

By Willard M. Clark

The first concert of the second series of Tanglewood concerts, all of which will be devoted to the symphonies and concertos of Beethoven, drew an audience of 7500 people to the grounds tonight. All were well repaid for [illegible] and his men played the first, second and third symphonies in superb fashion. Never have we heard so fine a performance of the first symphony, a more sensitive unfolding of the second, or more monumental performance of the third.

Reduced Orchestra

It was pleasant to sit back and listen to Beethoven to know what was coming next and not have the ear aggravated by the dissonances and eratic rhythms of some of the moderns. Dr. Koussevitzy used a slightly reduced orchestra for the first symphony. This was what should be. Its inherent grace, so close to that of Haydn, its simple melodies need no great orchestra to enhance their beauties. It was interesting to watch the growth of the composer in the second symphony. The orchestral colors are more delicately varied, making the music clear and luminous from beginning to end, giving to each movement its individual character, conceived in smoothly rounded forms clothed in transparent beauty of tone.

It was in the mighty third symphony, the "Eroica" that conductor and men reached the heights. Here is music of concentrated force, wide in dynamic and emotional range. There are swift contrasts when themes are sung softly in confidant reverie.

Here is music by one who marshalled all his resources to proclaim his message of dispair and rebellion, but never defeat. It was a memorable performance, a highlight of the season here.

The second concert in the series will be given Saturday night when the fourth and fifth symphonies will be heard and the piano concerto in E Flat major, No. 5. This will be played by Jacob Lateiner.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,073)

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1947

Boston Symphony Concerts Arranged

In the last week of the Tanglewood season which will close Aug. 10, the Boston Symphony orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music center, Lenox, Mass., will give seven performances. Beethoven's Fourth and Fifth symphonies will be heard in the program tomorrow night with Jacob Lateiner as soloist in the Beethoven Emperor concerto.

The Beethoven Symphonies No. 6 and No. 7 will be played in the concert at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and Joseph Battista will be soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 4 in G. Major. The Beethoven cycle will be concluded with a program Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock when the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 9 will be presented.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday night Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday night's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem", the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms".

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two Pianos; Revel's "Pavane" and "Bolero", and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events for this weekend include opera scenes this afternoon at 4:30, and symphony concert tonight by a student orchestra, conducted by students and Dr. Stanley Chapple; a chamber music concert Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock, an auditors' orchestral concert Monday at 1:30 o'clock, the first performance in America of Mozart's "Idomeneo", Monday night; a chamber music concert, Eleazar deCarvalho conducting, Wednesday at 4:30; a second performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday night; a symphony concert Thursday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday night; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2:30 and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

Rehearsals for Festival concerts will be open to the public each Saturday morning for the benefit of the pension fund.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1947

Beethoven Series Opens At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—The first of four Berkshire Festival concerts devoted to Beethoven's music was given Thursday in Tanglewood's Music Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Kou[illegible] before an audience of [illegible]. The works performed were [illegible] three symphonies.

[illegible] orchestra and conductor [illegible] a lucid exposition of this [illegible] transitory period in the composer's writings. The contrast between the lyric style of the first symphony and the stern dramaticism of the "Eroica" was vividly illustrated. The first symphony was imbued with a disarming freshness, and the performance of the finale was particularly outstanding in its enthusiasm and crystalline clarity of detail. The second symphony received an effectively intergrated reading, and the "Eroica" symphony gave an impression of unusual strength.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1947

Music

Beethoven Cycle Starts at Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR,

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—A Beethoven cycle opened the second week of the symphonic part of the Berkshire Festival last evening at Tanglewood. We are to hear Beethoven in three more programs, two of them this week and an extra concert Tuesday following. During the cycle all nine of the symphonies and the Fourth and Fifth Piano Concertos will have been presented before audiences which, from the looks of things, are Beethoven-starved.

Frankly, I don't know why they shouldn't be. Beethoven, for all the intellectualizing, seems to be the one composer who can be depended upon to put on the kind of show to suit almost everybody's musical needs. That is, if he isn't bastinadoed into saying and doing things he never intended.

It isn't likely that Beethoven will be given in any other way than expressively and with dignity here, if last night's results are any indication. Dr. Koussevitzky, offering the First, Second and Third Symphonies, gave us the true feel of Beethoven, his peasant strength and poetic imaginings. Witness, for instance, the combination of classic and muscular grief in the performance of the Funeral March from the "Eroica," or the pure and lofty song of the larghetto from the Second Symphony.

Idea of Completeness.

These were only moments in an evening of successful dealings with one of the most difficult of all composers to project. In each case there was continuity and the idea of completeness. A work began and lived its life in a natural manner, without the interfer-was connected with every-else. The plan was there s realization in every case.

nk it's about time to say he Boston Symphony was ously in tune. How much elates to a musical rendero one can calculate right to irreducible minimums.
rtainly none, save the tone-can be blithe about orchesatting or sharping.
hoven cycles, like the poor, ways with us. However, I'll them willingly wherever is promise of honesty and ted performance; especially,
, if such windfalls can be s now, in the Berkshires.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,638)

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 1 1947

Week End Listening For Music Lovers

For the Telephone Hour Monday at 8 p.m., over WFLA, Ezio Pinza, basso, will sing arias by Mozart and Lully. Donald Voorhees will direct the orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" waltzes, Cui's "Orientale," and Tucci's "La Bama de Vera Cruz."

In its final broadcast of the season and the last to come from the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this year, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be heard Tuesday over station WSUN and ABC in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The broadcast will be on extended time, starting at 8:30 and concluding at 9:45 p.m., so that the entire symphony may be heard.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 10,743)

This Clipping From
LONG BRANCH, N. J.
RECORD

AUG 2 - 1947

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

I am not a musician nor even a music critic. But I like to go to concerts. Every other Sunday, during the Winter, when I am in New York, I go to Carnegie Hall to listen to the Philharmonic. During the Summer, when I am up in the Berkshires in Massachusetts, I go to Tanglewood three times each week to listen to the Boston Symphony during the Festival.

I do not try to understand music as I do a table of statistics or the politics of Henry Wallace. There are scientists called musicologists who devote themselves to understanding music. With them, it is like mathematics; something with formulae.

I just go to listen. I like Tanglewood most of all because I can see the pine-covered hills and the sky while I listen. I even like it when it rains. Sometimes it is good to listen to music and rain. It is soothing.

This year I shall hear all nine of Beethoven's symphonies, one right after the other in order. That will be a new experience for me, although I have tried it with records. Still, records are not the same as sitting in the big shed in Tanglewood up in the green Berkshires. No records can be like that.

I know that I shall stretch my legs, relax, maybe chew a cigar, and listen. Do I know why Beethoven wrote No. 1 or No. 5 or No. 9? No! And I don't care. It would be the same to me if his name were Smith or Jones. All I want to do is to listen and to be transported to the infinite.

So the musicians spoil it all for me. They play something by Aaron Copland that hits me over the head. To me it is no longer music because I cannot listen. I am pushed. I am kicked around. It has something to do with the Century of the Common Man or the Nazi or Communists or other busy-bodies. It is a factory, a mill, a mine. It is terrific — that is, the noise is terrific.

